WASHINGTON (ANP) — Southern officials and newspapers have greeted Atty Gen. Herbert Brownell's friend of the court brief to the Supreme court with mixed reaction.

Brownell called on the Supreme court last week to send the segregation cases back to the lower courts because the problems of integration are too varied to be met in one general decree.

However, rownell added that no stalling should be permitted and that progress reports should be required of communities who find it impractical to integrate immediately.

Most violent reaction came from Georgia officials. Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said that "it is immaterial to the people of Georgia what method they use to enforce the decision, because the people of Georgia are still determined to circumvent the decision at all hazards."

Gov. Herman Talmadge called the brief by Brownnell "a reversal of policy" and said the government is apparently "beginning to realize that people are going to handle theri local problems on the local level."

While Talmadge and Cook greated the news of the brief in their usual negative way, Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland, praised the plan, calling it a "serious and thoughtful effort to assist in arriving at a rational solution." He said he had confidence that the high court would "deal with the question with wisdom and statesmanship."

Reaction in other areas was as follows:

In Virginia, Atty. Gen. T. Lindsay Almond commented that offhand the brief sounded "drastic," but seemed to be "about what one might expect" from Brownell.

The Charleston, S. C. News and Courier said that in "the fine print of Brownell's plan may be found the same old compulsion, the steel in the velvet glove." The paper said the South does not want mercy or sympathy but "justice."

In Arkansas, the Little Rock Gazette called the brief "the happiest legal surprise in a long time."

"Now the department of justice--with the public blessing of President Eisenhower--has virtually endorsed the basic arguments brought forward by Southern attorneys-general who have filed briefs as friends of the court.

"It embraces the most important principle emphasized by the Southern states: that is, that the variety of school segregation problems is so great that it is a practical impossibility for the Supreme court to lay down a rigid formula for desegregation that will apply in all cases."

The Washington (D. C.) Evening Star said the justice department "evidently has concluded that such things as human emotions and human prejudices should be taken into account, and it would be a rash man who would deny that there is wisdom in this view."

Most Northern papers greeted the brief calmly and with moderate praise. The Chicago Sun-Times seemed to be displeased with Brownell's statement that racial segregation would have to be terminated as quickly as possible "regardless of how much it may be favored by some people in the community."

1. By decree of the Supreme Court, lower courts would require Boards of Education in the five test cases to submit within ninety days "a plan for ending, as soon as feasible, racial segregation in public schools subject to their authority and control."

2. Unless a satisfactory plan is submitted to and approved by lower courts, "it shall forewith enter appropriate orders, by way of injunctions or otherwise," directing admission of the Negro plaintiffs "and other children similarly situated" to non-segregated public schools at the beginning of the next school term.

3. The lower courts would be directed to hold hearings on whether the plans submitted provide for transition to nonsegregated schools "as expeditiously as the circumstances permit."

Boards asking for a delay would have "the burden of proof on the question of whether, and how long, an interval of time was necessary to carry out full desegregation."

4. During any periods of time allowed for the transition, the defendant Boards of Education would be required to "submit detailed periodic reports showing the progress made in any segregation."

5. The lower courts would be authorized to "enter such further orders as may be required from time to time in order to insure against unnecessary delay in the execution of the program."

Brownell brief in school segregation cases is called one of the strongest

Eisenhower, Thurgood Marshall not far apart in suggesting to Supreme Court method of integration

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The Eisenhower administration and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are in substantial agreement on how and when the U.S. Supreme Court shall put into effect its decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

The position of the administration is set out in the brief filed in the Supreme Court by the Department of Justice for the United States as a friend of the court. Both the Justice Department and the NAACP are agreed that there should be no unnecessary delay.

"If any delay is required," says the Justice Department, "it should be kept to a minimum. Time is of the essence because the period of public school attendance is short," declares the NAACP.

ONLY MAJOR difference seems to be over the question of whether the court should order the immediate admission of colored pupils into former white schools or permit a gradual changeover from a segregated to an integrated system.

In answer to this question, posed by the court, Attorney General Herbert J. Brownell Jr. reiterates the answer given in the Justice Department's brief submitted on the previous reargument of the five school segregation cases.

He says the court has "undoubted power in these cases to enter such decrees as it determines will be most effective and just in relation to the interests, pivate and public, affected by its decision."

Brownell Skips Segregation

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—(ANP)—U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, in a speech before the attorney generals of the nation, slipped past the segregation issue.

Brownell's speech dealt in the main with the fight of the government against the illegal narcotics traffic and monopolies that restrain trade.

However, he did say that "in fields which involve fundamental rights and human obligations in a civilized society, it is the federal government's cardinal duty to assure the equal protection of the laws to all its citizens."

Brownell has been severely criticized by the head of the organization, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook of Georgia. Cook and Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi made it known that Brownell would not be welcome if he spoke in Mississippi.

Race Discrimination in El Centro, Cal., Grade Schools to Be Attacked

El Centro, Calif.,—Racial discrimination against school children here will come under attack by the Southern Area Council of NAACP when the group meets here May 1.

Lucian James, president of the Imperial Valley (Calif.) NAACP unit, has stated that a preliminary survey of grade school practices in this Imperial Valley community "shows all the landmarks of Jim Crow."

The Imperial Valley chapter of the Association has formally requested the services of NAACP field secretary Lester P. Bailey, who directed the successful integration of Cairo, Ill., schools in 1952.

John H. Dial, Jr. president of the Southern Area Council, announced this week that race practices in the El Centro schools are the next item on his organization's agenda.

"We will attack every vestige of discriminatory treatment of minorities in this state until the conditions under which Negroes and other groups must live are equal to those offered white citizens," Mr. Dial declared.

The Southern Area Council represents NAACP branches in 23 California cities and in Las Vegas, Nev.

versy is expected to have wide implications in the process of realizing the Federal Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

The controversial system in this normally unsegregated community of 115,000 involves two elements:

1. The maintenance of "neutral zones" in school districting in which there is some elasticity in the assignment of pupils to particular schools.
2. The granting of special permits for children to attend the schools other than the one to which they would normally go on a geographical basis.

Virtually all big-city school systems of necessity grant occasional special permits. But here, according to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, special permits have long been used systematically to accentuate racial separation in schooling.

Issue Brought to Head

Since there are no segregated schools as such, with student bodies composed entirely of one race, this argument was hard to prove. Recently, however, there developed a situation that the association considers prima facie evidence of the practice.

The association had long argued that white pupils were being diverted by special permits from the Garfield Elementary School to the near-by Arroyo Seco Elementary School.

In the latest available breakdown, the Garfield student body was composed about half of Negroes and about half of Mexican Americans and Japanese Americans, with only a few pupils of Anglo-Saxon extraction. The Arroyo Seco student body was composed almost entirely of white children.

The Arroyo Seco school has become overcrowded, with about 250 students in facilities designed for 200. The Garfield school has had as few as 250 pupils in facilities designed for 400. The issue came to a head when it was proposed to spend $30,000 on additions to the Arroyo Seco school to house the overflow.

The association, asserting that at least eighty of the Arroyo Seco pupils were special-permit transfers from the Garfield school jurisdiction, threatened suit to block the expenditure so long as the Garfield school had space.

The association has brought to light permit applications in which parents stated their reason was to avoid having their children associate with Negroes.

Pasadena school officials tacitly admit that there were such cases in the past, but say that under the present regime, special permits are granted only for bona fide reasons such as health, transportation and special-care problems. The "neutral zones" are explained as a means of equalizing the school population.

A school spokesman said that 700 special permits were now in force among the 14,000 elementary school children.

The school system deferred the Arroyo Seco expansion project pending an opinion by the Los Angeles County Counsel on the validity of the "neutral zone" and special-permit system. The opinion is expected this week.

NAACP Kills Pasadena's 'Sneak' Jimcrow In Schools

LOS ANGELES (ANP)—Because Pasadena, internationally noted for its annual Rose Tournament and Rose Bowl game, has for years kept ugly jimcrow hidden behind its flaunted democratic exterior, the victory over its color bias by the local NAACP is rated greatest in recent history.

Brookside Park city swimming pool barred Negroes until a few years ago when the NAACP ended the practice.

It was a slow death for school segregation, but after the Pasadena School Board last week formally promised it would not sanction or permit any practices that savored of racial bias.

Negroes were assured that when the school bells ring again this autumn, that white parents would not be permitted to make unnecessary, and illegal transfers in order to get their children away from schools attended by colored pupils.

Without directly stating that Negroes must attend certain schools the zoning practices, and acknowledging the requests of white parents to have their offspring transferred, accomplished the same effect as the deliberate jimcrow in the South.

Los Angeles School Board Rids City Of Final Segregation

PASADENA, Calif. — (NNPA) The United States Supreme Court decision in the school segregation cases has hastened the decision of school officials in this Los Angeles suburb to get rid of a system of assignment of pupils to elementary schools which appeared to be a segregation device.

The system involved the setting up of "neutral zones" between various schools, in which children living in one school district could be arbitrarily assigned to a school other than the one nearest his home.

NEUTRAL ZONES

The "neutral zones" were set up in 1927, supposedly to help school officials to equalize school attendance. The arrangement was intended to apply only to extraordinary cases involving such problems as transportation and special tutelage.

The NAACP has long contended that the device was used widely to segregate white and colored children in the elementary schools.

Pasadena has a population of 120,000, about 10 per cent of which is colored, with about the same ratio prevailing among the public school population. Among the 14,000 elementary school pupils, there are about 1,000 special transfer permits in force.

The issue was brought to head recently when authorities sought funds to enlarge a predominantly "white" school overcrowded by special transfers from a predominantly colored school area with a predominantly colored school that still had plenty of vacant seats.

NAACP THREAT

The NAACP threatened to sue to block any such appropriation on the ground that the "neutral zones" were used to maintain racial segregation. The Board of Education asked the Los Angeles County counsel for an opinion on the validity of theassignment system.

The counsel has just submitted an opinion indicating that the Pasadena system was on rather shaky ground. Racial segregation in schools in California is already illegal. The counsel cited the U. S. Supreme Court decision as a guidance as to the standard by which the Pasadena system would be judged in any legal test.

The [illegible] said that on the basis of data set forth by school officials themselves, the "neutral zone" and permit system apparently had been working prejudicially against colored children.

Three of five "neutral zones" it was noted were in sections with high colored population raios. In some instances official records showed that the sole reason for transfer permits was that white children could go to school with white children.

Accordingly the school board instructed the superintendent of schools Dr. Stuart McComb to eliminate the questioned features by September.

A school system spokesman said the "neutral zones" would be abolished that outsanding transfer permits would be carefully reviewed and canceled unless compelling circumstances were involved and that a special three-member board would be set up to handle the issuance of permits.

Pasadena ends its 27-year-old scheme to keep children in segregated schools

Although schools were mixed, 'zone system' kept most elementary units 'legally' separated

CONFERENCE OF EDUCATORS
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Southern college heads ready, willing to throw open doors

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Fear of reprisals by officials in Dixie cited as main barrier

By JAMES L. HICKS

NEW YORK—Colored educators of private colleges in the South made it plain here last week that they are ready, willing and hopeful of throwing open their doors to white students.

They revealed that the main barriers standing in their way are outdated laws and fear of reprisals such as a denial of tax exemptions given other schools.

Their position, the result of a two-day meeting at Hot Springs, Ark., was aired here Monday at the Phelps - Stokes Fund headquarters, with Dr. F. D. Patterson, director of the fund, serving as their spokesman.

—o O o—

DR. PATTERSON spoke for representatives of 14 southern states and the District of Columbia who attended the two-day Arkansas meeting Oct. 26-27.

He told the press that the views he expressed were unanimously approved by the educators as "their collective point of view" with respect to the Supreme Court decision of May 17.

The point of view, the first of its kind to be taken officially by a group of colored southern educators since the court's decision, can be summarized briefly as follows:

1. Colored educators in the South hail the Supreme Court decision as a "milestone" in the nation's quest for democracy and in the colored man's struggle for first-class citizenship;

—o O o—

2. THEY FEEL that efforts of some school and state officials to intimidate colored teachers with threats of loss of their jobs is "shortsighted and vindictive".

3. They feel that colored educators "should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nullify the court's decision," and

4. They favor "immediate steps being taken to implement the decision."

Since the nub of the position taken by the educators was not at variance with that taken by the majority of colored people all over the nation, reporters questioned Dr. Patterson as to why it had been necessary to call such a meeting in the first place.

—o O o—

HE CAREFULLY explained that the meeting was held to reveal to the world the position taken by the southern colored educators as a group and thereby disarm those opponents of desegregation who have shouted from high places that colored educators in the South do not want integration.

The policy statement of the Arkansas group can now be be shoved down the throats of those few remaining diehards who claim that the majority of the South's thinking people want segregation.

It was pointed out at the conference that many of its conferees felt that the statement would prove highly useful to them in sitting down with their own white state officials to discuss integration.

—o O o—

THE CONFERENCE brought out the little known fact that from a standpoint of policy, all of the 31 private colleges participating in the United Negro College Fund favor the admission of white students.

It also disclosed that there is nothing now in their charters to prevent their attendance. Some charters which restricted certain schools to colored students have been recently amended.

A spokesman for the College Fund said the main barriers preventing their admitting white students immediately stem from fear of reprisals from state officials.

In this conneection it was pointed out that some colleges might have their tax exemptions removed if they bucked the state officials and let in white students.

—o O o—

THE SPOKESMAN said further that some colleges have admitted white students even in the face of such reprisals, although they are not publicizing the matter. "There is no lag on integration within the colored group," he emphasized.

The statement of policy read by Dr. Patterson indicated that southern educators are not unaware of the colored people in its midst who are playing into the hands of white bigots by stating that colored people do not wish desegregation.

They dismissed this minority group of colored "leaders" with this statement:

"We regret that some public officials have sought to persuade colored educators and other leaders to evade the decision by agreeing to voluntary segregation.

"This cannot be decently done; and such persons who agree to this will not be respected even by the officials seeking such commitment or compromise of principle."

—o O o—

IT WAS ALSO noted that the question of intermarriage is being used by many opponents of desegregation as a weapon against it.

This was brought out when Dr. Patterson was asked to explain a part of the statement which said:

"It is most unfortunate that preoccupation with the coeducational implications of the decision has obscured the question of quality of education for all children.

"In two-thirds of the United States coeducation of the races has been going on for many decades with no untoward effects. There need be no ill effects in the South."

Dr. Patterson explained that this statement was made by the educators because so many southerners claim intermarriage will be a by-product of co-education of colored and whites.

—o O o—

HE SAID that if there should be any inter-marriages, it would be "purely incidental" and that the question was simply being raised to "obscure the real issue."

The conference was called by Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University. The 64 persons attending paid their own way but the Phelps Stokes Fund bore their expenses after their arrival.

There will be no follow up or confinuation committee from the conference. The group simply met and made its position clear.

Educators urge school integration here, now

Action at Hot Springs meeting disappointment for Dixiecrats

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (ANP)—Hopes of some southern white leaders that leading colored educators might lend some measure of comfort to plans to defy the Supreme Court on school desegregation were blasted here last week.

The rude jolt for the Dixiecrats and other diehards came when the most representative group of educators assembled since the decision called for complete compliance with the high court's ruling.

They met in a conference held in the Baptist Sanitarium and Bath House sponsored by the Phelps - Stokes Fund, a private foundation interested in southern education and African affairs.

—o O o—

THE GROUP, which included presidents of leading colored colleges and universities, said in a joint statement that the decision dramatically distinguishes "our way of life in a democracy from that in totalitarian countries."

"Time will prove," the statement said, "that our fears have no foundation in fact, just as has been proved by the implementation of previous court decisions. Segregation breeds fear, and when the barriers of segregation are at last removed, we will wonder why we feared at all."

Pointing out that change without bloodshed and revolution was possible because of a Constitution which guarantees equality and justice to all, the educators said "that to evade or discredit it is to destroy our government."

"It is our hope," they said, "that all of the colleges and universities of the South, colored and white, will immediately implement the spirit of the court's decision by accepting, irspective of race, all qualified students who seek admission."

—o O o—

THE LEADERS said they were convinced that there is a "fundamental sense of fair play in the South" and noted that integration in public schools involving both students and teachers is already working well in some southern schools.

Stating that it was unfortunate "that preoccupation with the coeducational implication of the decision" had obscured the question of the quality of education for all children, the educators said that "in two-thirds of the United States, co-education of the races has been going on for many decades with no untoward effects."

Again the group stated that "colored educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nuffily the court's decision. To do this would be tantamount to sharing in a plan to destroy the very fabric of our constitutional government."

REALIZING THE difficulties that will be incurred in some places where integration will be attempted, the leaders said there "should be the cooperative effort in every community to plan on the local level the implementation of the decision.

"The planning should be done in good faith and with an honest desire to implement the decision rather than scheming to circumvent it."

The educators said they were not making the statement or pleading for colored Americans alone, but that they were concerned "about the best education that can be made available to every child in the South."

The group went on record favoring Federal aid to education "in order that the per capita expenditure in the South may be brought up to a high national average. We want the white child to have the best and we want the colored child to have the best."

This is not possible, they said, in segregated schools.

10 pupils have constitutional right to enter Milford school

By JAMES L. HICKS

DOVER, Del.—The custom of the courts to place the constitutional rights of the individual above even the welfare of the nation was cited to the Supreme Court of Delaware here, Monday, by an NAACP lawer, in an eloquent plea for the admission of 10 high school pupils to an all-white school in Milford.

The custom was outlined to the court by Louis L. Redding, brilliant Harvard-trained counsel for 10 Milford high school pupils as NAACP lawyers fought to save an injunction issued by a lower court, which held that the children have a clear legal right to attend the white school.

The argument came as the school board of Delaware appealed to the State Supreme Court to reverse the lower court and not force them to admit the children to the school.

The court reserved decision in the case.

NAACP ATTORNEY Redding, assisted by Jack Greenberg, special counsel in the offices of Thurgood Marshall, told the court that NAACP lawyers have not been able to find any case of record where a court subordinated the constitutional rights of an individual to any other cause.

Mr. Redding cited the case of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., as an example.

In that case, the President of the United States had ordered the government to seize the Youngstown plant because a crippling strike there was seriously impairing the war effort of the nation.

BUT THE SUPREME Court stopped down the order of the President and held that even though the fate of the nation was in jeopardy over the strike, it could not ignore the constitutional right of the owners of the plant to hold on to their property.

Mr. Redding cited the case in support of his argument that the 10 children of Milford had a constitutional right to attend the Milford High School and that right was being denied them each day they were being prevented from doing so.

He added that such denial was doing them "irreparable harm" and cited the opinions of courts which showed that such harm to children was even worse than similar harm to adults.

IN DRIVING home his point, Mr. Redding pointed out that where the constitutional rights of the plant owners had been threatened, the Supreme Court had acted with "unusual celerity" and he implored the court that it should act with the same "celerity" in granting the admission of the 10 children to the Milford school.

For the first time since the Milford case opened, the NAACP received some outside aid in its case and it was cheered by the fact that it came from a local source and a distinguished local source at that.

When the case opened, it was learned that William Pritchett, former president of the Delaware State Bar Association and a Rhodes scholar had filed a brief as "friend of the court" in the case on behalf of the American Civil Liberties Union.

MR. PRITCHETT sat at the counsel table with Mr. Redding and presented an hour-long argument in support of the right of the children to attend the white school.

Then too, there was the presence in the court room of at least a half dozen colored women, representing the newly-formed Kent County and Sussex County chapter of the National Council of Negro Women.

Since Mr. Redding and the Rev. Randolph Fisher of Milford have virtually been batting alone in the case up to this point, the presence of Mr. Pritchett, who is a respected member of the community, and the attendance in court of the women, was a heartening factor.

THERE HAVE been no colored spectators connected with the Milford situation up to this point. They simply had just stayed away.

The Monday arguments were held in a strikingly contrasted atmosphere to previous arguments connected with the Milford case.

In the first place, whereas the courtroom was packed with hostile crowds at other times, on Monday there was scarcely 50 people in the entire courtroom some of them were colored, and no one jeered or made threatening remarks as at other times.

THERE WERE NO mobs as in the case of the arguments held recently at Georgetown and, all in all, it was simply an average day in an American court.

The opposing school board argued that the Supreme Court has not yet handed down its final decision in the cases and that this is therefore a "permissive" period in which voluntary integration is all right but no authority exists for compulsory integration.

Opposing counsel further argued that the original Milford board, which first admitted the 10 children, had no authority to do so.

THEY FURTHER charged that the vice chancellor, who had granted the injunction which would permit them to enter the white school, had erred because a mandatory injunction can only be issued to preserve a legal right.

Opposing lawyers claimed that no such right existed.

MR. REDDING, however, eloquently told the court that it had a duty to recognize the ruling of the Supreme Court based on Article 6 of the Federal Constitution which commands all judges to be bound by the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Federal Constitution.

Four hours of argument were heard before the court reserved decision.

Milford Relaxes Segregation

MILFORD, Del. —(ANP)—Whites in Milford forgot about their objections to Negroes for a moment last week as they banded together to observe the town's only Korean war fatality.

The southeastern Delaware community of 5,700, in a Veterans Day observance, honored Negro Cpl. William A. Lockewood.

Milford was the scene of a dispute over integration of Negro pupils with white pupils in the Milford high school. The case is still before the state supreme court.

Lockewood's mother, Mrs. Annabelle Lockewood, sat on the rostrum with city officials and community leaders as Mayor Edward C. Evans rededicated the community's war memorial to include Lockewood's name.

The memorial is a stone monument in the center of the three-block shopping district of downtown Milford.

Twenty-year-old Lockewood was an alumnus of all-Negro Benjamin Banneker school, who went to work as an orderly in Milford's Memorial hospital. He enlisted in the army in July, 1950, shortly after the communists invaded South Korea.

He was sent to Korea three months after enlistment and in February, 1951, the defense department reported him missing, and later a prisoner of war. In March, 1952, the department listed him as dead.

SHE STIRRED UP THE WHOLE STATE

MRS. FRED BULAH of Hockensen, Delaware, wanted her granddaughter to ride in the town's school bus. What happened when she got the run-around from the local school officials, the governor and the state board of education is told in the third of a series of 11 articles on the school cases now before the U. S. Supreme Court in the AFRO Magazine Section in this Issue.

NAACP Raps Delaware school board program

WILMINGTON, Del. — The Delaware State Board of Education, Tuesday, announced plans for the desegregation of public schools in Wilmington.

However, the move was immediately denounced by an NAACP lawyer as a "delaying" tactic which accomplished nothing" toward full integration.

The announcement of the desegregation plan was made by Dr. George R. Miller Jr., secretary of the state board of education.

Places Onus On City

He said Monday that since the Wilmington School Board had indicated "it is in a position to move promptly in the direction of integration," the state board was not granting it permission to do so.

Denouncement of the plan came a day later when the AFRO asked Louis Redding, attorney of Wilmington, to comment on the state board's action.

Redding, who argued the Delaware cases before the Supreme Court, was harsh in his criticism of the board's action.

Harsh In Criticism

He said in the first place the City Board of Education of Wilmington did not need any authority from the state board to desegregate its schools.

He added that the action taken in Wilmington would do nothing to provide integration in other parts of the state, where the segregated school situation is most acute.

(Colored children have been attending three of Wilmington's high schools for the past two years as a result of court decisions won by Mr. Redding.)

"Delaying Tactic"

"This is all simply a delaying tactic on the part of the state school board" Redding said. "What we want is action by the state board outside of Wilmington.

"Until they announce a policy which permits all colored children to go to schools nearest them, they will have no policy and will have done none of the things the Court directed should be done," Redding said.

Asked what action he planned in the light of the school board's action, Redding said:

"A lot will depend on the parents of colored children living outside Wilmington who are still being forced to walk past white schools and attend segregated schools."

Wilmington Plans For Integration

WILMINGTON, Del. — (ANP)— School authorities here have been roundly applauded for their far-sightedness in anticipating and preparing for the recent U. S. Supreme court decision banning segregation in public school education.

While southern reaction to the historical decision is generally opposed to the ruling, local authorities have accepted the decision and are busy making plans for implementing it.

This was indicated in a statement by Dr. Ward I. Miller, superintendent of the local public school who said that Wilmington's schools are ready for the end of segregation. Two major problems involved, he said, are the placement of pupils and reappraisal of curriculum, and not the placing of whites and Negroes together

Desegregation Ruling Is Urged

DOVER, Del., Dec. 13 (AP)—Delaware supreme court Monday was asked to uphold an order permitting Negro pupils to enroll in the new all-white Milford High school.

Vice-Chancellor William Marvel had ruled last November that Delaware laws providing segregation of races in public schools were illegal before the United States supreme court had banned such segregation.

Howard E. Lynch Jr., counsel for the Milford school board, told the supreme court that Marvel erred when he handed down his decision without holding a full hearing in the case.

Lynch argued further that equal educational facilities were available to Negroes in their own schools.

Louis Redding, attorney representing 10 Negro students and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that Marvel's decision was made to prevent interference with the proper educational progress of the students.

Delaware township is facing showdown on segregation issue

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 23—(AP)—The segregation problems of the Milford School Board will be discussed tonight in a showdown meeting with the State Board of Education.

The Milford board announced last night that the community's two schools would reopen on Monday without segregation and threatened to resign if the state board overrules it.

The announcement followed a meeting of the board with Gov. J. Caleb Boggs and State Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young.

The Milford schools were closed last Monday after threats of violence unless white and Negro high school children were provided with separate facilities, as in past years.

Young conceded the Milford board was "within its rights" in admitting Negroes to the white schools but added that the state board would have the final say.

Young said the state board would determine the methods of integration in conformity with a recent U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation. But the Milford board said it will resign in a body if its decision to open the schools to all pupils on Monday is not upheld.

At the previously all-white Lakeview High School, 11 Negroes registered with 676 white pupils last Sept. 7. Following a meeting Sunday attended by some 1500 of the town's 5700 residents, the board decided to close the Lakeview school and also the all-Negro elementary school.

When the board attempted to schedule classes for Tuesday, William V. Sipple, a board member, said telephone calls "poured in" threatening violence to the Negro children. The board then ordered the schools closed "until further notice in the best interests of the children."

Vice President Asks for End of Segregation as Milford Drops Integration Move

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 30—Vice President Richard M. Nixon came into Delaware, where white parents have been refusing to send children to racially integrated schools, and eloquently appealed today for an end to racial discrimination.

He noted he was sending his own two daughters Patricia, 8 years old, and Julie, 6, to Horace Mann Public School in the racially integrated Washington system, to grow up "respecting American traditions."

The choice of 600,000,000 nonwhites, who hold a possibly crucial balance of world power, as between communism and noncommunis may be swayed by an American example of equality of opportunity, he added.

The Vice President voiced his appeal extemporaneously when questioned at New Castle County Airport, on arriving here for a political swing. He repeated it for a state-wide radio broadcast later.

However, Mr. Nixon was not aware at the time that a new Board of Education in Milford had dropped the eleven Negro students from the rolls. This left the decision on integration up to the State.

Transitional Period

Observing that he only knew the situation here from newspaper accounts of the boycott organized in Milford and other communities in southern Delaware, Mr. Nixon said:

"I think we all have to realize that when the Supreme Court decision was handed down, it was anticipated that there would be a period in which we would have some difficulty while there was a transition * * *

"We have to realize that in the United States—in certain parts of it, at least certainly here in Delaware—there is an honest difference of opinion on this particular question. I can only speak from my own personal experience.

"My feeling is that here in Delaware and other states where there are similar problems, men and women of good will and good intentions, working patiently together, will find a way to carry out the letter and the spirit of the Supreme Court decision [outlawing racial segregation in public schools].

"I went to public schools all my life. I went to a Quaker college where there were students of various races, different racial and religious backgrounds. In my state of California we have nonsegregated schools. We find we get along. There is no reason why Americans, regardless of race, creed or color, cannot be educated together.

Tells of His Daughters

"My two daughters in Washington go to public schools, and in Washington nonsegregation is being applied.

"I have no fears at all with regard to sending my children to public schools, and they are going to continue going to public schools as long as they are of that age.

"I bring in this personal background only to indicate why I am confident that this present controversy in time will heal the differences, and we will find a way to work out this problem and meet it effectively.

"We think of this problem as a problem only for local schools, states, the nation. I know from the trip I took around the world that it is much bigger than that.

"There are 600,000,000 people in this world who hold the balance of power, and who are not white. They are trying to determine whether they should be on the Communist side or on our side. If they go to the Communist side, the struggle may be lost.

A 'Dream of Equality'

"One of the factors that would be tremendously helpful is for us here in the United States to show by example, by word and deed that the dream of equality—equality of opportunity, of education and of employment and the like—is coming true."

In the later radio version, Mr. Nixon added that such efforts at equality "will do immeasurable good in winning these people on the fence to our side, possibly even avoiding a war which we might lose."

"I commend Delaware officials who are trying patiently to work out the answer," Mr. Nixon concluded. "I am sure they will, and the people of Delaware in the end will agree with the decision, and will have no regrets."

Delaware officials, who have tried to avoid statements in the politically explosive situation, heard the Vice President's extemporaneous remarks, and said privately that they had found his evident sincerity deeply moving.

SCHOOL BIAS ISSUE IN DELAWARE COURT

DOVER, Del., Dec. 13 (AP)—The Delaware Supreme Court was asked today to rule on an order permitting Negro pupils to enroll in the now all-white Milford High School.

Vice Chancellor William Marvel had ruled last November that Delaware laws providing segregation of races in public schools were illegal before the United States Supreme Court banned such segregation.

Ten Negro students had enrolled in Milford High in September, but a boycott by white students, led by the National Association for the Advancement of White People, resulted in the Negroes being returned to an all-Negro school about twenty miles from Milford.

Howard E. Lynch Jr., counsel for the Milford School Board, told the Supreme Court that Chancellor Marvel had erred when he handed down his decision without holding a full hearing in the case.

Louis Redding, attorney representing the Negro students and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that Chancellor Marvel's decision had been made to prevent interference with the proper educational progress of the students.

The State Supreme Court had granted a temporary stay to the School Board, halting implementation of Chancellor Marvel's order, pending today's hearing. It reserved decision.

Delaware Battle

First State Segregation Case Argued

DOVER, Del., Dec. 13 (AP)—The first case on a state level involving the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in schools was argued today before the Delaware Supreme Court. The court reserved decision.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Milford, Del., School Board argued before the three-judge court on the right of 10 Negro children to attend an all-white school at Milford.

A representative of the American Civil Liberties Union said the Supreme Court decision supersedes any state constitution, and there was nothing to deny the right of Negroes to attend white schools in their districts.

John J. Morris, Wilmington attorney, speaking as "friend of the court," argued that the "effect of the Supreme Court decision is still undetermined." He said the Supreme Court is to issue a mandate at a later date directing the method by which integration is to be handled.

The Negroes were admitted to the school shortly after the Supreme Court decision. They were ordered back to the Negro school at Georgetown when white pupils staged a boycott and violence threatened.

The NAACP appealed to Vice Chancellor William Marvel, who granted an injunction requiring the board to admit the Negroes to the all-white school. The school board appealed Marvel's ruling to the State Supreme Court, which stayed Marvel's injunction and ordered the Negroes returned to Georgetown, pending today's hearing and a decision.

William Prickett of the Civil Liberties Union said the Supreme Court ruling would have to be followed. He added the high court's mandate on how integration is to be conducted could be "tempered by a determination of a court of equity."

"They may set up a method of operation," he said, "but there is nothing to deny the right of the colored children to attend white high schools in their district when viewed from the consideration of the Supreme Court decision."

Morris, named friend of the court after the civil liberties union was granted a right to appear, told the court to "bear in mind that there is no directive from the Supreme Court as to when integration in schools must be effected."

Students Are Dealt Stiff Blow

DOVER, Del. Bryant W. Bowles' race-baiting National Association for the Advancement of White People (NAAWP) won at least a temporary victory on Friday in the State Supreme Court, in its efforts to keep the Milford High School an all-white institution.

The three-man tribunal stayed a Chancery Court order handed down a week ago by Vice Chancellor William Marvel ordering the Milford School Board to readmit, this past Monday, the ten Negro pupils dropped from the school rolls late in September.

From the date of schools opening in Milford, and until the Bowles-led NAAWP began agitation, which resulted in heated and aroused protest meetings attended by up to 5,000 persons from areas surrounding Milford, the ten colored pupils were accepted without incident at the Lakeview School.

Soon after the Bowles-inspired protest meetings, white children's parents allowed them to stay home in protest over the colored pupils' admission.

THREATS OF VIOLENCE

There were subsequent threats of violence and talk of bombings, "burning gun powder," and bloodshed throughout areas in lower Delaware under Bowles' influence. The school board which admitted

Panel hears how Washington licked integration problems

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — In a recent round table discussion presented here by the Community Committee of the Young Women's Christian Association, Dr. Charles K. Bish principal of McKinley High School, told the group that "integration would have come whether or not the Supreme Court made its decision."

Dr. Bish gave some of the main pointers he used to break the student strike that started at McKinley several months ago. Speaking from the topic "Changing Educational Com - munity Patterns," he said that one should "never compromise with a basic principal" and secondly, "let it be known that the problem had to be solved."

School administrators and teachers should develop a strong feeling for integration, Dr. Bish continued, because the attitude of the pupils toward the change in pattern is formed by a "rub-off" of instructors and administrators

IN ORDER to bring about better relationship and harmony at McKinley, Dr. Bish said that a bi-racial committee was or - ganized to aid in the solving of problems. This resulted in in- ter-communication with each oth- er. Progress is moving at such a pace, he declared that the com- mittee is almost non-existent because there are only a few problems left to be solved.

Reports through the press that integration is responsible for the decline in enrollment of white pupils and an increase enrollment of colored pupils in Washington was denied by the principal. He explained that the basic cause was due to more white families moving in- to the suburbs in accordance with their higher economic standards.

On the other hand he stated, more colored people are moving into Washington because of the job opportunities and the re - moval of race destinction from the Form 57 on government ap- plication blanks.

IN REPLY to a question on so- cial activites at McKinley the speaker said that they began in- terracial social activities by form- ing a Bible club. The school now has a bi-racial Y-teen club and ha ssponsored an interracial PTA tour and tea.

Dr. Bish said he expects to ask six colored and six white parents to aid in planning a dance soon. He thinks that the basic rules will be to have pupils properly dressed: allow only couples to at tend; and prohibit dancing be tween interracial couples, a least for the first affair.

"There is nothing pessimisti about this thing; we've go some of the basic problems lick ed and we're in business," con cluded Dr. Bish.

Other participants on the panel were Dr. Daniel G. Hill, Dr. El- lis O. Knox, both of Howard Uni- versity; Ruth Mueller, Mrs. Marion H. Jackson, Rita Bouchort, Mary Jane Wiloit, Mamie E. Davis, and Mrs. Es- ther Wussa of Alexander, Egypt.

Federation Supports 15 Families' Action To Halt Integration

To Ask District Court For Injunction Today To Bar School Transfers

By James G. Deane

The Federation of Citizens Associations today planned to ask the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to halt race desegregation of Wash- ington's public schools.

The all-white civic organiza- tion and 15 Washington families, acting jointly, made public a f o r m a l complaint, attacking Board of Education-approved in- tegration plans as illegal, arbi- trary and unreasonable. The complaint called for continued segregation until the Supreme Court specifically orders the contrary.

The Federation's complaint was prepared by the law firm of Colladay and Colladay. David C. Colladay, member of the firm, said the complaint would be filed formally today.

Edward F. Colladay, senior member of the law firm, is a former president of the Federa- tion. He also is general counsel of the Washington Board of Trade, but the trade body is not involved in the race suit.

The Federation voted unani- mously in June to take the legal action.

Instructions Withheld.

Integration at this time is illegal, stated today's complaint, because the Supreme Court in ruling school race barriers un- constitutional May 17 withheld a final decree and instructions on how to meet it.

Because of this, the legal basis of school segregation here re- mains intact, the Federation ar- gued, and integration plans in- fringe the authority of the high court.

The formal complaints also as- serted that the scheduled inte- gration program would deprive children and parents of what it called their right to pick the school they wish, and would cause them "great and irreparable damage."

The Federation's complaint, which asks for an injunction or- der halting all desegregation steps, directly challenges a ruling by Vernon E. West, District cor- poration counsel, that the Su- preme Court's May 17 decision left the city free to drop segre- gation.

Steps Begun.

The Board of Education and the Commissioners agreed, on May 18, on immediate desegre- gation steps, some of which have already been taken. Several thousand colored pupils are scheduled to be transferred to formerly white schools when the fall term starts on September 13, and most schools are expected to have at least some racial mixture among both pupils and teachers.

Under present plans, almost complete desegregation is sched- uled by September of next year.

David Colladay told reporters the Federation wants District Court to issue an injunction order stopping all integration steps before schools reopen.

He said he hopes the court will schedule a preliminary hear- ing within a few days at which the city's legal spokesmen can appear and that the court then will see fit to issue a restraining order.

Names Board and Corning.

The complaint named as de- fendants the nine members of the Board of Education and School Supt. Hobart M. Corning. Mr. West is the legal counsel of the school board and will have the task of defending the case in any court proceedings.

Besides the city authorities, President Eisenhower was also involved in the decision the Federation is attacking. Imme- diately prior to the city's move to start integration, Gen. Eisen- hower urged the Commissioners to make the Capital a model for carrying out desegregation.

The high court is scheduled to receive new briefs from the District and four States involved in the pending school race cases next month. Oral argument is expected later in the court term, and a final decree, per- haps next spring.

Parents in Action.

The parents taking part in the complaint, all residents of the Northeast and Southeast sec- tions of the city, were listed as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Sabine, 1524 Newton street N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Hayes T. Jackson, 1526 Otis street N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Caleb L. Reeder, jr., 218 Webster street N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. John Brad- ley, 234 Varnum street N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Vernon E. Reed, 1718 Bay street S.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Harvey S. Gladmon, 1706 Mas- sachusetts avenue S.E.; Mr. and Mrs. John G. Wangler, 2134 Thirtieth street, N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Loudon, 2529 Bla- densburg road N.E.

Also, Mr. and Mrs. Walter K. Patterson, 3006 Adams street N. E.; Mr. and Mrs. Oran W. Con- rad, 3103 Douglas street N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Francis J. Burke, 3043 Douglas street N.E.; Henry Miller, 2153 Thirtieth street N.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Banks M. Robbins, 1731 Bay street S.E.; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence D. Barr, 3165 Adams street N.E. and Mr. and Mrs. James S. Chrismore, 2620 Thirty-first place N.E.

Corning Asks United Will on Intergration

Dr. Hobart M. Corning, super- intendent of District schools, appealed yesterday for "united determination" to make the Su- preme Court's decision on in- tegration work in the District.

The school official told mem- bers of the District Federation of Women's Clubs that the Dis- trict is "facing a difficult ordeal with opening of schools in Sep- tember."

Negro Educators Salute School Rule

Leading Negro educators from 14 southern states and the Dis- trict of Columbia Wednesday de- clared the U.S. Supreme Court decision on segregation is "a sig- nificant milestone in the nation's quest for a democratic way of life."

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, presi- dent of Atlanta University and a member of the Atlanta Board of Education, issued the statements to the Hot Springs, Ark., meeting and Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College in Atlanta, served as chairman of the com- mittee which drafted the state- ment.

After meeting two days behind closed doors, the group issued the statement and said "immediate steps should be taken to imple- ment the decision."

Writer Says Milford Is Not Typical Of Delaware Communities

Daily World Tues. 11-30-54
P. 1
Atlanta, Ga.

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Milford, where a school boycott resulted in eleven colored students being removed from the Milford High School, is not typical of other Delaware communities where desegregation of the public schools has been undertaken.

28 PER CENT

In a brief filed in the five school segregation cases Attorney General Albert Young of Delaware tells the Supreme Court that since the decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools, integration has undertaken "without incident" in areas containing about 28 per cent of the total colored population of the State.

Most of the integration has been in the northern part of Newcastle County where the population of the State is heaviest, he says. A comparatively small number of colored children, he adds, are taking advantage of their right to attend schools which were formerly all white.

Voluntary steps toward desegregation, he says, has been taken in a number of school districts on a partial basis and has met with "community acceptance."

In the lower counties of the State, Mr. Young asserts, the "dominant mood" is opposed to integration.

PUBLIC OPINION

In the Laurel school district, located near the southern border of the State, Mr. Young says, a public opinion poll showed 1,258 to 31 against desegregation.

Partial desegregation, he states, has progressed satisfactorily in all but one of the districts where it has been undertaken. In the lower part of the State, he says, there is strong opposition to immediate integration. In certain areas a gradual transition is necessary to insure permanency and community acceptance.

The events at Milford, the brief states, demonstrated that:

1. Public opinion in lower Delaware has been aroused against desegregation and a large percent of people in parts of Delaware are not ready to accept integration.

2. The immediate admission of colored children to white schools under the old "separate but equal" doctrine, which the Supreme Court said has no place in public education, is "inconsisetnt with orderly, gradual transition" from segregated to integrated schools where immediate admission is opposed by the local population.

The decision of the Delaware Supreme Court in the two cases which were consoliated on appeal to the United States Supreme Court makes immediate admission of colored students to white schools where separate facilities are not equal.

Since many instances of unequal facilities may be presented to the courts for immediate relief under the "separate but equal" doctrine, Mr. Young states, gradual integration depends upon the time element set by the high court in its final decrees.

LOCAL COURTS

hTe mandate of the court, Mr. Young states, should make it clear that, nothwithstanding inequalities in facilities, local courts shall be permitted to grant such relief as they deem appropriate after consideration of the physical, economic and social conditions of the community and upon a showing of an effort made in good faith toward orderly desegregation.

The two consolidated Delaware cases before the court presented the question of whether the Chancellor should have ordered school authorities to equalize separate facilities, rather than ordered the admission of colored children.

In compliance with the decrees of the Chancellor, which were affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, the colored plaintiffs were admitted to the Hockessin and Claymont schools.

Tues. 11-30-54

WITHOUT INCIDENT

Mr. Young says these children have remained in those schools since the fall of 1952 without incident. Conditions which warrant delay in parts of Delaware as well as in other states, he adds, do not exist in the two school districts involved in the Delaware cases.

Attorney Geneeral Young urges the court to enter an order in the Delaware cases affirming the decision of the Delaware Supreme Court.

He also urges the court to permit a gradual adjustment from segregated public schools to a system without racial distinction.

If a finding of inequality is held to justify immediate admission of colored students to all white elementary and high schools, Mr. Young asserts, "serious repercussions" will follow.

The court should make it clear, therefore, that any relief in the field of public education should be given on the basis of its decision of May 17.

3. The court should remand the cases to the lower courts for the issuance of decrees, Mr. Young argues.

He adds that it should also fix in its decrees as an ultimate date beyond which there will be no delay of relief a date which will give the states an opportunity to plan, educate, and promote community acceptance and orderly physical abolition of segregation.

The mandate, Mr. Young states, also should include instructions to the lower courts that they exercise equitable discretion according to local conditions, provided that a constructive transitional program is shown to be in progress and subject to the limitation that ultimate relief by way of admission on a non-segregated basis shall be effected no later than a date fixed by the Supreme Court.

A play-by-play account of the disturbances at Milford are given in the brief.

How teachers face integration tests

Sat. 11-13-54

WILMINGTON, Del. (ANP)— Two teachers last week related their experience in all-white and integrated classrooms.

The school marms represent a group of teachers who are serving as guinea pigs in this and other southern communities testing the success of putting into practice last May's Supreme Court mandate banning school segregation.

Baltimore, Md.

They are Mrs. Daisy Simms, elementary teacher in the Wilmington school system and Mrs. Grace Water, who teaches high school history and social studies in Morgantown, W. Va.

Both described their experiences under the integrated system to Kenneth O. Gil, staff correspondent for the National Education Association.

— o O o —

ALONG WITH seven other colored teachers, Mrs. Simms was assigned to teach in an all-white class. The school principal sought to ease the pressure on her by notifying parents of the children before classes began.

Reaction of the move was mixed but generally accepted One mother explained her resentment this way:

"Frankly, I was shocked a first, but then I calmed down a bit especially after I was assured Mrs. Simms was an excellent tracher."

A few parents even threatened to withdraw their children. However, so far none have dropped out.

— o O o —

MRS. WATER, on the other hand, related how one student tried to make things hard for her.

"... During one discussion on imports and exports the words tar and pitch came up," she explained. "Someone asked me what pitch was and a boy who has been trying to make me feel uncomfortable said with particular emphasis: It's something black.'

"These things never hurt me," she added. "... I don't want the kids in my class to be afraid to discuss anything. We talk about race, marriage, integration and even the word n---r."

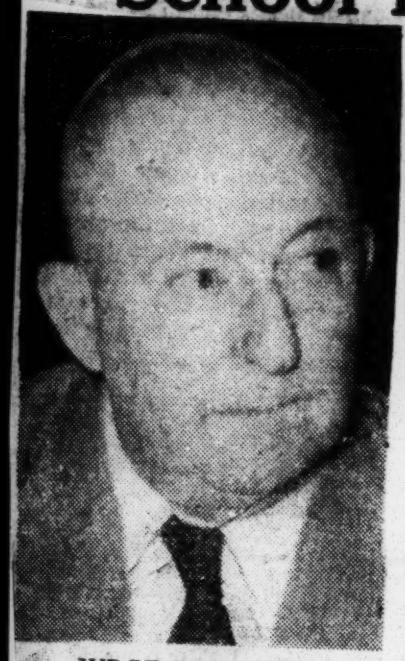
Segregation Ruling Withheld; School Boycott Grows In Del.



JUDGE DRUFFEL.
. . . Presides at Hearing.

Over 2,000 Pupils Absent From Schools In Milford, Del., Area

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 29 (UP) — Heavy absenteeism spread to more public schools throughout south Delaware today in what appeared to be an organized campaign against racial integration of the state school system.

More than 2,000 pupils, nearly all of them white, did not report for elementary and high school classes here and in six nearby communities.

Driving Force

The National Association for the Advancement of White People, a pro-segregation group headed by Bryant Bowles, of Washington, apparently was the driving force behind the school boycott. Bowles spoke at meetings in several communities earlier this week. There also were reports that many parents kept their children home after receiving telephone calls "suggesting" that they do so.

Only 71 of 1,018 pupils appeared today at schools in Georgetown, Ellendale, Millsboro and Lincoln. Only 499 of 1,567 pupils attended the combination elementary and high school at Milford, where the boycott began Monday over enrollment of 11 Negro students. Lord Baltimore school at Ocean View and the John Clayton school at Dagsboro also reported "above normal" absenteeism.

State school officials apparently were watching the situation progress, but there was no indication that they planned any action to end it. J. Crum Small, president of the State Board of Education, said an appeal by Gumboro school board chairman Preston Niblett to parents to keep their children home was "very unusual," but that there was no way under law to cope with it.

The Milford boycott came after Bowles urged white parents to keep their children home rather than have them attend classes with Negroes. Similar meetings in Lincoln and Gumboro Monday night were followed by the spread of the absenteeism to those towns. A fiery cross was burned on the school lawn here after another meeting last night.

Police described the cross as the work of "young kids," and no arrests were made.

Delaware Says Milford Not a Typical Town

He also urges the court to permit a gradual adjustment from segregated public school to a system without racial distinction.

Foresee Repercussions

If a finding of inequality is held to justify immediate admission of colored students to all white elementary and high schools, Mr. Young asserts, "serious repercussions" will follow.

The court should make it clear, therefore, that any relief in the field of public education should be given on the basis of its decision of May 17.

3. The court should remand the cases to the lower courts for the issuance of decrees, Mr. Young argues.

He adds that it should also fix in its decrees as an ultimate date beyond which there will be no delay of relief a date which will give the states an opportunity to plan, educate, and promote community acceptance and orderly physical abolition of segregation.

The mandate, Mr. Young states, also should include instructions to the lower courts that they exercise equitable discretion according to local conditions, provided that a constructive transitional program is shown to be in progress and subject to the limitation that ultimate relief by way of admission on a nonsegregated basis shall be effected no later than a date fixed by the Supreme Court.

A play-by-play account of the disturbances at Milford are given in the brief:

At the beginning of the school year, the board of the Milford Special School district admitted 10 colored children to the tenth grade at the Milford high school. These pupils attended the high school through Sept. 17, a period of nine days, without incident.

Sept. 17 there was a mass meeting attended by 1,500 persons opposed to the admission of the colored children. The school was closed Sept. 20 for a special meeting of parents with the school board to discuss the problem. The board was petitioned to rescind its action admitting the ten colored pupils.

The Milford high school remained closed the entire week beginning Sept. 20. The board resigned Sept. 23.

Beginning Sept. 26 mass meetings were conducted by the National Association for the Advancement of White People. A major objective of these meetings was the boycotting of all schools, and the Milford high school in particular, to force school authorities to remove the colored pupils and prevent further integration in lower Delaware.

The meetings of the NAAWP were designed to (1) incite feeling among whites against colored people, (2) to inspire a willingness to commit violence to perpetuate segregation, and (3) to advocate violation of the Delaware school attendance laws.

Sept. 27 the State Board of Education reopened the Milford High school with the ten colored children in attendance. Crowds milled around the school and some people took names of children who attended school.

A motorcade with cars decorated with streamers and placards reading "Send them back to Africa" and "Join the NAAWP," passed the school. Circulars were distributed urging a boycott of the Milford school.

Sept. 29 attendance in neighboring school districts dropped to a small fraction of their enrollment.

Sept. 30 a new board of the Milford Special School District organized, removed the colored children from the rolls of the high school, compelling them to withdraw and attend a colored school.

Suit was immediately filed on behalf of the colored children in the Delaware Chancery court to enjoin the school board from denying them admission.

Attorney General Young appeared as a friend of the court and urged that the board could not expel the colored children after they had been admitted, because of threats of violence and unlawful disruption of the public order.

The Chancery Court granted an injunction. The case was appealed to the Delaware Supreme Court. That court stayed the injunction and, as a result, the colored children are now attending a colored high school located sixteen miles from Milford.

In addition to Attorney General Young, the Delaware brief is signed by Clarence W. Taylor, Deputy Attorney General, and Andrew D. Christie, Special Deputy to the Attorney General.

Del. women organize to fight segregation

By JAMES L. HICKS

MILFORD, Del.—The struggle of ten school children for admission to an all white school here received a shot in the arm Sunday as 57 women met and organized a chapter of the National Council of Women.

As evidence of their plans for full participation in community affairs the next day they became the first colored spectators to attend the court hearings on the Milford school situation. Later in the day they rounded out their activities with a meeting with Delaware Gov. Caleb Boggs.

The establishment of a chapter of the Council in this isolated area was warmly welcomed by the NAACP which has been virtually fighting alone in this community since the latter made this a testing ground of the Supreme Courts school segregation decision.

The chapter was organized Sunday at the St. Paul's Methodist Church with Mrs. William Thomas Mason, national president of the Council, delivering the principal address at the meeting.

ITS FORMATION was the outgrowth of the work of a planning committee set up last November 4 at Dover, Delaware. That planning committee consisted of Mrs. Alma Fisher of Milford, Mrs. Cara Ballard of Dover, Mrs. Katherine Prettyman of Georgetown; Miss Winfred Clark, Miss Elsie McIntosh, Mrs. Helen Douglas, Mrs. Minnie Winder, Mrs. Blanche Blackburn all of Dover and Miss Emma G. Woodson of Milford and Mrs. Dorothy Banton who served as chairman and is state assistant to the regional chairman of the National Council.

The new group will be known as the Peninsula Council, and has elected Mrs. Ruth M. Laws, an economic instructor at Delaware State College, as their president.

Miss Emma G. Woodson of Milford was made first vice president, Miss Lavenia Gibbs of Wyoming, second vice president; and Miss Winifred Clarke of Dover, third vice president.

Mrs. Frances Henry of Milford was named secretary, Mrs. Cecil P. Henry of Dover, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Mary Jarman of Selbyville, financial secretary; and Mrs. Clara Ballard of Dover, treasurer. Miss Elsie McIntosh of Dover was elected assistant treasurer.

Among those calling on the governor along with Mrs. Mason were Mrs. Laws, Mrs. Henry, Mrs. Robbins, Mrs. Ballard and Mrs. Banton who is the only colored member of the governor's newly organized Human Relations Commission.

They told the AFRO after their meeting with the Governor that they had been favorably impressed with his sincerity with regard to the Milford school incidents. They pointed out to him that they will support him in an attempt to get the state legislation to appropriate funds for the establishment of a statewide commission on human relations to handle such problems.

MRS. MASON said she recommended to the Governor that a closer study of colored people by Delaware schools would go a long way toward avoiding such incidents as occurred at Milford and that she had recommended the inclusion of good books on the race as a part of the school curricula.

It was learned that the newly organized Council was not unanimously received in the Peninsula community however.

No mention of its formation was made in daily newspapers and when the group went to a Dover radio station to inform its news department of its formation, a station executive questioned their aims and told them that he could announce their formation but could not state on the air all their objectives.

The women decided that they would not risk an abbreviated description of their aims and therefore did not have the station carry the announcement.

Court Hears School Case Arguments

Deleware Tribunal Takes Bias Suit Under Adgisement

WILMINGTON, Del. — (NNPA) — The Delaware Supreme court Monday took under advisement an appeal from an order issued by Vice-Chancellor William Marvel temporarily readmitting 10 colored students to the all-white Milford high school.

It is expected that it will be several days before a decision in the case is announced.

The court heard arguments in behalf of the colored students by their attorney, Louis L. Redding, a Wilmington lawyer, and on behalf of the Milford school board by Howard E. Lynch Jr., a Dover attorney.

Briefs as friends of the court were filed by John J. Morris, who was appointed by the court to argue the effect of the United States Supreme court decision outlawing segregation, on the Delaware Constitution, and William Prickett, attorney for the Delaware unit of the American Civil Liberties union.

Mr. Prickett argued that the May 17 ruling superseded any state constitution and,, therefore, there was no legal ground to deny colored students the right to attend the Milford high school.

Apparently thousands of pieces of anti-Jewish and anti-Negro literature are being mailed to residents of the Milford area under a ruling of the Postmaster General which permits bulk mailing of advertising and other matter without a specific address.

Postal Inspector Charles A. McCracken of the Wilmington office said Monday night he had not seen any of the literature, but if there is any doubt as to whether it is mailable, samples will be sent to the Solicitor of the Post Office department in Washington for a ruling.

The hearing before the Delaware Supreme court Monday grew out of events in connection with the admission last September of the colored students to the Milford high school.

Following mass demonstrations, pupil boycotts of the school by white students and threats, spearheaded by the National Association for the Advancement of White People, the new board removed the students from the rolls and assigned them to Jim-Crow schools in Dover and Georgetown.

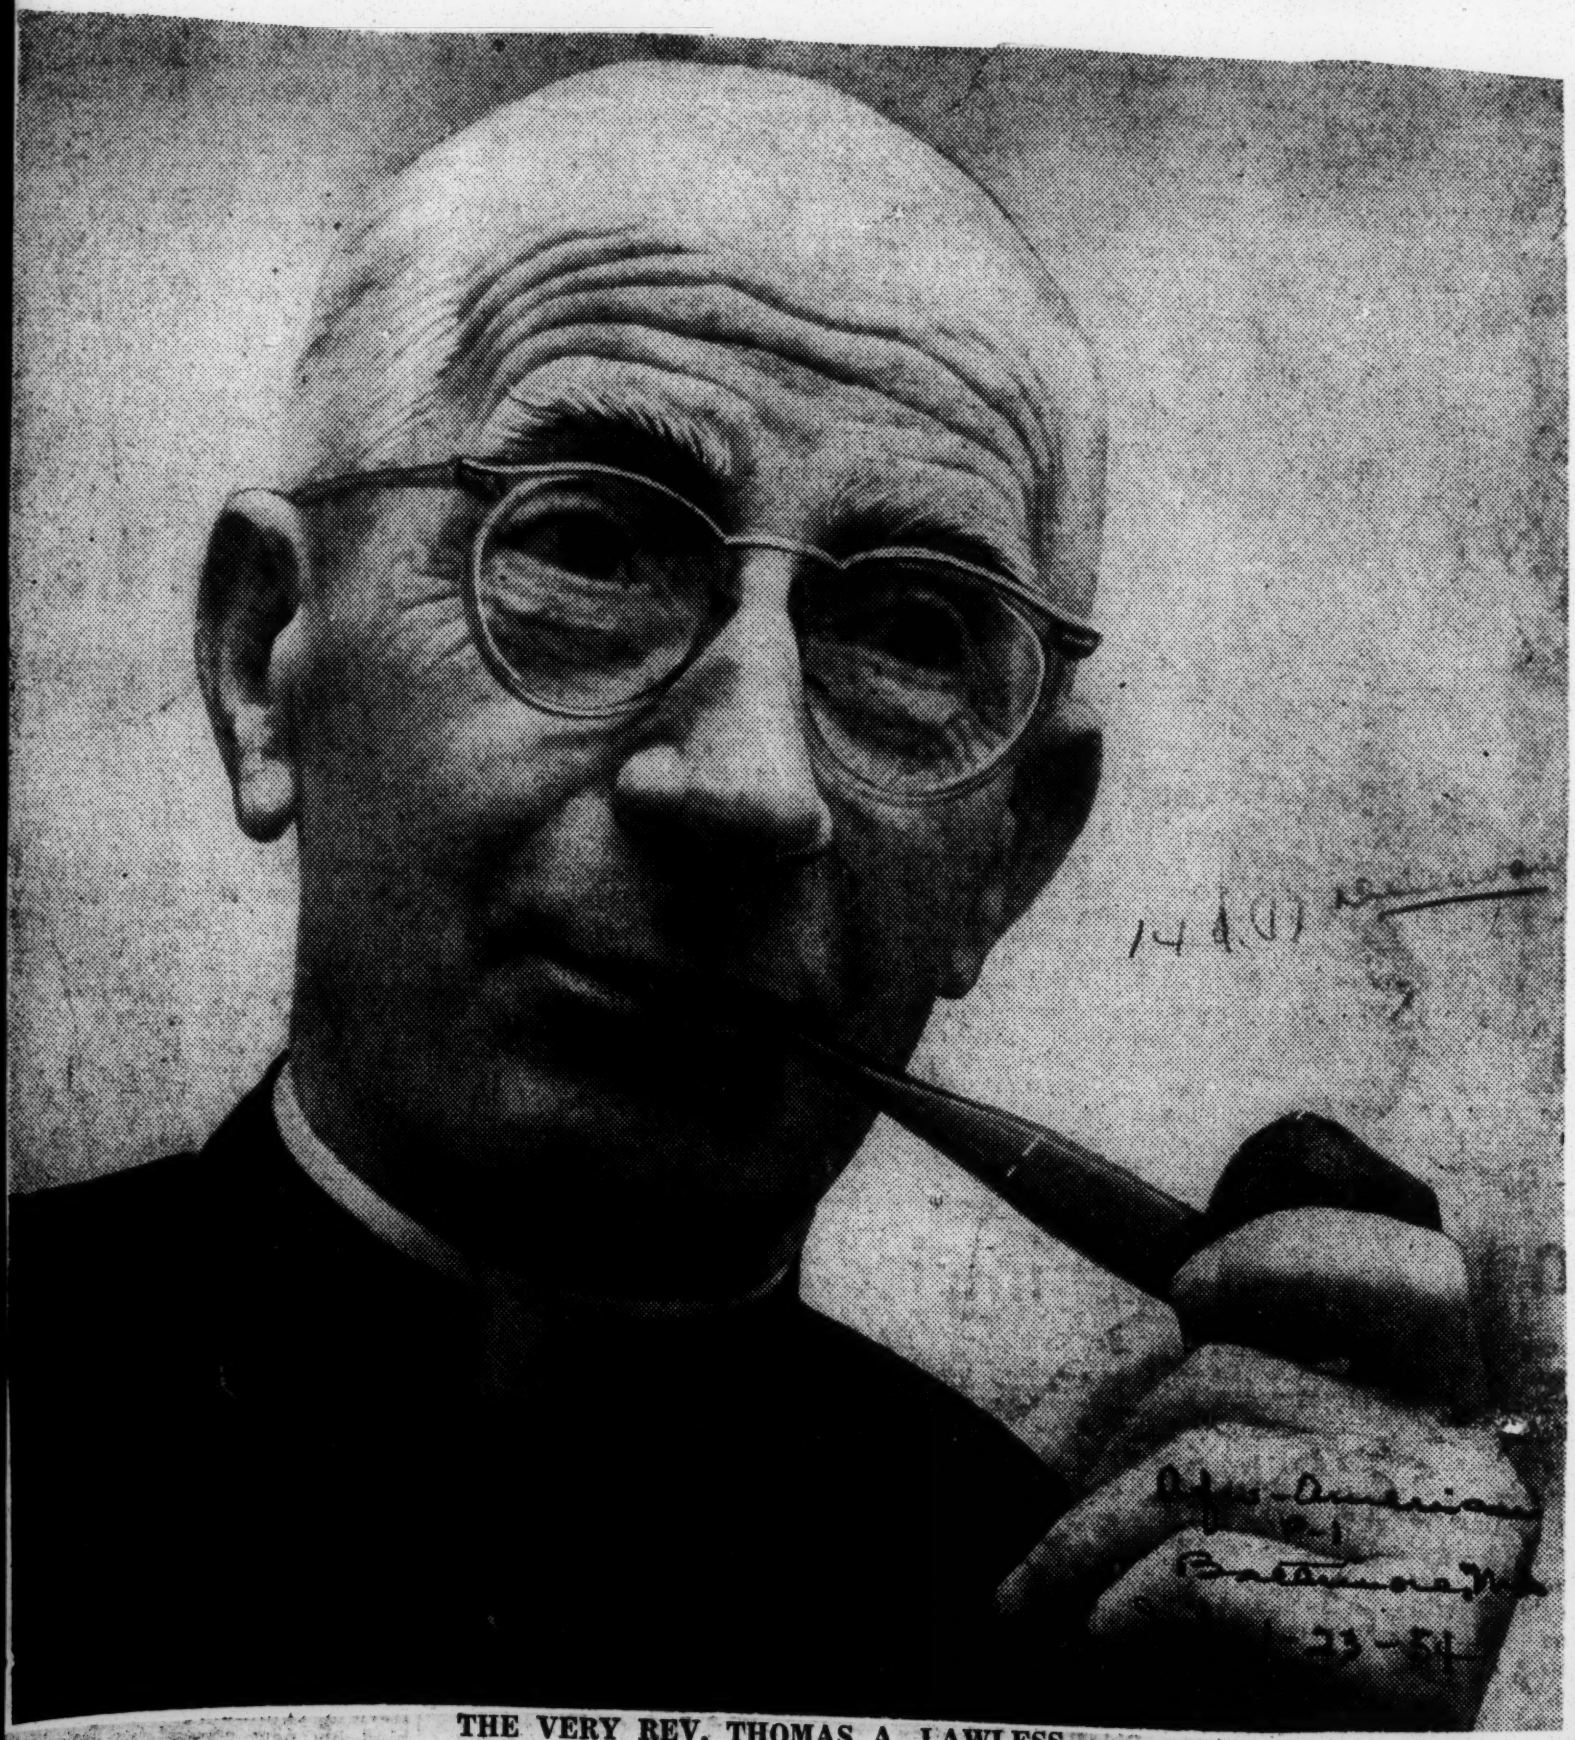
Suit was brought to compel the readmission of the colored students to the Dover school, and Chancellor Marvel ordered them readmitted. The State Supreme court, however, stayed Chancellor Marvel's order pending a hearing and a final decision in the case.

In opening the argument Monday, Mr. Lynch contended that the colored students were never legally admitted because the local board had not told the State Board of Education of its intention to desegregate the Milford school.

After their suspension, he also argued, the colored students never exhausted their administrative remedies.

Mr. Redding contended that the United States Supreme court decision gave the colored students a clear right to attend the school. He said the new Milford board had no right to suspend the colored students once they were admitted.

Mr. Morris argued that the effect of the Supreme court decision is still undetermined. He said the Supreme court is yet to issue a mandate directing the method by which integration is to be carried out.



THE VERY REV. THOMAS A. LAWLESS

"THE MECHNICS OF MIXING the schools consists of getting some colored boys and putting them in the school . . . . It is as simple as that," says the very Rev. Thomas A. Lawless. Read the story of how he integrated the Catholic schools in Wilmington, Del. in the AFRO Magazine Section.

Integration works in Del.

Catholic schools' fest successful

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

WILMINGTON, Del.—Integration works!

This has been proved by the successful operation of racially integrated parochial schools in the Catholic Diocese of Wilmington.

...ucators, doctors, lawyers, ...essmen, civic and church ...s, as well as ordinary citi... have noted how effectively ... has worked and have expressed fervent hope that it will be effected in the public school system here.

It was revealed by a recent survey by the AFRO that community leaders of this Delaware town warmly support Father Thomas A. Lawless, who is responsible for the integration of the schools of the Catholic diocese.

Favorable Effect Hoped For

Said Louis T. Redding, attorney:

"It's a splendid step in the right direction. Since the Catholics have parochial schools all over the city and country, their move is of great importance.

"This voluntary, non-compulsory integration might have a favorable effect on situations in which the issue is being forced.

"It is an example to the rest of the population and emphasizes that there is not anything like complete hostility to colored and white children attending school together."

Crusaded In Struggle

(Mr. Redding and Jack Greenberg of the legal staff of the NAACP were successful in their fight to have colored students admitted to the undergraduate school of the University of Delaware at Newark, Del.

Their plea for admission of colored students to the high school at Claymont and the elementary school at Hockessin, opposed after being won in lower courts, is one of the five educational controversies on which the U.S. Supreme Court decision is awaited.

Mr. Redding said the fight is one of desegregation rather than integration. He also cited an instance of voluntary integration in a public school in suburban Arden, six miles north of Wilmington.)

"Matter Of Time"

Dr. Ward I. Miller, superintendent of schools, declared:

"Racial integration in public schools is definitely on the way; it is just a matter of time. There is now a committee in the public schools studying the problem of integration.

"We have done everything within the law to effect integration. In fact, there is a great deal of it in the community."

Aaron Finger, lawyer, member of the board of education said, "I don't know anything about Father Lawless's work toward racial integration. I have no comment."

(Mr. Finger's son, Louis J., as a counselor on the attorney general's staff, opposed the fight for the admission of colored pupils to Claymont and Hockessin schools.)

No Hostility Felt

Thomas J. Healey Jr., member of the board of education, stated:

"Frankly, I never gave any thought to the situation. I have a daughter who is a first-grade pupil at Sacred Heart school which is mixed."

Mrs. Eleanor L. J. Cussler, also a member of the board of education, said:

"Speaking as an individual, and not as a member of the board, I can be very frank; segregation is on its way out. It should have been gone.

"However, one has to keep in mind that one represents a broad divergent public."

Hilmer L. Jensen, another member of the board of education and executive secretary of the Walnut Street YMCA, pointed out:

"When I was in New Jersey,

I headed the NAACP committee that worked for and achieved integration in the national guard.

"Clifford Moore, the Trenton lawyer, also led the fight. I have the same spirit here as I had there. Father Lawless is a good friend of mine. His move is outstanding."

Wagner Jackson, president of the local NAACP, agreed. He said:

"Father Lawless has done a terrific job, his aggressiveness has helped the racial issue immeasurably. My work with the NAACP speaks for my stand."

Dual Schools Inconceivable

Said Dr. Leon Anderson:

"I can't conceive of anything else but integration. I have been active in the fight for integration in the district in which my children (I am the father of six) attend school.

"My activity and interest in integration are not confined to my own, however. I think it is the only intelligent course to take. I have worked with the NAACP as chairman of the fund-raising and legal defense committees.

"Eventually, all must be in favor of integration, right across the country. Those who look upon it with disfavor might as well get on the bandwagon.

"It's the only way to have first-class citizenship and to take colored citizens out of ghettos."

Councilman Pledged

J. Ernest Barkley, city councilman and deputy collector of taxes, said:

"I have strained every effort to bring about integration. I am well acquainted with all racial movements and have fought in the front lines, not only for this issue, but for FEPC.

"I have the promise of Mayor August Wahls that, through action of council, he will approve a human relations commission similar to that in Philalelphia."

Eldridge J. Waters, principal, Frederick Douglass Stubbs high school, declared:

"Integration would be such a normal thing for anybody to hope for. There need not be any alibi for it, just plain necessity. That is, if the country is to be a democracy.

"Should integration come about, there need not necessarily be a mass exodus. It's good to know that the doors are open when one wants to enter. Integration helps one's personality development."

Contacts Help Growth

Mrs. Donald O. Wilson, principal, Elbert elementary school said:

"Children live in a world in which it is necessary for them to come in contact with all kinds of people.

"Therefore, they should grow up with advantages — and integration is one of them —that come with knowing varieties of people. Both colored and white children benefit from contact."

The Rev. J. L. Morgan, pastor, Eighth Street Baptist church, asserted:

"Integration should be effected in all instances and I am 100 per cent for it. Too many colored persons think we have arrived, they've become complacent and self-satisfied.

"Even when segregation shall have been wiped out, we still will not have arrived. There will still be much to be accomplished."

Catholics Ahead

Miss Pauline Young, teacher, Howard high school, said:

"The Catholics are way ahead. Father Lawless began integrating pupils some four years ago. It is marvelous that he took this stand.

"Personally and as a member of the board and publicity group of the NAACP, I endorse this issue among others which include a fight for colored nurses in city hospitals. Much is also being accomplished through the Delaware Fellowship commission."

Businessman Approves

LeRoy E. Brown Sr., proprietor of Delaware Cleaners, Eighth and Wilson sts. declared:

"There should be no question of the advantages of racial integration in anyone's mind. Normal development is dependent upon normal living.

"Segregation is anything but normal. It is the badge of ignorance. Too many people, otherwise intelligent, are ignorant when it comes to interracial understanding."

"All the Advantages"

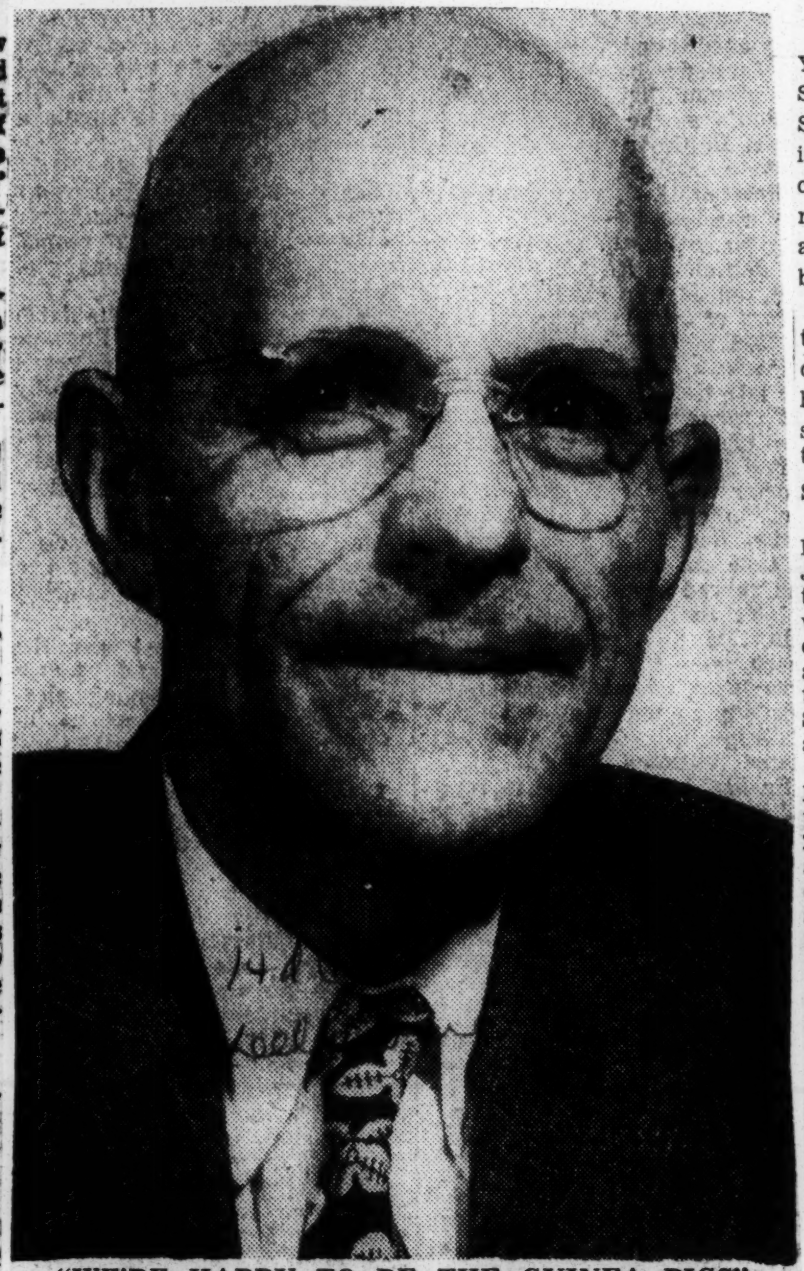
Alfred Anderson, quartet singer of 1630 McDowell st., remarked:

"My wife, Irene, and I want our children to have all the advantages that our joint efforts can afford them.

"Sending them to segregated schools, to which seven of our brood go, starts them off with a second-class citizenship.

"I will never hesitate to go all out for integration in interest of all, not just my loved ones."

(The Andersons were featured in the AFRO, last year, as a "family of the month," one of the magazine features.)



"WE'RE HAPPY TO BE THE GUINEA PIGS"

"EVEN ON THE SOCIAL level the mixed school has met no serious difficulties. Children don't have racial prejudices; they have to be taught," says Harry E. Stahl, superintendent of schools at Claymont, Delaware, in the fourth of a series of 11 articles on the five school segregation cases. See story and photographs in AFRO Magazine section in this issue.

Delaware OKs School Ruling

Attorney General H. Albert Young, of Delaware, one of the States directly affected by the U.S. Supreme Court ban on segregation in the Nation's public schools, declared yesterday that the tribunal's ruling "is now the law of the land, and our State of course will abide by it."

Delaware, with a school population of more than 50,000, about one-quarter of whom are Negroes, has had segregated public schools since long before it was admitted to the Union in 1787.

SEES SEPARATION BANNED

Young, reached at Washington, D. C., where he was visiting Sen. John J. Williams (R., Del.), said that while he had not yet received with the Supreme Court's official decision, he had read news reports about it and was of the opinion that "it strikes down any and all State regulations permitting separate school systems."

He further pointed out that Delaware's State Constitution contains a clause—Article 10, Section 2 — which declares that "separate schools for whites and colored children will be maintained," and said it was likely that the Legislature, not now in session, would have to revoke that clause.

Dr. George R. Miller, Jr., Delaware's superintedent of public instruction, expressed the opinion that the Supreme Court's ruling "will not have any immediate effect." He noted that "it will take some time for any definite plan to be evolved."

EXPECTS NO TROUBLE

Dr. Miller commented that "the citizens of Delaware are law-abiding, so I don't expect there will be any trouble if time is taken to make the necessary adjustments."

Attorney General Young explained that "Delaware became a party to the Supreme Court case only on narrow grounds, which were, namely, whether the State would be given the opportunity to equalize its public school facilities where inequalities now exist."

He said that "since the court's ruling appears to be sweeping, and wipes out all segregation, such a question and all other questions become moot and are, in effect, struck down."

APPEALED STATE RULING

He said the State had taken the appeal to the Supreme Court against a ruling of its own Supreme Court, handed down Aug. 28, 1952.

That ruling upheld a decision on April 1, 1952, by the Delaware Chancery Court, which ruled that eight Negro children must be admitted to two "white" public schools the following fall term.

FORCED TO GO 6 MILES

Seven of the children, records show, were residents of Claymont, six miles northeast of Wilmington, who were required to travel to Negro schools established in Wilmington, since the Claymont School, serving the first to 12th grades, was restricted to white students.

The State Supreme Court upheld a claim that this additional travel made the facilities provided for the children "inferior to those for white children."

The eighth pupil involved was a resident of Hockessin, a small community seven miles west of Wilmington. Hockessin has two public schools, and the court ruled that the one provided for Negro pupils was "grossly inadequate."

RULING OPENS DOORS

As a result of the State Supreme Court's ruling, the seven Claymont children were admitted to the school there, while the Hockessin child was permitted to attend the school in his home community. Since the fall of 1952, several other Negro pupils have been admitted to the two white schools, but none has been admitted to white schools elsewhere in the State, according to school authorities.

The eight children affected by the ruling were the first Negroes to attend white public schools in Delaware, although the University of Delaware and parochial schools had been opened earlier to Negro students.

Type of decree only issue before court

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The effect of the May 17 decision in the school cases was to render void state constitutional and statutory provisions requiring segregated schools. Attorneys general of several states, in advising state boards of education, have so ruled.

The only issue remaining before the Supreme Court in the school cases is the type of decree it should issue. On that it has asked the "full assistance" of the parties in formulating its decrees.

To get that assistance it restored the school cases to the docket and requested further argument on the questions of:

1. Whether it should order the admission forthwith of colored children to schools of their choice, "within the limits set by normal geographic school districting," or permit a gradual changeover from a segregated to a nonsegregated system.

2. WHETHER THE COURT should issue detailed decrees, appoint a special master to hear evidence and recommend the terms of the decrees, or remand the cases to the trial courts with directions to frame decrees.

If so, what instructions should the court issue and what procedures should the trial courts follow in arriving at the terms of the detailed decrees.

These are the only two questions which the attorneys in the five cases, the Attorney General of the United States, and the attorneys general of the states maintaining segregated schools may discuss in their briefs or on oral argument.

—o O o—

IN THE MEANTIME, there is nothing which prevents any stat from taking steps now to enc segregated schools and to begir to support more adequately a single school system.

Public schools in the south are opening this fall with the best prospects they have had in the history of free public education for equalizing educational opportunity for children within each state.

In its decision in the four state cases the high court declared that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

By doing away with their dual school systems, which entail additional building and operational costs, salaries for duplicate administrative personnel, and uneconomic use of classrooms resulting in overcrowding and double shifts in some instances and less pupils than capacity in others, school districts will be able to spend more money on school construction and teachers' salaries.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS in some states — Maryland, West Virginia, Delaware, Missouri and Kansas — and the District of Columbia have already begun to move in the direction of a single public school system.

Progress in other states, which can least afford dual school systems, is being retarded by demagogs who would mislead the people into believing that the mandate of the Supreme Court, can be disobeyed and segregated schools maintained.

Integration To Affect 3 Of 10 Pupils

School Crowding Relieved by Use Regardless of Race

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

Three out of 10 students will attend integrated District public schools when the term opens September 13.

This historic step marks the beginning of a one-year conversion of Washington's dual schools into a single integrated school system.

School officials estimate that at least 30,000 of the anticipated 105,000 to 106,000 students will share buildings regardless of race for the first time. Of this number, approximately 21,452 are white students and 8357 Negro.

This rule-of-thumb estimate is based on the special transfer of 2800 Negro students out of their overcrowded buildings and of 100 pupils who formerly traveled "excessive distance" to class. These young people this month will enter schools which previously were attended by white pupils only.

In addition, the two teachers' colleges will offer courses to about 900 students, who may attend either plant regardless of race. A total of 8500 persons are expected to attend evening schools on an integrated basis for the first time a week from Monday.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning has stated the 30,000 figure undoubtedly would fall far short of the real situation once school got under way. Due to the establishment of new school boundaries which must be followed by all students not now enrolled, there is the possibility that almost all of the District's 160 schools could be slightly integrated this fall.

For example, it has been learned that last week eight Negro students were registered at five senior and junior high schools which formerly enrolled only white students.

A tenth grade girl, who moved here from the Virgin Islands, was admitted to Eastern High. Rosevelt High enrolled a girl who moved into its boundary from Arlington. Stuart Junior High accepted applications from two young people new to the school system and Taft received one. Macfarland Junior High registered three such students.

School administrators, due to a Board of Education policy that race of students and staff be omitted from regular school records, may not reveal the racial ratio in individual buildings. Some state this will make it difficult for them to report on actual integration.

As with any major change, the proposed partial start of integration has brought a last-minute flurry of questions from parents. The switchboard at Franklin Administration Building, school headquarters, has been swamped.

Chief query is: "Where does my child attend school on opening day?"

Most of the confusion centers around the new school zones. These boundaries affect some children this month, others in February. The new zone map becomes 100 percent effective in September, 1955.

On opening day, the new zones must be followed by these students:

- All persons who enroll for the first time in Washington schools. This includes kindergarteners, persons moving here from out of town and pupils transferring from private schools. This includes former District students who are returning to the system after a year or more lapse.
- Grade school students who moved from one section of town to another during the summer. Junior and senior high students who have changed residence may follow the new zones or attend their former schools.

Most old District students this month will attend their present school. Students who last spring were promoted to the seventh and tenth grades will attend the junior and senior highs to which they already have been assigned.

According to a school board edict, old students may elect to continue in their present school until graduation unless overcrowding results in the future.

In February, 1955—midterm—all new high school zones will become effective. Many grade school zones will begin to operate for all students regardless of race at midterm, school officials predict. All the new junior high and elementary school zones will become effective by fall, 1955.

School officers last week began notifying parents about registration procedure.

Principals will be in all grade schools Wednesday and Thursday from 9 a. m. to noon and from 1 to 4:30 p. m.

Here are the general rules for parents with grade school pupils:

- New pupils will be admitted to kindergarten who will be 5 years of age or older by January 15, 1955. Parents are re-

SUIT FILED TO HALT D.C. SCHOOL INTEGRATION

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—In spite of the fight between white and Negro citizens of Washington, school officials are going right ahead with their plans to begin integrating schools here by the openng date on September 13.

The Federation of Citizens Association, an organization of all white citizens, is so much opposed to the Superintendent's integration plan that it has filed suit against the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

This group requested an immediate injunction to force school officials to continue segregated schools until the Supreme Court defines the method and timing of the conversion.

The following day the Federation of Civic Associations, an all-Negro group, announced that it might seek to intervene in the lawsuit. This organization which is supporting the Board's plans to begin a program of desegregation stated that its legal committee is studying the situation.

The white group contends that the board of education is acting arbitrarily, and illegally in starting desegregation before the high court issues detailed instructions on how to carry out the May 17 ruling declaring segregation unconstitutional.

The plan offered by School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning and adopted by the board, removes all racial restrictions from pupils entering the District school system for the first time or moving from one school zone to another.

Under this ruling eight Negro pupils registered for white schools on Sept. 1, the first registration day in secondary schools for the new term.

It is expected that about 3,000 colored pupils will be transferred to white schools by the time the term begins.

Superintendent Corning predicted that many of the city's schools will have both pupils and teachers of both races.

quired to present birth and vaccination certificates.

● Kindergarten, first grade and all other pupils who were not enrolled in District schools last year should apply Wednesday and Thursday at the grade school nearest their homes. In most cases, these will be the schools in the pupils' new zones. If not, the principals will direct the parents to the schools serving their residence areas.

● All old grade school students (except those promoted to junior high) will report at 9 a. m. September 13 to their last year's rooms. This does not include students who already have been notified of transfers to other schools. Pupils new to grade schools will report at 10 a. m.

These are the rules for new students seeking admission to junior high schools (seventh, eighth and ninth grades):

● They should report any day this week to the junior high which serves the territory in which they live.

● A copy of the last report card, birth and vaccination certificates should be presented.

● Ninth grade students who wish to take technical courses may register at Armstrong High, 1st and O sts. nw., since the other highs do not carry ninth-year classes.

These rules govern new students to senior high schools (tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades):

● Students not enrolled last year should seek admission by Friday at the senior high serving territory in which they live.

● Proper credentials from the school previously attended should be presented in addition to birth and vaccination certificates.

● New students, wherever they may live in the District, may be admitted to Roosevelt or Cardozo High School if they desire a three-year intensive business course or to McKinley or Armstrong Highs if they desire a major technical course.

The city's vocational high schools are not zoned since they operate on a city-wide basis. Students seeking admission to Bell, Chamberlain, Burdick, Phelps or M. M. Washington Vocationals, should make inquiry at the building as to courses desired and offered.

Veterans wishing to attend a regular senior high should apply to the principal of the school located nearest their homes. Veterans wishing to attend the Veterans Center should contact James W. Bishop, director, at Armstrong High.

All Evening Schools, except Thomson, will open at 6:45 p. m. Wednesday and Thursday for registration. Thomson will hold registration from 10 a. m. to noon and 1 to 3 p. m. September 13.

Information on evening school courses may be obtained from Roosevelt High, 13th and Upshur sts. nw., and Cardozo High School, 13th and Clifton sts. nw.

All nonresident students must pay tuition in advance of enrollment. Parents and guardians are urged to complete registration of nonresident pupils by Friday. Tuition must be paid to the Collector of Taxes office and a receipt presented to the school.

Parents of nonresident grade school pupils should call the office of Mrs. J. C. Smith, director, Berret School, 14th and Q sts. nw., for information about the nearest grade school.

Because of overcrowded conditions in other junior highs, nonresident students will be admitted only to Browne, Francis, Gordon, Hine, Jefferson, Langley, Macfarland, Shaw, Sousa, Stuart and Taft.

Nonresident senior high students from Virginia may attend Western; from Bethesda-Chevy Chase area, Woodrow Wilson; from Takoma-Silver Spring area, Coolidge; from Mount Rainier-Hyattsville area, McKinley; and students from Maryland living north or south of the Massachusetts ave. and east of the District Line may attend Eastern.

Court Won't Halt School Desegregation In Capital

Washington, Sept. 9 (AP)—United States District Court refused today to interfere with the racial-integration program for public schools in the District of Columbia.

Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut denied a plea by the Federation of Citizens' Associations, an all-white group, for a temporary order restraining the District Board of Education from registering Negro and white students in the same schools and classes.

The Supreme Court ruled earlier this year that public-school segregation based on race alone is unconstitutional.

Illegal Action Argued

But the federation argued the board acted illegally in starting integration before the Supreme Court has finished its hearings on the problem and issued a final decree spelling out how integration can be achieved. These hearings are scheduled to begin next month.

After listening to 2 hours of argument, Judge Schweinhaut ruled there would be more hardship in halting the plans already under way than there would be for a comparatively few people in allowing them to proceed.

Soon after the Supreme Court handed down its decision, Washington educational authorities began drafting their integration plans, intending to make them a model for the rest of the nation.

"What we are faced with today," Assistant Corporation Counsel Milton D. Korman told the court, "is an established, integrated school system."

Might Bring 'Utter Chaos'

White and Negro students registered quietly yesterday for the first mixed classes, which will start Monday. Korman said that to change plans now would cause mass transfers of pupils, teachers, and school furniture and result in "utter chaos" in the national capital's school system.

David C. Colladay, federation attorney, conceded the Supreme Court can give only a broad outline of desegregation and that details must be left to local school authorities. But he argued the District of Columbia board should wait for additional guidance from the high tribunal.

D. C. Schools Open Today As Integration Gets Start

An estimated 98,000 Washington youngsters will ease out of their long summer holiday today with a half-day session opening the fall term of the District's 165 public schools.

On the dot of 9 a. m. all the schools will launch formally the changeover from a segregated to an integrated public education system.

Schools will dismiss all students at 12:15 p. m. today.

The estimate of 98,000 students is for first-day enrollment. By mid-October, this figure is expected to reach a record-breaking 106,000.

School officials have said that a majority of the District's schools will have some integrated classes beginning this week. The integration process is scheduled to be completed here in a year.

Faculties also will be integrated in a majority of the grade, junior and senior high schools to which Negro pupils have been transferred. For the first time, new teachers this summer were appointed and assigned without regard to race.

Washington Group May Ask Supreme Court to Decide on Integration Plan

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10—The District Board of Education reversed itself on a controversial desegregation issue, and decided to reinstitute a racial tally of pupil enrollment and teacher assignment.

The nine board members, who voted in a special polling, changed their previous opposition to such a tally on the recommendation of Hobart M. Corning, Superintendent of Schools, who called their attention to legal complications that could lead to "all kinds of misconceptions."

Meanwhile, as school principals and their staffs met to prepare for the opening of school next Monday, Mr. Corning said the racial integration plan just going into effect would help all the district's pupils.

Speaking on a televised program, Mr. Corning said school integration had made it possible for the first time to make staff assignments according to the needs of all children.

Statement Strengthened

The school board had moved to drop any records on racial registration in the city system in early summer in its first declaration of principles to govern the school integration plan. Later the policy statement was strengthened by a vote to bar any racial figures from the school census, in addition to the school-by-school enumerations.

However, it was noted later that there is a law requiring that pupils be registered by race, and Mr. Corning said today he had recommended that the racial tabulating continue as long as the law is on the books.

Objection to the board's plans to remove the tally by races had been raised on the ground that it would prevent any direct check on progress being made in integrating the present dual system of enrolling whites and Negroes in separate schools. There would be no way of telling, it was charged, whether the number of white and Negro pupils in the several neighborhoods were in proper proportion.

Apparently Mr. Corning had this objection in mind when he urged his board members to take a new stand. He said secrecy of racial ratios in schools would not serve the public interest and could lead to "all kinds of misconceptions" concerning the effects of school integration.

Mr. Corning said he planned to make public the racial composition of school enrollments and the teaching staffs by next Wednesday.

On another desegregation front, David C. Colladay, attorney for the Federation of Citizens Association, said he might ask the Supreme Court to review an injunction suit to stop the public school integration program. The injunction suit was denied in a District Court here yesterday.

Mr. Colladay noted that the Supreme Court in its decision last spring had ruled only that segregation in public schools was unconstitutional. He said all problems of desegregation remained to be decided finally, and that, accordingly, the federation could ask to have the injunction suit reviewed by the high tribunal.

Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, president of the federation, meanwhile asked the Board of Education for an open hearing on the hardship cases resulting from desegregation.

Mr. Corning said that he has set up a biracial committee to pass on these cases.

Under the desegregation plan, only pupils new to the school system will be immediately affected by the new school boundaries.

foes of integration waging 'sniping' war

Afro American Sat. 11-13-54

By M. A. TIGNOR

WASHINGTON

Integration of the schools in the Washington area is now proceeding at a comparativley smooth rate.

But certain factions, sources and persons continue to snipe at this relatively mild innovation which attempts to implement one of the basic necessities of a democracy.

Take the Washington Star, for instance. The issue of Oct. 31 comes out with a lead editorial —supposedly mild, detached and innocuous, suggesting that there is something alarming in the alleged drop in enrollment of whites in the District system—a decline put at 8.7 per cent.

THE STAR does not attempt any interpretation of its own," the editorial says, "beyond pointing to the obvious fact that the sharp drop—largest decline in the known history of the school system—has been recorded simultaneously with integration, and that a study of individual schools indicates a pattern wherein the largest drops in white enrollment are in the schools which show the greatest percentage of colored pupils. . .

"A segregated school system is a thing of the past," continues the Star piously. "But the people of this community have a legitimate right to know all the facts, as they become available, relating to the results of integration."

For the benefit and edification of the Star, here are a few facts:

—o O o—

SCHOOL INTEGRATION is here to stay and no amount of specious reactionary reasoning on the part of vacillating editorial writers is going to bring back the jim-crow school.

The jim-crow school has been proved to be costly, burdensome, outmoded, and intolerable in every way—from an economic moral and social standpoint.

It was a blight, a cancerous growth, a roadblock in the path to freedom, equality, and first-class citizenship for the minority citizens.

—o O o—

ALL ENLIGHTENED, forward-thinking people hail its departure; it is only the moral degenerates, the Hitlerites and the atavistic troglodytes like Bryant Bowles who bemourn its death and vainly try to resurrect the discredited jim-crow system.

The "alarming" drop in "white" enrollment is due to one thing and one thing only: exodus of the white population to the suburban areas, a condition which obtained prior to any hint of eventual desegregation in the local schools.

Of course, there are a few bigots who hope to escape the effects of the Supreme Court edict by sending their children to schools in nearby counties—counties which, at present, are openly defying the highest law of the land by maintaining openly or covertly a system of segregation.

—o O o—

THESE COUNTIES and their conspiring, compromising attorneys general, will be brought to book shortly.

An editorial, like the one in question, gives secret aid and comfort to an agitator like the aforementioned Bowles, who not only advocates, but perpetrates force and violence and is allowed to get away with it by lax, inefficient, incompetent postal and police officials.

The failure of postal officials to take a vigorous stand in defense of mailman Roscoe Cooper and denunication of and apprehension of Bowles, amount to a virtual condonation of the aims and methods of Bowles.

—o O o—

AND THE Washington Star, refuge of the die-hards, is the worst offender of them alll.

Mindful of its huge circulation among minority citizens, it attempts to camouflage its venom with disguised editorials, emphasizing its "neutral" attitude, when actually, it is constantly on the alert for chances to pick and snipe at progress and undermine the forces of democracy.

Jim Crow is far from defeated. We must now move to the next big step: removal and elimination of all types, forms and manifestations of segregation and discrimination in all employment, public and private.

—o O o—

THIS IS a huge task; it involves the formation of federal and state FEPCs with teeth, election of a more liberal Congress, education of the electorate, alliances with organized labor, etc.

But like the milestone of the school victory, it can be won. Meanwhile, we must be on the alert to guard against the snipers, the die-hards and the "friends" who would love to perpetuate the phenomenon of second-class citizenship in a democracy because of race and color.

Integration In Cathedral Schools Set

Post Times Herald Wed. 10-20-54 Washington D.C.

Parents of students attending the three Cathedral Schools of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation yesterday were informed that the educational institutions will start a program of integration next fall.

Integration was ordered by the Cathedral Chapter, 30-member governing body of the Washington Cathedral Foundation, at a meeting Friday. The decision was announced yesterday in letters to the parents.

The Chapter declared that education in the three schools should be offered to children of all races on equal terms, and requested the governing boards of the schools to implement this policy as soon as practicable.

The institutions are Beauvior, The National Cathedral Elementary School which includes children from nursery school through the third grade; St. Albans School for Boys which begins at the fourth grade; and The National Cathedral School for Girls which also begins at the fourth grade.

The integration schedule provides that starting September, 1955, Beauvoir shall admit qualified students into all grades without regard to race, color or creed.

The same policy will take effect starting September, 1956, at St. Albans and the National Cathedral School for Girls.

Starting in September, 1957 the same policy will be followed in the day school. The boarding departments will be opened no later than September,, 1958, the chapter said Some 1000 children are now enrolled in the three schools

School Official Reports Speed Up On Integration

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of local public schools, Friday told the Senate District of Columbia appropriations subcommittee that he is speeding up the integration of the dual school system here.

The school superintendent appeared before the committee to protest cuts in school funds for the fiscal year beginning July 1, amounting to $168,430.

Of the total reduction, $52,948 was made in the item for general administration, which would force Corning to cut the administrative staff, and $115,482 in the item for additional classroom teachers.

CRACKER BARREL APPROACH

Senator Everett M. Dirksen, of Illinois, subcommittee chairman, called the cut made by the House "a cracker barrel aapproach."

"Certainly integration is not going to reduce the number of youngsters in the schools in the District, Dirksen said.

He added that integration also would have no impact on the number of children that a teacher can appropriately and efficiently handle," nor "on the fact that the school population here, as elsewhere, is growing year by year."

Reviewing what had been done here toward desegregating the schools, Corning said immediately after the Supreme Court decision the Board of Education adopted a four-point policy statement.

DECREE OF COURT

He called this statement all inclusive and said it directed school officers to comply fully with the decree of the court, "even though the decree is not yet handed down and in spite of the fact there are to be hearings next fall.

"Because there is no legal prohibition against our going ahead, the Board of Education did adopt that policy," he said, adding:

"As a result of months of study, I have presented a plan to the Board of Education in general outlining the steps that would be taken to accomplish it and at the meeting of the board to be held next Wenesday, I am presenting a detailed time schedule for every step of the way following out my original statement to the Board of Education that the entire process would be completed by February (September), 1955.

"We now find that it is almost certain that we are going to be able to step up that completion date earlier than that.

"So far in the plan that the board has accepted we are transferring in September from colored—what have been colored schools to what have been white schools—children in all seriously overcrowded areas, and we are opening the McKinley High School (white), for example, and the Armstrong High School (colored), both of them technical high schools, on a bi-racial basis.

"We are opening both teachers colleges on a bi-racial basis in September. Then there will be progress steps taken immediately following that.

'So we are going about it to get the entire thing accomplished before, if possible, September, 1955."

SCHOOL BOARD

Corning said school officers are now in the process of developing new boundaries, which are to be reported to the school board on July 1.

The new boundaries will be drawn on a desegregated basis, he said, and "will be very different from the original boundaries because they will involve in a given area children of both races."

To draw the new boundaries, Corning said, school officers "had tack maps made of the school population in every school in the city."

The residence of every child is indicated on the tack maps to assist school officers in drawing the new boundaries.

Corning said administrative officers also have put all the attendance cards of the over 100,000 school children in Washington in IBM machines by blocks.

He said "we not only have the tack maps, but we have all the IBM cards and we can pull them out of the machine to indicate how many children of which grade level are in a certain block, which is of great assistance in getting those zones properly drawn so that he will have a minimum of shifting later on."

Corning said the new boundaries must be flexible because if an overcrowded situation develops, it is necessary to go over a block and send children to another school.

Desegregation in the Baltimore schools, Corning said, is much simpler than in the Washington schools. In Baltimore, he said, the colored school population is much smaller in proportion to the total population and is more concentrated.

Corning also protested the cut in funds for additional teachers. He said originally the schools had asked for 236 classroom teaching positions. The District Commissioners, he said, cut the number to 175.

The House approved funds for 160 teaching position, including fifteen instrumental music teachers.

Corning said the schools wanted the music teachers but he is disappointed that they are getting them "by sacrificing regular classroom teachers."

MUST CHANGE LAWS FOR INTEGRATION

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Before desegregation of the public school system in the District of Columbia can be completed, Congress will have to revise some of the laws it enacted in an effort to set up here substantially equal school systems for white and colored children.

Unlike the states which have dual school systems, the District of Columbia has no specific law that required or authorized segregation in public schools. At most, various Acts of Congress relating to the public schools here can be said only to permit segregation.

CERTAIN STATES

But there are certain states and rules of the Board of Education which need revision to enable the school board to integrate the school system from top level administrative positions to custodial jobs.

The types of congressional acts which require revision are those providing for two first assistant superintendents of schools — one for the white schools and the other for the colored schools—and two boards of examiners, each with a chief examiner—again one board for the white schools and the other for the colored schools.

An act approved as late as July 7, 1947, gave the first assistant superintendent for white schools general supervision over the white, and the colored first assistant superintendent general supervision over the colored schools, under the direction of the superintendent of schools.

KEEP OFFICERS

For the present, Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, plans to keep all administrative officers, directors and department heads, although they have duplicating functions. But he is not filling a vacancy caused by the retirement of Dr. Edwin B. Henderson, who was head of the department of health, physical education, athletics and safety in the colored schools since 1925. He retired June 30..

Rules of the Board of Education, which have the effect of law, are in the process of being revised to eliminate all reference to race.

Dr. Corning said a complete survey of functions of all duplicating officers will precede any policy decision as to what will be done with them. The local public school system does not seem to have too many school administraive jobs, he added.

Colonel West A. Hamilton, the chairman of the Rules Committee of the Board of Education, said he does not think any present duplicating officers should be fired.

"We'll have to find some way to absorb them," he said.

He pointed out that Dr. Corning will have another duplicating vacancy August 31, when Charles C. Knight, head of the white evening schools, will retire. His retirement will leave Bernard F. Sewell, head of the colored evening schools, in line of direct desegregated evening schools.

School Building Plans Changed For Integration

Some Construction Would Be Deferred, Others Speeded Up

By James G. Deane

Race integration is causing reshuffling of District school construction plans.

Because of integration, school officials tentatively have decided to:

1. Postpone a $8 million replacement for colored Phelps Vocational High School, which had been scheduled to start next year.

2. Give high priority to replacing the 83-year-old white Seaton Elementary School, I street between Second and Third N.W., and postpone or drop a proposed new colored school in that vicinity.

3. Merge the present crippled children's schools in a new, "model" Health School.

4. Revamp and re-equip McKinley High School to house all technical students, including those now sent to Armstrong.

5. Postpone or drop a proposed third floor addition to the colored Payne Elementary School, Fifteenth and C streets S.E.

To Board Aug. 9.

These decisions will be reflected in recommendations going to the Board of Education August 9. Officials expect to include the Seaton, Health and McKinley projects in more than $6 million in new construction to be proposed for next year.

The Phelps and Payne projects and the new school near Seaton are being dislodged from high-priority spots in the city's new public works program.

The existence of extra space in white schools, soon to become available to absorb excess colored enrollment, is enabling the postponements.

The Phelps replacement, costliest project in the entire $35 million school construction program, was given high priority originally because of hopes to convert the present Phelps, at Benning road and Twenty-fourth street N.E., into an urgently needed grade school. This would have relieved crowding at the colored Young School and others.

Two Schools Available.

Under integration, however, the white Wheatley and Kingsman Schools are becoming available to colored youngsters instead, and the intended conversion is no longer urgent.

Nearby white school space also will now become available to pupils at Payne.

Seaton, the city's second oldest grade school still housing pupils, isn't scheduled for replacement in the works program until the fourth year, or 1957-8

Associate Supt. John M. Riecks suggested, however, that replacing Seaton next year will postpone the need for the proposed additional school in the Seaton neighborhood, since Seaton has extra capacity and the new Seaton would, too.

The deferred school, which has been intended for some site west of North Capitol street and north of Massachusetts avenue, might or might not ever need to be built, according to Mr. Riecks. If not, it will mean a saving of almost $1 million. Besides all this, no site is yet in hand anyway.

School officials had already made known their intention of building a single new Health School and revamping McKinley.

Health Annex Switched.

A $350,000 addition to the present white Health School at Thirteenth and Allison streets N.W. and a new colored elementary - health combination at Thirteenth and S streets N.W. originally were scheduled for construction next year. The Thirteenth and S school will still be recommended, but the health annex will be sliced off and the money saved switched to the new project.

School officials are tentatively committed to locating the new Health School at Mount Olivet road and Holbrook street N.E., formerly slated for the new Phelps. Commissioner Renah F. Camalier has shown interest in building near the present white school on Thirteenth street, however.

In mind for the new Phelps is a site once intended for a new Armstrong High School at Sixth street and Florida avenue N.E. Now no new Armstrong is slated to be built.

Here are the other projects slated to go into the proposed 1955-6 construction budget, in addition to the Health School, McKinley and Seaton:

New elementary school at Sixth street and Riggs road N.E., needed to relieve crowding at the Keene School. Cost, $819,950.

Addition to Anacostia High School, including cleassrooms, stage dressing rooms and lockers. Cost, $560,000.

A second gymnasium for Randall Junior High. Cost, $160,000.

A second gymnasium, infirmary, storage rooms and other facilities for Eliot Junior High. Cost, $658,350.

Addition to Garfield Elementary School, Twenty-fifth street and Alabama avenue S.E., including 12 rooms and an assembly hall. Cost, $850,000.

The school board, on August 9, will get both the new building recommendations and the rest of the 1955-56 school budget.

District heads study 'halt-integration' suit

Afro-American P. 8 Baltimore Md

WASHINGTON

The District Corporation Counsel's office was studying on Wednesday the next move to be made in the suit brought against the District Board of Education and Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning by the Federation of Citizens Associations.

On Tuesday, the white group filed a petition for an injunction against the board and Dr. Corning asking that they be restrained from putting the desegregation program into effect in the District public schools.

Date 8-20-54

THE PETITION was the outgrowth of a meeting of the Federation on June 5, 1954, at which its officials were authorized to take legal steps to fight the desegregation plans.

The suit was filed in U.S. District Court by 15 white parents and the FCA, jointly. The parents, 13 of whose families live in Northeast Washington and two in Southeast, filed on behalf of their children.

— oO o —

IN ITS complaint, the white Federation — headed by Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, president — asks the court to restrain and enjoin the Board of Education and Superintendent Corning from taking any further steps actions, or procedures towards integration of schools prior to further action by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Federation and the parents charge that the Board and the superintendent had no lawful authority to take any steps toward putting their desegregation plans into effect.

Outlining its position, in its claim that desegregation would work hardship on white pupils if colored pupils are integrated with them, the complaint says:

— o Q o —

"IN JUNE 1954, by a unanimous vote the Federation of Citizens Associations authorized legal steps to be taken in behalf of and in the name of the Federation to assure an orderly process of desegregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia as provided for by the Supreme Court when it re-docketed the cases on segregation in public schools for presentation of arguments on methods of procedure."

"Implementing this action of the entire Federation at the said June 5 meeting," the complaint continues," the Executive Board on July 16, authorized Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, president, and William K. Norwood, treasurer, to engage counsel to take such legal steps as might be necessary or appropriate."

"Pursuant to this, the Federations joins as plaintiff in this cause," the petition says.

— o O o —

THE FEDERATION says it "represents and speaks for almost all of the white parents and their children of school age who are residents of the District of Columbia."

The suit is against the nine board members and Dr. Corning in their official capacities. As such, they must be defended by the Corporation Counsel's office which in the original arguments before the Supreme Court defended the District's segregated school system.

— o O o —

THE COMPLAINT based its action upon its contention that the board and Dr. Corning "have firmly announced their intention to put into effect and to enforce a certain over-all plan formulated by them for the purpose of immediately accomplishing many very substantial and important steps towards the conversion and transformation of the dual public school system of the District of Columbia as established by law into a single or so-called integrated system."

The suit outlines these general steps and plans made by Dr. Corning and the Board of Education for desegregation next month, with special emphasis on the June 23, 1954 "calendar of dates and steps" submitted by Dr. Corning.

— o O o —

THE BOARD and Dr. Corning, the complaint charges, "had no lawful authority to take any steps toward putting these plans into effect."

The complaint declares that "until the Supreme Court takes further action in the case of Bolling versus Sharpe all rights, privileges and duties of all school age children and their parents under existing laws do and will remain the same as prior to May 17, 1954."

— o O o —

IT WAS on May 17, 1954, that the Supreme Court ruled segregated public schools in the District violated the constitution of the United States.

The suit asks that the board and Dr. Corning "be restrained and enjoined from taking any further steps, actions, or procedures towards desegregation" etc., "pending further action by the Supreme Court."

— o O o —

THE ACTION was filed by the law firm of Colloday and Colloday in the Bond Building.

Notices of the suit were served on the board members and Dr. Corning on Tuesday night and Wednesday.

— o O o —

THE WHITE Federation describes itself as "a non-profit corporation which was organized May 31, 1940, under Chapter 5, Title 5, Code of Laws of the District of Columbia (1929), which chapter provides for the creation of charitable, educational, literary, musical, scientific, mutual improvement and promotion of the arts societies."

It gives as its purpose:

A. To obtain the expression of the general public sentiment upon matters of special interest to all citizens of the District of Columbia, and to secure and make effective their united action.

B. To do all things necessary, convenient, or incidental to effectuate the aforesaid objects and purposes, to have and maintain an office, and to hold and convey such real and personal property wherever located as may be necessary for its corporate purposes and to the extent permitted by law.

— o O o —

THE FEDERATION says it is made up of 75 associations with territorial representatives "and four other public-spirited organizations which are not organized on the basis of territorial representation."

The Federation of Citizens Associations is all-white and has consistently opposed all community moves toward integration.

D. C. School Integration Makes President Happy

Post and Times Herald

President Eisenhower has expressed happiness over the successful and smooth beginning last week of District public school integration.

In a brief note to District Commissioner Samuel Spencer, Mr. Eisenhower wrote:

"I am happy to have your favorable report on the District's opening school day with mixed classes and faculties. I feel certain it will continue to run smoothly."

Spencer wired the President in Denver that all went well as the Federal City began its one-year program of ending racially separate schools.

Actually, Spencer has kept the White House continuously informed about the progress of District school integration since the Supreme Court handed down its historic May 17 ruling against segregated schools.

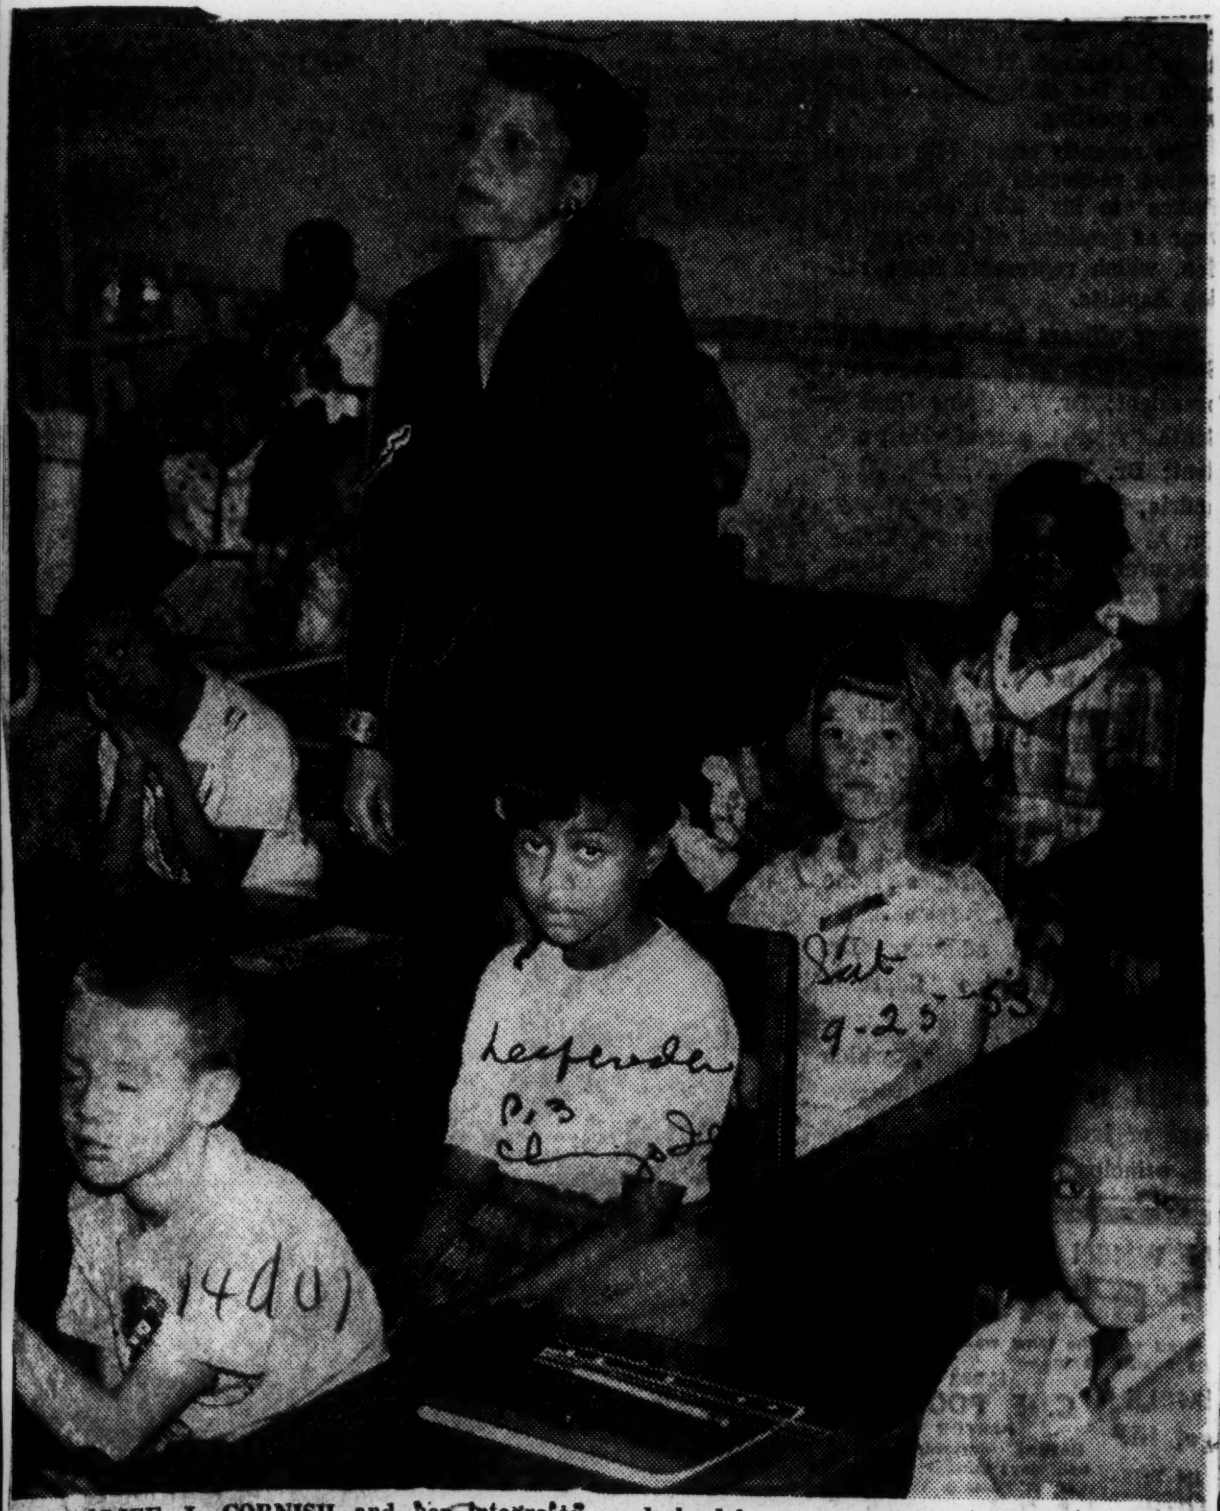
Informed of the President's letter, Corning yesterday said:

"We are very much gratified the President of the United States has recognized the plan is working smoothly here in Washington. Knowing of his great interest in the establishment of integration in the schools, we have been particularly anxious to know of his reaction to the things we have done.

"Apparently he is pleased. His letter to Commissioner Spencer will be very gratifying to all my associates."

School Board Member Walter N. Tobriner said: "I'm deeply happy to know the President approves of the way we have initiated and put through our program."

Although Corning's original integration blueprint bears a September, 1955, completion date, recent speedups in the step-by-step calendar could mean a virtual end of segregation by February.



MRS. ALICE J. CORNISH and her integrated class at Petworth school, Washington, D. C. Frances Brown, the little girl with the Alice In Wonderland bangs, seems very interested in the proceedings.

INTEGRATION'S HERE!

It Works—For the first time in the city's history, white and Negro children are sharing class work and playgrounds at a dozen or more schools in Baltimore. One hundred and forty-three thousand school children returned to their classrooms last week. Shown in the kindergarten class at School 99, left to right: Sharon Palardy, 5; Mrs. Alice Holden, teacher; George Webb, 5, and Charles Nashoff, 5.—INP.

Nation's Capital Opens Up

(Courier Press Service)

The capital of the United States was treated to an unusual spectacle Monday as 100,000 children of Washington, D. C.'s Negro and white citizens attended classes together for the first time, symbolizing the tremendous effect the May 17 Supreme Court decision has had on America's education.

The symbolic event was not without opposition for only last week District Court Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut had been forced to throw out a motion brought by the Federation of Citizens Association to halt desegration in the District.

The judge said that desegregation would work "a hardship" on some people but added, "the equities have to be balanced in favor of the general public rather than in favor of a relatively small number who would actually suffer inconvenience."

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning expressed confidence on Sunday that residents in the nation's capital would cooperate to make a success of the "big changeover" from jim crow.

However, in other sections of the country it was evident that opponents of integration had recovered fully from the shock of the High Court verdict and were busily seeking ways and means to undermine and subvert the edict.

Over in Fairmont, W. Va., a group of sixty white mothers refused to permit their children to attend classes at the non-segregated Annabelle Grade School, last Friday.

The mothers maintained that their children would boycott the classes as long as thirteen newly enrolled Negro ...dren were at th... school.

Fairmon... school officials announced that the non-segregation policy was adopted in line with the Hig... Court's ruling and pointed out that Negro pupils ha... to travel more than five miles to attend the nearest Negro schoo... at Monongah.

The Annabelle protest was the first demonstration in the Mountaineer State against the ruling.

Paradoxically in Brooke County, W. Va., forty-one Negro pupils reported for classes in white schools without incident. Yet, some counties will maintain segregated schools for this term, at least.

In Mississippi "organization" was the keynote among white men bent on keeping segregation alive in the rebel state. They are banding together in "Citizens' Councils" throughout the state. One spokesman said, "Practically every county in the state has organized, or is organizing. It's no secret. We want them (Negroes) to know in our county."

Then too, there was the Foundation of Mississippi which won its fight to keep Negroes out of white schools by passage of an amendment empowering the legislature to abolish public schools via a two-thirds vote.

Good "Christian" churchfolk were also jumping on the pro-segregationist bandwagon. In Birmingham, Ala., the so-called "old guard" of the North Alabama Methodist Conference beat down determined opposition and rammed through a resolution favoring racial segregation.

A majority of the 1,000 delegates sided with a Tuscaloosa minister, the Rev. G. M. Davenport of the Trinity Methodist Church, who said, "We have not arrived at the day when we are ready for mixed schools. We are not ready for that day and we won't be ready for some time to come."

The Rev. Mr. Davenport called critics of the resolution, "the little minority who are throwing it up to us that we are not Christians. They are the reformers who put their arms around the Negroes and want to bring them into the fold."

In Hammond, La., thirteen Negro applicants were denied admission to the Southeastern Louisiana College here Thursday by Dr. Luther M. Dyson, president, and Registrar C. J. Hyde on the grounds that the institution was created by the State Legislature of 1928 for whites exclusively.

Daniel E. Byrd, New Orleans NAACP field secretary, indicated that an appeal of the decision would be made to the State Board of Education. A Federal suit will be filed if this appeal fails, Mr. Byrd indicated.

Down in Montgomery, Ala. young Aubrey Williams revealed that he had received two threatening phone calls the night following the entrance bid of a group of Negro pupils who sought enrollment in the all white William R. Harrison Elementary School.

Over in Augusta, Ga., two white school officials predicted that the segregation of 35,000 pupils in the three-county area around Augusta would continue.

In Baltimore, Md., 143,000 students began attending school on a non-segregated basis, as did pupils on two Virginia Army posts and at several Catholic schools in Virginia and North Carolina.

But in Hutchins, Tex., a group of Negro pupils who sought to register at an elementary school were turned away.

Attorney General Richard Ervin of Florida rapped some of the Negro press for accusing him of conducting a rigged poll to try to circumvent the court ruling. He said, "Actually, I have tried to make a ... partial survey to get ... facts of the matter ... and I think we are doing so."

Mr. Ervin said, "The court itself has said that its decision is based on psychological and sociological factors and I, therefore, think it will have to consider the same factors in the thinking of white people on the subject if it is going to be at all consistent."

The Christian Church's Enid (Okla.) Phillips University denied admission to any Negroes until after the U. S. Supreme Court's October session. But, Dr. Eugene Briggs, president of the school, revealed that his church had accepted its first Negro member, Syble Brown, a graduate of Jarvis College, Hawkins, Tex.

He said, "I am prouder of our action in accepting the first Negro as a member of our church than I am of anything that has happened in our recent history."

More Negro Students To Be Transferred...

More Negro pupils will move into formerly white schools in a speedup of the District's school race-integration program next week.

Two hundred colored junior high students are slated to join about 430 others already enrolled at Eastern Junior High. Another 35 or 40 colored students will enter Macfarland Junior High.

And several hundred Negro senior high students may be given an opportunity next week to move to formerly white high schools to fill empty space. Assistant Supt. Harold A. Haynes said 438 students have indicated they would like to transfer, although some of these might move to different colored schools instead of white ones.

Drop in White Enrollment.

A drop in white school enrollment is responsible for the integration speedup.

Supt. Hobart M. Corning told reporters yesterday white senior high enrollment had failed to come up to expectations, leaving extra seats available.

The same situation applies at Eastern Junior High, which this week enrolled only about 250 white students, nearly 200 fewer than expected.

The Eastern unit, which shares building space with Eastern Senior High, has already enrolled nearly 450 colored students this week.

Shift From Eliot, Banneker.

Most of the additional 200 colored students will move to Eastern from nearby crowded Eliot. The additional colored students entering Macfarland will transfer from Banneker. They will make Macfarland's racial ratio between 107 and 112 colored, to 956 white.

The additional transfers on the senior high level had not been slated to take place before next month or possibly later.

Steps in school desegregation

WASHINGTON

May 26 — Supt. Hobart Corning revealed plans for new school boundaries to be announced later. He also announced gradual desegregation of schools including immediate transfer of 2700 Division 2 pupils to 18 Division 1 elementary schools to relieve overcrowding.

June 23 — Plans announced for completion of desegregation by 1955 with gradual use of new school boundaries beginning in Sept., 1954 for all elementary and junior high new pupils; Feb. 1955 for all school graduates and September, 1955 for all pupils.

Immediate "hardship" transfers for pupils who live near separate schools was also announced.

July 1 — SUPERINTENDENT announced new boundaries for 165 elementary, junior and senior high schools.

Sept. 13 — School opened on partial desegregated basis without incident.

Sept. 17 — Plans announced to place new boundaries into effect immediately for senior high school pupils.

Sept. 21 — SUPERINTENDENT announced that elementary pupils could begin to make application immediately for transfers based upon new boundaries.

Sept. 22 — Superintendent announced that all boundaries were being placed into effect for junior high school.

Sept. 29 — Superintendent announced slight delay in elementary school transfers on basis of new boundaries until all addresses were checked.

Oct. 4 — SENIOR HIGH school pupils in northeast and southeast schools refused to attend classes because of "overcrowded conditions as a result of stepped-up desegregation."

Oct. 7 — Superintendent Corning announced that pupils who continue to remain out of school will suffer loss of privileges.

Oct. 8 — Superintendent announced that no further desegregation changes will be made until February, 1955, after the completion of the requested elementary school transfers.

Oct. 11 — Schools return to normal.

School suit killed; Ike intervenes

Judge Schweinhaut dismisses injunction

Efforts to stop integration fail

WASHINGTON

The Federation of Citizens Associations' effort to halt public school integration in Washington appeared doomed in District Court as Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut dismissed the Federation's request for a temporary restraining order Thursday.

"I see nothing left in the case," the judge said as he denied the motion.

—o O o—

THE TWO-AND-HALF hour hearing was highlighted by a brief presented by Assistant Attorney General Warren E. Burger.

Mr. Burger said he prepared the brief as a result of a direct order from President Eisenhower in Denver that nothing be allowed to interfere with his wish that Washington become a model for the rest of the nation in schools' integration.

Following Judge Schweinhaut's observation, Asst. Corporation Counsel Milton L. D. Korman rose to make oral motion for dismissal of the entire suit.

—o O o—

EDWARD F. COLLADAY, counsel for the FCA, objected, insisting that the motion be filed in written form through the Clerk's office.

Mr. Korman presented the case for the school board and introduced an affadavit from Dr. Hobart N. Corning, Superintendent of schools, opposing the granting of the temporary restrainer.

—o O o—

CITING THE extensive planning which had gone into setting up the system now being used to integrate District schools, Dr. Corning's statement said, in part:

"Chaos would result if the present integrated school system is upset by a court of law."

—o O o—

JUDGE SCHWEINHAUT agreed.

The judge had already granted a motion presented by U.S. Attorney Leo A. Rover for the U.S. Department of Justice to file the amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief supporting the school board's action, which was presented by Mr. Berger.

At the beginning of the hearing Mr. and Mrs. John Bradley, one of the original 15 white families joined with the FCA in the suit, withdrew. However two new families entered the action.

Col. West A. Hamilton was among the school board members at the hearing.

—o O o—

MR. BURGER said in attacking the FCA's suit: "The complainant in this case does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

"While several grounds can be urged for dismissal, we particularly urge that plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief sought since their complaint is, in effect, a direct attack on the decision of the Supreme Court that segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia is unconstitutional.

—o O o—

"THE STEPS called for by the Board of Educaton's plan are reasonable and necessary ones for the establishing of an integrated school system.

"The plaintiffs in attacking this plan are attacking the integrated school system and they cannot do this because the Supreme Court has declared that only such a system is acceptable under the Constitution of the United States."

—o O o—

AT THIS point the Assistant Attorney General reminded the Court of President Eisenhower's desire for speedy establishment of an integrated school system in Washington to serve as a model for the United States.

"The action of the School Board is entirely in accord with the opinions of the Supreme Court," Mr. Burger said.

"The plaintiffs are mistaken in claiming that the announced opinion of the Supreme Court remains subject to modification. The decision on the unconstitutionality of segregated schools is not subject to modification.

—o O o—

"THE UNANIMOUS opinions of the Supreme Court read by Chief Justice Warren leave no doubt on this score."

The government's motion at this point praised the D. C. School Board for seeking to comply without delay to the opinions of the Supreme Court.

The suit developed after Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West served the court notice that he wished to be heard in opposition of the motion of the Federation of Citizens Associations urging a restraining order to prevent the immediate integration of schools.

The federation is composed of 28 white parents and 23 children. Its motion was aimed against the implementation of the "Corning Plan" for desegregation.

The corporation counsel, who represented the Board of Education and argued in favor of segregated schools here before the United States Supreme Court, as the legal officer of the District of Columbia is representing the Board of Education in the injunction proceedings.

—o O o—

HIS POSITION IN the present litigation is that the Board of Education has the authority to proceed voluntarily to abolish segregated schools here without waiting for the final decree of the Supreme Court outlining the manner in which its decision is to be carried out.

The Supreme Court in its May 17 decision ruled that segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia as well as in the states is unconsitutional.

The plaintiffs in the present litigation would have the District Court restrain the Board of Education and Dr. Corning from taking any steps to put into effect and enforce the plan for desegregation of the local public schools until the Supreme Court issues a final decree in the five school segregation cases which have been restored to the docket for argument on the manner in which the decision is to be carried out.

IT IS THE OPINION of Louis Lautier, Washington correspondent for the National Newspaper Publishers Association, that Judge Schweinhaut's action in dismissing the suit to delay desegration of District of Columbia public schools furnished to other communities a line of defense against similar suits.

It also supplies grounds, according to Mr. Lautier, for asking state attorneys general to reverse opinions holding that local school boards may not voluntarily end segregation.

Mr. Lautier points out that Judge Schweinhaut halted the argument of Assistant Corporation Counselor and Dr. Corning to say:

"I HAVE MADE up my mind. The court is clearly of the opinion that the relief sought by the parties must be denied.

"The Supreme Court of the United States has definitely held, unequivocally and categorically, that there cannot be segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and that is the end of the matter."

Continuing, Judge Schweinhaut said:

"It is then for the board of education to determine how the change shall be made. It has made such a determination."

Judge Schweinhaut added that the plan for the changeover from a segregated to a nonsegregated system was "wholly practicable insofar as any major change can be practicable."

"Manifestly the court could not set aside or disturb or direct any change of any plan such as this solely because it necessarily operates to the disadvantage or inconvenience of some people," the judge declared.

Court Denies Federation's Plea to Halt Integration

Schweinhaut Rules High Court Killed Segregation, and So That Ends Matter

By Richard L. Lyons
Staff Reporter

District Court Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut yesterday turned down a plea to delay racial integration of District schools.

The judge denied a Federation of Citizens Association request for a restraining order, saying that since the Supreme Court has held segregation unconstitutional he had no authority to halt plans to abandon it.

Result of his action is that District public schools will open Monday partially integrated as planned.

The Board of Education has decided to integrate over a one-year period, starting with new pupils who will attend schools in their home zone regardless of race. School officials said this plan has advanced so far that "chaos" would result if Schweinhaut granted the Federation's request to stop it.

Quick Decision Made

The judge reached his decision before the District had fairly started to argue why he should rule as he did.

Schweinhaut broke in on Assistant Corporation Counsel Milton D. Korman's presentation to say:

"I am clearly of the opinion that the relief sought must be denied. The Supreme Court has unequivocally and categorically held there cannot be segregation in schools. That is the end of the matter."

The judge was ready to dismiss the whole proceedings through an oral motion on the spot.

"I see nothing left in this case," he said. But David C. Colladay, federation attorney, opposed this, forcing Korman to prepare a formal dismissal motion. Korman said it probably will be filed next week.

Colladay said he will meet with federation officials and other plaintiffs today to decide whether to appeal. He said immediate reaction of some federation officials favored appeal. The appeal might be carried to the United States Court of Appeals or directly to the Supreme Court, he said. Parents of 24 school-age children joined the federation in bringing the suit.

Federation's Argument

Colladay's argument was that the Board of Education had no legal authority to integrate until the Supreme Court holds hearings this fall on how to implement its decision and then enters a final order.

Integration plans will work a hardship on some families, and the whole thing should wait until the court comes up with a "master plan," he said. "There is no logical reason to take the pill in two parts," declared Colladay.

Colladay said hardships include transferring some children to more distant schools, assigning brother and sister to different schools, and placing a handful of children in a racial minority in some schools.

He submitted affadavits citing identical situations in two white families where older children would remain in their old school, while younger children just starting kindergarten would be forced by the zone system into a predominantly Negro school.

Schweinhaut answered that there are bound to be some hardships whether integration comes this year or next, and that the court can't stop it because it inconveniences some people.

The judge indicated he thought it better for the school board to act now than to "sit on its hands" and wait for the Supreme Court to tell it what to do.

Colladay argued to "preserve the status quo" until the Supreme Court takes further action. But Korman pointed out that as a result of the summer's work the status quo is now an integrated system. "To turn back would be chaos," he said.

Kirkman read a statement prepared by School Superintendent Hobart Corning listing the problems a stop order would cause.

Corning told how since June "several thousand" students have been transferred, teachers have been reassigned, furniture has been moved from one school to another, new students have been enrolled.

"In fact, there does not exist today in the District of Columbia system of segregated schools," Corning asserted. "There is no longer a dual school system; there is actually in existence a single, integrated school system . . ."

To go back to segregation now would cause "utter chaos," Corning said. He said it would mean schools could not open Monday, pupils would go back to crowded rooms, teachers' contracts would have to be cancelled with probability of lawsuits and thousands of dollars already spent would be wasted.

The Justice Department intervened on the side of the District and filed a brief, but never got a chance to speak on it.

The Justice Department statement argued that the Federation request should be turned down "since this complaint is in effect a direct attack on the decision of the Supreme Court . . . Clearly, the Supreme Court would not object when a party to the action before it undertakes to accomplish a swift compliance with the court's decision."

Justice called the Board of Education's plan "reasonable and necessary" and noted that the day after the court decision the President had said he wanted the District to serve as a model for the Nation.

McKinley Pupils Briefed on Integration

By James G. Deane

Principal Charles E. Bish of McKinley High School yesterday advised the school's students to accept race integration next fall as a challenging opportunity.

"I wouldn't be any place else but at McKinley next year for all the money in the world," Dr. Bish told the students. He predicted the addition of Negro students, by swelling the school's enrollment, will enable it to become a better school.

He also suggested that the colored students be received in the spirit of the golden rule. He added that it would probably be harder for the newcomers to adjust than for McKinley's white students.

Talks 45 Minutes.

Dr. Bish talked with nearly 600 McKinley students for about 45 minutes in a special assembly. All except the graduating class attended.

The principal said McKinley now is slated to enroll about 430 colored pupils in September. He also predicted the high school would acquire some Negro teachers. The changeover will give the school about a third colored pupils in the fall and will mean mixed classes, Dr. Bish said.

McKinley is the only white high school currently scheduled to be integrated in September. School officials have announced plans to begin integration at other high schools in February.

10th and 11th Grades.

All colored pupils entering McKinley will be 10th and 11th graders, Dr. Bish disclosed. Some will be transfers from Armstrong High School and the others, previously scheduled to go to Armstrong, will enter from the city's 10 colored junior highs.

Dr. Bish said he believed an evolution has been occurring which made the Supreme Court decision inevitable and that the students would find the same situation in universities, the armed services and the Government when they finished school.

Dr. Bish then declared that every member of McKinley's faculty is thoroughly dedicated to the success of the forthcoming program.

The total number of colored students entering McKinley might go up to 460, instead of the presently scheduled 431, he said.

Curriculum a Factor.

Armstrong's curriculum is not identical with McKinley's and only those Armstrong pupils whose study programs coincide with McKinley's will move, he said. Those whose courses are highly vocational and for which McKinley has no equipment will stay at Armstrong, he explained.

Dr. Bish said McKinley will not start next fall with separate classes of white and colored.

"You can't have segregation within integration without creating more of a problem than you solve," he said, "so you'll find Negro boys and girls in your classes."

Probably 10 or 12 teachers at Armstrong no longer will be needed there, he said, so some of them may move to McKinley with the transferring pupils.

Dr. Bish said he had been asked questions about dances. He said that is a matter "we will deal with as the occasion arises," but he added:

"I can assure you your personal feelings will be respected at all times, just as the feelings of the others will be respected."

He added that the school still plans to hold next year's senior prom at the Shoreham and the junior prom at the Willard.

Confident of Future.

Then he declared:

"I think we're going to have a program next year which is going to make us proud of this school. We're going to have a larger program of studies, and build back what we have lost in technical education simply because we didn't have the people."

Dr. Bish then returned to the problem of carrying out the change.

"This kind of thing rests upon a mutual faith, a mutual understanding and a mutual confidence," he declared. "At McKinley we have emphasized over and over and over that the keynote in our growth and development is self-discipline."

Asserting that dealing with integration the school can't get along with a "beat-people-over-the-head approach," he continued:

"We don't intend to turn ourselves into policemen. We will deal with each other truthfully and fairly.

"Please do not forget," he declared, that when Negro boys and girls walk into this room they themselves will not be sure whether or not you respect them as people, and their problem will be just as difficult as yours to deal with, and I suspect a bit more.

Golden Rule.

"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. If you keep that in mind, then I think we can look at this problem with a clear eye and a smile on our face.

"If any group," he continued, "faculty and students, is prepared to make this work at the senior high level that group is here. I believe that implicitly.

"Even the President of the United States will be anxiously concerned about how we measure up to the challenge of the responsibilities which are ours.

"I look upon next year," Dr. Bish concluded, "as one of the most challenging and interesting situations we could have."

The students applauded Dr. Bish at the conclusion of his talk. They also applauded a brief statement by Richard Caulk, president of next year's Student Council, who asked the students to support the council, Dr. Bish and the faculty in the transition period.

Panel of Speakers Agrees to Rapid School Integration

Washington public school race integration should be carried out quickly a panel of speakers agreed last night.

Integration problems were discussed at a meeting sponsored by the American Jewish Congress in B'nai Israel Synagogue. About 150 persons attended.

One of the speakers was Dr. Margaret J. Butcher, member of the Board of Education. She repeated her recent criticism at a board meeting about School Supt. Hobart M. Corning's race-desegregation program for next fall, asserting it is a program to relieve overcrowding, rather than accomplish integration.

The session also heard Dr. John J. O'Connor, head of the Catholic Inter-racial Council; Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, and Isaac Franck executive director of the Jewish Community Council.

Complete Rezoning Urged.

Dr. Butcher told the gathering the basic requirement of an integrated school system is to have children go to the schools nearest their homes. She said the District school system ought to be completely rezoned so that this takes place next September, although she said it would be permissible to let sixth, ninth and twelfth-graders stay in present schools.

"For the best interest of the system, the community and the children, the very least we could do is try to get this done by September," Dr. Butcher declared. "It has not been proved to me that it can't be done."

The school board member, specifically objecting to the Corning proposal to transfer only 2,700 Negro children to white schools when schools reopen, said she understood unofficially the colored children are being picked for transfer according to intelligence and other qualifications. She said that, if this is true, "nothing could be more tragic or perverse."

Catholic Progress Recounted.

Dr. O'Connor recounted the progress of the Catholic archdiocese here in integrating its schools over the last five years.

He said the parochial integration process is "by no means completed and by no means a 100 per cent success," predicting that it would take a number of years "to solve all the problems." Foremost among these problems, he added, is a serious classroom shortage.

"On the whole," he declared, however, "the situation has progressed satisfactorily. We don't see any need for long delay in integrating the tpublic school system. We've had practically all the problems, and we know pretty well what to anticipate. Let it go and let it go fast."

Dr. O'Connor added, however, that he would be satsified to see the public school integration carried out by next February, the latest target date announced by Dr. Corning. He said he doubted if the whole job could be done by September.

He also pointed out that the Catholic schools started out with a gradual approach, starting with the lowest grades, although that was later speeded up.

Dr. Reissig praised the acceptance of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling by such groups as the District Congress of Parents and Teachers and churches.

Mr. Franck criticized what he called the philosophy of gradualism in carrying out integration, asserting that it could cause suspicions and tensions and tempt people to try to evade or delay the change.

Sanford H. Bolz, president of the National Capital Chapter of the Jewish Congress, who presided at the session, also criticized the Corning integration program.

Capital Moves to Speed End of Segregation in Schools

WASHINGTON, May 18 (UP).—The Nation's capital decided today to go ahead with preliminary steps to end segregated schools. Informed sources said President Eisenhower hoped the change-over here would be a model for the rest of the country.

Local officials, who conferred with the President this morning, indicated the task of merging Negro and white public schools might be begun this fall without waiting for further hearings ordered by the Supreme Court.

Simultaneously, Administration sources said the court ruling that segregated schools were unconstitutional would "unquestionably" put more steam behind a drive for a multimillion dollar Federal aid to education—particularly in the South.

These sources said Mr. Eisenhower was highly gratified by the Supreme Court decision that segregated schools violated the "equal protection" guaranteed by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

They said the President was refraining from public comment for the mo until he and his advisers had studied the "vast ramifications" of the ruling. But they said the court action "is in line with the steps the President has taken (against segregation) and the atmosphere he wants to create."

AFL URGES LOAN FUND

In Chicago, the AFL proposed that Congress establish a billion-dollar loan fund to modernize public school systems and implement the ruling.

The AFL Executive Council passed a resolution urging that such a fund be set up "for loans and grants to the States in urgent need of help to modernize and democratize their school systems."

George Meany, AFL president, said enforcing the Supreme Court decision "will involve not only ad social ad tremendous physi inadequate school many States."

He said such a fund would prevent "non-compliance by any State which otherwise might plead poverty to excuse its failure to provide the necessary facilities."

Among problems to be weighed, Administration sources said, are how far the Southern and border States will go to merge their Negro and white school systems and the extent of help possible and desirable from the Federal Government.

They felt that Attorney General Herbert Brownell's brief to the Supreme Court, which stressed progress made in ending segregation elsewhere, played an important part in the court's unanimous decision.

Mr. Eisenhower conferred today with the three District of Columbia Commissioners, who run the capital's government under laws laid down by Congress.

Following the meeting Samuel Spencer, president of the Commissioners, said the President asked them to keep him posted on progress toward ending racial separation in the city's schools. Other sources said the President hoped the change-over here would be conducted smoothly as a model to the States.

D. C. Schools Begin Swearing In New Permanent Teachers

The District school system has begun swearing in new permanent elementary teachers for the fall term.

Associate Supt. Carl F. Hansen said yesterday the first candidates from a new elementary eligibility list were hired last Friday.

The first being hired are 30 who served as temporary teachers last winter. All 30 were in former Division One (white) schools. They are being reassigned to the same schools, Dr. Hansen said.

Additional hiring from the list of elementary eligibles will begin Friday, Dr. Hansen added. Besides the 30 teachers already being rehired, there are 151 others who qualified for permanent appointments on the list. The list includes both white and colored teachers.

Dr. Hansen also disclosed yesterday that 191 white temporary teachers are being rehired. This is all but 30 of the total in the white grade schools as of June, and those 30 indicated they didn't want to stay, he said. Most of the temporary teachers will continue in the schools where they were assigned last winter, he added.

Dr. Hansen said he expects to fill 93 vacancies in the formerly white division from the new eligibility list. The number of vacancies and the number of applicants will probably just about balance, he said.

Miss Edith A. Lyons, associate superintendent who headed the former colored elementary division, said she has not yet made any new appointments and did not plan to do so until after a scheduled conference with Dr. Hansen Thursday.

Colored schools had fewer than 100 temporary teachers last winter, however, and Miss Lyons said she expects most of these as well as all permanent eligibles will be hired.

Teacher hiring is already proceeding in the junior and senior highs.

Supt. Hobart M. Corning has predicted that many schools will have teachers of both races in the fall, when the school system will begin a one-year race-desegregation process.

Test Case To Speed Up Integration In Capital

By ETHEL L. PAYNE

WASHINGTON — Scovel Richardson, a member of the Federal Parole Board said last week that he would enroll three of his daughters in white District of Columbia public schools next fall.

Richardson's action will provide a test to force the immediate integration of Washington schools instead of the "graduation" program of School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning.

Corning was warned by Wesley Williams Negro member of the school board that if he persists in stalling integration, he will face a "flood of lawsuits" from Negro parents.

Richardson informed Corning of his intentions in a letter to the board. One of the schools which he wants his children to attend is within 50 feet of the Richardson home.

At present, the Richardson twins, Mary Louise and Marjorie Linda, 10, have to travel 10 blocks to the nearest Negro school.

A third daughter, Alice Inez, 11 attends junior high school. Richardson will seek admission for her to nearest high school which at present is all white.

A fourth daughter attends Dunbar high school, all Negro, but has not yet expressed a desire to change.

Three Negro members of the board, Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, Atty. Williams and Col. West Hamilton tried unsuccessfully on June 2 to get the board to adopt immediate integration, in confirmity with the expressed desire of President Eisenhower to make Washington the show case for the nation.

Instead, Corning has proposed a plan for gradual integration to be completed by February, 1955.

Under the plan, only about 18 schools would be mixed in September.

This does not include the Bancroft elementary school near the Richardson home.

Richardson told reporters that "I assume my request will be granted." He was appointed to the parole board last fall by President Eisenhower.

Meanwhile, at Fort Myer and Fort Beloir, Va. it was announced that the Army would operate its own integrated schools for children of army personnel.

This is the result of the directive issued by the Department of Defense some six months ago.

The plan goes into operation in September. At Fort Myer, about year on each count, the sentences to run concurrntly.

Army Children

Segregation By Rank Is Denied

Both District school officials and Fort McNair spokesmen yesterday denied recent charges of the Southwest Citizens Association that children of post officers and enlisted men purposely were sent to different public schools.

Officers of the citizens group, however, yesterday insisted that traditionally children of noncommissioned officers have been sent to Southwest Washington schools while officers children were sent to schools in the Northwest.

David L. Wood, secretary of the citizens association, said the group intends to write to the Board of Education and the Department of Defense requesting that the practice be stopped.

Associate School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen who administers grade schools explained that because the post was in an isolated area and actually had no so-called community school parents have been allowed to send their children into various Washington schools which had extra space. In addition, the nearest elementary school to the post, Greenleaf, 4th between M and N sts. sw., has been overcrowded in recent years. Fort McNair provides bus transportation for its students.

"I've never heard of any separation of children of officers and enlisted men in school placement," Hansen said.

Major Fred Lansing, Jr., Fort McNair transportation officer, said 27 children are taken in two trips to both public and private schools this semester.

"The Army doesn't decide where children go to school," Lansing said. "The parents do." He said the first bus run leaves at 7:45 a. m. dropping off youngsters at the following schools:

St. John's, Georgetown Visitation and St. Thomas Apostle, all Catholic schools; Holton Arms, Sheridan, Sidwell Friends, St. Albans and National Cathedral School for Girls, all private institutions, and Cooke, Oyster, Gordon Junior High, Western and Wilson Senior Highs, all public schools.

Lansing said he thought most officer's children attended the private schools. A second bus run leaves shortly before 9 a. m. and drops post children off at nearby Greenleaf School and Jefferson Junior High, public schools, and St. Dominic's Catholic school. All of these schools are in Southwest Washington.

"This year," Lansing said, "the second bus happens to have no officers' children." He added: "That wasn't the case last year."

Lansing said most of the eight students on the second bus run are "little kids." "We'd make one trip but we don't want them dropped off with more than an hour to kill before their school opens at 9 o'clock," Lansing said.

City's Presentation For Supreme Court Is Previewed; Plan Seen Now Working

P. 27

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

The Board of Education yesterday heard a preview of the school integration brief which the Corporation Council will file in the next two weeks with the Supreme Court.

School board members met for more than an hour in closed session with Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West and Milton D. Korman, Assistant Corporation Counsel, who will present the District case when the Supreme Court begins hearing arguments December 6 on the method and timing of integration.

The District brief, it was learned, will contain a resume of the school board's one-year program of integration which virtually will be in full operation by February. Korman is expected to argue that as far as Washington is concerned, the questions of when and how to integrate the city public schools are moot.

In addition, the brief is reported to state that "divergent views" were held by school board members on the integration operation.

Although these views not spelled out in the b was learned, they refer to board member Robert R. Faulkner's opinion that pupils should have a choice of attending schools in which their race represents the majority.

The school board yesterday was not asked for official approval of the brief. Last August, West queried the board on what kind of brief it wanted, stating he desired the brief "accurately to set forth the views" of the board. C. Melvin Sharpe, school board president, sent West a copy of all the board minutes of meetings dealing with integration.

Board members attending yesterday's meeting in the District Building were Sharpe, Faulkner, Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, West A. Hamilton, Mary Parker and Walter N. Tobriner. Absent were Mrs. Margaret J. Butcher, Rowland F. Kirks and Wesley S. Williams.

Whites Quit D.C. Schools; Blame Mixing

Defender
Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 11-13-54

WASHINGTON — School authorities last week released a report showing a sharp drop in enrollment of white pupils due, it said, to racial integration.

The figure of 8.7 percent decrease in September is the biggest decline in school history. Enrollment counts showed for the second day of school 40,359 whites and 59,364 Negroes an increase of 3,414 and a drop of 3,856 for the whites.

While it was not definitely established that integration was the direct cause of the decline among whites, officials pointed out that there was an unprecedented exodus of white families, particularly young couples with children to suburban areas.

NAACP Commends Corning's Firmness

1410 H St. N.W.

The executive committee of the Washington branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People voted to commend School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning for his firm handling of recent student demonstrations against integration.

In a wire, the committee congratulated Corning for his "forthright and unequivocal order" telling students to return to class or lose their school honors and privileges.

"Such firmness will beget sanity and stability while delay and vacillation would bring in its wake only chaos," the committee said. The group also urged that Corning continue his acceleration of the integration program.

In other action, the NAACP committee "condemned most severely" the directors of the Metropolitan Boys Clubs who recently voted to continue their segregation policy. The committee urged the District government to "withdraw all government support from the organization" and indicated NAACP would seek legal means to force such withdrawal.

Hayes, Nabrit rap gradualism of Corning approach

(By NNPA)
WASHINGTON

Blasting the "Corning Plan" of desegregation of public schools, two attorneys, Monday, charged that while the Board of Education and school officials claim the program calls for immediate desegregation, the operation of the plan has actually demonstrated "gradualism."

In their brief on argument of the questions of how and when the Supreme Court's decisions that segregation in public education is unconstitutional shall be put into effect, George E. C. Hayes and James M. Nabrit Jr., say the factual situation here makes a gradual decree both unnecessary and unwise.

The brief of two attorneys for the appellants in the District of Columbia school segregation case urges the Supreme Court to decree that the Board of Education immediately stop the use of race as a factor in assigning pupils to public schools.

Mr. Hayes and Mr. Nabrit claim that the "Corning Plan," as administered by the District of Columbia, contains "elements of both forthwith desegregation and gradualism.

—o O o—

"HERE THE gradualist element has caused not only a denial of present constitutional rights to some pupils, but has also been the genesis of many administrative difficulties in the past," they state, adding:

"It presages many more difficulties for the future, most all of which would be avoided by the adoption of a forthwith plan.

"The principal areas of objections to the 'Corning Plan' are the delay in completely desegregating the public school system and the insertion of a plan of student options designed to defeat effective desegregation as contemplated by the May 17th decision and by the policy declaration of the board."

—o O o—

BOTH ATTORNEYS disagreed with the corporation counsel, representing the Board of Education, in his position that desegregation of the public schools here is now an accomplished fact. They stated:

"It is our appraisal of the plan put in operation in the District of Columbia that the respondents have advanced on the assumption that this court has accepted the theory of an effective gradual adjustment of the transition from segregated system to a system not based on color distinctions and they have discounted the propriety of a forthwith disposal of this matter upon its merits, and have launched upon this gradual plan which is replete with errors and pitfalls."

—o.O o—

PROPOSALS AND statements of Dr. Corning indicate that he believes the only desegregation which could take place here by September was the limited desegregation involved in relieving overcrowding, the merging of Armstrong (colored) and McKinley (white) high schools, and the opening of Wilson (white) and Miner (colored) teachers colleges without regard to race.

The two lawyers point out that Dr. Corning said he could not even draw boundary lines before September.

But when the school board took its position and told Dr. Corning to act immediately, he found that he could draw the boundary lines by July 1, and partially desegregate at all levels by September, Mr. Hayes and Mr. Nabrit state.

—o O o—

IN OTHER WORDS, they say, Dr. Corning "took an administrative position of gradualism from which he receded step by step."

The experience in the District of Columbia demonstrated, in line with the results of studies made in the field of desegregation, that extended time to desegregate was not necessary, they assert.

It is the position of the appellants, the brief states, that the "Corning Plan," taken out of its setting and transplated elsewhere, "would occasion greater delay, confusion, and extended, if not complete, denial of constitutional rights."

—o O o—

PROVISIONS FOR an option, which Dr. Corning engrafted upon a boundary system, the appellants assert, "created anticipated hardship cases."

The appellants say many parents did not exercise their option to remove their children from the school they had been attending outside the new boundary, because they did not know when or whether they could do so.

Others did not do so, the appellants say, because they feare hostility would be accorded the children for "bumping" forme students.

—o O o—

"THIS PIECEMEAL desegregation thus produced the very ills forecast by the experts," the appellants charge.

Mr. Nabrit and Mr. Hayes say their investigation disclosed no instance where a single colored child was transferred from a school which he had previously attended because of color to a school from which he was previously excluded because of color where to do so would have meant displacement of a white student.

But they came upon several instances, they state, where white children required by board rules to attend schools formerly all colored have been permitted to transfer to schools predominantly white on the alleged ground of "hardship."

Segregation Ban Test Near in DC

Times Herald
P. 34

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8 (AP) — The District of Columbia announced Tuesday it plans to test in court old laws, not now enforced, which ban segregation in all public places here.

The District commissioners ordered prosecution of any business proprietor accused of turning away a customer because of race, color or creed after Jan. 1.

This would provide the first court test of law passed by Congress in 1872 and ordinances passed by the board of aldermen in 1869 and 1870. The supreme court has upheld an 1873 law outlawing racial discrimination in restaurants here.

Commissioner Samuel Spencer said Tuesday's announcement puts local citizens of "fair" notice since the laws have remained unenforced since the turn of the century.

Spencer said the commissioners acted at the urging of some 30 community organizations. The laws ban segregation in such establishments as hotels, barber shops, bathing houses and public places of amusement.

The District is now in the process of eliminating racial segregation in the public schools line with this year's su court decision which declared segregation is unconstitutional.

High Court Gets School Bias Plan

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (UP). — The Eisenhower Administration urged the Supreme Court today to let lower courts supervise racial integration of public schools as rapidly as possible on a local basis.

The Administration position was set forth by the Justice Department in a 30-page brief. It suggested no immediate deadline for State compliance with the high court's antisegregation decision of last spring, but said the change "should be as prompt as feasible."

However, the department said that unless school officials submit "a satisfactory plan," the lower courts should order admission of Negroes to nonsegregated schools at the beginning of the next school term.

ASK DETAILED REPORTS

It also recommended that the lower courts require school officials to submit detailed periodic progress reports. The department said "every officer and agency of Government, Federal, State, and local," was charged with enforcing the court's order.

The brief, signed by Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., said that problems involved in school desegregation would vary from area to area. Therefore, it said, the program should be carried out by school authorities under the supervision of lower Federal courts.

The brief apparently explained President Eisenhower's cryptic news conference statement yesterday that he felt sure the court find a way to end segregation through a decentralized process.

CITES DEEP PROBLEMS

He noted that many deep emotional and practical problems were involved, and said he did not expect the tribunal to be arbitrary in its decision.

The Justice Department in its brief suggested that lower courts order the states involved in the original segregation cases to submit within 90 days a plan for ending public school segregation. It said the high court then should fix "the earliest practicable date for completion of the program."

The states involved are Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia. Three of them—Delaware, Kansas and the district—already have started mingling Negro and white students.

AGREE ON COURT ACTION

All of the parties involved in the segregation cases have agreed that lower courts should supervise public school integration. But they have disagreed on how soon segregation should be wiped out.

The Southern States have pleaded for "reasonable time" and a "gradual adjustment." Lawyers for Negro parents have asked for an end to separate school systems by next fall or by September, 1956, at the latest.

The Justice Department said the lower courts should reject any program which does not provide for an immediate start toward integration.

HEARINGS POSTPONE D

The high court originally scheduled hearings Dec. 6 on how to carry out desegregation. But the he a r i n g s have been postponed until January at least pending Senate confirmation of Mr. Eisenhower's nomination of Judge John Marshall Harlan to the high bench.

The Justice Department said that in view of the delay, "it must be borne in mind that continuation of school segregation has harmful effects both on the individuals concerned and the public."

The department suggested that it would not be practical for the Supreme Court to set a deadline on desegregation.

HIT BY GOV. WHITE

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 24 (UP).—Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia tonight called the Justice Department's proposal to enforce integration of schools on a lower court level a sign that the Administration was taking "local folks" into consideration.

Talmadge said the proposal showed "those people are finally waking up."

But Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi said the move made it more inevitable that his State must abolish its public school system. He added that the proposal at the same time shows a "weakening" of the Administration's insistence on prompt desegregation regardless of regional attitudes.

School Superintendent Airs Plan Which May Guide Supreme Court

BY DARRELL GARWOOD

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of District of Columbia schools, said Saturday that initial integration of Negro and white teachers and students has been "amazingly successful."

The program, which brought commendation from President Eisenhower last Thursday, may give the Supreme Court a clue on how school can be integrated without friction.

Corning said Negro and white teachers have been installed on one-fifth of the schools and unsegregated students are enrolled in about two-thirds of the classrooms.

SETS EXAMPLE

The district's smooth compliance with the court's ruling against segregation contrasts with a wait-and-see attitude in most of the affected states, active political opposition in others and threats of violence which have closed the schools at Milford, Del.

The great question remaining before the supreme court, to be argued beginning Dec. 6, is whether integration schould be effected immediately or gradually in the twenty-one states which, like the district, have maintained separate schools for Negroes.

The court is to issue a decree early next year stating how integration must be carried out.

Corning's system involves elements of both the immediate and gradual proposals. Here is his program affecting just over 100,000 students, about 60,000 of whom are Negroes, and 3,620 teachers, of whom 1,943 are Negroes.

1. On the first day, Sept. 13, children were ordered to report to the same school they had attended, except in case where they had been travelling unusually long distances. But children entering for the first time were required to go to the school nearest them.

PARENTAL OPTION

2. Before the end of October, parents will be given the option of sending children either to the school they have been attending or to the school to which they belong geographically. If the child lives in the school district where is attending, there is no option.

3. Teachers have generally been assigned to the schools where they taught last year, but 17 of the 79 elementary and two of the 11 high schools already have both whites and Negroes on their teaching staffs.

Even before the exercise of the October options, all but 20 of the elementary and all but three of the high schools, formerly divided into white and Negro, now have at least a few students of the race formerly excluded. The filing of options in high schools has already begun.

In several cases, the proportion of both students and teachers from each race is large. Petworth elementary has 123 white and 370 Negro students, and seven white and five Negro teachers. At Raymond elementary, there are 341 Negroes in an enrollment of 493, and five Negroes on a teaching staff of 16.

STEP FURTHER

The October step will carry the schools further toward full integration. Since new students each year will be required to enroll by zones, any remaining optional factors will disappear over a period of time.

Corning said that despite rumors of possible friction, the first steps have been 'amazingly successful.' He said parents, teachers and children have outdone themselves "in a determined co-operative effort."

Integration also affects these schools. In practice, however, the change-over will be gradual. So far, no instructors have been transferred and only 32 students out of a combined total of about 900 have been shifted.

Urge Justice Dep't to end school row

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — A. B. Caldwell, chief of the civil rights section, United States Department of Justice, said last week that the department is interested in bringing about a proper solution to the problem of school integration.

This statement was made to a delegation of American Labor Party candidates from New York City who visited his office in the interest of the disturbances which had recently taken place in the public schools of Milford, Del.; Baltimore and the District of Columbia.

Ban Closes Schools

SCHOOLCHILDREN in Milford, Del., read the "closed until further notice" sign on their school after telephoned threats of violence were made over the admission of Negro pupils. Eleven Negro students had been entered in the high school in accord with integration plans when the threats were made. The Board of Education said the schools will stay shut until "some kind of program can be worked out." (International)

98,000 Pupils Expected to Enroll As Washington Schools Open Monday

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

Washington public schools will open at 9 a. m. Monday for an estimated first-day enrollment of 98,000 students, many of whom will attend for the initial time buildings with racially integrated classes and faculties.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning said he was confident the people of the Nation's Capital would cooperate to make a success of the start of the "big changeover" from school segregation. The integration process will be completed in a year.

Corning's prediction of an orderly beginning of the new term with only the natural first flurry of school opening excitement, was echoed this weekend by other school officials, supervisors, heads of departments, principals and the teachers themselves.

Value of Smile

Both Associate School Superintendents Edith Lyons and Dr. Carl F. Hansen, who as a team will administer the city's 122 grade schools, commented on the "value of a smile" from school people to shy youngsters and parents unaccustomed to the hustle, bustle of getting classes set up and under way.

Schools will dismiss students at 12:15 p. m. Monday because of extra problems involved in the special transfers of about 3000 Negro students out of formerly overcrowded schools into others which last year had white enrollments only.

In the latter 14 grade schools and three junior highs, the new students must be placed in their proper grade level.

Abaut 1500 youngsters will transfer Monday to Barnard, Benning, Blair, Brightwood, Buchanan, Burroughs, Edmonds, Kingsman, Langdon, Petworth, Raymond, Rudolph, Wheatley and Woodridge Schools. Last year, these children atended Bruce, Bryan, Hayes, Lovejoy, Madison, Maury, Military Road, Noyes, Park View, River Terrace, Slowe and Taylor Schools.

In addition, about 100 Negro pupils who last term traveled "excessive" distance will transfer to 18 schools nearer their merly enrolled only white puhomes. All these schools forpils. They are Patterson, Powell, Randle Highlands, Rudolph, Simon, Stoddert, Truesdell, Tyler and West.

Formerly all-white junior highs which will receive 850 Negro students are Eastern Junior, Jefferson and Sousa. The transferred students last year went to Browne, Eliot, Langley, Miller and Randall Junior Highs.

450 to McKinley

The only high school which will receive a block of Negro students is McKinley, primarily a technical school. More than 450 students will transfer there Monday from nearby Armstrong High School which will be closed in the future.

Also on Monday, Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges will accept students in both plants regardless of race. Evening school classes will operated on an integrated basis Monday.

School officials state that a majority of the city's 165 schools will have some integrated classes beginning this week. This is due to new school boundaries—redrawn to erase racial barriers—which are mandatory for all students new to the Washington school system. The new zones will not affect most old students who will continue to attend last year's school.

By mid-October, District enrollment is expected to reach a record-breaking 106,000 students. Grade schools and junior highs will bear the brunt of the anticipated increase of between 2000 and 2500 students. Corning said the greatest part of the increase will be in Negro pupils.

Last week, approximately 9500 new kindergartners and other newcomers to grade school were tallied during a two-day registration. Many school principals reported admittance of both white and Negro children. New elementary students are expected to total 12,000.

Under the partial start of integration, anywhere from a few to several hundred youngsters of a minority race will be found both in former all-white and all-Negro schools. Some schools will retain a single race composition this term because of the population of the surrounding neighborhood.

Comparatively Few

"We believe these situations will be comparatively few and will affect more Negro than white youngsters," one school officer said.

On the junior and senior high school level, in buildings unaffected by the special transfer of students, principals of both former white and Negro schools have reported admittance of new students of both races. New senior high boundaries go into effect February 1955. All boundaries become effective in a year.

Faculties will be integrated in a majority of the grade schools to which Negro pupils have been transferred. This also is true in the case of junior and senior highs receiving transfers. In addition, for the first time this summer new teachers were appointed and assigned without regard to race.

Due to a change in Board of Education policy, Corning expects to announce the racial ratios of staf and students in individual schools by Wednesday or Thursday. Originally, the school board wanted to drop all race reference but agreed with Corning it would prevent the public from knowing the effects of integration.

The only instance of part-time instruction is expected to occur at Richardson School, 53rd and Blaine sts ne. School officials Friday said an undetermined number of first graders will have to go half day, probably until a new school is completed in March at 56th and E. Capitol sts.

Richardson, which is expected to retain an exclusive Negro enrollment, is located in a pocket away from other schools. It is ringed by housing developments.

But, according to Corning, for the first time in years there will be no shortage of regular teachers. In the past, due to segregation and lack of funds, there were not enough teachers to meet the needs of Negro pupils.

The start of integration further has enabled school officials to begin expanding special services for children, due to the flexibility of teacher assignment.

Integrated D. C. Schools Enjoy Calm Opening Day

Corning Reports No More Trouble Or Confusion Than In Any Other Fall

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

District public schools opened yesterday with a minimum of first-day confusion as many principals, teachers and pupils were introduced to school integration.

A majority of the city's 165 schools had some integrated classrooms for the first time. Many also had racially-mixed faculties.

"The scene in individual school buildings was wonderful," said Associate School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen.

"It made you feel good just to walk into the schools," according to Associate Superintendent Edith Lyons.

Hansen last year administered Division I schools with white enrollment only, and Miss Lyons administered Division II schols which had Negro registration. As a team this year, they run the 122 grade schools.

As usual, parents and several retired teachers yesterday worked as "hostesses" in many elementary schools, greeting new pupils and guiding them to classrooms. Other parents served as "clerks" for busy principals engaged in registering a last-hour rush of newcomers to Washington schools.

Opening day attendance was in the neighborhood of 98,000 pupils. This enrollment is expected to reach an all-time peak of 106,000 students by mid-October.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning commented thus on the start of his one-year integration program:

"It is very gratifying to all school officers, as I'm sure it must be to the community, that schools opened today on an integrated plan and with no more difficulty and confusion than has attended the opening of schools any other year.

"This office is appreciative of the splendid cooperation of school personnel and the public. Naturally, some individual problems remain to be solved and they will be given careful study and sympathetic treatment."

Corning termed the transition from a dual school system "normal and orderly."

Some 3000 students were transferred yesterday out of their former overcrowded Division II schools into 14 other grade schools, three junior high schools, and McKinley High School, all formerly in Division I.

Regardless of Race

All students new to the District school system last week and today were admitted to schools regardless of race. In most cases, this meant the school nearest the children's homes.

Last summer, all schools were rezoned to drop old racial barriers. These new boundaries, for the most part, will not affect old Washington students until February and September 1955, when the integration process will be completed.

The bulletin board at Langdon School, 20th and Franklin sts. ne., reflected an effort to put shy youngsters at ease.

"Welcome!" read the single message.

At Raymond School, 10th and Spring rd. nw., Miss Mildred Green, principal, ushered 72 new youngsters into the auditorium.

"What kind of school this is going to be will depend on you, the children," Miss Green said. She added: "You can be kind to each other, polite and helpful to each other and make this a happy school." Raymond, formerly of Division I, received a block of pupils from Park View School, Warder and Newton sts. nw., formerly of Division II. The school's new faculty is comprised of 10 white teachers and five Negro.

Teachers at Barnard School, Decatur and 5th sts. nw., termed their integrated classes "democracy in action." They told their youngsters "school is for everyone and an education is free for all." That, the teachers said, is the reason classed opened this year to everyone, regardless of race.

The Barnard faculty includes one Negro teacher, Mrs. Muriel Logan, who taught last year in Charleston, W. Va. Mrs. Logan said her integrated combination fourth and fifth grade class will be a new experience, although her own formal education was obtained in integrated Pennsylvania schools.

"This is a great thing," Mrs. Logan said as she set her 39 pupils adjusting again to school routine. "I think the children are going to get along well." Her pupils wer eallowed to pick their own seats yesterday. The former Division I school recveeid 75 transfers from Park View.

Many parents arrived with new enrolees, and stayed around to see them home at 12:15 p.m. dismissal hour. District schools will hold full class schedules today, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

During a brief recess period at Burroughs School, 18th and Monroe sts. ne., three little girls skipped hand-in-hand around the playground.

Integration had united three former fast friends i nthe former Division I school. The youngsters were Loretta Taylor, 8, of 3913 21st. ne., Kathleen Ann Gilbert, 7, 3917 21st st. ne., and Gloria Jean Adams, 8, of 3916 22d st. ne. Gloria last year atended Slowe School, a former Division II building. Yesterday, she was among several hundred pupils transferred from Slowe and Noyes Schools into Burroughs. Loretta and Kathleen attended Burroughs last year, seeing Gloria only after school hours.

Only Negro teacher on the Burroughs faculty is Miss Inez Gregory, a June graduate of Miner Teachers College. For her first year of teaching, Miss Gregory has a second grade class.

Several former Division II schools reported one or two white pupils yesterday. These schools included Lovejoy, 12th and D sts. ne., Blow, 19th and Benning rd. ne., and Stevens, 21st and K sts. nw. These cases, and others, represent the workings of new boundarie.

Many families must put a beginning kindergartner in one building and continue older youngsters in the school they attended last year. In October these parents will have an option of lettin gthe older child transfer to the school in the new zone.

On the other hand, several former Division I schools yesterday reported admittance of only a few Negro pupils. Some of these were new enrollees, while otners were special transfers who last year had to travel "excessive distance" to their homes.

Bruce Garetz and Donald Green, 5-year-old playmates from pre-school days, share toys at the Janney School kindergarten. Their fathers, Charles Garetz of 3124 Van Ness st. nw., and Cecil Green of 4010 Van Ness st., are both employes at the Hillcrest Children's Center.

Integrated Patrol

At Woodridge School, Carlton and Central ave. ne., Miss Dorothy Tripp, principal, yesterday began plans to integrate the school boy patrol. Woodridge yesterday also received transferred youngsters from Slowe and Noyes Schools.

Miss Tripp, who also administers Dangdon School, said:

"We're trying to make every child feel as if he belongs in these schools." Both buildings have integrated faculties.

One officer, Miss Katherine Scrivener, a director of elementary schools, saw opening day in this light:

"It was the same as ever. The children were so clean, big-eyed with awe and more subdued than they'll ever be again this year."

On the junior high level, Eastern Junior High received the largest transfer of former Division II students—500. Jefferson Junior received 200 and Sousa 140. All three schools formerly were in Division I.

John P. Collins, Eastern principal, said he hadn't counted the number of Negro junior high students.

"When you stop to count, you're practicing segregation," he added. Eastern High, which shares the building with the junior high unit, 17th and E. Capitol sts., has only a handful of Negro students, who entered for the first time. The high school has one Negro teacher, William M. Logan, Baltimore, who was appointed this summer to teach physics.

Due to new enrollees, such former Division I junior highs as Macfarland, Iowa ave. and Varnum st. nw., opened yesterday with mixed student bodies. Macfarland had about 45 Negro students out of a total enrollment of 1000. In a welcome assembly for incoming seventh-graders, Principal Arthur Storey told the students that this year "you have both more responsibilities and more freedom." He told reporters that students "will take integration in their stride."

Integration To Involve 1200 Pupils

Junior High Grads to Enter High Schools Nearest Home

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning announced yesterday that 1200 mid-year junior high graduates will enter high schools nearest home January 31 in accordance with his integration calendar.

"No other school changes will be made at this time," Corning told the Board of Education. He said that requests of other students, primarily grade school youngsters, to transfer to buildings nearer home will be considered this spring.

After the school board accepted Corning's report, member Robert R. Faulkner urged "rescindment" of the board's policy to assign pupils to schools according to new boundaries without regard to race.

Favoring reconsideration were Faulkner and Rowland Kirks. Opposing it were Mrs. Margaret J. Butcher, West A. Hamilton and Wesley S. Williams. Not voting were Miss Mary Parker, Walter N. Tobriner (out of the room), and Mrs. Frank S. Phillips who served as president in the absence of C. Melvin Sharpe who is ill.

In pleading again that the rule was "rigid and arbitrary," Faulkner cited statements of "persons high in authority" who, he said, believe the Supreme Court decision intended consideration of "emotional strains and practical problems" affecting parents and children during integration.

Faulkner said November enrollment figures showed 77 of the city's 156 schools had minority student bodies ranging from 1 to 44 youngsters.

During the 3-hour meeting, preceded by student Christmas carols, other board business included:

• Revision of 1956 budget request to allow purchase of prefabricated temporary schools to relieve overcrowding in the Richardson-Shadd school area of the Northeast and the Patterson-Draper school community of the Southeast. Money to buy sites for new schools in these areas also would be asked. To get these funds, Corning said he would ask Congress to delay until 1957 the requested replacement for Amidon School.

• Decision to consider changing school nurse duties to include closer scrutiny of students to spot possible narcotic users.

• Permitting 20 extra days for additional applicants for three school officer positions to submit their credentiols. The positions are for assistant principals at Cardozo High School and Eastern Junior-Senior High and for an assistant director of the Capitol Page School.

• Approval of the retirement of Miss Lena J. Miller, Petworth School teacher, Mrs. Helen D. Springman, Jefferson Junior High teacher, and Miss Helen V. Harper, instructor at Truesdell Laboratory School. The board extended the service of Mrs. Janie F. Hilder, reading clinic supervisor, through June.

• Williams urged Corning to give the school board a calendar of his plans to reorganize his administrative staff which now includes dual jobs formerly required by racial segregation. Mrs. Butcher made the same request in November.

In answer to Mrs. Butcher, Corning yesterday gave board members a report reiterating his belief that the officers holding similar jobs are needed as "teams" during the integration transition. Corning said he would give the board in February a list of proposed changed functions.

Six speakers appealed to the board for help on individual school problems. They were:

James A. Washington, Jr., Dunbar High School P-TA, who urged that the indoor swimming pool, closed since October, be improved and repaired, and that a car be provided for Dunbar driver training classes.

Mrs. Ernestine B. Lincoln, chairman of the education committee, Crummell School, asked that the overcrowded 43-year-old school, Gallaudet and Kendall sts. ne., be repaired.

Milton S. Bush, Armstrong Alumni Association, asked that the name of Armstrong be retained in the proposed final merger of Armstrong into the McKinley High School building.

Mrs. Carolyn H. Stewart, LeDroit Park Civic Association, urged announcement of a "graphically illustrated" plan of the proposed reorganized administrative structure of school officers in accordance with integration.

Edward L. Hancock and Dr. Reginald G. James, Richardson School representatives, urged relief for continuing parttime of first and second students at the school, 53d and Blaine sts. ne. Hancock proposed sending fifth and sixth graders to Benning School, Minnesota ave. and Foote st. ne., where space is available.

Denies petition for delay—

Washington court refuses to halt school integration

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—(AP)—A federal district judge today turned down a plea to halt plans for racial integration in the Washington public schools.

The action came on a motion for a temporary restraining order filed by an all-white federation of citizens' associations.

Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut denied the motion after two hours of argument.

The federation had sued to throw out desegregation plans approved by the District of Columbia Board of Education after the Supreme Court held segregation illegal in public schools. Parts of the program already are in operation.

TODAY'S HEARINGS was on a motion for an immediate order restraining school officials from carrying out those plans.

After Judge Schweinhaut rejected that motion, Asst. Corporation Counsel Milton D. Korman moved for dismissal of the main suit.

The court, however, postponed decision on that motion. Counsel for the federation contended it was a question to be taken up later.

A MAJOR contention in the federation's suit is that the education board acted illegally in starting integration before there is a final Supreme Court decree spelling out the order to drop racial bars.

In rejecting the plea for a temporary order, Judge Schweinhaut said there would be more hardship in halting the plans already under way than there would be for a comparatively few people in allowing them to go ahead.

It is manifest, he added, that plans cannot be changed solely because they operate to the inconvenience of some people.

David C. Colladay, federal attorney, said he realized that the Supreme Court can only give a broad outline of desegration plans and that details for elimination of separate schools for Negroes and whites must be left to local authorities. But, he added, the district board should await further word from the Supreme Court in view of the fact the highest court has invited additional argument on how to go about abandoning the dual school system.

KORMAN TOLD the court that to halt integration plans now in the national capital would bring about "utter chaos."

"What we are faced with today," he said, "is an established integrated school system.'

To halt the school board's plans now would result in big transfers of pupils, teachers and school furniture, he said.

"The magnitude of disorder would be difficult to judge," he said.

Registration was carried out yesterday for the first intregated classes which will start Monday.

COURT BARS DELAY IN DESEGREGATION

District Judge in Washington Refuses to Grant Injunction Despite Hardship Cases

By BESS FURMAN

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—The Federal District Court here refused today to interfere with Board of Education plans to integrate white and Negro pupils in the public schools.

Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut specifically rejected a plea of the Federation of Citizens Associations to postpone effective beginning of the desegregation plan until the Supreme Court had decreed a "master plan" for the nation.

The high court had left it to individual states how to carry out its order [illegible] school segregation.

"The Supreme Court has held," ruled Judge Schweinhaut, "that there can't be segregation in the District of Columbia. That, so far as this court is concerned, is the end of the matter. It is then up to the Board of Education to determine how."

Judge Schweinhaut conceded there would be "hardship cases" such as had been cited by the federation's attorney, David C. Colladay. But he said that the court could not direct a change in a plan as large as that of the Board of Education for integrating the schools on the basis of a few hardships.

To Mr. Colladay's argument that the Board of Education had no right to proceed with plans to integrate white and Negro schools here until the Supreme Court, which declared segregation unconstitutional on May 17, handed down its further promised decrees, the judge said:

"If the Supreme Court had in mind that all wheels stop, why did not the Supreme Court say no school board shall act until we take further action? They certainly anticipated upheaval.

"A vast change was directed. They certainly knew the multitude of problems inherent in the new concept. If they had wanted the machinery to stop they should have said so and they didn't say so. You are asking me to stop the wheels when the Supreme Court could have but did not."

The Assistant Corporation Counsel, Milton D. Korman, opposing the plea for an injunction, read an affadavit of the Superintendent of Schools, Hobart M. Corning, present in the courtroom, as to the "utter chaos" that would result of desegregation were stopped by court order now.

Mr. Corning said that several thousand pupil transfers would have to be canceled; teachers' appointments involving valid contracts returned to a segregated basis; double shifts set up for overcrowded schools; furniture moved back. Schools could not open Next Monday, he said, and the thousands of dollars already spent on integration would be wasted and many more thousands would have to be spent to reverse changes.

"There does not exist in the District of Columbia today a segregated school system," the Superintendent of Schools stated. "There actually is in existence an integrated school system."

The Assistant Corporation Counsel commented that the federation was asking a temporary order to maintain the status quo when, in reality the status quo was so changed as to make it almost impossible to go back to last year, because of board actions of this summer.

Main Suit Faces Dismissal

The injunction denied today was sought by the federation, which includes about sixty white citizens' associations, in connection with a lawsuit filed last week challenging the legality of desegregation plans.

Judge Schweinhaut indicated in a colloquy with attorneys that he stood ready to dismiss the main suit also. The Assistant Corporation Counsel said he would file a motion for dismissal. The federatin could then carry the case to the Court of Appeals.

One hardship case cited by Mr. Colladay as typical of the desegregation uprooting was that of a kindergarten pupil, Leslie Sabine, whose parents were among the plaintiffs in the injunction suit. Under the integration plan, his sister Barbara, aged 8, and his brother Paul, aged 7, can continue at a white elementary school.

But all pupils making fresh starts—and that includes Leslie—must go by the new boundaries. This, his parents said in an affidavit, will put him into a former all-Negro school, farther from home and across main traffic ways, as one of "not more than a dozen" white pupils among several hundred Negroes. And his older brother and sister cannot see him safely to school.

Mr. Colladay said that the actual effect of the desegragation plan was to "place all school children and parents in a new framework."

He said the reshuffling might have to be done all over again after the Supreme Court brought in its rules.

"Why cause all these thousands of people to take the pill in two parts?" he asked the court.

In a corridor interview, Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, president of the Citizens' Federation, said that she was not worried about her own three elementary-age children who went to a school "which will become heavily integrated."

She said her concern was for the "hardship cases" where a few white children were going into schools almost entirely Negro, and for the property values of the District of Columbia, "as the compulsion becomes proportionately greater."

She said that seven big homes in her Northeast Washington neighborhood close to a junior high school averaging in value at about $30,000 each, went up for sale soon after desegregation was announced, and only one had found a buyer.

"People who work in Washington are finding it expeditious to move into the suburban Virginia and Maryland counties all of which are maintaining their segregated systems," she added.

Boundary Changes Sought

In the hardship category was a request made to the Board of Education by the National Gateway Citizens Association for a change in new school boundaries that would assign a few white pupils to Springarn Senior High and Browne Junior High, hitherto all-Negro.

The association asserted tthat only seven or eight white children would go into a school of about 1,500 Negro children.

Schools continued to enroll today under the new desegregation boundaries all new kindergarten applicants and newcomers to Washington and those who have moved into new districts.

The rest, unless notified of ggntransfer on account of overcrowding, will report on Monday to the school they are accustomed to attending.

How much of a reshuffle this may make may never be made public unless the Board of Education rescinds a decision that no count of pupils shall be made on the basis of color.

The board was being officially polled on this point today, after it had been noted that the law would have to be changed to make this legal. The present school census law specifies race of the child as one of the matters to be reported on.

Capital Court To Stay Clear Of Race Issue

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9 (AP)—The U.S. District Court refused today to interfere with the racial integration program for public schools in the District of Columbia.

Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut denied a plea by the Federation of Citizens' Assns., an all-white group, for a temporary order restraining the District Board of Education from registering Negro and white students in the same schools and classes.

The Supreme Court ruled earlier this year that public school segregation based on race alone is unconstitutional.

Acted Illegally

But the Federation argued the Board of Education acted illegally in starting integration before the Supreme Court has finished its hearings on the problem and issued a final decree spelling out how integration can be achieved, particularly in the Deep South. These hearings are scheduled to begin next month.

After listening to two hours of argument, Judge Schweinhaut ruled there would be more hardship in halting the plans already under way than there would be for a comparatively few people in allowing them to proceed.

It is manifest, he added, that plans cannot be changed solely because they operate to the inconvenience of some people.

Soon after the Supreme Court handed down its decision, Washington educational authorities began drafting their integration plans, intending to make them a model for the rest of the nation.

"What we are faced with today," counsel Milton D. Korman told the court, "is an established integrated school system."

David C. Colladay, attorney for the Federation, conceded that the Supreme Court can only give a broad outline of desegregation and that details must be left to local authorities. But he argued that the District of Columbia board should wait for additional guidance from the high tribunal.

After the motion for a temporary injunction was denied, Korman movevd for dismissal of the Federation's entire suit. The court postponed a decision on this.

mixed classes, which will start Monday. Korman said that to change signals now would cause mass transfers of pupils, teachers and school furniture and result in "utter chaos" in the district's school system.

CAPITAL'S SCHOOLS SPUR INTEGRATION

Timetable for Desegregation Advanced in Junior High and in Grade Classes

TRAILBLAZER MOVE MADE

Baltimore Accepts New Rule Without Incident—Zoning Change Begun in Ohio

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17—A speed-up of this city's school desegragation schedule was ordered today by Hobart M. Corning, school superintendent.

Changes in the program designed to make the capital the pacesetter in school integration applied immediately only to high schools. But the acceleration is regarded as likely to spread to junior high schools and grade schools in the early fall.

On the first day of school this week only pupils who had just moved into a district were governed by the new integration boundaries. All others went to their old schools.

Today, Dr. Corning announced that now instead of next February, tenth and eleventh grade high school students might exercise their "option" of remaining in their old school or transferring to the one to which they had been redistricted.

All requests for transfers will have to be in by Monday, to be checked one-by-one for correctness of address. The transfers are expected to be completed by the end of the week. Under the plan as originally announced, seniors have to remain in their old schools.

Dr. Corning said this move was possible because of a lower white enrollment in high schools than had been anticipated. This trend was marked all through the school system. Dr. Corning said the lower white tally could not be attributed to desegregation. He said it had been the trend for years, and was caused by a shift to the suburbs.

The first day's total school enrollment was 99,946, of which 40,582 pupils were white and 59,364 were Negro. The ratio thus was 59.4 per cent Negro to 40.6 per cent white.

At the start of school last year there were 95,317 pupils, 42,285 white, 53,032 Negro. The 1953 ratio thus was 55.6 per cent Negro, 44.4 per cent white. By the time school was approaching its close last spring the percentage was 57.2 Negro, 42.8 white.

'Voice' Asked for Story

Asked if he had received any White House commendation for the smoothly-running school opening as "trailblazer" in integration as had been requested by President Eisenhower, Dr. Corning replied in the negative.

The nearest thing to official recognition, he said, was a request from the Voice of America to describe the opening of school here to ohetr nations of the world because of the successful operation of the integration plan.

Since the pattern here has been for white schools to be sparsely filled as Negro schools became overcrowded, next week's transfers will have the effect of bringing larger Negro enrollment's into schools formerly all-white.

Dr. Corning reported that about 300 requests for "hardship case" transfers had now been made. The applicants chiefly stated their hardship as splitting of families or very small minorities in a school. Decisions will be made, he said, not on race but on the welfare of the children concerned.

No Incidents in Baltimore

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 17—This city of more than a million, located below the Mason-Dixon line and hence in one-time slave territory, appears to have accepted desegregation in the public schools with no difficulties.

There have been no incidents since Negro and white pupils began attending the same schools Sept. 7.

Baltimore made a tentative step toward desegregation two years ago, when a small number of Negro boys were admitted to the so-called A course in Polytechnic Institute, a boys' high school previously all-white.

The A course, designed for students particularly gifted along scientific and engineering lines, had no counterpart in the Negro high schools and so, when Negroes demanded admission to the course, the school board ruled they must be accepted because the "equal but separate" principle could not be applied.

The city's Superintendent of Schools, Dr. John H. Fischer, today made public a summary showing that Negro students now were enrolled in thirty-six public elementary schools that previously were all-white. Some of these schools, however, have as few as one to five Negroes as compared with 400 to 1,000 white pupils.

Ohio Starts Rezoning

HILLSBORO, Ohio, Sept. 17 (AP)—School officials this morning turned away Negro children, who, they said, were not eligible to attend former all-white elementary grades at Webster and Washington schools under a new rezoning plan.

Negro children living in the school zone, however, were admitted to classes.

Students End Protest

MADISON, W. Va., Sept. 17 (AP)—A brief protest against the part-time enrollment of Negroes in Scott High School here ended today, when white students who had complained about the situation returned to class.

7 States To Join School Hearings

WASHINGTON—Attorneys for three Southern states filed notice with the United States Supreme Court last week that the desire to take part in the legal debate on how and when the high tribunal should issue final orders for desegregation of white and Negro pupils.

Attorneys-General for Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma informed Harold B. Willey, Supreme Court clerk, they wish to present their states' views when new arguments are heard some time in the fall.

Arkansas, Tennessee, Maryland and Texas also notified Willey they wished to file "friends of the court briefs later.

Eugene Cook, Attorney-General for Georgia, said in Atlanta that three other Southern states are joining Georgia in boycotting the hearings.

Cook said he had been informed by the governors of South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana that their states would have nothing to do with the hearings.

The Supreme Court decision of last May 17, declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional, grew out of cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Attorneys in these cases may appear without filing notices, as the court left them on the docket in calling for new arguments.

Attorneys for Negro parents in the five decided cases may also argue without advance notices.

The fall term of the Supreme Court opens on Oct. 4. The justices will decide at a closed conference the time for holding the renewed arguments.

WASHINGTON NEGROES DEMAND RESIGNATION OF SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS WINKING AT JIM CROW

West Hamilton and Attorney Williams Told By NAACP They Do Not Represent Race

MARGARET BUTCHER UNSUPPORTED IN RIGHTS FIGHT

(By Alice A. Dunnigan)

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The District of Columbia branch of the NAACP, last week, suggested that Col. West Hamilton and Atty. Wesley E. Williams resign their positions as members of the D. C. school board.

Eugene Davidson, president of the local branch NAACP, declared that these two members of the nine-man board "should not continue to wave hypocritically the colors of the Negro population of Washington which they definitely do not represent."

The statement came as a result of the controversy arising at the last meeting of the school bers refused to back Dr. Margaret J. Butcher in her effort to prove that Negro and white schools of the city are not equal.

The white members of the board sat silently by and watched the two Negro men pull the rug from beneath their co-worker. The melee got under way after School Supt. Hobart Corning gave a lengthy report tracing the progress which the school system has made in the past eight years toward equalizing schools in the District.

After hearing the report, Dr. Butcher agreed that some progress has been made, still there exists considerable inequality in certain areas.

Pointing out that it is the purpose and policy of the board that these inequalities be eliminated as soon as possible, she suggested that if this cannot be achieved in a reasonable time, other remedies should be sought.

With these remarks she moved that the board concede that there are still existing inequalities between the Negro and white schools.

Although Dr. Butcher failed to spell out exactly what she meant, every member of the board realized that de-segregation would be the only other remedy.

Realizing that this move was aimed at striking out segregation, everyone sat quietly by. With complete silence filling the room, Col. Hamilton is said to have leaned back in his chair with a scowl on his face and his thumbs stuck down in his vest pockets while Williams forced a slurring grin. The white members watched the drama with a gleam of satisfaction.

The silence was finally broken when the board president, Malvin Sharpo, announced that the motion was lost for the want of a second.

The superintendent's report was finally adopted on a motion offered by Robert Faulkner, a white member of the board, and seconded by Col. Hamilton.

After losing her first round in the fight for equality of education for all children in the District, Mrs. Butcher came back with a request that Dr. Corning answer 44 questions regarding the inequalities in the school system.

Col. Hamilton shot back that Dr. Corning should not be burdened down meeting after meeting with having to answer questions. It takes too much of his time, he said.

While the colonel expressed admiration for Dr. Butcher's courage and conceded that there are inequalities in the school system, still he felt that her requests seemed like a scurrilous attack upon the superintendent. "It looks like educational sabotage," he said.

Mrs. Butcher is said to have shed silent tears at this point. She did not weep for herself nor did she mourn because she had not been successful in achieving her mission, because the fighting Maggie knows no defeat. But her very soul poured out bitter tears because she was blocked by the only other two members of her race on the board.

It was this situation which caused the local NAACP president to issue a statement saying that:

"After the emotional turmoil and the justified shouting have died over the desertion of board of education member Margaret J. Butcher by both of the other colored members of the board, the fact will remain that these two men are spiritually disinherited members of the Negro community of Washington."

Davidson let it be known that the "silence of Col. Hamilton and Atty. Williams was not representative of the position of the NAACP nor of the vast majority of Negroes in America and in Washington. He added:

"These men have a right to their opinions as individuals, but the decent action for individuals with opinions at variance with those they reputedly represent is to resign their unpaid positions and argue their points for themselves or for other reactionaries who share their beliefs."

Solon Brings Bill To Support School Bias

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Representative Arthur Winstead, Democrat, of Mississippi, Thursday introduced a bill to withhold Federal funds from schools on Federal property in southern states which do not enforce racial segregation.

His bill would prohibit the expenditures of Federal funds for the operation or maintenance of any school located at any installation under the jurisdiction of the Department of Defense or the Treasury Department during any fiscal year in which such school did not practice the segregation of white and colored pupils.

The Treasury Department was covered by the bill so as to reach schools operated by the Coast Guard. Army, Navy and Air Force schools are under the jurisdiction of the Defense Department.

SEVENTEEN STATES AFFECTED

The provisions of the bill would apply only to those schools located at installations in the seventeen southern states which require racial segregation in their public school systems.

By order of President Eisenhower, schools at defense installations run by the commanders of the installations have already been integrated. Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson has announced that schools on Federal property under the jurisdiction of the Defense Department and run by local school boards would be integrated by the beginning of the school year in 1955.

Federal funds are allocated by the United States Office of Education to aid in the construction and maintenance of schools of schools in areas where Federal activities have caused an influx in the school population.

Where such schools are located on Federal property and run by Army, Navy, or Air Force commanders, funds for their operation are allocated to the Defense Department.

The Winstead bill, referred to the House Armed Services Committee, is not given a chance of passage by political observers.

Legalizing White Schools For Negro Meetings Hit

The National Gateway Citizen's Association last night called on the Commissioners to "fight relentlessly" any attempt by local organizations to legalize the use of white schools as meeting places for Negro civic groups.

The recreation board will consider an amendment to its by-laws permitting inter-racial use of District schools by civic groups at a meeting next Tuesday.

The association also voted its opposition to the city's proposed Public Works Program until the Senate and House agree to pay their true share of the burden."

Report Finds Schools Have Equal Facilities

Robert R. Faulkner, District Board of Education member, yesterday declared that equal plant facilities were provided in Negro and white junior and senior high schools.

He based his statement on a report prepared by the school office of buildings and grounds. It detailed the numberd, type and condition of technical shops, auditoriums, swimming pools and stadiums in the secondary schools.

Faulkner asked for the comparative study in January when the School Board was arguing whether school facilities were equal for white and Negro students. Mrs. Margaret Just Butcher, School Board member, made several unsuccessful attempts to get the Board to declare that the separate-but-equal school doctrine was violated here.

"The study clearly shows that Negroes have practically everything white students have and in some cases a little more," Faulkner said yesterday.

He cited swimming pools. There are pools in two of the four Negro high schools, Cardoza and Dunbar. None of the seven white high schools have swimming facilities.

The report showed further that the 11 white junior highs have 16 gymnasiums while the 11 Negro schools have 15 gyms. There are 11 gyms in the white senior highs and seven in the Negro high schools. The only Negro high with large seating capacity for spectators, however, is new Spingarn. Two white schools have adequate space for spectators. They are Eastern and McKinley High Schools.

Faulkner said that ratings of overall shop conditions in the senior high schools showed "relatively equality." Five white schools were rated "good" and one "very good." Negro schools received one "fair," one "good" and one "excellent."

The report ranked the two technical schools separately. McKinley High for white students drew shop ratings from unsatisfactory to very good. Armstrong High for Negro students ranged from unsatisfactory to excellent. For years, Negro parents have asked for use of McKinley High to house the Armstrong program. McKinley is operating for below capacity.

In general, the report showed that facilities in both white and Negro junior high shops were in good condition and that courses given were approximately the same. Courses vary according to demand.

Industrial Schools Color Line Lifted

The District Commissioners yesterday knocked from their November integration order a clause requiring segregation of employes at the two Industrial Home Schools for children.

They took the step at the suggestion of the Washington Chapter, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, according to Commisioner Samuel Spencer.

Last month, the Fellowship told the Commisioners they could not legally exclude Industrial Home School employes from the sweeping District order aimed at ending racial discrimination in city employment, institutions, and facilities.

Both schools—ont for Negro and one for white children—come under the District Welfare Department, the group argued, and the Department is governed by Civil Service regulations forbidding segregation of employes due to race.

Spencer said yesterday he thought the original order "could be justified legally" but the Commisioners were told by Welfare officials the employe segregation clause wasn't necessary.

Deputy Welfare Director Donald D. Brewer said there now are two Negro cooks and one Negro engineer at the Industrial Home School for White Children, but no white employes at the Negro institution.

Effect of yesterday's order, he said, will be to require that when vacancies occur at either school in the future they will be filled without regard to color.

In another change of their November integration order, the Commissioners gave employes 30 days in which to file complaints of order violations, instead of the 10 day originally set. Spencer said this was to bring the oredr in line with the city's established grievance procedure.

School Officials Launch Study Of Integration

Workshop Series Begins With Three Visiting Experts

District public schools have launched a series of workshop sessions on intercultural relations designed to help school officials in dealing with an integrated school system should the Supreme Court outlaw the dual system.

School Supt. Hobart M. Corning said the program would be valuable even if the segregated status continues, however.

"The purpose of the series is to create a climate for better understanding and improved relations among various segments of the population, particularly our school population," he said.

Dr. Corning said that three experts in the field of human relations conducted the first meeting Wednesday, which was attended by top administrative officials of the schools and five Board of Education members.

Session Is Closed.

The school superintendent did not reveal what was discussed specifically at the closed session. He expressed the view that such a meeting was more appropriately conducted in private session.

The experts were Dr. John L. Milligan, assistant commissioner of education in charge of intercultural affairs, New Jersey State Department of Education; William E. Vickery, educational director of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, and Dr. Dan W. Dodson, professor of education and director of curriculum and research for the Human Relations Study of New York University.

Vice President Nixon was invited to attend, but could not be present. Dr. Corning disclosed that the Vice President had sent a telegram, however, congratulating school administrators on the start of the discussions.

The guest speakers gave no specific recommendations for effecting a smooth transition to an integrated school system here in the event of a Supreme Court decision ordering it, but talked in general terms, according to Dr. Corning.

Principals to Attend.

Meetings will be held in April and May for several hundred school principals, supervisors and directors. They in turn will advise teachers, according to the plan.

Discussions will cover these aspects of interracial relations:

Practical problems now existing in the school system; problems which may arise with integration; consideration of solutions to the problems; procedures for breaking down prejudice and misunderstanding; methods of developing co-operation and a harmonious spirit among teachers and school personnel; and the types of meetings and workshops to be held.

The sessions are part of the school system's in-service training program and will not deal with the advantages or disadvantages of integration or segregation as such, Dr. Corning said.

While the program should be confined to the school system, he said, since it is not feasible to deal with the entire community, he agreed that parent-teacher organizations might launch similar programs.

Integration Order Changed For Industrial Schools

The District Commissioners yesterday removed a section from their November non-discrimination order that forbade racial integration of employes at the Negro and white industrial home schools.

The provision met with the objection of the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, which contended that the clause was illegal.

Commissioner Samuel Spencer said that while he believes the provision could be "elgally justified," he was informed by city welfare officials that it wasn't necessary in the first place, since the home school for white already has limited racial integration among employes.

Deletion of the challenged paragraph means that in all future hiring, the basis will be job qualifications rather than race or color, Mr. Spencer said.

High Court May Rule Early Next Month on School Segregation

The Supreme Court today arranged for a bench recess of three weeks beginning after next Monday's decision-day, and thus stirred fresh speculation that it may hand down a decision early in April on the school segregation issue.

The Justices returned to the bench yesterday for the first time since February 8 with a long list of opinions and orders. They said nothing about the pending cases on constitutionality of racial segregation in public schools.

The principal written opinion, reversing the gambling conviction of a Maryland man, upheld the fundamental provisions of a Federal law that a person cannot be convicted in any court on testimony he gave to a congressional committee. The unanimous opinion, written by Justice Black said the law applies to States as well as Federal courts.

Possible Exceptions.

Justice Black added that there might be some circumstances under which a person making statements voluntarily before a congressional committee might not be protected by that law. But, he said, the conviction of William Remmer in a Maryland State court must be reversed because it was based on testimony he gave to the Senate Crime Investigating Committee in 1951. Mr. Remmer had been sentenced to serve seven years in prison.

In other actions yesterday, the Supreme Court:

1. Agreed to hear arguments on a claim that employes may revoke at any time the authority of a union to represent them as bargaining agent. The International Association of Machinists was certified by the National Labor Relations Board as bargaining representative of employes of a Van Nuys, Calif., automobile dealer. A week later a majority of the employes notified the employer that they wanted to revoke that representation.

Charges Reinstated.

2. Reinstated the Justice Department's anti-trust charges against the employing plasterers and employing lathers association of Chicago, and others. A Federal judge in Chicago had thrown out the charges. Justices Minton and Douglas dissented.

3. Refused to rule on a proposed test of the McCarran-Walter immigration bill as applied to a possible ban on reentry of resident aliens who leave the continental United States for commercial fishing in Alaska. The court, with Justices Black and Douglas dissenting, held that the case from Seattle presented no actual legal controversy for determination at this time. The opinion said the court would not rule on hypothetical situations.

4. Ruled unanimously that the California manufacturers of statuettes or figurines or similar "works of art" for lamp bases were entitled to protection of the copyright laws.

Takes Cautious, But Optimistic Integration Step

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(ANP)—The District of Columbia will begin its move to integrate the capital's public schools next month in accordance with President Dwight Eisenhower's suggestion under a rather cautious program, and against the background of agitation fomented by a "white supremacy" group under the auspices of the Federation of Citizens' Associations.

However, school officials are generally optimistic about the plan which the President believes will be a model for the rest of the nation.

Nevertheless, despite the racial overtones and official concern for the social activities which the plan entails, Associate Superintendent of Schools Carl Hansen said "the total picture is very encouraging."

The integration plan was worked out by Supt. Hobart M. Corning and his staff. It calls for all 167 district schools to be opened to pupils without regards to race at the beginning of classes Sept. 13, but is not expected to be in full swing until September, 1955.

The ultimate objective of the plan is the integration of the district's 103,000 school children. Negro pupils in the capitol outnumber whites by 59,000 to 44,000.

In the meantime, parents and parent-teacher groups are reported to have reacted to the plan with "even temper and calm judgement."

D. C. Police Assigned To Public School Duty

No Major Trouble From Integration Anticipated by Deputy Chief Covell

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

Deputy Police Chief Howard V. Covell yesterday disclosed plans to assign a uniformed policeman in the vicinity of every district public school during the first weeks of integration, beginning September 13.

"No major difficulty is anticipated during the initial stage of school integration," Covell emphasized in a directive to the Metropolitan Police force. He added "it is reasonable to expect that there may be some friction" between students of junior and senior high school age.

In public school integration, Covell said "we have no precedent to follow, nor can we with any degree of accuracy predict what may occur at any given location." Thus, Covell said, the police preventive plan will be flexible so that police may be shifted quickly to any "sensitive spot." There are 165 public schools but many of the grade schools are located within several blocks of each other. The more than 70 police crossing guards, normally stationed near schools, will be utilized.

Parochial Schools

Covell said that it appeared Catholic schools, which open Thursday, will require a minimum of police attention. Parochial schools have been integrated since 1952.

Deputy Police George R. Wallrodt who is in charge of the unifomed force, yesterday explained the details of integration directive to School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning.

Wallrodt said school authorities did not request extra police protection and that it was "routine service" prompted by a new situation.

Corning said he didn't expect any trouble to arise from integration but added he thought police could prevent possible trouble from "hoodlums and hangers-on" who often frequent school neighborhoods.

Wallrodt said a survey had been made of places where young people gather around schools, such as bus stops, small stores and business establishments. He said men would be on hand at these spots in particular to quell any "little flare-ups of temper." He added: I have learned children have a tendency to get along with each other."

New Boundaries

Covell pointed out in his order that school officers have designated new school boundaries, which affect some students this month and not others until February or fall of 1955.

He said some parents may disregard the effective date of boundary lines and send children to schools nearest their homes. In this case, he added, children will be directed to their proper school by authorities.

"In the event these children decline to report to the designated school and refuse to leave the school originally entered, a problem will be created where the police will unquestionably be called upon to take action," Covell said. He added:

"The Assistant Corporation Counsel, assigned to the criminal division, Municipal Court, has advised this department that no action could be taken by the police in such cases if the parties concerned were well behaved, but, if their actions were such as to indicate an intent to provoke a breach of the peace, or to annoy, disturb, interfere with, obstruct, or be offensive to others, they could be charged with 'disorderly conduct' under provisions of the District Law Enforcement Act."

Arbitration Stressed

Covell stressed: "It is felt such cases should be handled by arbitration and persuasion, and summary arrests made only in extreme cases where it cannot be reasonably avoided."

Sued by Federation

Corning Asks Support of Public To Make School Race Rule Succeed

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning appealed to Washington citizens to make the Supreme Court decision against school segregation "a working success" next month as the Federation of Citizens Associations yesterday sued him to stop all integration plans.

Corning yesterday had "no comment" on the injunction suit filed in District Court by the organization which is comprised of white members only. He declared the community should show its "united determination" to support the high court ruling, adding the District "faces a difficult ordeal with the opening of schools" September 13.

The Federation asked for an immediate stop order to keep Corning and the Board of Education from changing the dual school system until the Supreme Court after October hearings, outlines the method and timing of schoool integration.

Meanwhile, school officials prepared to put into effect the partial start of integration with the beginning of the September term. Registration for new junior and senior high school students will begin today. New grade school students will register September 8 and 9.

Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West already has started preparing the District brief which will tell the Supreme Court the progress Washington has made towards complying with the order banning racially-seperate schools. West ruled earlier that the District need not await Supreme Court re-arguments to begin integration.

Citizens Sue to Block Start Of School Integration Sept. 13

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

The Federation of Citizens Associations yesterday sued the Board of Education in District Court to block the start of public school integration here September 13.

Effect of the requested immediate injunction, if granted, would be to force school officials to continue segregated schools until the Supreme Court defines the method and timing of their conversion.

Federation attorneys, the firm of Colladay & Colladay asked for the stop order to keep the school board and School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning from "taking any further steps" toward integration. The suit asked further that any integration steps taken this past spring and summer be set aside.

Besides the Federation, the plaintiffs are 28 white parents and their 22 school-age children. They asked the court to declare the so-called Corning integration plan "premature, inoperative and null and void."

They charge the plan was drafted without "lawful authority" since the Supreme Court requested rearguments in October on the procedures for ending school segregation. The plaintiffs declare the status quo of local schools should be maintained until the high court issues a final decree in the segregation case involving the District.

Charge Code Violation

The suit charges that the Corning plan violates the District Code by forcing attendance of pupils in specific, zoned schools. Under law, the plaintiffs contend, parents may put their children in any public school of the proper grade level with the consent of the school board. The latter, they add, may withhold such consent only for valid and just cause and reason.

Rigid school boundaries as proposed in the integration plan, the suit states, deprive the parent-plaintiffs and their children of their liberties and property without "due process of law" in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

(In its May 17 opinion, the Supreme Court held that racial segregation in District public schools is a denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment.)

The School Board voted last June to integrate District schools in a one-year period, beginning with school opening this month. In July the board approved a set of new school zones which on September 13 must be obeyed by all students new to the school system and by all grade school pupils who have moved from one part of the city to another.

The federation suit said the School Board plan is "arbitrary and unreasonable" because it would compel a child of one race to attend a school where 80, 90 or 95 percent of the pupils are of a different race.

". . . . A child who is forced into such a disproportionate minority is or may be in effect punished because of his race or color and unreasonably retarded in his or her educational pursuits," the suit contends.

"Irreparable Damage"

If school officials are not restrained from putting their plan into effect this month, the plaintiffs charge their children and other youngsters "will suffer great and irreparable damage by way of increased expenses excessive and unreasonable distances to be traveled, increased expenditures of time damages to the morale and deepest sentiments and feelings . . ."

The federation, in the brief, stated it "represents and speaks for almost all the white parents and their children of school age who are residents of the District . . ." The federation consists of elected representatives of 57 neighborhood citizens' associations. Its membership is limited to white persons.

All the individual parents and students named as plaintiffs reside in either the Northeast or Southeast sections of Washington. Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, federation president, explained they represent "hardship cases" under the proposed integration plan. She said some of the children would be in minority school situations. In other cases, Mrs. Bartlett said two children in the same family would be forced to attend different grade schools.

D. C. Colladay, attorney for the plaintiffs, yesterday said he hoped a hearing would be held within a week on whether the court should take immediate action to restrain the integration plan. He added the court could issue an ex parte order which would keep school authorities from acting until a hearing was held.

Other attorneys who prepared the injunction case are Edward F. Colladay, a former federation president, and J. Richard Earle and James R. Stoner.

Anti-Integration Groups Drag Feet

Rear-guard action against racial integration in the District broke out last week.

On one front the Firemen's Association counterattacked strongly against the Commissioners' August 17 order integrating the force. Some 500 firefighters on both the day and night shifts voted to appeal the decision to House and Senate District Committees and to employ legal counsel.

In District Court, on another front, the Federation of Citizens' Associations argued and lost its last ditch move to block integration of the public schools until formally ordered by the Supreme Court.

Both were essentially delaying attempts.

In the case of the firemen their only hope is delay until Congress returns to give them access to the Southern Democrats who in past years have helped them ward off integration.

Well-Planned Strategy

The Commissioners planned their strategy well. When they eliminated segregation in other departments of city government last November they served notice the Fire Department would be included but said that the time was not then ripe. Commissioner Samuel Spencer never elaborated on just when the time would be ripe beyond indicating that the Fire Department order would be forthcoming in a matter of months. Apparently the city heads were waiting until Congress got out of town to avoid a head-on showdown at the Capitol. Former Commissioner F. Joseph Donohue lost out in just such a showdown a few years ago in his move to integrate the department.

Principal objection of the white firemen is that they would be thrown into close living situations in firehouses which is not the case in other city departments, even including police.

School Suit Lost

In District Court, Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut refused to issue a court order stopping desegregation in the schools. He held that the Supreme Court "has definitely, unequivocally and categorically held that there cannot be segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia."

He added that it was up to the Board of Education to determine how the change should be made and that present plans seem wholly practicable.

He left the Federation effort barely breathing by refusing to dismiss its lawsuit as requested by Assistant Corporation Counsel Milton Korman. The judge said he felt the Federation attorney should have opportunity to argue the motion to dismiss. However, there seems little doubt that the case ultimately will be tossed out.

D.C. school board's act held valid

Baltimore

WASHINGTON

The District's corporation counsel feels that it was "within the discretion of the school board to proceed" toward the desegregation of the public schools.

Vernon West, the corporation counsel, expressed this reaction to the suit filed by the Federation of Citizens Associations, which seeks to restrain the board and the school administration from initiating steps to desegregate the dual school system.

MR. WEST said that his present position is not inconsistent to the one taken by his office back in December.

"At that time," he asserted, "we were upholding existing laws and the rulings which had been made to date in the highest District Court was well as the Supreme Court (in the Plessy vs. Ferguson decision).

"Now the Supreme Court has reversed its previous decision and we are upholding the most recent ruling. There is no inconsistency in that."

—o O o—

CONCERNING SCHOOL desegregation, Corporation Counsel West said:

"The Supreme Court has ruled against it and although the court has not required immediate compliance, it had to be done sooner or later and we thought that it was within the discretion of the school board to proceed.

"The court hasn't said that desegregation couldn't be started."

—o O o—

THE FEDERATION OF CIVIC Associations, the counterpart of the lily - white organization, although keeping a "weather eye" on developments does not plan to enter into the latest legal development.

"I don't think that it is necessary for us to enter this suit as a friend of the court because the board is represented by corporation counsel and is on solid ground," said C. Herbert Marshall, president of the Federation of Civic Associations.

"Those people don't know what they are doing in filing for an injunction.

"It appears to me that the Supreme Court has made the law in this case and given the parties concerned time to work out their problems in accordance with it.

"Our legal committee, composed of Huver I. Brown, Hubert Pair, and Richard Atkinson, has the authority to act for the federation and file a "friend of the court" brief, if they wish.

"But, it is my personal opinion that it will not be needed because the injunction was a foolish action," Dr. Marshall added.

—o O o—

A BOARD MEMBER listed as a defendant in the petition, commented:

WALTER TOBRINER, white — "I don't like to comment on cases that are before the court. I don't think it is proper.

"However, I can say this, that I believe the board was right in acting on the advice of the corporation counsel, who said that we could act on the matter of desegregation of schools."

MIXED SCHOOLS SET IN 'BORDER' STATES

Historic Social Step Also Will Be Taken Next Month in District of Columbia

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28 (UP) —A historic social step will be taken next month when public schools in five "border" states and the District of Columbia begin mixing Negro and white children in compliance with a Supreme Court decision.

The high court declared on May 17 that race segregation in public schools was unconstitutional. Although the court has postponed formal decrees to enforce its decision, schools in Arkansas, West Virginia, Missouri, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia are going ahead with first steps toward integration.

Schools in twelve other states, chiefly in the South, are waiting further Supreme Court action before doing anything about their segregated schools. Some are talking about abolishing their public schools entirely rather than mixing Negro and white children. The twelve are Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Texas.

A survey of steps planned for the coming school year shows that in all the "border" states integration will be spotty. Some school districts in each state will start this fall, others will hold off for another year or more.

No Clear Pattern

There is no clear pattern of desegregation actions. In Delaware, for instance, Wilmington will mix Negro and white children in elementary schools only this fall. Another Delaware district will integrate only junior and senior high school children this coming term, saving the elementary schools for next fall.

In another contrast, Wilmington will permit children to transfer schools at the request of their parents if space is available in the desired school. Yet at the Rose Hill-Minquadale School just outside Wilmington, no transfers will be permitted under a program ending segregation next month in the three elementary schools. School Superintendent Dr. Harry O. Eisenberg said he thought it would be easier to handle a "no-transfer" policy than to permit "ifs" and "buts" as excuses for loading integrated schooling.

State and school officials in the affected states generally predict there will be little trouble. But local resistance by parentts and others has caused one or two setbacks in integration plans.

In West Virginia, where at least six out of fifty-five counties plan full public school integration this fall, the first public demonstration occurred Aug. 18 at Philippi. The police were called to an unruly Board of Education meeting at which residents protested plans to mix white and Negro pupils in some eight Negro grade schools, and to assign twenty-nine high school students formerly sent to a neighboring Negro high school to Philippi High. Among those present were parents of twelve white children assigned to a predominantly Negro grade school at Hanging Rock.

There was no violence. But next night the board met secretly and decided to assign the twelve children to white schools up to one and a half miles from their homes to meet parents' objections. However, the board said integration in other grade schools and in the high school, where there had been no protest, were affirmed.

Example of Border Reaction

The general reaction in the border states is typified by the West Virginia schools superintendent, W. W. Trent, who said "I anticipate no unsurmountable difficulties in carrying out the Supreme Court's decision." However, he added "considerable time" may be needed to complete the job in counties with large Negro concentrations.

The survey covered principally the seventeen states and the District of Columbia, which have had compulsory school segregation laws or regulations. In certain other states with laws permitting but not requiring segregation, steps were under way even before the Supreme Court ruling to end separate Negro and white schools.

Kansas, one of the states involved in the Supreme Court ruling, has a state law permitting segregation in twelve cities, only nine of which actually have had it. Even before the high court ruling, however, Topeka, the capital, abandoned the segregation principle and began working toward a unified school system.

Both New Mexico and Arizona, which also have laws permitting segregation, have taken steps to integrate existing white and Negro schools. Mostly, it has gone along without fuss. But in Hobbs, N. M., the Rev. Bill Carter, a Baptist pastor, is leading a move to prevent the immediate end to segregation ordered by the local board of education.

Most Northern states have abolished segregation generally, although there are some areas where it remains, such as some southern portions of Illinois and Indiana.

Here are the desegregation steps planned in the border states and the District of Columbia:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

In line with President Eisenhower's plea that the United States capital serve as a model for the rest of the segregated states, Washington is starting a general process of integration Sept. 13, the opening day of school. New school boundaries have been drawn. Pupils entering school for the first time—either starting in kindergarten or the first grade, or moving to town—may attend the school in the zone where they live, regardless of race.

In addition 2,903 Negro children who attended overcrowded Negro elementary, junior and senior high schools last year will be transferred to hitherto all-white schools.

By the spring term of 1955, School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning plans to have senior high schools and vocational schools unsegregated, so mid-year junior high graduates will enter senior high without regard to race. By the fall term of 1955 the school system is to be totally unsegregated.

In a step to ease the transition, pupils may remain in present schools until they are graduated regardless of the new boundaries. There has been little indication of trouble, although citizens' groups have threatened legal action to block integration until the Supreme Court handed down actual decrees enforcing its ruling. However, this has not materialized and officials expect a smooth changeover starting Sept. 13.

MISSOURI

The State's Attorney General has ruled that Missouri's 800-plus school districts may integrate this fall but do not have to until final court rulings are issued. Some mergers are planned. The exact extent will not be known until questionnaires sent out by the State Board of Education are returned by school districts in September.

The local school board voted to admit Negroes to the white high school at Jefferson City, the state capital, this year, but does not know how many will attend. Negroes and whites may attend each other's schools at Columbia. A number of small counties in rural areas where there are few Negroes have scheduled complete integration this fall.

St. Louis, the nation's second largest segregated city, will start by combining two teachers' colleges on a white campus next month, and work down by steps to elementary schools, with public school pupils required to attend in districts where they reside. Integration in St. Louis will be completed by the fall term of next year. Kansas City will mix Negroes and Whites in junior college this fall and will complete integration next fall.

No trouble is reported in sight. In St. Louis, for example, the ground was broken by integration of Roman Catholic schools in 1947. State Education Commissioner Hubert Wheeler said "the law of the land will be obeyed in Missouri; we do not expect any difficulties of any consequence."

MARYLAND

Public school segregation is slated to end this fall in Baltimore, Maryland's largest city, but not elsewhere in the state. Maryland's Attorney General ruled it would be illegal to end segregation until the final high court decree was handed down, since the state law required segregation. But Baltimore City Solicitor Tomas Biddison held the court decision outlawing segregation required its elimination in Baltimore.

The City Education Department has ruled that starting this September any child may go to any school he or she wishes, regardless of race. If a school becomes overcrowded, a boundary line will be drawn around it and other pupils will not be admitted from beyond the area. Children will not be permitted to go to schools far from their homes without adequate reasons.

A spokesman for the State Department of Education said there are no preparations to handle possible disturbances because officials thought things would move ahead quietly when state-wide desegregation started. He said there had been "quiet moves" toward integration for the last few years, such as joint Negro and white teacher meetings, visits by Negro high school, church and other cultural groups to white schools and vice versa, and "considerable emphasis on the rights of other races" in school classes.

DELAWARE

Delaware is one of five states involved in cases before the Supreme Court. Several cities and schools in Newcastle County, northern part of the state, plan integration moves this fall. In Wilmington, all elementary schools will have new attendance districts, and children will attend the nearest school. Integration of junior and senior high schools is being postponed, probably until the 1955 fall term.

In Newark Special School District, twenty miles south of Wilmington, junior and senior high schools will be integrated this September. At Newcastle, integration is scheduled in both elementary and high schools, starting this fall by having Negro children entering the first, ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades attend hitherto all-white elementary and high schools. There are similar programs in other areas in Newcastle County, but there are no integration plans at present in the lower half of the state, where strong racial bias still exists.

The Wilmington Superintendent of Schools said he was "very much surprised at the lack of public comment" on the issue.

He said a few parents had requested transfers for their children, and some teachers had made it clear they did not want to teach Negroes. Other teachers have agreed to serve on integrated faculties.

ARKANSAS

Gov. Francis Cherry has left action up to school districts but taken the position that nothing need be done until the Supreme Court hands down specific decrees. The city of Fayetteville has voted for integration this fall. The Sheridan School District voted for integration but reversed itself because of inflamed local feeling. Little Rock has tentatively decided against integration in four new schools now being built.

WEST VIRGINIA

The State Department of Education has told all county school boards to proceed with plans to end segregation by the fall term of 1955. A number of counties have announced plans to integrate their schools this fall, chiefly in areas with small Negro population. Counties with larger Negro population generally have announced they will wait until the High Court issues decrees spelling out formal steps to end segregation.

At least six counties plan integration this fall. Some other counties will start gradually by integrating school bus transportation. Wood County intends to let Negro first graders and high school freshmen enter white schools so they can be integrated throughout elementary or high school.

D. C. SCHOOLS TEST DESEGREGATION

By NONA BROWN

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11—Partly because of local pressures and partly because of President Eisenhower's expressed concern, the District of Columbia is abandoning its traditional dual school system without waiting for the Supreme Court to issue rules. The court, after declaring segregated schooling to be unconstitutional in its historic ruling of last May 17, said it would listen to further discussions of the subject this fall and then issue instructions for carrying out the new mandate. Most of the seventeen states affected by the Supreme Court decision are awaiting these October hearings before taking any integration steps of their own.

The Washington integration system was not born without pain, and even its most ardent admirers realize that there is more grief to come. With the schools opening on Monday, the human relations problems will come to the fore, and the word here is to treat these with tolerance and understanding.

Actually, district school officials, under Superintendent Hobart M. Corning, began discussing integration ideas two years ago. Last year the Board of Education, a bi-racial group, also began active study of the problem and gathered suggestions from various community groups. Thus, when the Supreme Court decision was handed down, much of the ground work had been done.

Backing of President

Wheels began to turn when President Eisenhower, on the day after the Supreme Court ruling, lent his personal prestige to the idea that the district should move as rapidly as possible.

In a matter of just a few weeks, the school board and Dr. Corning came to agreement—not unanimously—on a plan that has these main ingredients:

(1) The student bodies in the 167 local public schools should be integrated, on the basis of nearness to residence, as rapidly as possible. Administratively, the change could not be made all at once, but the shift should be started with this school year and completed, for the most part, by September, 1955. It will be carried on simultaneously in all grades.

(2) The teaching and administrative staffs, likewise, should be assigned on the basis of merit only, without regard for race or color. This was implemented during the summer when bi-racial examinations were held, and the previous separate lists of eligible teachers were merged. District officials fully expect to have some Negro teachers with white pupils, and vice versa.

(3) New school districts would be established, drawing into each school all pupils living near by. Previously, some white children and many Negroes had to travel considerable distances to the proper segregated schools. The new districts were established in July.

(4) Gradual integration would begin with the direct reassignment of some 3,000 Division II (Negro) students from overcrowded colored schools to eighteen unfilled Division I (white) schools, and by requiring all new students to register at the school specified by the new boundaries. This registration took place Thursday and yesterday, but there are no reports yet on how many schools in addition to the eighteen will find themselves with mixed student bodies on Monday as a result of these new pupils. In addition, there are special integration provisions for evening schools, the teachers' college and one high school.

Plans Fight On End of School Bias

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11 (AP).—A determined ex-Marine sergeant from Florida said today he will press his fight for "preservation of white culture" in the face of the Supreme Court's no-school-segregation ruling.

Bryant W. Bowles, thirty-four-year old president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, this week registered the first tentative legal victory of his group's nine months of existence.

Superior Court Judge John T. Tucker, of Baltimore, in response to a petition from the "NAAWP" and da citizens' committee, gave the Baltimore school board fifteen days to show why it should not be required to restore the city's schools to a segregated basis.

Schools Integrated

Baltimore's schools were opened on a non-segregated basis for the first time on Tuesday. The NAAWP and the Maryland petition committee of Jessup, Md., contend the city's code requires segregated schools.

This temporary advantage was offset in Washington where Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut this week denied an injunction sought by the Federation of Citizens Association to block desegregation of the Capital's schools when they reopen Monday.

Mr. Bowles was undismayed by the Washington ruling. He said he plans to seek a Constitutional amendment giving the states full power to deal with segregation regardless of the Federal government's attitude.

"Not Afraid" to Fight

The youthful veteran, who quit school after high school and joined the Marines at the age of nineteen, said he is "not afraid" to fight for his "right to free speech" in favor of segregation despite all opposition.

"I figure according to the insurance statistics that I got some forty more years to live and I'm going to die hoppin' and hollerin' for the white race," he said in an interview.

"If I go to jail I want to be sure it's in the South. Jails are segregated there."

Recruits by Mail

N. A. A. W. P. membership cards state the organization is open to all white United States citizens over eighteen who "believe in separation of the races of mankind." Mr. Bowles is trying to recruit followers by mailing application blanks to newspapers, lodges and other groups across the nation. He said he has sent out a quarter-million pro-white pamphlets since his organization was started.

He mimeographs his own literature in a carpetless, two-room office here. He has a helper, William French, who edits a four-page fortnightly publication called "National Forum."

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Study Finds Schools Integrating

By Drew Pearson

THE SHOWDOWN on the hottest issue to face American education in our times—the integration of white and Negro students—is now under way, only four months after the Supreme Court issued its momentous "non-segregation" decision.

Actually, the entire world is watching how the challenge is being met. Though certain Southern politicians don't realize it, Communist kibitzers are hoping for additional ammunition for their "hate America" campaign.

It's too early for a conclusive report, but a significant factual study already has been made by the American Friends Service Committee. The Quaker report reveals general compliance with the Supreme Court ban on school segregation, except in some Deep South areas, where "officials have made defiant statements and are openly seeking ways to circumvent the decision . . ."

Even these mavericks probably will fall into line with the rest of the Nation, the report indicates, after the Supreme Court issues decrees implementing its non-segregation ruling. Here are some of the preliminary findings of Friends Service Committee:

Major cities in "border states" are taking the lead in nonsegregation this fall, notably Baltimore, Kansas City, St. Louis, Washington, D. C., and Wilmington, Del. The Attorney General of Missouri has announced that "provisions for separate (white and colored) schools are void."

Six West Virginia counties, including the city of Charleston, are integrating white and colored students this fall. So is Fayetteville, Ark. Little Rock is "taking the first steps."

Planning Office Would Acquire School Sites

Fairfax Board Urges Supervisors To Shift Duty

The Fairfax County School Board wants to turn the job of acquiring school sites over to the county planning office.

On motion of Robert F. Davis, the School Board yesterday asked the Board of County Supervisors to approve the switch. Mr. Davis said the planning office has first knowledge of new housing developments and is the logical department to plan future school locations. All negotiations for sites would be handled by the planning director. Location, cost and size of new sites would be subject to School Board approval.

Mr. Davis said he has talked with several members of the Board of Supervisors who favor the plan.

Pending approval of the new system, the school board instructed Supt. W. T. Woodson to negotiate for a new high school site in the vicinity of the Bush Hill Elementary School.

Back Up on Belvoir.

The School Board learned that it acted hastily in adopting a resolution two months ago to bar Fort Belvoir children from county schools. This was done simultaneously with a decision to stop operating the elementary school on the Fort Belvoir military reservation because the Government has decreed classes may not be segregated. The School Board later amended the original resolution to accept high school students from Fort Belvoir into county schools, because there is no high school on the post.

Yesterday the resolution was amended further to exclude any mention of barring Fort Belvoir children from county schools. This was done after the board read a letter from F. F. Jenkins of the Division of Research and Planning for the State Board of Education. He advised the county School Board that Virginia law requires admission of children living on military posts into public schools.

Closing Decision Stands.

Yesterday's action, however, did not alter the decision to stop operating the Fort Belvoir school on June 30. Since the school is to be operated by the Government, the requirement that military children be admitted to county schools apparently will have little effect on the county school system.

Attorney John Alexander advised the School Board that the necessary legal papers probably will be ready on April 19 to initiate the sale of $4 million worth of school construction bonds. It is the second $4 million issue to be offered for sale under the county's last $11 million school construction bond authorization.

S. B. Pearson of the financial consulting firm of Alex Brown & Sons, advised the School Board that future bond issues might be initiated by a different procedure from those in the past to relieve the tax burden in the early years of the issue. It has been customary for Fairfax County school bond referendums to be initiated by a petition of the voters to the School Board. The other method is for the Board of County Supervisors to petition the Circuit Court for a referendum.

Sets Heavy Maturity.

Mr. Pearson said the former method requires that 4 per cent of the issue mature in the fifth year, which he said places a heavy burden on the taxpayers. Under the other method, such a heavy maturity is not required so early, and the bonds may be repaid over a longer period. He said the alternative method would make it possible to pay off a heavier portion of the issue in later years, when the county's assessable base has increased.

Mr. Woodson recommended that the School Board meet regularly four times a month. At present, there is one meeting scheduled each month, and other meetings are called when they are needed. He was instructed to work out a schedule of four monthly meetings.

School heads pledge loyalty to Dr. Corning

Civic and church leaders endorse slow school plan

By LARRY STILL and AL SWEENEY

WASHINGTON

All of the top school officials took the "loyalty pledge" to the "Corning Plan" Wednesday by indicating their solid support of the superintendent's school integration proposal.

Meeting in Roosevelt High School, the entire administrative staff of Divisions 1 and 2 unanimously approved Dr. Hobart Corning's "integration by Sept. 1955" proposal by a standing show of support.

One ranking school official said that he "felt that the plan was a good one."

Practical

Col. West A. Hamilton, school board member said the "plan seemed to be a practical one."

"I think that we have approached this subject calmly and we have plenty of support."

C. Herbert Marshall, president of the Federation of Civic Associations, says:

"I don't find any serious objection to it. We don't want to make a little child a martyr to a cause."

Alliance Support

Rev. Colbert H. Pearson, pastor of Berean Baptist Church, president of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, asserted:

"I have no reason to doubt Dr. Corning's honesty and sincerity; so if he moves within the framework outlined toward the goals of his proposals I firmly believe he will keep faith with the public.

"It will take time."

Other groups who have indicated they favor a gradual plan of integration are the Federation of Citizens Associations, Anacostia Citizens Association; Northeast Community Parent Group, Brookland Citizens Association, Ketcham Parent Teachers Association, the Rudolph PTA, Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association, the Woodridge PTA and the Northwest Council.

The 11-page integration proposal of Dr. Corning's was presented to the board, Tuesday.

After finishing the report, Dr. Rowland Kirks, a board member, moved for adjournment.

The board will meet again Wednesday.

Dr. Corning proposed to "desegregate" 18 heretofore white schools by Sept. 1954.

The schools, 15 on the elementary level and three junior high schools, were termed emergency situations" by Dr. Corning.

The rest to be integrated by September, 1955.

He did not feel that any "emergency situations' existed in the white schools necessitating a transfer of white pupils to formerly colored schools.

Senior High Schools

On the senior high school level, he suggests the merging of McKinley and Armstrong Technical High Schools by transferring 300 pupils from Armstrong.

As for the teachers colleges, Dr. Corning indicated that "there is no urgent situation" and that both Miner and Wilson Teachers Colleges will be open to students in either to take courses not offered in the other.

The superintendent states that complete merging of the colleges cannot be accomplished at this time because there is no facility large enough to accommodate the two enrollments.

Controversial Phase

Another controversial phase of the proposal is the provision which will permit pupils to continue at their present school even though they are living outside of the new boundaries until graduation.

Dr. Corning inists that it is an "educationally sound" provision. And says that if a pupil is depriving a pupil living within an area the right to attend the school, he can be "bumped."

The boundaries of all the schools will be fixed during the coming school year, he says.

From now on the list of new teachers will be merged and the board of examiners will be combined.

Assures Teachers

Dr. Corning assured 1,600 teachers, who met at McKinley High School, Tuesday, that no teacher would lose a job.

The superintendent asked the group, which included white and colored teachers, to "cooperate wholheartedly" with the plan.

Con

Corning plan faces big opposition

Board members, civic leaders are displeased

By LARRY STILL and AL SWEENEY

WASHINGTON

The "delayed action" plan of Dr. Hobart Corning, superintendent of schools, calling for the gradual integration of schools by Sept. 1955 met considerable opposition this week.

From the out-spoken condemnation of Dr. Margaret Just Butcher and Mrs. Burma Whitted, vice president of the Consolidated Parents Group, to the mild concern of Wesley Williams and Walter Tobriner of the school board, it is apparent that the plan is in for rough sledding.

Dr. Margaret Butcher says flatly:

"The plan is no good. It completely ignores the Supreme Court's decisioin.

"The superintendent is trying to confuse everyone. All that is necessary to accomplish our aim is to issue an order that would require a pupil to attend the school nearest his home.

"I can not understand why the superintendent is not prepared to complete the integration of the schools by September of this year.

"He has been telling us all along that he had a plan. Now he tells us that he needs more time."

Mr. Tobriner, one of the influential white board members, indicated:

"Pupils should be allowed to attend schools within their boundaries."

"I am in as much a muddle as everyone else'" Mr. Tobriner added. He said he had many questions to ask Supt. Corning about his proposals.

Welsey Williams, attorney, and board member shared Mr. Tobriner's views, saying that he has always felt children should go to the schools in their area.

Mr. Williams said he hadn't had time to reach any conclusions on the plan.

Dr. Ellis O. Knox, chairman of the education committee of the NAACP stated "all buildings zoning and pupil assignments should be completed by September, 1953."

Barrington Parker, secretary of the Federation of Civic Associations, said he felt the Superintendent was "making too much of the of the transfer of colored pupils to white schools without transferring any white pupils to colored schools."

Mr. Parker says he is certain that there are some areas in southeast Washington and Anacostia in which white pupils should attend schools nearest to them.

The Rev. Smallwood Williams, pastor of Bibleway Church said: "I think it should be complete integration now and not be extended over a long period of time."

Charles Green of the Woodridge Civic Association described the plan as a "continuation of segregation."

Mrs. M. W. Smith and Mrs. Grace Spiro of the ADA said the plan would take eight years to accomplish integration.

The ADA later released a 2 page statement condemning some of Superintendent Corning's proposals as "incompatible with the judgment of the Supreme Court."

Mrs. David Apter and Mrs. Ann Learman of the Anti-Defamation League said they felt the plan "takes too much time."

Mrs. Ella R. Foster of the Garfield-Douglass Heights civic association questioned the proposal to have children attend school until they graduate.

Mrs. Van Dyke A. Walker of the Southeast civic association said she felt children "should be able to go to the school nearest their home at all grade levels."

At a meeting of the Deanwood civic association Tuesday night Mrs. Dovey Rountree, attorney, declared "there is too much fear in the superintendent, principals and teachers," according to the plan.

Mrs. Carolyn Stewart, an avid follower of board action, said the plan had "much too many loopholes."

Gardner Bishop, militant leader of the Consolidated Parents Group responsible for the Supreme Court case in the District, summed up the opposition with one word.

He said the plan was "lousy."

Start on School Integration Due In September

No Wholesale Pupil Shifts Held Likely at First

By James G. Deane

Official ending of District public school race segregation with the current term is now practically a certainty.

A majority of the Board of Education appears firmly committed to ordering the start of an integration program by next September.

Five members of the nine-member board have told The Star they oppose any further delay. The board may act at a special meeting expected next week.

One board member predicted today, however, there will probably be no wholesale pupil-shuffling at the start.

This member reported some sentiment on the board to limit pupil shifts at first to those necessary to meet "emergency situations." By these, he said he meant serious overcrowding.

Some Would Wait.

Complete integration in September, this member said, is "practically impossible." He added that some members feel the board should defer launching a full-scale integration program—including teachers and administrators, as well as pupils—until after the Supreme Court issues its final decree; probably next winter or spring.

The School Board discussed some of these questions in the closed session it held with the Commissioners yesterday. The board and the city heads agreed at this meeting that there is now no legal reason for delaying intergration.

The joint meeting also produced an order for immediate preparation of a bill for Congress designed to clear away certain legal technicalities standing in the way of integration. These involve the existing dual Negro and white assistant superintendents and teacher examining boards and teacher eligibility lists, all of which now are provided for by law.

Eisenhower Interested.

One surprise at the meeting was the announcement of President Eisenhower's interest in the District's integration plans. Commissioner Samuel Spencer, who had been at the White House just before the meeting, reported on the President's request to be kept informed on all integration proposals. He also told the session of the President's statement that he regards the Capital as a model for the Nation on integration.

Mr. Spencer said he planned to report to the President on the outcome of the session.

No decisions on future school board integration policy were made yesterday, however. These await the planned special meeting, when Supt. Hobart M. Corning is due to present integration plans on which he and top aides have been working secretly for some months.

Regular Meeting Today.

A regular monthly School Board meeting was scheduled for this afternoon. The board was expected then to set a time for the special meeting.

The board originally was scheduled to act today on the proposed transfer of the white Petworth Elementary School to Negroes. But a buildings and grounds committee session scheduled for earlier today on this subject was canceled yesterday.

Board members told The Star that they now regard such transfers as at an end. Under the expected integration policy, pupils will be transferred, instead of buildings. Apparently the Petworth matter will be settled in this way.

Negro parents of pupils now attending the Park View, Bruce and Monroe Schools near Petworth have been seeking transfer of a white school building because the three colored schools are crowded. But Petworth and Langdon, another white school that has figured in the situation, are only partly filled. Next fall, apparently, the colored overflow will be moved to them.

Woodridge Affected.

Another pending transfer proposal, affecting the white Woodridge Elementary School, also apparently is due for settlement in this way. Presumably some colored children will enter Woodridge in the fall, since no other school is available to them in that area.

Woodridge School is at Carlton and Central avenues N.E. Petworth is at Eighth and Shepherd streets N.W., near Roosevelt High School. Raymond is at Tenth street and Spring road N.W.

Dr. Margaret J. Butcher, Negro board member, said Monday, after announcement of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling, that if any colored pupils apply for immediate admission to these schools before this term ends, they should be admitted. Most other board members have not indicated any expectation that the board will permit this, however.

Another controversial situation in which integration will forestall a probable transfer involves Armstrong and McKinley Technical High Schools.

Combining Expected.

Negro board members, pressed by parents, have been urging transfer of white McKinley to colored use because of poor conditions at Armstrong. Under integration it is expected the two schools will be combined in McKinley's building.

Dr. Butcher and Wesley S. Williams, another Negro member, already have stated this should be done in September. School officers some time ago indicated the move might require money which is not now available. However, Dr. Corning hasn't indicated what stand he will take on the question.

Both Dr. Butcher and Mr. Williams advocate full-scale integration without delay. Dr. Butcher said yesterday she will contest any effort to limit initial integration to emergency situations.

Early Redistricting Advocated.

She said school officials should redistrict the entire school system during the summer and assign all pupils in September to the schools nearest their homes, regardless of race.

School officers, however, are believed to favor a plan under which present enrollment would remain pretty much as now assigned in the various schools, at least at first. Pupil transfers would occur only when necessary to relieve hardship.

The five board members now lined up in favor of starting integration in September are Dr. Butcher, Mr. Williams, Col. West A. Hamilton, Dr. Rowland F. Kirks and Walter N. Tobriner.

Miss Mary H. Parker and Mrs. Frank S. Phillips said they are still undecided. Robert R. Faulkner and C. Melvin Sharpe, the board's president, have expressed opposition to any integration steps before the Supreme Court's final decree.

Adopt D. C. School Plan For Ending Bias

WASHINGTON — A five-point blueprint for ending segregation in Washington's public schools was adopted last week by the District of Columbia Board of Education by a 6-to-2 vote.

Plans before the school board call for a start on ending segregation next fall, with complete desegregation one year thereafter. The board then recessed until next week without a formal vote on the timing.

The plans were laid down before the board by Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of Washington schools. They are designed to put into effect as rapidly as possible the Supreme Court decision of May 17, holding racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

Corning followed those plans with a specific program calling for a start toward integration of white and Negro schools at the opening school term next September and for "complete desegregation of all schools" by September, 1955.

The five points are, in brief:

1. All assignments and ratings in the school system shall be based on merit, not race or color.

2. No pupil shall be favored or discriminated against because of race or color.

3. Children in no event shall be permitted to attend schools outside their boundaries in which they live for reasons of race or color.

4. No records of pupils or personnel shall make any preference to race or color.

5. All schools shall be used to maximum efficiency without regard to race or color.

The board has nine members—six white members and three Negro members. And although the plan was adopted by a 6-to-2 vote, after Negro members pushed for a quick decision, points 3 and 4 raised a flurry of questions.

Fall Integration To Affect Half of White Schools

New Corning Plans Are Approved by Board of Education

By James G. Deane

At least half of Washington's 75 white public schools will enroll some colored pupils next fall.

The number probably will be considerably larger than that.

Some colored schools are expected to enroll white pupils.

This start on race integration is now definitely scheduled under new plans of Supt. Hobart M. Corning approved by the Board of Education yesterday.

Race bars are scheduled to end completely by September, 1955. Present enrolled pupils will be permitted to stay in present schools until graduation, however, provided this does not cause overcrowding.

The school board approved Dr. Corning's speeded-up integration plan by a 5-1 vote. Dr. Margaret J. Butcher, Negro member, voted no. Wesley S. Williams, another Negro member, and Robert R. Faulkner did not vote.

Three Major Steps.

Dr. Corning yesterday proposed three important new steps for pupil integration next September, and these were approved by the board. They were:

1. Drop all race restrictions on pupils new to the school system.

2. Desegregate and probably merge the night schools.

3. Admit a limited number of colored pupils living in chiefly white neighborhoods to nearby white schools, in order to save them from traveling long distances.

Under the approved progam, any school in the city might conceivably enroll one or more pupils of the opposite race in September. Not all schools are expected to have such applicants, however, since some are in neighborhoods exclusively white or colored.

September Procedure.

Here is how integration is scheduled to proceed in September:

1. Pupils never enrolled in Washington schools before will enroll without regard to race. Each such pupil will enroll in the school serving the school zone in which he lives. The new zones will be announced next Thursday.

This new-pupil rule affects mainly kindergarteners and first-graders. There were about 12,000 brand-new pupils in those categories last fall, and probably will be an equal number next fall. Besides these there will undoubtedly be some hundreds of new pupils enrolling for the first time in higher grades, all the way through high school.

Thus, in theory, every grade school, junior high or senior high might enroll one or more students of the opposite race. School officials have made no prediction on what actually will happen.

2. About 1,503 colored pupils will be transferred from 12 colored grade schools to 14 white grade schools to relieve crowding. Another 844 pupils will be transferred from five colored junior highs to three white junior highs for the same reason. And about 460 colored students from Armstrong High School will be transferred to McKinley High School. The total enrollment in the 18 schools to be integrated by these transfers will be about 14,000, the colored portion 2,340.

Schools Nearer Homes.

3. Ninety-six colored children now traveling excessive distances to school will be transferred to 18 white schools nearer their homes. Total enrollment in these 18 schools will be about 9,600.

4. Transfers of colored junior and senior high students now traveling excessive distances "will be considered on an individual basis." Negro school board members predicted requests from students for such transfers, but school officials have not predicted how many—if any—might be allowed. The school board left this to "administrative discretion."

5. Evening schools will drop race restrictions and probably will be reorganized. This June they had a total enrollment of 8,677.

6. Wilson and Miner Teachers' Colleges will both admit students of either race if they apply.

7. Some colored teachers are expected to be assigned to integrated schools and some white teachers might be assigned to schools now colored. School officials have not announced detailed plans, except that a new biracial list of eligible teacher applicants is to be given to the School Board next Thursday and all permanent appointed henceforth will be made from this list.

It is not known whether any colored teachers will be assigned in September to all-white schools, but this is a possibility. The School Board also left teacher assignments to administrative discretion.

Integration for 30,000.

The total number of pupils in the schools to be integrated by pupil transfers next September will be at least 30,000 and probably will be considerably greater than this. The 30,000 doesn't even include the effect of new-pupil enrollments. School officials say they can't predict the grand total.

The extent of pupil mixing will be limited at the outset, however. In most white schools to which Negro pupils are admitted, the white pupils will remain in the majority. And the rule permitting present pupils to stay in present schools will limit pupil shifting even after next year.

The proviso for staying in the present school is that once new school boundaries take full effect, pupils living within the boundaries will have priority on enrollment in that school. If crowding occurs, any present pupils living outside the boundaries would have to accept transfer if school officials decided to order it. Except for new pupils, the new boundaries won't take effect in September, however.

Schedule After September.

After next September, this is how further integration is scheduled to occur:

In October, all pupils living outside new boundaries will be asked whether they wish to remain in present schools or transfer to the school where they live.

In February, all junior high school graduates automatically will enter high school according to the new zones, without regard to race. Dr. Corning will order February pupil transfers on all school levels which he considers desirable.

In September, 1955, remaining pupil transfers to accord with the new zone maps will be carried out, but still allowing pupils to remain in present buildings if it causes no crowding. Additional teacher transfers also will be ordered.

In September, 1955, Dr. Corning also proposes to convert Cardozo High School to a new merged teachers college and practice junior high school, with Cardozo students dispersing to other schools.

To Integrate Cadets.

The superintendent informed the board he has plans under way to integrate the High School Cadet Corps. Plans also are being made to start integration of high school sports.

Both Dr. Butcher and Mr. Williams yesterday tried unsuccessfully to win an order for faster integration.

Dr. Butcher criticized the Corning program as "a poor equalization report." She asserted the board was evading the Supreme Court ruling, said failure to rezone all schools in September would risk confusion, predicted Dr. Corning's plan for February transfers would cause "chaotic upheaval" and said the superintendent hadn't proved to her that faster integration is administratively impossible.

Mr. Williams questioned a number of features of Dr. Corning's program, particularly the plan to transfer 96 colored children to white grade schools to reduce their school travel.

Questions Corning.

Mr. Williams asked Dr. Corning whether by specifying only certain white schools he meant to exclude any other schools from receiving colored pupils in similar circumstances. Dr. Corning replied:

"Yes, I did."

Later, after Col. West A. Hamilton, the third Negro member, pressed him on this point, Dr. Corning agreed that there might be other cases that could be added to the list, however, and he stressed that his program provides for "additional progressive steps" when they are "consistent with the welfare of the children."

Col. Hamilton also said he was concerned at the plan not to put new boundaries completely into effect in the fall. But he later announced that he "believed this thing has to be done step by step," and he put the motion for approval of the Corning report.

Walter N. Tobriner unsuccessfully sought to amend the Corning plan to permit only sixth, ninth and twelfth graders to remain in present schools, arguing that the plan to let all present pupils remain, except when it causes crowding, would invite conflict whenever crowding actually occurred. He said the provision "would set up countless battlefields."

Fears Disruption.

Dr. Corning said the proposal would mean transferring thousands more children and would disrupt their education too much, however. Only Mr. Tobriner and Mr. Williams voted for the amendment.

Mr. Faulkner asked the board to refer to Dr. Corning for study a plan to permit parents to continue sending children to schools with a predominance of their own race and to assign teachers on a similar basis. But this was tabled by a majority vote.

After the vote backing Dr. Corning's plan, Mrs. Frank S. Phillips asked the superintendent to reconsider plans for continuing two separte Health Schools. She said better service could be given crippled children in a single new school and Mr. Tobriner and Dr. Butcher backed this.

Step by Step in Corning's School Integration Timetable

School Supt. Hobart M. Corning's timetable for ending race segregation in the District public school system:

DE-SEGREGATION STEPS ALREADY ACCOMPLISHED

June 8—Temporary reorganization of the two boards of examiners into one board under the direct chairmanship of the superintendent.

June 10, 11, 12—Teacher examinations for elementary, junior high and vocational high schools on a completely integrated basis.

June 11—Notices sent to all high school principals announcing that both Miner and Wilson Teachers Colleges are receiving applications for admission in September from any qualified persons, regardless of race.

Instructions issued to heads of departments of military science and tactics to prepare and submit suggested plan for integration of cadet program for 1954-55 school year.

June 14—Meeting of first assistant and associate superintendents concerned, directors of health, physical education, athletics, and safety, and directors of athletics to discuss all sports programs for 1954-55 school year. Directors of athletics to report back on June 24 with suggested schedules.

First field officer examination announced on a city-wide basis (five such announcements issued to date).

June 15—Completion of tabulation and listing of data from registration cards for approximately 100,000 pupils.

June 17—Preliminary steps completed to effect transfers of pupils in elementary, junior and senior high schools listed in superintendent's report of May 25.

June 23—Revised legislative language submitted to the board covering necessary amendments to existing law because of Supreme Court decision, concerning first assistant superintendents, chief examiners, boards of examiners and school censuses.

DE-SEGREGATION STEPS TO BE ACCOMPLISHED

July 1—Superintendent to submit to board maps and descriptive data to show new boundary lines for all elementary, junior high and senior high schools.

All necessary data concerning new boundaries to be furnished school principals and press to insure publicity reaching all school personnel and patrons.

Superintendent to submit recommendations for merging of all lists of persons eligible for appointment to all teacherships on all levels.

July 6—Completion of estimate for 1956 budget for funds needed to convert McKinley High School to a modern technical school to permit the eventual closing of the present Armstrong Technical High School.

September 1—Use of new boundaries on all levels for all pupils new to the public schools including kindergarten and first grade pupils entering the public schools for the first time.

September 13—Evening schools to open for operation on an integrated basis.

Transfer of selected Division 2 elementary school pupils who because of present boundaries are required to travel excessive distances where are present Division 1 schools near their homes. This is possible as it involves a limited number of pupils and in no instance will require reorganization in a school receiving pupils or the transfer of furniture or equipment.

Any similar cases on the secondary level will be considered on an individual basis.

(The 29,809 total does not include the enrollments of those schools which will become integrated because of the admission of new pupils to the school system on a non-racial basis next September, including kindergarteners and first graders.)

Completion of building organizations including the transfer of teachers in some schools.

Completion of transfer of furniture and equipment and textbooks and classroom supplies between schools affected by pupil transfers.

October 1-15—Explain to all pupils the options provided either for remaining in present schools or transferring to new schools.

Hold meetings for parents of all children who are qualified to request options to explain the choices although no assurance can at that time be given whether the options can be approved for February 1 or for a later date.

Written statements to be filed not later than November 11 confirming all options requested. Sixth, ninth, and twelfth grade pupils not to be transferred.

The superintendent repeats his desire to take such additional progressive steps as are consistent with the welfare of the children. He will, therefore, examine and tabulate all the written options that are filed to determine the numbers of pupils residing outside the new boundaries who wish to remain in their present schools and the numbers of those who wish to transfer to the schools serving their residence areas. On the basis of these findings he will then make such changed pupil assignments as are found feasible without forced transfers at the beginning of the new semester in February.

January 31, 1955—Assign all junior high school graduates to senior high schools on the basis of the new boundaries.

Make such additional teacher transfers and school reorganizations as are necessary.

Effect such transfers at all levels as may produce a better balanced use of all school facilities, and at the same time be consistent with the educational program of the children themselves.

Arrange for building changes and transfers of equipment and supplies as are necessitated by the changed pupil assignments.

February to June, 1955.—Complete the processing of all options not acted upon for February with the consequent pupil transfer and reassignment of teachers on September 1, 1955.

Arrange for additional transfers of furniture and equipment and textbooks and supplies, where necessary.

September 1, 1955.—The superintendent announces one further important step in the integration process which is now presented. This will involve the closing of the Cardoza High School by June, 1955, and the merging of the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges in the present Cardozo building in September 1955.

The rezoning of the senior high schools has revealed such an overage of seating space that Cardozo can be closed and the pupils accomodated in the remaining senior high schools, freeing the Cardozo building for college use.

It is planned also at the same time to open a junior high school unit in the same building to serve as a laboratory school for the new merged college. The superintendent will submit a subsequent and more detailed report on this new plan.

As the superintendent studies the entire process of integration and discovers additional steps which can be taken he will advise the Board of Education.

By September 1, 1955, all steps will have been taken to complete de-segregation of the public schools. Technically, de-segregation will have begun in all schools in September, 1954, since the admission of all pupils including kindergarten and first-grade pupils new to the public schools will be on the basis of the new boundaries. All senior high schools will, in addition, be further integrated by the admission of all junior high school graduates in February, 1955, on the basis of the new boundaries.

Segregation Issue Threatens Defeat Of Public Housing

By J. A. O'Leary

Southern reaction to recent Supreme Court decisions on segregation threatened today to kill President Eisenhower's public housing program in the Senate.

The first inkling of such a development came late yesterday in this four-line statement from Senator Maybank of South Carolina, ranking Democrat on the Banking Committee, which handles housing:

"I regret that the Supreme Court decision of May 24, 1954, makes it impossible for me, believing in local government, to support any public housing. I therefore will oppose any public housing program."

In the decision referred to, the Supreme Court turned down an appeal by the San Francisco Housing Authority from a California lower court ruling, banning segregation in low-rent housing projects.

Made Maxim to Revive Bill.

It was Senator Maybank who only 10 days ago made the motion in the Banking Committee to revive the 1949 public housing authorization, which the House has moved to kill. It was restored to the bill, 12 to 3. The three negative votes were cast by Republicans.

But the Banking Committee has not yet completed work on the 1954 housing bill, and the issue of public housing could be reconsidered when the committee meets today.

Senator Sparkman, Democrat, of Alabama, a leader in the fight for housing legislation since the Government entered that field, was not ready to comment on the Maybank announcement.

Faces Senate Battle.

Even if the public housing amendment now tentatively in the bill survives final committee action, it is certain to face a floor battle in the Senate next week. And informed sources believe that if the score of Southern Democrats follow the lead of Senator Maybank, public housing may be killed. They would be joined by conservative Republicans, who have opposed the program on economic grounds.

Unless the 1949 public housing authorization is revived, the Government could not make any new starts on such projects. The program would end with the building of about 30,000 units now under contract. President Eisenhower recommended new starts at the rate of 35,000 a year.

School Board Adopts 5-Point Statement Of Policy, 6 to 1

By a vote of 6 to 1, the Board of Education yesterday adopted a five-point statement of policy to guide its course in the elimination of segregation from the public schools.

The lone dissenting vote was cast by Robert R. Faulkner.

Drawn up by a board committee and published on Sunday, the policy statement bars any discrimination because of race.

It says that matters pertaining to promotions and ratings of officers and employes of the board shall be based on merit alone. Pupils must attend schools falling within new boundaries to be established and may not transfer to schools outside their own boundaries.

No records will be kept relating to race of any student enrolling in the public schools after June 17, 1954. Maximum efficient use will be made of all facilities without regard to race or color.

In conclusion, the committee said: "We affirm our intention to secure the right of every child, within his own capacity, to the full, equal and impartial use of all school facilities, and the right of all qualified teachers to teach where needed within the school system. And, finally, we ask the aid, co-operation and good will of all citizens and the help of the Almighty in holding to our stated purposes."

Segregation Ruling Seen Speeding U. S. Aid for New Schools

By the Associated Press

Two Southern Democratic Senators said today the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling may serve to speed proposals for Federal aid to States for school construction.

Senator Olin D. Johnston, Democrat, of South Carolina said last week's unanimous high court decision banning segregation in public schools "has already brought the Federal Government into the control of our public school policies, as much as it can be."

Senator Johnston said in an interview that the ruling "seems to take away the argument that Federal aid for the building of schools would give the Federal Government the right to force non-segregation in our public school system."

Calls Aid "More Necessary."

Senator Long, Democrat, of Louisiana said the segregation decision makes "Federal aid for school construction even more necessary than before."

Senator Long said there would "continue to be a large amount of voluntary segregation." But he said the pressure on Southern States to make schools "just as adequate" for colored as for white children was increased by the Supreme Court ruling.

"When we have better schools for colored children," he said, "there will not be as much pressure on school boards to admit colored students into the schools in white neighborhoods."

A Senate Labor subcommittee is studying several school construction aid measures, one of which, backed by Senator Cooper, Republican, of Kentucky, the subcommittee chairman, would provide a four-year, $400 million Federal aid program. Federal school-aid measures in the past have been opposed by a number of Southern legislators on grounds the National Government might try to use its control over funds to end segregation.

Senators Long and Johnston took a different approach in their interviews than did Senator Eastland, Democrat, of Mississippi, in a Senate speech yesterday.

Says South Won't Accept.

Senator Eastland said the South would never accept the court's public school segregation ban. He declared the school decision "will fall of its own weight because it is opposed by the vast majority of our people."

"It will take force to bring compliance," he said. "Where is that force? The court cannot supply it."

A State governor, Senator Eastland told the Senate, "can use the force at his command, both police, civil and other, to maintain public order and prevent crime and riots. He can use these forces to prevent racial integration of schools, if this is necessary, under the police power of the State to prevent disorder and riots."

The Mississippian said the real issue is: "Shall the white man and the Negro retain their racial identities?"

The future greatness of America, he said, "depends upon racial purity and the maintenance of Anglo-Saxon institutions. . . ."

D. C. Schools Resume Hiring of Teachers From Bi-Racial List

Hiring of new elementary school teachers from a bi-racial eligibility list was resumed yesterday by the District school system.

School officials anticipate that the new appointments will result in some mixing of white and colored teachers in the schools.

Acting Supt. Charles N. Zellers said, however, no figures are available on what percentage of the 181 new appointees are Negro teachers who have been given assignments in formerly white schools. No figures were kept on the number of white teachers who are being given assignments in formerly all-Negro schools.

Had Ordered Halt.

Last Tuesday the Board of Education ordered a temporary halt to the hiring of 30 white teachers who had been employed on a temporary basis but are now on the eligibility list for permanent elementary school assignments. Associate Supt. Carl F. Hansen, who has headed the white elementary division, authorized the swearing in of the 30 teachers.

Following the board's order, Dr. Hansen and Miss Edith A. Lyons, associate superintendent who has headed the colored elementary division, conferred and then made selections from the eligibility lists to fill vacancies in the schools they have administered in the past.

None of the names on the eligibility list were accompanied by racial designation.

Letters Mailed.

Mr. Zellers said letters were to be mailed yesterday advising the new appointees of their assignments and designating the schools at which they will teach. An acceptance form accompanies each notice with a request that the appointee reply promptly.

The need for temporary teachers in elementary schools is still present, Mr. Zellers said. He estimated that about 200 temporary teachers will be appointed.

Notices were sent out last week to appointees on the school system's new bi-racial eligibility list on the junior and senior high level.

Virginia Affairs

Each Passing Month Eases Prejudice

By Benjamin Muse

APPROXIMATELY TWO MONTHS have passed since this column reported on Virginia reaction to the prospect of integration of the white and colored races in the public schools. During that period sentiment against mixed schools has found expression in a dozen resolutions by local governing bodies or mass meetings and in several public statements.

MUSE

But as each month goes out one can perceive a little less prejudice and a little broader view in Virginia than when it came in. A few more people every month are looking again at the time-honored custom of fencing off citizens of one race from those of another and seeing in it something essentially absurd and inconsistent with either democracy or Christianity.

The problem remains stupendous. The trend toward acceptance of the Supreme Court decision in good faith has still a long way to go. But unmistakably in this matter "the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

GOVERNOR STANLEY, who first called for "cool heads, calm study and sound judgment," issued a statement six weeks later which reflected none of the virtues he mentioned.

He promised to "use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools," and he proposed amending the state constitution to delete the provision requiring a public school system.

The Governor has been under heavy pressure from the localities of southeastern Virginia. The race problem there is considerably more serious than elsewhere in the state.

Resolutions urging continued segregation have been adopted to date by the boards of supervisors of Appomattox, Culpeper, Dinwiddie, Greensville, Halifax, Surry and Sussex counties and by the councils of Hopewell, Emporia and Jarratt—also by the South Norfolk school board and by mass meetings in Dinwiddie and Henrico counties.

THESE LOCALITIES mark the area of heaviest Negro population in Virginia. Nevertheless, on a visit to this section last week, I was surprised at the degree of calm among residents there.

Racial integration in the schools of this southside Virginia section is almost inconceivable at this stage, but even there I found some white people who are prepared for eventual integration as both inevitable and "right."

Outside of this section, the Governor's proposal for deleting the public school guarantee from the state constitution generally has been coldly received. It not only has little chance of receiving General Assembly support, but very possibly may never be submitted to that body.

Stanley has now resumed his more familiar attitude of "no comment." He had no comment on the Tennessee plan for gradual integration.

DELEGATE ARMISTEAD BOOTHE of Alexandria, who is in the forefront of those who are wrestling constructively with the problem raised by the Supreme Court ruling, addressed questionnaires on the subject to his colleagues of the General Assembly. The replies, which he received from approximately one third of them, gave an interesting indication of current thinking on some aspects of the problem.

Of those who replied, seven to one were opposed to the Governor's suggestion for abolishing the constitutional guarantee of a public school system. Ten to one also were opposed to compelling children to attend mixed schools. Ten to one also were opposed to assigning teachers of one race to teach pupils of the other race. Three to one favored separate schools for boys and girls if segregation is ended.

In the Supreme Court hearings, the Virginia case for school segregation was argued by State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., and T. Justin Moore, retiring president of the Virginia State Bar Association. In an address to a convention of that group two weeks ago, Moore said:

"It is . . . the duty and responsibility of thinking citizens to do all that is possible to minimize the impact of the decision in Virginia, while in all respects accepting the result as law."

Mischievous Suit

There is something rather sad about the suit filed by the Federation of Citizens Associations to enjoin the Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools from going ahead with the limited integration of public school facilities which they have planned. The obstructionism, even if it should succeed, could do no more than hold back momentarily an adjustment to the Supreme Court's school decision which the Washington community as a whole has been making with intelligence and goodwill. The Federation suit can operate only to make the adjustment more acrimonious and difficult. It amounts, in essence, to a futile protest against progress.

The burden of the suit is that the steps toward integration taken by the School Board and the school superintendent are premature in that they antedate the reargument which the Supreme Court will hear in October respecting the pace at which integration is to be required. But the Court was unequivocal in declaring segregated public schools to be forbidden by the Constitution. The manifest purpose of its consent to hear discussion of the manner in which its order will be put into effect was not to delay integration but possibly to permit integration by stages where local authorities think such gradualism necessary. The appropriate authorities in Washington have not thought it necessary to petition the court for any postponement. It is nonsensical to refer to such ready compliance as being "in conflict" with the orders of the Supreme Court.

The Federation asserts in its brief that it "represents and speaks for almost all of the white parents and their children of school age who are residents of the District of Columbia." On the contrary, the Federation speaks for only a fraction of its members who are a fraction of the community. It speaks, moreover, to a purpose as outmoded as the disfranchisement of District residents which enables the Federation to mistake its views for the will of Washington.

Census Law May Compel Race Tally In Schools

D. C. Education Board Order for No Color Check Runs Into Snag

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

District school teachers and principals may have to tally students by race when the new term opens September 13.

The Board of Education last May, a week after the Supreme Court decision barring segregated schools, drafted an anti-discrimination policy, which authorized dropping race references in pupil records beginning June 17.

But the school board overlooked the District census law, a section of which requires teachers and pupils to report school-child enrollment by race.

A few weeks ago the board asked the Corporation Counsel to prepare legislation amending the census law. A few weeks ago, the board asked Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West to do this.

The Commissioners said "no." They said yesterday their reaction was based on advice of the Corporation Counsel's office which said the Supreme Court decision did not affect the school-child which said the Supreme Court decision did not affect the school-child census requirement.

The Corporation Counsel's office said further that the local school census provision was no exception to the eFderal Census Law which calls for a general population headcount by racial breakdown.

C. Melvin Sharpe, School Board president, said:

"It looks as if we would be breaking the law if we put into effect the policy of the board adopted after the Supreme Court ruling." He emphasized: "But, I'm not a lawyer."

Other members of the School Board said the school attendance section of the census law would have to be weighed by itself in light of the start of integration in two weeks. They added "it's all a case of interpretation."

The School Board on May 22 declared that "no record should be kept or maintained in respect to any pupil not enrolled in a public school on or prior to June 17, 1954 . . . relating to the color or race of any such person."

The District Code states:

"It shall be the duty of the principal or head teacher of every public, private or parochial school or private teacher, in accord with the rule adopted by the Board of Education to report to the director of the department of school attendance and work permits the name, address, sex, age and race of every child under 18 years of age residing permanently or temporarily in the District who enrolls in or withdraws from his school."

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning was unavailable for comment on the manner of taking the student tally this term.

Meanwhile, Corning and members of the School Board were served with the complaint of the Federation of Citizens Associations which Tuesday filed a preliminary injunction suit in District Court seeking to stop

Five-Point Policy Prepared On Integration in Schools; All Racial Lines Abandoned

Board of Education Expected to Adopt Blueprint Tuesday

By Coit Hendley, Jr.

A five-point statement of policy to guide the abandonment of racial segregation in the District's public schools was drawn up yesterday by a special committee of the Board of Education.

The statement made it clear that school boundaries will be changed. Pupils will not be allowed to go to schools outside the boundaries in which they happen to live, regardless of the racial character of the school involved.

Elimination of all vestiges of the present dual school system was pledged in the statement. Racial designations even will be dropped on records.

The last line of the statement reads:

"We ask the aid, co-operation and good will of all citizens and the help of the Almighty in holding to our stated purposes."

School Board Acts Tuesday.

The statement will be presented to a special meeting of the School Board at 10 a.m. Tuesday for adoption. It has the support of School Supt. Hobart M. Corning.

At that same meeting, Dr. Corning will present a blueprint of how and when integration of the colored and white schools will take place. He said his blueprint will not go into all of the many details that will have to be worked out, but will set the framework for the job ahead.

Whether the school system will be integrated by this fall presumably will be settled at the meeting also.

The statement, drawn by the special committee of Walter N. Tobriner, Wesley S. Williams and Rowland F. Kirks, follows:

"In the light of the decision of the Supreme Court in Bolling v. Sharpe, the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, believing it to be in the best interest of all citizens of the community of Washington, and necessary to the effective administration of an integrated system within the public schools, hereby adopts the following declaration of policy:

"1. Appointments, transfers, preferments, promotions, ratings or any other matters respecting the officers and employes of the board shall be predicated solely upon merit and not upon race or color.

"2. No pupil of the public schools shall be favored or discriminated against in any matter or in any manner respecting his of her relationship to the schools of the District of Columbia by reason of race or color.

"3. Attendance of pupils residing within school boundaries hereafter to be established, shall not be permitted at schools located beyond such boundaries except for the most necessitous reasons or for public convenience and in no event for reasons related to the racial character of the school within the boundaries in which the pupil resides.

"4. The board believes that no record should be kept or maintained in respect to any pupil not enrolled in a public school on or prior to June 17, 1954, or in respect to any officer or employe not employed within the system or prior to that date in which information is solicited or recorded relating to the color or race of any such person.

"5. The maximum efficient use shall be made of all physical facilities without regard to race or color.

"In support of the foregoing principles, which are believed to be cardinal, the board will not hesitate to use its full powers. It is pledged to a complete and wholehearted pursuit of these objectives.

"We affirm our intention to secure the right of every child, within his own capacity, to the full, equal and impartial use of all school facilities, and the right of all qualified teachers to teach where needed within the school system. And, finally, we ask the aid, co-operation and good will of all citizens and the help of the Almighty in holding to our stated purposes."

Seeks Immediate Integration.

Mrs. Margaret Just Butcher, colored board member, tried to amend the statement to include that "no good purpose will be served by any delay in the integration of the schools." She agreed not to press for it, however, when other members explained the statement was only designed to be a general statement of principles.

Mrs. Butcher said she would introduce a motion calling for immediate integration at the Tuesday meeting.

Dr. Corning said he felt the policy statement was necessary and said he was hopeful the board would adopt it. He added:

"This statement of policy will support us (the school administrative officials) in the decisions we will have to make."

Plea From Civic Groups.

Meanwhile, the Federation of Citizens' Associations sent to Dr. Corning and the School Board a resolution asking that all major community groups be consulted to consider the mechanics and timing of integration "before any policy is determined or any action taken, to the end that orderly transition may be attained."

There apparently was little chance board members or school officials would heed this request.

Before the Supreme Court ruled, Dr. Corning already had asked citizens' groups to submit suggestions. The Federation of Citizens' Associations did not on the grounds the request was premature. Dr. Corning indicated he would be glad to study any material the federation sent in, but didn't see how time could be found to have consultations with all groups as suggested.

The request of the federation presumably will be considered by the school board.

Seat in Senate Seen Talmadge's Real Goal In Segregation Fight

By Martin S. Hayden
North American Newspaper Alliance

ATLANTA, Ga., May 26.—Gov. Herman Talmadge is getting set to close Georgia's public schools.

His "excuse" is last week's Supreme Court decision abolishing classroom segregation of the races. But his "real reason," Georgia observers agree, is that racialism is still good Georgia politics and Gene Talmadge's son "Hummon" intends, come 1956, to take the Senate seat of the veteran, Walter George of Georgia.

Fifth of Martin S. Hayden's dispatches surveying reactions of various States in the Deep South to the Supreme Court's decision banning Negro segregation in schools.

As a result, where caution is the watchword in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana opposition to the court's decision, Georgia public opinion is being whipped by political orators preaching open defiance of the top court of the land.

Has Simple Plan.

The Talmadge plan of opposition is simple and sufficiently tinged with legality so that Talmadge opponents agree it would take an interesting, and lengthy, lawsuit to knock it down.

Gov. Talmadge would have the Legislature he dominates take the following related steps:

1. Repeal all present public-school laws;

2. Set up a new State board which would accredit private schools, eligible to receive State funds in tuition payments;

3. Authorize the sale, or leasing, of present public-school facilities, both Negro and white, to such accredited private schools;

4. Appropriate sums equal to present public-school expenditures but based on fixed allotments of so much per year, per pupil educated at public expense.

Would Attend Same Schools.

As Gov. Talmadge visualizes his evasion plan, students would return to the same schools they have always gone to. Principals would enroll them as "private school" pupils, submit to the State their list of accepted children, and get the dollars to pay the bills. A Negro seeking to enter a white school would be told he was unacceptable and that there is no legal basis for requiring a "private" school to take any pupil that it does not want.

Georgia lawyers already visualize the legal questions which would be raised:

Can a State legally sell or lease to interests which would serve only specified people the school buildings belonging to all the people?

Is a school truly "private" if the State pays the bills?

Could the courts conceivably uphold what is being openly advertised as a subterfuge to evade a Supreme Court ruling?

Many Oppose Subterfuge.

It is generally agreed that the answer to all the questions is "no." It also is apparent that many Georgians, most of them unorganized, oppose the Talmadge subterfuge. One consolidated voice of opposition was heard last Friday when the Georgia Federation of Labor called formally for the adherence to the Supreme Court decision "within the present school framework."

The AFL resolution, drafted by Henry W. Chandler of Atlanta, secretary and treasurer of the State federation, points up various drawbacks of the Talmadge plan that have nothing to do with the basic segregation issue. Among them are the facts that it would deprive Georgia of vocational, school-lunch and other Federal school-aid funds and destroy present job tenure and pension rights of public school teachers.

His Power Is Conceded.

But the opposition agrees that right now Gov. Talmadge can have his way, stall Georgia compliance with the court in lengthy litigation, and guarantee his own standing as the "white supremacy" champion in the 1956 elections.

That they are right seems indicated by the fact that not one of the five announced candidates to succeed Gov. Talmadge in upcoming State elections has so far felt it politically expedient to favor moderation in the Georgia approach to the court decision. The five—Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, former Gov. M. E. Thompson, State Agriculture Commissioner Tom Linder, Brunswick Lawyer Charles L. Gowan, and House Speaker Fred Hand—all apparently feel that open disagreement with the Governor would spell political doom.

That, Georgians concede, is a tribute to "Hummon," who inherited the "wool hat" rural support of his father, smashed the State's traditional anti-Talmadge coalition, and has achieved a political dominance that "old Gene" never obtained.

Court Order to End School Segregation In Fall to Be Sought

By the Associated Press

Walter White said today the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will ask the Supreme Court next fall for a decree "ordering the abolition forthwith of segregation" in the public schools.

In declaring a week ago that segregation of white and Negro pupils in the public schools violates the Constitution, the court called for arguments next October on the form of a decree to be issued by it. Among other things, the decree will set forth the time to be allowed the States to integrate their schools.

Mr. White, executive secretary of the NAACP, said in a copyrighted interview with the magazine U. S. News and World Report published today that "a great deal of time has been allowed by the court already," and he added:

"The South is more ready for the change from segregation to integration than professional politicians believe it to be."

Blasts Byrnes' Proposal.

Mr. White denounced as "one of the most harebrained proposals of current times" the suggestion made by Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina and others that some of the Southern States might turn their school systems over to private operation rather than permit integration.

In international relations, Mr. White said, the court's decision in the school case "will have as profound and beneficial effect as anything that has happened in the United States during your lifetime and mine."

Senator Douglas, Democrat, of Illinois, in an NBC television debate yesterday with Senator Daniel, Democrat, of Texas, took a similar line, saying the decision "is the greatest aid the United States has had in the campaign to convince the world we stand for democracy."

Senator Daniel said the court's ruling was not based on precedent or law or custom, but was merely an "opinion" of the court. He said surveys in the South have shown that Negroes themselves prefer segregated schools.

Southern Plants Studied.

Meanwhile, conditions and practices under which five Southern companies employ both white and Negro workers in the same plants are discussed and analyzed in a report by the National Planning Association's Committee of the South.

The study—one of a series being made by the committee—concerned two companies in Little Rock and three in New Orleans.

The Little Rock plants, said the report, employ about 220 Negroes, mostly women, in their work force of 750.

"Whites and Negroes do not work side by side on the same job but in both plants they intermingle constantly in the course of their work with no outward sign of racial friction or tension," the report said.

As to the New Orleans study, the report said that Negroes in all of the three firms "have, to some extent, moved into higher level, 'traditionally white' production jobs."

In summary, the report said that under the limited generalizations which could be made the study shows that "Negroes are still excluded from office clerical work."

"No cases were found in which Negroes supervised white people," said the report.

Full Integration In Schools Next Fall Weighed

Big Task Seen in Redistricting on City-Wide Basis

By James G. Deane

Supt. Hobart M. Corning's school race integration plan may be speeded up by the Board of Education.

Sentiment appeared to be gaining in the board today for city-wide dropping of school race bars next September. Dr. Corning has proposed, instead, limiting September integration to the transfer of about 2,700 colored pupils to 18 white schools, with city-wide integration a year later.

The city-wide action would require complete redistricting of the school system, a major administrative task. Dr. Corning, in submitting integration proposals on Tuesday, said he did not believe there was enough time left to carry this out by September.

Three board members said they thought it could be done, however.

No Public Stand Taken.

A majority of the School Board has not yet taken a stand publicly on the redistricting question. It is expected to be the top subject when the board meets at 2 p.m. Wednesday to debate the superintendent's plan.

Also due for debate is the other major feature of the plan, which is to permit pupils who wish to do so to remain in their present schools until graduation, even if they live outside a school's new boundaries.

Some members have criticized this provision, but it appeared likely to be accepted in some form.

Dr. Corning said he proposed this provision to avoid immediate displacement of unnecessarily large numbers of pupils, in order not to threaten "stability, continuity and security" of their education.

Fears Disruption.

The superintendent has indicated that he feels more drastic shuffling might be too disruptive of the educational program.

School officials already are completing maps pin-pointing the homes of all the school system's 103,000 pupils in preparation for redistricting. And Dr. Corning said Tuesday that new boundaries will be on paper by September 13, when schools open for the fall term.

The superintendent said he did not plan to put the new boundaries in effect until later, however.

The new boundaries, whenever they take effect, will mean the shuffling of thousands of pupils, both white and colored, Dr. Corning said. But no estimate of the number has yet been made.

The boundaries would chiefly affect children being promoted from grade school to junior high and from junior high to senior high, plus children entering kindergarten and first grade. Also affected would be those moving from one section of the city to another and those coming into the city from elsewhere.

Into Closest School.

All such pupils would be required to enter schools closest to where they live, without regard to race.

Pupils now enrolled would not be permitted to stay in a school outside their residential district, if children living within the district needed the school space. But many pupils presumably would be able to remain. This could delay the final readjustment to a completely reorganized school system for seven years, although it would not delay the mixing of colored and white pupils living in the same school district.

Board members are expected to seek a quick decision on integration steps, since they desire to notify parents of all changes as soon as possible.

If the board should decide to order complete redistricting by September, at the same time keeping the proposed rule permitting most present students to remain where they are, officials probably would try to ask students before the present term ends on June 17 whether they wish to remain in present schools.

Parents Press for Answers.

Parents already are bombarding principals and school officials with questions about fall plans.

Beside the districting problem, Dr. Corning said, the school system would have difficulty transferring furniture and other school supplies, if the board ordered city-wide integration for next fall. Both more money and more trucks might be needed, he said.

Dr. Corning's plan was greeted with a rising vote of thanks by the school system's principals at a meeting in Roosevelt High School yesterday.

Hugh Smith, principal of Jefferson Junior High School, proposed the vote, after Dr. Corning outlined his plan at the session.

In another development Commissioner Samuel Spencer forwarded a copy of the Corning plan to President Eisenhower, who last week asked to be kept informed on integration progress. Mr. Spencer sent the plan along with his first progress report.

There Will Be More Firsts

A little Associated Press item recently from Washington, D. C. said this: "Negro and white candidates for teaching in grade and junior high school in the District of Columbia took the city's first biracial examination yesterday." There can be no question about the fact that there will be more such "firsts." Now that it has happened, the old practice of having educated Negroes and educated white people take separate teacher examinations seems rather silly, doesn't it? Many of them went to school together to prepare themselves, but could not take the teacher examinations together.

Group seeks discipline for Dr. M. Cobb

Committee votes unanimously on medic's resignation

WASHINGTON

The executive committee of the Washington NAACP has voted to recommend that disciplinary action be taken by the national board of the association against Dr. W. Montague Cobb for his activity in the school issue here.

The announcement was made this week by Eugene Davidson, branch president, who also told the AFRO that the local group has unanimously accepted Dr Cobb's resignation from its executive committee.

According to Mr. Davidson, the Minneapolis branch of the NAACP has indicated it will seek disciplinary action against Dr. Cobb for his position in the school board controversy.

Mr. Davidson said the local branch had received a call from Minneapolis requesting information on Dr. Cobb's recent action in submitting his resignation from the local body.

Dr. Cobb is a member of the national board of the NAACP and chairman of the association's health committee.

The action of the Washington chapter was taken at the regular monthly meeting of the executive committee, Thursday, with 75 per cent of the members present. Mr. Davidson said

Mr. Davidson said 26 persons participated in the voice poll requesting disciplinary action against the prominent doctor with only one person asking that his negative vote be recorded.

Mr. Davidson said the resolution to the national body stemmed from Dr. Cobb's statement of resignation, released to the press.

Symbol Of Reaction

He added that the noted surgeon and Howard university professor was used as a "symbol of reaction" in the community, by the daily press, for his stand in the local school issue.

Dr. Cobb issued his statement of resignation from the local executive committee after the group voted to request the resignation of Col. West A. Hamilton and Wesley Williams, attorney, from the school board.

The resignations of Hamilton and Williams were asked by the NAACP because they did not support a motion of their colleague, Dr. Margaret Just Butcher at the Jan. 20 meeting.

Dr. Butcher's Motion

The motion was "that this board concedes that there are still existing inequalities between divisions 1 and 2." The motion by Dr. Butcher was lost for want of a second from any of the 7 other school board members.

Colonel Hamilton, however, in a surprise move at the February meeting, led a reversal of the school board, making a motion for board action on a previous request by Dr. Butcher for information on equal conditions in the school.

The motion ordering Superintendent Hobert Corning to answer Dr. Butcher's 44 questions on the school conditions came as a surprise.

No Chance

Mr. Davidson told the AFRO that the NAACP's original request that the two men resign because they "were not serving the best interest of the persons they are supposed to represent," is unchanged.

In submitting his resignation from the local body, Dr. Cobb issued a mimeographed press release stating in part:

"I cannot in good conscience be a party or seem to be a party to the action of the committee on Feb. 4, in voting to request the resignations from the Board of Education of Columbia of Col. West A. Hamilton and Mr. Wesley S. Williams.

"Because the motion in our committee was passed our house is now divided and the effectiveness with which the branch can function in the immediate future is diluted."

Howard U. Teachers Sees No Tension Arising in Integration

Integration in the schools should produce few consequences, an authority declared last night.

Dr. Vera Hunton, of the department of psychology at Howard University, expressed this view at a meeting in Banneker Junior High School, Ninth and Euclid streets N.W.

Also participating were Dr. Paul Cook, of the department of English at Miner Teachers' College, and Isaac Franck, executive director, Jewish Community Council of Greater Washington.

Dr. Hunton said she did not feel any tension would arise. If it did, however, she said, it would stem from the attitude of classmates or parents or teachers, and not from integration in itself.

Dr. Cook, who spoke from the teacher's standpoint, told about a five-year study he had made of integration in such places as New Jersey; Portland, Ore.; St. Paul, Minn.; Gary, Ind.; East St. Louis, Ill. and Dayton and Youngstown, Ohio.

He pointed out that with the advent of integration in these places, there had been a proportionate increase in the employment of Negro teachers.

Said Mr. Franck, in speaking of the sociological effect of integration on the community:

"Discriminatory patterns in a community cause people to look for justification for discrimination and find the justification in the false prejudices they pick up."

Dr. Robert E. Martin, president of the Banneker PTA served as moderator. The program was sponsored by the PTA.

D. C. Schools Slate Racial Discussions

A series of workshops on "intercultural education" will begin next Thursday for more than 200 principals, supervisors and directors of the District public schools.

The six seminar sessions, closed to the public, will include "down to earth consideration" of problems in interracial relationships that might arise if the Washington school system is integrated.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning, in announcing the discussion schedule yesterday, said the seminars would not deal with the advantages and disadvantages of integration or segregation.

"We are dealing rather with the problem of developing human understandings and relationships as we live together and work together for the education of all the children," Corning said, "no matter under what general plan the schools are organized."

The school officers have been divided into six conference groups to give a balance of school levels and diversions, Corning said. Two lecturers will lead each session. They are Dr. Dan W. Dodson, professor of education and director of curriculum and research center for human relations study at New York University, and William E. Vickery, education director, National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Conferences will be held from 10:30 a. m. to 4 p. m. at these high schools:

Thursday, Roosevelt; April 26, Western; April 27, Dunbar; April 28, Spingarn; April 29, Anacostia, and April 30, Coolidge.

Two general meetings will be held for all teachers and officers at 2:45 p. m. May 24 and 25 in the McKinley High School auditorium. Dr. Ethel J. Alpenfels, anthropologist and professor of sociology, New York University, will speak. A resume of the work of the conference series will be given.

Officers, teachers, nurses and clerks in schools and offices located south and east of New York ave. have been asked to attend the May 24 meeting. All others are asked to attend the second session.

Rejection of Corning Integration Proposal Urged by NAACP

The District Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has urged that the Board of Education turn down School Supt. Hobart M. Corning's plan for "gradual" integration of the school system.

The branch released a letter to the board from Eugene Davidson, president, and Ellis O. Knox, chairman of the education committee.

Permitting exceptions to the rule that children be required to attend the schools nearest their nomes by allowing them to remain in buildings until graduation could delay complete desegregation until 1959, according to the letter.

Hits Rezoning Policy

The letter also hit failure to rezone school districts by September, 1954, and planning for the present to transfer Negroes only from overcrowded schools "so that less than 3,000 Negro children will be transferred by September, 1954."

"We suggest that since no boundaries can be permanent and must change from time to time, perfect boundaries should not be the goal at the sacrifice of rapid desegregation," it was stated. "Rather, we think, the objective should be immediate relief from the evils of segregation."

The branch suggested that the plan's "gradualist approach to the problem of desegregation is fraught with the dangers of confusion and tensions. This approach unduly and unnessesarily prolongs the evils of segregation, the elimination of which was the basic purpose of the Supreme Court decision.

"This approach denies for an indefinite period to white as well as to colored children the sociologically sound value of living and learning together as equals in a democratic society," the letter said.

Raps Teachers' College Stand.

The branch objected to failure to merge the teachers' colleges at present on grounds there is no building available to accommodate such a large institution.

"The NAACP rejects this reason for not immediately abolishing all segregation in the college, first, because there are several buildings with capacities sufficient to accommodate the integrated institution, and, secondly, because it is not unusual for colleges to have many buildings under a single administration," the letter said.

"We suggest the present feasibility of either using another building or having part of the curriculum at Miner College and part at Wilson College with the elimination of the segregation which Dr. Corning proposes to continue," it added.

Calls Language Vague.

It went on to complain that Dr. Corning's plan on teacher assignments uses the vague and undefined words "adaptability" and "best use" of teachers.

"We feel strongly that desegregation should apply to students, but that in the area of teacher assignments a conscious effort should be made to integrate and that words of adaptability should be clearly limited to considerations other than race," the board was told.

The branch declared that Dr. Corning's plan is "so violative of the spirit of the clear decision of the Supreme Court that its acceptance by you seems inconceivable."

DC Adopts 2-Yr. Program To End School Bias

WASHINGTON — The school board of the District adopted unanimously Wednesday a two-year program to end public school segregation.

The board adopted the plan submitted by the superintendent without any dissent. There was, however, an attempt on the part of the three Negro members to have the integration put into effect immediately. The board split racially on this vote, with 5 against and 3 for putting it into effect immediately.

The superintendent pointed out that the President had asked them to work out a plan that might servee as a model, and then said that if they tried to integate totally in September, they would have confusion and be a poor example for the rest of the country. Under the plan 22 overcrowded Negro schools will be integrated with 18 unfiled white schools this fall.

Corning Timing On Integration Challenged

School Head Asks Williams to Wait For New Schedule

By James G. Deane

School Supt. Hobart M. Corning's race integration plans may be challenged again in the Board of Education next week.

Wesley S. Williams, Negro member, yesterday told Dr. Corning he does not know how the superintendent could defend present plans to limit immediate integration to certain schools.

Mr. Williams also warned that the superintendent's plan is inviting lawsuits.

The Negro member, an attorney, told Dr. Corning he will face a flood of suits if he refuses to admit Negro children to schools where they apply next fall.

He added that he already had advised one Negro parent to take his children to a white school—Bancroft, at Eighteenth and Newton streets N.W.—next September. Bancroft is not on the list of schools where Dr. Corning so far has proposed admitting Negro youngsters that soon.

Corning Hints Solution.

Dr. Corning replied to Mr. Williams that the board member was "anticipating things." He urged:

"Mr. Williams, won't you wait for my time schedule next week?"

The superintendent did not elaborate.

Dr. Corning is scheduled to present a detailed integration time-table to the board next Wednesday. The board is expected at that time to make a formal decision on how fast the dropping of race bars in the school system is to proceed.

Mr. Williams, on June 2, tried to get the board to order complete integration in September. He failed in this on a split vote, with five white members against and the three Negro members for.

After this vote, all members voted to "accept and file" Dr. Corning's recommendations for partial integration in the fall.

New Schedule Called For.

The board, at the same time, instructed the superintendent to bring in a new time-table, however. It did not specifically commit itself to abiding by the Corning recommendations.

Dr. Corning has proposed to transfer a little less than 4,000 colored children from 21 crowded schools to 18 white schools in September. All senior high schools would drop race bars in February, however, and all other schools would be open to both races by September, 1955.

Mr. Williams, in discussing his position on Bancroft, cited a set of integration principles which were adopted by the board May 23. The principles ban any discrimination against pupils or school employes on account of race.

Mr. Williams said that according to these principles, he did not see how a colored child could be refused admittance to the school.

At the time the principles were drafted Walter N. Tobriner, board member who headed the special committee that did the drafting, said they were not intended to govern the timing of the integration program, and he said they would not necessarily take full effect in September.

Court Reaction Unknown.

It is not known what attitude the courts would take if Negro parents filed lawsuits because their children were denied admission to white schools in the fall. However, Dr. Corning has contended that the May 17 Supreme Court antisegregation ruling, under which he has proposed his integration program, is permissive rather than mandatory and that his program therefore is ahead of any action the school system could be forced to take.

Some board members besides Mr. Williams have indicated a wish to speed up Dr. Corning's program somewhat, however. Dr. Corning, who canceled his weekly press conference yesterday, has so far refused to say whether he himself might recommend any speed-up.

Board members yesterday met in committees. The integration question was not on the agenda, and no action was taken.

Jury Duty at Issue.

Mr. Williams also challenged Dr. Corning on another matter yesterday. This was the superintendent's consistent refusal to allow teachers to accept jury duty.

Mr. Williams heads the Complaints and Appeals Committee, which has been considering a charge by Mrs. Blanche P. Southard, teacher at Emery School, that Miss F. Lucille Harris, Emery principal, had harassed her in a jury duty dispute.

Mrs. Southard tried to get permission first from Miss Harris and then from higher school officials to accept a jury summons, but was unsuccessful. She told the committee in January that Miss Harris had harassed her ever since.

Miss Harris refused to discuss the matter at two public hearings, but Mr. Williams said she has since asked for another chance to be heard.

Integration Program Pushed in D.C

Nabrit is puzzled by Corning plan

Superintendent's overall purpose elicits question

WASHINGTON

James Nabrit, one of the lawyers in the District school segregation suit, is in a quandry over the "Corning Plan."

Mr. Nabrit, who recently returned from a leave of absence to the Howard University faculty, commented on the "Corning Plan.," Thursday:

"It looks to me that there is some question as to just what Dr. Hobart Corning's overall purpose is.

"As I see it, there ought to be enough available administrative personnel to get the redistricting of the school system set up.

100,000 Pupils

"The calmer way" to arrange boundaries, Dr. Nabrit said, is to follow the normal procedure of taking maps of the various sections of the city and putting colored tacks in it for every 10 pupils.

Dr. Nabrit points out that the school population is approximately 100,000 and when they have all the students represented the school officials will have an excellent idea as to their location.

Secondly, Dr. Nabrit stated, the school officials know all of the useable school buildings, the elementary, junior high, and senior high schools.

With this knowledge, Dr. Nabrit commented, the officials can draw boundaries to take care of the students within the areas where they live.

There might be a heavily populated area where three elementary schools are necessary, the law professor said.

Should Set Boundaries

However, Dr. Nabrit expressed the belief that the districting could be accomplished by July 1 or July 15 at the very latest.

"Once the boundaries are set, they ought to announce them," Dr. Nabrit said.

Limit It To Seniors

As for the recommendation that pupils be permitted to attend their present schools until graduation, Dr. Nabrit said if it were "limited to seniors in the elementary, junior high, and senior high schools I could see merit in it."

"But, I feel that all other children should be transferred to schools within the boundaries in which they live beginning in September."

The readiness of Dr. Corning to announce immediately after the Supreme Court's decision that integration could not be accomplished immediately is of concern to Dr. Nabrit.

Ratio of Teachers To Negro Pupils to Improve Temporarily

By James G. Deane

The District's Negro public schools will have almost enough teachers to go around next semester.

But this happy situation may be only temporary, for an expected enrollment climb—and a budget cutback—are threatening a new teacher shortage next fall.

Mid-year graduations next week and transfer of 66 teacher salaries from the white schools will improve the teacher situation for the spring term.

Average class sizes in the colored junior and senior highs will be below the official standard and those in the colored grade schools will be only a fraction above, Supt. Hobart M. Corning has disclosed. Colored classes will still average bigger than white, but Dr. Corning said he is cutting the white teacher force as much as he can.

Net Loss in Pupils.

The mid-year graduations help because junior highs are losing students without taking any in. Grade schools no longer promote pupils into junior high at mid-year.

Next fall, however, the school system is expecting more than 5,500 new Negro pupils. And the new District budget request, made public yesterday, includes only 130 new colored teachers—189 fewer than school officials say will be needed.

City officials have promised money enough for 59 more colored teachers if the proposed public works program goes through. The works program would provide extra tax revenue and $256,000 of this is earmarked for the schools. But even this addition would still leave a shortage of more than 130 colored teachers.

Pressure for Cutbacks.

Such a shortage would bring new pressure for teacher cutbacks in the white schools, which are better staffed.

It would cost an extra $836,800 to bring the number of new colored teachers next fall up to the full 319 needed, according to Charles N. Zellers, school business officer.

Colored enrollment, already 14,000 bigger than white, is expected to jump to a margin of 20,000 in September. Expected fall enrollment is 108,651—64,462 colored and 44,199 white.

For the term beginning February 1, average colored class sizes will be 24.2 in the senior highs, 26.5 in junior highs and 36.7 in the grade schools. Official standard is 25, 28 and 36 respectively, so classes will be "substantially equal to the board's standards," according to Dr. Corning.

White Class Averages.

White classes will average 19.1, 24 and 34.5 respectively, during the same term.

Classes in the colored schools will get bigger again in the fall if the budget request stands as it is.

Dr. Corning informed the Board of Education this week that eight new colored kindergartens and three new colored elementary classes for slow learners will be established February 1. Sixteen classes for slow-learners in the colored junior highs also will be set up for the first time.

On February 1 colored pupils will move into the Kenilworth Elementary School, now white. The School Board did not act Wednesday on a request for transfer of the Woodridge School to Negroes, however. Dr. Corning is slated to make a new report on this subject next month.

The superintendent said Wednesday that he is against any more school transfers before the Supreme Court rules on race segregation.

Board of Education Considers Transfer Of 2 More Schools

Proposed transfers of two grade schools to Negroes were due for Board of Education consideration today.

Transfer of the Kenilworth School, Forty-fourth and Ord streets N.E., was approved by a committee last week and was expected to be approved by the full board this afternoon.

A new request for transfer of another Northeast school—either Woodridge or Langdon—was expected at today's meeting. Colored citizens yesterday conducted four board members on a tour of the neighborhood. Mrs. Margaret J. Butcher, one of the four, is backing the request.

The Buildings and Grounds Committee gave the Woodridge-Langdon proposal a deaf ear last week, however. Supt. Hobart M. Corning opposed transferring either school at this time.

Walter N. Tobriner, West A. Hamilton and Rowland F. Kirks also went on the Woodridge tour yesterday. Charles T. Green, Woodridge Civic Association leader, asked the board members to include Burroughs School in their calculations.

The colored parents say one of the white schools is needed to relieve crowding at the Slowe and Noyes Schools. Dr. Corning said a transfer would leave white pupils crowded, however.

Kenilworth Transfer to Negro Use Set for Feb. 1

Final Action Due Wednesday on Group Report; Petworth Switch Also Asked

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

The February 1 transfer of Kenilworth School to Negro use was approved unanimously yesterday by the Board of Education Buildings and Grounds Committee.

A surprise recommendation of School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning to transfer Petworth School to Negro use July 30 was taken under study by the committee, which agreed to hold a public hearing on the measure in the near future.

In a third action dealing with changed use of schools, the committee approved Corning's statement that he could not justify now the transfer of either Langdon, 20th and Franklin sts. ne., or Woodridge School, Carlton and Central aves. ne., as requested by parents to relieve overcrowding in Negro schools in that area of the Northeast.

This opinion of Corning drew sharp criticism from Mrs. Margaret Just Butcher, board member, who declared the school board might as well suspend if it continued to "brush off" day-by-day solutions to existing problems, while awaiting a Supreme Court decision on segregated schools.

Corning yesterday urged the Kenilworth transfer, effective next term, stating that only 28 white pupils attend the building, Kenilworth ave. and Ord st. ne. Last month, he said the change should be made not later than July. Final action will be taken on the matter Wednesday by the school board.

Kenilworth pupils would go to Benning School, Minnesota ave. and Benning road ne. About 135 Negro pupils attending overcrowded Carver School, Whittingham and Lane place ne., and Thomas School, Anacostia ave. and Grant st. ne., would be shifted into Kenilworth.

A summer transfer of Petworth School, 8th and Shepherd sts. nw., was proposed by Corning to relieve overcrowding in three Negro schools, Park View, Warder and Newton sts. nw.; Bruce, Kenyon st. and Sherman ave. nw., and Monroe, Columbia road and Georgia ave. nw. Petworth has 176 students and a capacity of 576. Corning said the Petworth pupils could be housed in Powell, Upshur and 13th sts. nw.; Raymond, 10th and Spring road nw., and Barnard School, Decatur and 4th sts. nw.

A bitter exchange of words developed between two school board members and a pair of parent speakers over the question of the greatest need of a white or Negro school in the Woodridge area.

James Prentice declared that Woodridge School should be retained as a white school because Woodridge is a "stable, white community."

Wesley Williams, board member, asked if Prentice had the "unmitigated gall" to call the community white, stating "I could move in tomorrow." Mrs. Butcher said Prentice was talking "pure racism."

Charles T. Greene, vice president of the Woodridge Civic Association, declared the "lack of a Negro school in Woodridge does much to retard the healthy growth of our community."

Corning said the class size situation at Slowe, 14th and Jackson sts. ne., and Noyes, 10th and Franklin sts. ne., both Negro schools, does not justify immediate transfer of a white school. Such a transfer, he said, may be needed later after completion of an area child census. Corning said three special classes would be moved out of Noyes to bring class size almost down to school board standard.

"That's just a gimmick," Mrs. Butcher asserted. She said, "I insist a school can be transferred February 1."

Corning replied: "I can't produce things faster than the situation warrants." The buildings and grounds committee unanimously accepted Corning's report. Members of the committee are Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, Miss Mary Parker and Col. West A. Hamilton.

Council backs Dr. Butcher in schools stand

The National Council of of Negro Women gave high praise this week, to two of its outstanding members.

A statement was released by the national president, Mrs. Vivian C. Mason, who said, "The council is justly proud of Dr Margaret Just Butcher, member of the District of Columbia Board of Education and the education and the educational department of the Council; and Dr. Arenia C. Mallory, first vice president of the Council and principal of Saints Industrial School at Lexington, Miss., for distinguished services in the cause of human welfare.

"Dr. Butcher has conducted an intelligent, relentless campaign for better educational facilities for colored children, arousing the conscience of the citizens of Washington to the degrading conditions in the District." said Mrs. Mason. "This scholarly advocate of non-segregated schools has pointed out that the taxpayers are being rooked, the children skimped and the noble concept of democracy in the public schools flouted in contempt.

"Her research pointed to the maintenance of schools for white children where only a handful of students attended, unjustly burdening the taxpayer while colored children are forced into crowded, outmoded buildings frequently within a stone's throw of virtually empty institutions.

"Dr. Butcher has gone further. She has advocated the mixing of schools now, after proper preparation instead of waiting until forced to by a Court decision.

Dr. Mallory Cited

"Dr. Butcher", Mrs. Mason concluded "has made the nation especially women conscious of civic responsibility as an individual duty."

Dr. Arenia Mallory was cited as a dynamic, forceful educator, who has achieved astounding results in her one-woman campaign in the field of race relations in the state of Mississippi. Last week a signal honor was conferred upon her in that the Mayor and Board of Aldermen in Humboldt, Tenn. made her an honorary citizen of that community in a colorful and inspiring ceremony.

D. C. Extends Integration In Various Institutions

Moves to End Segregation at Jail, Glenn Dale, Training School

By Don Olesen
Post Reporter

Nine weeks after the Commissioners issued their integration order, steps have been taken to end racial segregation at District Jail, Glenn Dale Hospital, and at the District Training School.

This is shown by a check of key city department heads, made after a church group asked the Commissioners for a progress report on integration.

The request came in a letter from Edwin A. Bennett, Jr., president of the Washington Chapter, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice. Spencer said he'll study the question further before he comments.

In November, the Commissioners ordered heads of 23 District Government agencies to take steps to end racial discrimination in city employment, institutions, and facilities.

The Fellowship letter declared the Commissioners illegally excluded employes of the two Industrial Home Schools from their order. Congress may require segregation of children in the schools, the group declared, but it cannot segregate employes.

Both schools are in the District Welfare Department, the letter said and the department comes under Federal Civil Service regulations forbidding segregation due to race.

Heads of District agencies most affected by the November order gave this progress report yesterday:

Corrections Department: At District Jail, Negro inmates have been placed in cells in white cellblocks, and white prisoners in Negro cellblocks, Director oDnald Clemmer said. He estimated "between 30 and 40" prisoners have been so moved. No integration has begun yet at the city's Lorton Reformatory or Occoquan Workhouse, Clemmer stated, but he has a committee of four citizens—three of them Negroes—studying the problem.

Health Department: At Glenn Dale Hospital, "as a bed becomes vacant, we place a patient there without regard to race," Administrator Dr. Daniel L. Finucane said. This has brought integration "to all the wards," he said.

Welfare Department: Director Gerard Shea said District Training School inmates of 20 years of age or less have been integrated since the order, and employes housed on the basis of job level, not race.

At the department's Home for the Aged and Infirm, integration will begin in the new infirmary building when it opens February 28, Shea said, and integration of other residents will continue from that starting point.

Segregation has been ended at the Municipal Lodging House, Shea declared, and is about to end at the Temporary Home for Soldiers and Sailors.

Fire Department: Integration of firefighters must wait until after March, when a race relations expert from the National Conference of Christians and Jews can give guidance to department leaders, Chief M. H. Sutton said. The Commissioners' order excluded the firefighting division for the time being.

Police Department: It has had Negro policemen and promotions based on merit appointment "for years," Deputy Chief Howard V. Covell said. Of 2101 policemen, 224 are Negroes. Of these, one is a lieutenant, one a corporal and seven are detective sergeants.

Reading Demonstration

A reading demonstration will be given by Harry W. Lewis, Jr., supervisor of the Reading Clinic for Division 2, at a meeting of the Gage School Study Council at 7:30 p. m. today at the school, 2d and V sts. nw.

D. C. In Uproar Over Schools

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The recent controversy over the school issue in the District of Columbia has created much public interest among citizens regarding the unequal facilities between schools for Negroes and those for white children.

This was evident at the regular meeting of the board of education at the Franklin school Wednesday. Hundreds of Negro and white citizens crowded into the small board room filling it to capacity, occupying all standing space and pouring out into the halls. This delegation was there, apparently, to lend its support to Mrs. Margaret Butcher who has been waging a one-woman war for better facilities for Negro children. They were also on hand perhaps, to express their approval to any movement which might be suggested toward transferring at least one school from white to Negro use in the Woodridge area in the Northeast section.

In reporting on the proposed transfer, School Supt. Hobart M. Corning said that the trend in this area continues and if the schools continue on a segregated basis the transfer of a school in this area might be required. He said he would continue to study the situation and bring in a report at a later date for the transfer of a building if it becomes necessary.

Col. West A. Hamilton, one of the three Negro members of the board suggested that a definite date be set for the superintendent's report.

Hamilton suggested that the report be made at the April meeting so that the board would have 10 days to study his recommendations, either for or against the transfer, and action could be taken before the next school term.

Mrs. Butcher stated that such a report had been brought before the board some years ago and citizens had asked for a hearing.

She pointed out that there are three schools in the Woolridge area for white children and none for colored." Should these children have a school in the area where they live?" she asked.

Hamilton contended that the board should accept his proposal, and hearings could be had at the time the report was submitted. His motion was approved in spite of the fact that some members of the board contended that the superintendent could not make such a study in 60 days.

A surprise action was taken when the board approved a suggestion offered by Rowland F. Hamilton asked that these lessons include answers to 44 questions on school inequalities which were proposed by Mrs. Butcher last month.

Col. Hamilton led the fight against Mrs. Butcher's proposal at the time it was made and the board agreed that the superintendent did

Three letters came from other parents expressing a similar stand on the board's action. Not a single letter was reported favoring the board's stand or supporting the positions taken by Col. Hamilton and Wesley Williams (the third Negro member of the board) in the matter.

NEGRO SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS IN WASHINGTON DISAGREE OVER PLANS FOR INTEGRATION IN FALL

West Hamilton Votes For "Step by Step" Program of City Superintendent Corning

MARGARET BUTCHER WANTS ACTION NOW

(By Alice A. Dunnigan)

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — The three Negro members of the board of education in the District of Columbia split their vote three ways on the plan for gradual integration of District schools presented to the board, last week by Hobart M. Corning.

Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, the youngest and most outspoken of the three, cast the only dissenting vote for the superintendent's timetable setting September, 1955 as deadline date for complete integration.

Col. West A. Hamilton, the oldest and most conservative of the Negro members, moved that the board adopted the "step-by-step" program presented by Corning.

Wesley S. Williams, the legal-minded but most silent of the trio, abstained from voting.

Four of the six white members of the board voted along with Hamilton to accept the Corning plan with two whites, like Williams, refusing to vote at all. This resulted in a 5 to 1 vote approving the superintendent's proposals.

A lengthy debate ensued between Dr. Butcher and Col. Hamilton on this issue with Supt. Corning as the middleman.

Dr. Butcher suggested that the board of education instruct the superintendent to sit here with his staff this summer and rezone the city schools, regardless of cost. This would enable students to attend schools nearest their homes this fall.

When Dr. Corning replied that he was going on a vacation, Dr. Butcher asked if someone could be appointed to do it for him during the summer.

The superintendent snaped back that he didn't think anyone could continuously stay on this job of integration and live.

Col. Hamilton broke in that he thought the board was moving ahead and not evading the end of segregation. He reminded Mrs. Butcher that the superintendent could have sat back and waited for the Supreme court decree this fall.

He stated that he thought the thing has to be done step-by-step.

Supt. Corning plans to present to the board on July 1, maps and descriptive data to show new boundary lines for all elementary, junior and senior high schools. He said that all students new to the school system would observe these new boundary lines next fall from the kindergarten to the senior high school.

He further suggested that a select number of Negro students now traveling an "exclusive distance" to schools would be permitted to attend the white schools nearer their homes.

These two new areas of pupil integration will send about 2,700 Negro pupils into 18 white elementary and junior high schools and a senior high school, he estimated.

He also announced that both Miner and Wilson Teachers colleges would be completely integrated by September of this year. By September, 1955, the Cardozo colored high school will be converted into a new home for a united, city-wide teachers' college, he said.

Williams inquired at this point as to why the two teachers colleges did not begin integration this summer. He asked if it were true that 18 Negro students had been denied admission to summer courses at Wilson college, which now has white enrollees only.

Upon being informed that some Negroes had been denied admission to the Wilson summer school Williams stated that he thought Negro students should be allowed to attend Wilson college now. He requested a review of this situation by July 1.

The Corning plan calls for complete integration of all evening classes by Sept. There will also be a complete organization of building, including a transfer of teachers in some schools by Sept. 13. Furniture, equipment, textbooks and classroom supplies will be transferred between schools affected by pupil transfers.

By October, children will be given an option on whether they prefer to remain at their present schools or transfer to other schools. Meetings will be held with parents to receive explanation as to why they prefer changes, but no assurance can be given at this time as to whether option can be approved by Feb. 1, 1955.

By Jan. 31, 1955, all junior high school graduates will be expected to enroll in senior high schools on the basis of the new boundaries. The necessary teacher transfers and school reorganization will be made at that time.

Additional options for pupil transfers will be received at the beginning of the second semester and acted upon when possible. And by the beginning of the school year of 1955, the superintendent expects that all steps will have been taken to complete desegration of the public schools in the District of Columbia.

Capital Ends Segregated Teacher Tests

From the Herald Tribune Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 10.— District of Columbia school teacher candidates today took examinations for the first time without racial distinction. About 130 applicants of both races sat together in each of four classrooms to take written tests for permanent junior high and elementary teacher posts. The tests — the first since the Supreme Court's decision May 17 holding racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional—were supervised by an inter-racial staff. Later, successful candidates will be listed on the same eligibility list, according to examination results and without regard to race. Nearly four-fifths of the applicants reporting today were Negroes. School officials said Negro applicants have been in the majority for the last two or three years. The Board of Education has not yet established detailed policies for teacher appointments next fall. The board has already adopted a policy statement promising that there will be no racial discrimination, but School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning has proposed only a limited integration program for September.

Integrated List To Add 200 or More Teachers

Board Votes Merger Of All Existing Eligibility Rolls

By James G. Deane

Between 200 and 300 prospective teachers are expected to be included on the District school system's new integrated teacher-eligibility list, a school official said today.

Associate Supt. Thomas J. Holmes gave this estimate for the list. The Board of Education yesterday approved plans to create it by merging all existing eligibility lists, without regard to race.

A majority of those on the list probably will be colored, since there have been more colored teacher applicants than white for several years. The list will include successful candidates from the first biracial tests given last month. Results of those tests aren't known yet.

Many of the eligibles are expected to be hired next fall. Supt. Hobart M. Corning told the board yesterday he couldn't predict all would be given jobs, however, since there may not be vacancies in the specialties for which some candidates are qualified.

Protest Merging Lists.

Robert R. Faulkner and Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, board members, objected to merging lists resulting from segregated examinations.

Rowland F. Kirks said he also objected to the merger on legal grounds, but he agreed to go along with the move if Dr. Corning said it was administratively essential. Dr. Corning asserted this was so and that abolition of existing lists would deny "established rights."

Walter N. Tobriner warned that abolition of present lists, instead of merging them, would open the board to "a flood of litigation."

When it came to a vote, Dr. Corning was supported, 4 to 3, with Miss Mary H. Parker, Mr. Faulkner and Mrs. Phillips voting against, and Dr. Kirks, Mr. Tobriner, Col. West A. Hamilton and Wesley S. Williams voting for.

Candidates Certified.

Certified yesterday were a number of new junior, senior and vocational high candidates for posts teaching science, business, aviation and driver training.

The board approved proposed deletions of racial language in existing school laws. Mr. Faulkner objected to one of these, which would eliminate the question of race in conducting a school census, but this came to nothing.

Approved yesterday was the promotion of Harold Hennegar, assistant principal of Paul Junior High School, to principal of the Capitol Page School.

The board also approved the retirement of Dr. Harold E. Warner, principal of Hine Junior High School, effective August 31. Dr. Warner joined the school system in 1916 and has been principal at Hine since 1923.

C. Melvin Sharpe was re-elected board president and Mrs. Phillips vice president, both unanimously.

5-point plan set in D.C. integration

WASHINGTON — A five-point statement of policy to guide the elimination of racial segregation in the District public schools was adopted Saturday by a special committee of the District Board of Education.

The declaration of policy, outlined as necessary to the effective administration of an integrated system, follows:

1. Appointments, transfers, preferments, promotions, ratings or any other matters respecting the officers and employes of the board shall be predicated solely upon merit and not upon race or color.

2. No pupil of the public school shall be favored or discriminated against in any matter or in any manner respecting his or her relationship to the schools of the District of Columbia by reasons of race or color.

To Set Boundaries.

3. Attendance of pupils residing within school bounderies hereafter to be established, shall not be permitted at schools located beyond such boundaries except for the most necessitous reasons or for public convenience, and in no event for reasons related to the racial character of the school within the boundaries in whih the pupil resides.

4. The board believes that no record should be kept or maintained in respect to any pupil not enrolled in a public school on or prior to June 17, 1954, or in respect to any officer or employe not employed within the system or prior to that date in which information is solicited or recorded relating to the color or race of any such person.

5. The maximum efficient use shall be made of all physical facilities without regard to race or color.

Ask Citizens' Help

The full implementation of the proposed policy would eliminate all vestiges of the present dual school system in Washington, and the board said it would use its full power to see that the policy is carried out.

The last line of the statement declared, "We ask the aid, cooperation and good will of all citizens and the help of the Almighty in holding to our stated purposes."

Board To Meet

The new policy statement is to be presented to a special meeting of the board Tuesday (May 25). At the same time Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent, is to present a plan for integration of the schools.

Dr. Margaret J. Butcher, member of the board, said she would press for immediate integration.

Corning Unveils Shifts Affecting All New Pupils

Graduates of Junior Highs to Come Under Plan Next February

By James G. Deane

School officials today unveiled a new system of boundaries under which District public schools will begin a one-year process of race desegregation in September.

Negro and white school designations are dropped in the new boundary maps. In September the new lines will govern the building assignments of all pupils newly entering the school system, without regard to race.

Next February graduating junior high pupils also will follow the new lines in entering high school. And in September, 1955, the new boundaries will take full effect.

Only new pupils now are scheduled to be affected by the integrated boundaries when school reopens September 13, however. Last year's boundaries will stay in use for other children in the fall.

Three Separate Maps.

Supt. Hobart M. Corning formally took the wraps off the new, non-racial lines at a meeting of the Board of Education this morning.

The new boundaries had been under intensive preparation for several weeks. At one time Dr. Corning predicted they could not be finished so soon, but aides worked overtime to complete the task.

The superintendent presented to the board three separate maps, one for elementary schools, one for junior highs and the third for senior high schools.

The new maps revamp most existing boundaries on all three levels. Of the 120 elementary schools, however, 27—all white—retain present districts. So do two white junior highs, Deal and Paul.

Several of the seven present white senior highs and most white junior highs will have smaller districts under the new map, since colored schools will be taking over parts of their present territory.

Vocational Highs Excluded.

Only one of the four colored senior highs—the new Spingarn—has had any boundary line up to now. All the colored senior highs have specific zones on the new map except Armstrong, which as a technical school operates without zones. Armstrong is expected to cease operating as such a school soon. Many of its pupils next fall will transfer to McKinley.

Excluded from the new boundaries are the vocational high schools and the two health schools for crippled children, all of which operate on a city-wide basis.

Dr. Corning was under specific instructions from the school board to submit the new boundaries by today. The superintendent said in an advance briefing o freporters yesterday, however, that he did not consider the new lines subject to board approval, since boundary-making always has been an administrative responsibility.

The boundaries will have their greatest effect in September on kindergartners and first-graders entering Washington schools for the first time, Dr. Corning said.

Such newcomers will be required to enroll at the school serving the new zone in which they live. This rule also will apply to newcomers entering in higher grades, and on this basis Dr. Corning has already predicted that most schools will enroll one or more pupils of the opposite race next fall.

Plans Shift of 2,800.

This would probably not mean any large-scale racial mixing in many schools immediately, however. And the school board has adopted a rule that pupils already enrolled will be allowed to stay in present schools until graduation if they wish, provided this does not cause overcrowding and deny children living nearer the right of attending.

This rule is expected to limit the amount of pupil shifting in the changeover to a desegregated system.

Apart from the partial integration to be brought about by adoption of the new boundaries, Dr. Corning plans to transfer about 2,800 colored pupils from overcrowded schools to nearby white schools in September.

The superintendent also is planning to admit about 100 colored children living in predominantly white neighborhoods to white schools in order to save them the hardship of traveling long distances.

Dr. Corning was asked yesterday how he planned to deal with applications of students who change their residence in the future, and whether they would be admitted to schools according to the new boundaries. He said this question had not been dealt with yet.

To Weigh "Hardship" Pleas.

He pointed out that he already has promised to give consideration to any "hardship" applications on an individual basis. He also cited previous statements that he will speed up the integration program if it proves possible to do so.

The new boundaries, the superintendent said, were devised to balance school enrollments throughout the city as nearly as possible, so that a minimum number of schools would be unduly crowded or underoccupied.

Some of the new school districts involve administrative complications. For example, Eastern and Eliot Junior High Schools are sharing a zone, because the schools are close together. Eastern until now has been a white school and Eliot for several years has been colored.

School officials will decide which of the two pupils must attend, Dr. Corning said. They also will make this decision for pupils living in two Eastern-Eliot "optional zones" next to Kelly-Miller Junior High, which is too crowded to accommodate them even though it is closer. At the moment, Dr. Corning said, Eastern is the school with extra capacity, so it will presumably get most new pupils, both colored and white. Its junior high unit already is slated to acquire 500 colored pupils in the fall.

Another complicated zone is in Anacostia, south of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, where junior high pupils will theoretically have a choice of either Kramer (now white) or Douglass (colored) until a new junior high is completed, probably in February, 1956. Actually neither Kramer nor Douglass has any extra space, so assigning new pupils to either will be a problem for the officials.

Zone Has 8 Schools.

On the elementary level there are six new zones with two schools each and one zone has no less than eight schools. This is a downtown group including Morse, Bundy, Langston, J. F. Cook, Perry, Simmons, Walker-Jones and Scott Montgomery. In such cases school officials—rather than parents—will decide what school a child attends, Dr. Corning said, but he added this would not be on a basis of race. Most of these schools have been operated for Negroes recently.

Parents in four zones will have a chance to exercise choice about the school a child attends under the new boundary system. These are four optional zones between pairs of elementary schools. The same zones have existed under the present boundaries. They were set up because of peculiar transportation conditions or similar factors.

On the existing white high school map there are also several such zones, but these will be wiped out by the integration boundaries.

Almost all white grade schools west of Rock Creek Park will retain their present boundaries on the new map. This is because most colored schools are elsewhere in the city.

Keeping old boundaries are the following white grade schools: Barnard, Beers, Brightwood, Draper, Eaton, Harrison, Hardy, Hearst, Janney, Kenne, Ketchum, Key, Kingsman, Lafayette, Mann, Murch, Orr, Patterson, Powell, Randle Highlands, Rudolph, Shepherd, Takoma, Truesdell, West and Whittier.

Two Keep Boundaries.

Paul and Deal, white junior highs in the far northwest, are keeping their old boundaries because both schools are already filled up, according to Association Supt. Lawson J. Cantrell.

One change in white boundaries not related to integration effects Simon and Congress Heights Schools. A slice of Simon's territory south of Portland street S.E. has been given to Congress Heights in order to reduce Simon crowding.

Dr. Corning said the new boundary system might have to undergo some changes after it is put into use. Boundary changes are made every year, he pointed out. He and his aides are hoping not too many changes will be necessary in the near future, however.

Bill to End District Segregation Readied

Legislation clearing the way for an end to segregation in District public schools will be ready "probably this coming week," Commissioner Renah F. Camalier said last night.

Asked if he thought the measure would pass through Congress, Camalier replied that this was "rather difficult to answer" since there was "quite a bit of feeling." But, he added, "I'm inclined to think Congress will sustain the Supreme Court."

The statements were made during the weekly program "Report to the People" over radio station WWDC.

The Commissioner, whose responsibility includes liaison with the schools, said only one bill would be necessary and this would be directed primarily at ending the requirement for maintenance of separate white and Negro teacher eligibility lists, separate administrative forces and boards of examiners.

Camalier, a Washington native, said he didn't expect "any trouble" among students after integration. "The people of Washington are level-headed and level-minded," he declared, and would accept the Supreme Court decision.

The city head said integration of welfare department units would leave only the fire department as a municipal function on a segregated basis, he said.

Asked about home rule and national representation for the District, Camalier said he felt the latter was the "most urgent and has a far better chance of enactment" than home rule. He was "quite sure we would convince the states that the District of Columbia should have representation."

As to whether the District residents would pick Democrats or Republicans, Camalier was uncertain, but felt that "Washington, generally speaking, goes along with the Administration in power." If the city should end up with a nonvoting delegate, as has been proposed, he was not certain this view would follow, however. He predicted voters would "pick the man" rather than the party.

Capital Schools Vow To End Segregation, but Delay Plan

Washington, May 25 (AP)—The District of Columbia Board of Education pledged itself today to erase racial segregation in public schools here. But it postponed action on a timetable for doing so.

Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, submitted a plan. It would begin the desegregation process next September, carry it on gradually through the following school year, and complete it by September, 1955. This would be done in compliance with last week's Supreme Court decision that separate schools for white and Negro children are unconstitutional.

Will Meet In June

The School Board adjourned without acting on Corning's proposal, but it set another meeting for June 2 to consider the plan.

Aides have said President Eisenhower hopes the capital can put through a successful program that will point the way for 17 Southern and border states to establish mixed white and Negro schools.

Corning said parts of his schedule for Washington "are in advance of any present requirement of the Supreme Court."

What the District School Board adopted today, 6 to 2, was a declaration of policy that it is "pledged to a complete and wholehearted pursuit" of these objectives:

1. No favors or discrimination against any pupil because of race or color.

2. All faculty assignments and ratings shall be on a merit basis without respect to color or racial lines.

Won't Refer to Race

3. No children shall be allowed, for reasons of race alone, to attend schools outside the boundaries of school zones in which they live.

4. After this school year, no records of pupils or personnel shall carry any reference to race or color.

5. All schools shall be used with maximum efficiency, regardless of race or color.

Three of the nine School Board members are Negroes. They tried to hurry the policy statement to a vote. Two white members, Robert R. Faulkner and the board vice-president, Mrs. Arcadia N Phillips, insisted on putting in some questions.

In the voting, Faulkner voted against the statement—because of Points 3 and 4, he said—and Mrs. Phillips withheld her vote, but was recorded in opposition.

Board Unit Acts to Ban Race Bias

Statement Asks Aid of Citizens, 'Help of Almighty' On Changeover

A five-point antidiscrimination policy was adopted yesterday by a District Board of Education committee.

Designed as a declaration of principles to govern the Supreme Court ordered integration of District schools, it ruled out all discrimination for reason of race or color in connection with students, teachers, officers and buildings.

Six of the nine-member school board attended the brief, 20-minute drafting session in the Franklin Administration Building. These members and School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning said they approved the new statement of policy.

The statement asks the "aid, cooperation and good will" of Washington's citizens and the "help of the Almighty" in carrying out the following five pledges:

1. All appointments, changed assignments, promotions and annual ratings of educational and other employes will be based on merit and not on race or color.

2. Pupils will not be favored or discriminated against because of race or color.

3. School boundaries, when reorganized, will be honored with few exceptions, but no exceptions will be made for reasons of race.

4. After June 17, records of pupils and school personnel will be kept without reference to race.

5. The physical school plant will be utilized fully without regard to race.

Walter N. Tobriner, chairman of the special committee who proposed it draft the principles, said he believed such a policy is "necessary to the effective administration" of an integrated school system. Other committee members approving the statement were Wesley S. Williams and Rowland F. Kirks.

The set of principles will be presented at 10 a. m. Tuesday when the Board of Education meets to hear Corning present his blueprint for integration. Corning yesterday told a reporter "this statement gives me great support."

Col. West A. Hamilton, board member, told the committee, "I think it's a very good over-all statement . . . it ties in with the spirit of the recent Supreme Court pronouncement."

The other two board members present, Mrs. Margaret J. Butcher and Miss Mary H. Parker, told reporters after the meeting that they approved the statement. C. Melvin Sharpe, board president, Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, vice president, and Robert R. Falkner, board member, were absent. Sharpe had informed the board secretary that he was unable to attend because of death in his wife's family.

Near the end of the meeting, Mrs. Butcher said she hoped the board on Tuesday would adopt the following statement apart from the set of principles:

"It is the considered judgment of the Board that good purpose will be served either by delay in integration of the public schools of the District, or by any piece meal attempt to put integration into effect."

Hamilton declared: "I'm for carrying out the Supreme Court mandate as quickly as possible but I'm not willing to promise by September."

Williams said he would be forced to call a point of order if a discussion of the timing of integration continued. Williams, Hamilton and Mrs. Butcher are the three Negro members of the board.

Meanwhile, the Executive Board and Education Committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations yesterday urged the School Board and Corning to consult with representatives of all major community groups before acting on the policy, mechanics or timing of school integration.

In their telegramed message, Federation officials said this should be done because the Supreme Court opinion granted time for suggesting methods of transition, and because President Eisenhower said he wanted the District to have a "model" plan for integration.

The Federation committees, which set for 3½ hours Friday night, pointed out they had not joined other community groups last year in sending the School Board suggestions for implementing integration. At that time, the Federation said the board's request was premature, because sufficient time would be granted for an orderly transition if segregation was outlawed.

"The time granted by the court for study vindicated the Federation's stand," the Federation's wire stated.

Corning Plan Would Make Class Sizes Closer to Standards

By James G. Deane

District school crowding and teacher shortages will be eased next fall, if the Board of Education approves plans for ending school segregation.

Supt. Hobart M. Corning's integration plan, now awaiting debate next week by the Board of Education, includes shifting some colored pupils and some colored teachers to white schools in September.

The shifts should eliminate most crowding in the Negro schools, he said. While they will not entirely take care of teacher needs, they will bring colored class sizes much closer to official standards according to Supt Corning.

For the first time in many years, the school system will be able to have class sizes about on a par for both colored and white children, he said.

Dr. Corning is proposing to shift some 2,365 Negro elementary and junior high pupils to white schools September 13. An undisclosed number of colored teachers would go with them.

Might Involve Armstrong

Another 300 to 350 colored Armstrong High School pupils might transfer to white McKinley High School, although it isn't known yet how many Armstrong students will want to enroll in McKinley's courses.

(Through a typographical error, a sentence in two editions of yesterday's Star stated Dr. Corning recommended a wholesale shuffling of white and colored pupils in the fall of this year. The sentence should have stated Dr. Corning recommended against any wholesale shuffling.)

As far as September goes, these are all the transfers Dr. Corning is recommending, although the exact number of pupils might go up or down, depending on fall enrollments. Later in the next school year the school system under the superintendent's plan would start enrolling new pupils without regard to race, however.

Dr. Corning's transfer plan would put varying numbers of Negro pupils in 18 white schools. Assuming white enrollments remain about the same, the proportion of colored students in these schools would range from about 5 to about 63 per cent.

Colored Majority in Three.

Three of the 18 white schools would acquire a majority of colored pupils. These are Eastern Junior High School, which would have about 63 per cent; Petworth Elementary School, with 62 per cent, and Raymond Elementary School, with about 57 per cent. The white Eastern Junior High pupils would not be outnumbered in terms of the total Eastern enrollment, junior and senior high, however, since Eastern also has over 800 senior high students.

Raymond and Petworth, until the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling, were under consideration for transfer to Negro use.

Jefferson Junior High, in the Southwest, would have about 37 per cent colored students, and Sousa Junior High in the Southeast, the only other junior high involved in the plan, would have about 16 per cent.

Comparison Table.

Here is a table of the 18 white schools with their most recently reported enrollment and the tentative number of colored students Dr. Corning is proposing to transfer to them next fall:

School.	White.	Colored.
Woodridge	240	84
Langdon	341	41
Burroughs	382	91
Raymond	233	310
Petworth	153	254
Barnard	373	96
Rudolph	360	---
Kingsman	470	142
Edmonds	224	57
Blair	153	---
Wheatley	523	94
Buchanan	582	182
Benning	201	130
Brightwood	603	34
Jefferson Jr.	345	200
Eastern Jr.	299	500
Sousa Jr.	734	141
McKinley	732	300-400

(Estimates of colored pupils for Blair and Rudolph are not yet available.)

The total number of teachers needed for these pupils, maintaining the classes at standard pupil-teacher ratios, would be about 107. Probably not as many as 107 colored teachers would be transferred, however, both because the colored schools probably could not spare that many and because some white schools probably have enough teachers to absorb some of the pupils with their present staff.

Special Situation.

The Armstrong-McKinley situation is a special case. Dr. Corning said yesterday complete merger of the two technical high schools cannot be accomplished in September because Armstrong's curriculum cannot be moved bodily to McKinley without expensive alterations to McKinley. He also conceded that eventually some Armstrong pupils might wind up dispersing to various vocational high schools instead of moving to McKinley at all.

Armstrong would continue to operate on a reduced basis next fall under his plan, Dr. Corning added. Wilson and Miner Teacher Colleges also would continue operating separately, although students at the two colleges would be allowed to take courses at either institution.

Dr. Corning also said he is anxious for prompt Congressional repeal of existing legislative provisions for dual school officials, teacher hiring boards and teacher appointment registers. But the superintendent said he thinks the school system can go ahead with the integration plan even if Congress doesn't act quickly because teachers can be hired on a temporary basis, bypassing the examining system. The legal knots apply only to permanent teachers, he pointed out.

Clarifies Redistricting.

Dr. Corning, after yesterday's special Board of Education meeting, clarified a portion of his plan relating to new school boundaries. The entire school system is now in process of being redistricted, he said, but pupils won't be required to abide by the new boundaries until sometime after the start of next fall's term.

At first, under the superintendent's plan, only transferring, promoted or newly entering pupils would have to abide by the new map. Dr. Corning proposed to let present pupils stay in the schools where they are until their graduation if they wish, unless crowded conditions force the school system to move them.

The Corning plan is due to be debated at a special Board of Education meeting at 2 p.m. next Wednesday.

Integration: First Step

School Superintendent Hobart Corning's school integration plan seems, at least in its aim and outlines, to meet the essential requirements of the Supreme Court's decision forbidding segregated public school systems. The superintendent's plan will bring about genuine integration by the fall of 1955. Undoubtedly, some members of the community will be disappointed that the plan will not accomplish its intended change in one swoop at the opening of the school season next September. It contemplates a delay in reaching full integration —a delay which Dr. Corning justifies on administrative grounds. There are, of course, diverse objectives, some of them mutually conflicting, which must be kept in mind in moving toward the desired and determined goal.

In the District of Columbia the speediest plan for integration is likely to be the best. Now that the Supreme Court has outlawed the dual school system, there is no warrant for gradualism in abandonment of it here. Gradualism merely prolongs discomfort and postpones acceptance. For those who face the necessity unhappily, the abandonment of segregation is rather like the removal of a piece of sticking plaster: the more swiftly it is jerked away, the more painless the process will be.

Dr. Corning has taken into account along with the desirability of facilitating integration, the desirability of leaving children undisturbed so far as possible in the schools which they have been attending. This is a valid and important consideration. Unnecessary juggling of children ought to be avoided. We have full sympathy, therefore, with the superintendent's effort to keep them where they are until they graduate. And since children newly arrived in a school neighborhood and newly entering school will be admitted to schools without regard to race, once the new boundaries go into effect, we think that the principle of integration will not be breached by this decision. But friction may arise from having newcomers bump old-timers from schools which have too many applicants. A prompt and firm fixing of boundaries would reduce this danger.

We find perplexing, moreover, the apparent determination to fix new school district boundaries by September but to withhold application of them until the midyear. Confusion could be avoided, we should suppose, by putting the new boundaries into effect as soon as possible. Children who have been required to walk a considerable distance to a segregated school may now choose to change to a school nearer home. Equality of treatment requires that they be admitted—the capacity of the school permitting—as a matter of course.

The Board of Education, in judging Dr. Corning's plan, will have to weigh conflicting considerations and evaluate the complex and difficult administrative problems to be met. It can commend the superintendent on tackling the job conscientiously. It should require him, we think, to justify the choices he has made and make clear in every instance the genuine necessity for delay. In short, the burden of proof for delay should properly be placed on Dr. Corning. Serious scrutiny should be given in particular to the decision to limit to 18 the number of school zones to be made effective this September. The number should be enlarged if it is at all feasible. Much will depend, of course, on the spirit with which the plan is put into effect. With good will and energy Washington can bring to realization the hope that it will lead the country in bringing about school integration smoothly, sensibly and with the best interests of the school children always paramount.

Text of Integration Policies for Schools

The following is the text of the resolution on integration policies adopted yesterday by a special Board of Education committee:

In the light of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Bolling v. Sharpe, the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, believing it to be in the best interest of all citizens of the community of Washington, and necessary to the effective administration of an integrated system within the public schools, hereby adopts the following declaration of policy.

1. Appointments, transfers, preferments, promotions, ratings, or any other matters respecting the officers and employes of the Board shall be predicated solely on merit and not upon race or color.

2. No pupil in the public schools shall be favored or discriminated against in any matter or in any manner respecting his or her relationship to the schools of the District of Columbia by reason of race or color.

3. Attendance of pupils residing within school boundaries, hereafter to be established, shall not be permitted at schools located beyond such boundaries, except for the most necessitous reasons or for the public convenience, and in no event for reasons related to the racial character of the school within the boundaries in which the pupil resides.

4. The Board believes that no record should be kept or maintained in respect to any pupil not enrolled in a public school on or prior to June 17, 1954, or in respect to any officer or employe not employed within that system on or prior to that date in which information is solicited or recorded relating to the color or race of any such person.

5. That maximum efficient use shall be made of all physical facilities without regard to race or color.

In support of the foregoing principles, which are believed to be cardinal, the Board will not hesitate to use its full powers. It is pledged to a complete and wholehearted pursuit of these objectives.

We affirm our intention to secure the right of every child, within his own capacity, to the full, equal, and impartial use of all school facilities, and the right of all qualified teachers to teach where needed within the school system. And, finally, we ask the aid, cooperation and good will of all citizens and the help of the Almighty in holding to our stated pu[illegible]

PARENTS PACK DISTRICT BOARD OF EDUCATION HEADQUARTERS TO HEAR SCHOOL TRANSFER ISSUE

Corning to Oppose Further White-Negro School Transfers

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

School Superintendent Hobert M. Corning yesterday said he would recommend no more transfers of schools or teacher salaries to Negro use, pending a Supreme Court decision this spring on segregated schools.

The Board of Education's acceptance by a 7 to 1 vote of this statement will freeze differences which exist between facilities in the Negro and white schools.

Mrs. Margaret Just Butcher, one of three Negro board members, was sole opponent of the new policy. Mrs. Butcher made two unsuccessful attempts to get the school board to declare that Negro and white school facilities "cannot be equalized." Each time, there was no second.

Transfer Approved

By a unanimous vote, the school board approved the pending transfer of Kenilworth School, Kenilworth ave. and Ord st. ne., as of February 1.

Corning's stand was outlined before more than 100 spectators, attending the monthly school board meeting in Franklin Administration Building.

Most of this parent audience was awaiting a decision on Corning's report of last week that no school should be transferred to Negro use in the Woodridge-Brookland area of the Northeast. Parents have demanded transfer of Woodridge School, Carlton and Central aves. ne.

The school board upheld Corning's decision on this issue by a 7 to 1 vote, with Mrs. Butcher again in opposition.

Corning's lengthy report on future operation of the schools stemmed from a December school board order to correct any existing inequalities between the Negro and white divisions or explain why not.

Pointing out that the facilities of no two schools were identical, Corning declared: " . . . I would always be opposed to reducing all these differences to standards, because necessarily this would be a downgrading—not an upgrading—of the whole system."

Three Subjects Covered

Corning's equalization statement dealt with three general subjects: pupil-teacher ratios, kindergarten facilities and the proposed use of McKinley High School building by Negro students now attending antiquated Armstrong High School.

Pupil-teacher ratios in Negro schools during the second semester would be almost equal to school board standards, Corning said.

On February 1, Corning said, an additional 13 salaries will be shifted from the white to Negro divisions. These extra teachers, he said, would improve vastly the class size picture in Negro schools.

Ratios Cited

Pupil-teacher ratios in Negro schools will be 24.2, senior highs; 26.5, junior highs, and 36.7, grade schools. School board standards are 25 to 1, 28 and 36 in these levels of the schools.

Corning said any additional salaries which became available in the white schools, he planned to use to restore curtailed special programs in both white and Negro divisions.

Corning also declared there would be no "repeat" of last year's reassignment of white teachers from senior high positions to grade school jobs to free salary money.

To Keep Present Ratio

Corning said he was sorry, but at present, he could not recommend improving the present pupil-teacher ratio standards for the entire school system.

In the matter of McKinley High School, Corning said the building "could not justifiably" be closed out as a white school at this time.

Should the forthcoming Supreme Court decision make integration mandatory, Corning said he intended to seek funds setting up in McKinley a "modern and adequate technical thigh school" for all students.

"I cannot at this time conscientously recommend the transfer of any additional school buildings from one division to another," Corning declared.

"With the possible imminence of integration, I urge the Board to agree with me that we should not now during a school session uproot more school children who might well be subject to further moves following integration."

Corning said he was going to improve the kindergarten situation in Negro schools. In February, he said(eight additional kindergartens would be opened in these schools: Harrison, Park View, Giddings-Van Ness, Carver, S. J. Bowen, Lovejoy, Morgan and Burrville.

Concerned Over Trend

These new classes, he said, would service 408 of the 465 Negro children on waiting lists. They will place on a five-day program 906 of the 2726 youngsters now attending four-day kindergartens in Negro schools.

Corning said he was convinced that despite differences in teachers, size of classes and facilities, the "children in the Washington public schools are receiving a very sound education in both divisions."

Following Corning's statement, Mrs. Butcher moved that the superintendent be directed to answer 44 additional questions dealing with facilities provided for white and Negro schools. The motion failed by a 5 to 4 vote.

Slow Negro Pupils to Get Special Class

Negro junior high schools will establish special classes for slow learners beginning with the February term, because of a lower enrollment resulting from mid-year graduations.

Francis A. Gregory, associate school superintendent, yesterday said that he hopes for the first time to set up such classes in each of the 11 Negro junior highs. White junior highs have such classes now.

The Negro junior highs will graduate about 1000 students this month. The schools will receive no new students since there no longer are midyear sixth-grade promotions.

Midyear graduations in the white junior highs have made it possible to transfer more salaries to hire needed Negro instructors, it was learned yesterday. School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning recently announced that 54 white salaries would be available to the Negro division of the school system February 1. This number has been raised to about 60, officials said yesterday.

Fairfax to Quit Belvoir School When Segregation Is Ended

Pentagon Race Ruling Draws Fire From Tuck

Fairfax County school officials yesterday said the county will stop educating pupils who live on the Fort Belvoir military reservation at the end of the present term.

The decision was made, officials said, because of the United States Government order ending segregation in schools on military posts by September, 1955.

"We had no choice," said F. W. Robinson, school board member. "Under Virginia law, we can't operate nonsegregated schools."

In all, 910 pupils are affected. Fairfax staffs the Fort Belvoir School, where 726 white elementary students are enrolled. The 56 Negro elementary students on the post attend the county's Drew Smith School at Gum Springs.

The 120 white high school students attend Mount Vernon High School, and the nine Negro high school students attend the Manassas regional high school.

During the 1954-55 school year, Fairfax would have gotten $134,181 in Federal aid for educating Fort Belvoir students.

But Fairfax school officials pointed out the actual cost to the county would have been $156,467. This means educating the students next year for the Government would have cost county tax payers $22,286, an official said.

Mrs. Almorine Crowther, School Board chairman, said eliminating the Ft. Belvoir students also would relieve overcrowded conditions at Mt. Vernon High School and the Drew Smith School.

School officials, who said they would notify the United States office of Education and Ft. Belvoir immediately, said they believe the Ft. Belvoir school can integrate the 56 Negro elementary pupils without much difficulty, but didn't know what facilities the Government would have for high school students.

Eight years ago, adjacent Prince William County stopped operating schools on the Quantico Marine base because military officials there entered a Negro student in the base school.

Negro Pastor Says Board Does Nothing On Unequal Schools

The Board of Education was accused last night of following a "do-nothing" policy toward inequalities in the District's colored schools.

The Rev. Smallwood Williams, Negro clergyman, made the accusation at a public meeting in the Turner Memorial A. M. E. Church, Sixth and I streets N.W., at which the school board was criticized by several speakers for actions taken at its January 20 meeting.

A resolution was voted after Mr. Williams spoke, listing several complaints against the board. Mr. Williams suggested also that eight of the nine board members, as well as School Supt. Hobart M. Corning, should resign. No action was taken on this, however.

The meeting excepted by Mr. Williams, Dr. Margaret J. Butcher, attended last night's session, which was announced as a rally to support her activities on the school board.

Dr. Butcher Speaks.

Dr. Butcher spoke briefly, saying she intends to continue efforts to improve educational facilities for colored children and also indicating her opposition to segregation. She was praised by the other speakers and was applauded several times. Approximately 300 persons attended.

The resolution was passed by the audience by a standing vote, which was almost unanimous. It asserted that the school board on January 20 by an 8-to-1 vote refused to acknowledge that the white and colored divisions of the school system are unequal. It also cited a statement by Dr. Corning that he would not recommend further adjustments at this time, and a refusal by the board to direct him to answer 44 questions submitted by Dr. Butcher.

The resolution then declared:

"Inasmuch as the result of these actions is (1) a refusal by the board to admit the known truth about District public schools in order to take action based on that truth, (2) to freeze the present inequities in the school system, and (3) to deprive a member of the board of freedom of information, be it resolved that we do disapprove the above described board actions of January 20, 1954, and do inform the Board of Education and the superintendent of schools that there should be continuous effort to provide the best education for all our children."

Board Called Derelict.

Mr. Williams, who is pastor of the Bible Way Church, 1130 New Jersey avenue N.W., described the school board as "derelict in its duties" with regard to Negro school conditions. He accused the board of "drifting with the tide" while awaiting a Supreme Court school race segregation ruling

Tilford E. Dudley, member of the CIO Political Action Committee, said the school board has "company stooges" on it who are "turning the knife on the people they represent," and urged that they be removed.

Edward D. Hollander, national director of Americans for Democratic Action, asserted the school board is showing no inclination to equalize conditions in the two school divisions. He said a crisis had been reached in efforts "to do away with discrimination in Washington and in the United States."

New Attitude Urged.

Mrs. Carolyn Stewart, 417 T street N.W., co-chairman of the committee that organized the meeting, said Dr. Butcher's stand on the school board was representative of those opposing inequalities and segregation. She expressed hope for a change in future recommendations by Dr. Corning and the voting of the board.

Gardner L. Bishop, president of the Consolidated Parent Group, which brought the current case challenging District school segregation in the Supreme Court, also spoke. Mrs. Burma Whitted, who presided, introduced Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, veteran Negro leader, and Dr Ellis O. Knox, head of the education department at Howard University.

No mention was made of last weeks' request by the District branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for the resignation of Dr. Butcher's two Negro colleagues on the board, Col. West A. Hamilton and Wesley S. Williams.

At the January 20 School Board meeting, there was actually no vote refusing to acknowledge that the colored and white divisions are unequal. Dr. Butcher proposed two motions that the board declare itself unable to end inequalities. Both failed because no one seconded them.

Dr. Corning, at the same meeting, said he would be happy to answer Mrs. Butcher's 44 questions, but the board ignored his remark and did not so instruct him. The vote on this was 5 to 4.

Deadline Set For Equalization Of Education In Nation's Capitol

Board Issues Mandate To Supt. Of Schools

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 4.—(DSN)—A deadline has been set for the equalization of education in the nation's capital city, as a result of the action of the board of education, which last week called upon School Supt. Hobart M. Corning to correct any existing inequalities between Negro and white schools in the District of Columbia by Jan. 20, 1954.

Six of the nine members of the board voted for a mandate authorizing the superintendent to use whatever methods possible to equalize school facilities.

Only one member of the board opposed the mandate with two members not voting.

Supt. Corning told the board later that he was prepared to transfer the salaries for 54 white teachers to be used for the employment of Negro teachers. But, he said, this cannot be done until the first of February when mid-semester classes are organized.

Prior to the vote on equalization, Col. West Hamilton, another Negro member, took the floor to consider the proposal. His remarks were directed to the board heard two hours discussion by parents who urged the transfer of several white schools to the use of Negro schools. This, he said, is the only solution to the overcrowding problem.

Dr. Margaret Butcher, the newest Negro member of the board moved that Supt. Corning correct the existing inequalities by Feb. 1.

He expressed his awareness of unequal facilities and his approval of integrated schools, but, he added, "under the law, the operation of the dual school system is

Plan Calls For Fall Integration at Tech

By Dave Kelly
Staff Reporter

Both Negro and white students probably will participate in varsity athletics at McKinley Tech High School next fall.

This came into prospect yesterday when Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, recommended that Armstrong High School and McKinley Tech begin integration in September.

Definite plans for such a step are expected to be formulated at a meeting of the Board of Education next Wednesday.

Integration of McKinley and Armstrong would make McKinley the first member of the old Division I high school grouping to abandon segregation.

McKinley's football schedule for next fall calls for games with Eastern, Roosevelt, Anacostia, Coolidge, Bell and Wilson.

"I believe we'll have both Negro and white students on the McKinley Tech football team this fall," Hardy L. Pearce, assistant director of athletics for Division I schools said, "but we won't know for sure until after the Board of Education meets next Wednesday."

The enrollment at McKinley has fallen to an all-time low of 750 students. Five years ago approximately 1700 attended Tech.

"Plans are being discussed to combine all the schools under one division," Pearce added, "but it probably won't come into being until 1955 when both Divisions I and II have played out their commitments for the coming year."

At the Board of Education it was said: "In all probability, integration won't be brought into effect in all the District high schools until 1955, but Tech does have room for Negro students and Armstrong's overcrowded conditions prompted Corning's suggestion."

Corning also proposed the dropping of race bars at Wilson Teachers and Miner Teachers Colleges.

Dr. Walter E. Hager, president of Wilson Teachers College, said he'd "made the suggestion to Corning, and I imagine Wilson and Miners will play each other in all athletic events with both colored and white athletes playing on each team."

Timing Issue Is Raised in Plan On Integration

Some Members Of School Board See Conflict With Policy

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

A key question of timing may have to be resolved before Superintendent Hobart M. Corning's integration plan is accepted by the Board of Education, it developed yesterday.

Some members pressed the view that Corning's plan conflicted with the school board's statement of integration policy on this timing question.

At stake is the question of whether new city-wide school boundaries which are to be established on an integrated basis should be made effective with the start of the new semester next fall or at a later time. Corning's plan visualized the new boundaries goinng into effect no later than September, 1955, rather than September, 1954.

Under Corning's plan, only 18 school zones would be integrated in the fall. In the other school zones, board members pointed out, new students would still be enrolled on a segregated basis in September.

Delay Forecast

Under the plan, students already enrolled (as well as new enrollees in September) would be allowed to stay in their present schools until graduation unless displaced by overcrowding. Some critics, including the Washington Chapter of the Americans for Democratic Action, have argued that this would have the effect of postponing full integration until 1959.

The School Board policy statement promised no discrimination in the relationship of pupils to schools. Strictly speaking, it was pointed out, race would continue to govern enrollments next fall outside of the 18 integrated zones.

For the most part, immediate integration would affect 2700 students who would be channeled out of overcrowded schools into less crowded buildings in their residence area.

At the same time, school officials would draw up new boundaries for all city schools—but these new districts would not be in operation on September 13. They would go into effect throughout the 1954-55 school year at the discretion of school administrators.

Several school board members, as they studied Corning's plan yesterday, wondered if it might be wiser to put new boundaries into operation this fall in all cases where oversize classes would not result.

Example Cited

One board member gave this example of what might occur this fall under Corning's stated plan: A Negro child, seeking admittance to first grade, applied to the school nearest his residence. This school, still operating under the old boundaries of segregation, would have an exclusive white enrollment.

Could school officials order the Negro pupil to attend a more distant school, exclusively Negro, in conformance with the outdated, racially drawn boundaries?

The board member expressed doubt, citing this principle included in the Board of Education's policy statement governing integration:

"No pupil in the public schools shall be favored or discrimated against in any matter or in any manner respecting his or her relationship to the schools of the District of Columbia by reason of race or color."

Another board member pointed out that new admittances to the schools are heaviest in September. Why place beginning pupils in one school this fall and a few months later reboundary them into a different building? the member asked.

"I think the school board will have to decide whether it wants the shifting of thousands of students to take place this fall or later in the year," still another board member said.

Funds Needed

School officals said yesterday that the actual physical reorganization of the dual schools into one system would be impossible by September 13. Such a school board order, they said, could delay school opening, possibly more than a month. Officials pointed to the lack of appropriated funds to hire trucks to shift equipment and supplies, and the time required to redistribute facilities.

Although school officers are subject to call-back from summer leave if needed, such a directive has not been issued by Corning at this time. Neither Corning nor the school board, which normally adjourns July 1 for two months, have decided what summer work schedule may be necessary to carry out integration plans.

Meanwhile yesterday, Commissioner Samuel Spencer followed through on President Eisenhower's personal request for progress reports on District school integration .Spencer sent the White House copies of Corning's integration blueprint and of the school board's policy declaration governing desegregation.

At 10:30 a. . yesterday, Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West met with Corning to continue preparing legislation necessary to allow permanent hiring of teachers on a nonracial basis. Also attending the work session were C. Melvin Sharpe, school board president, and Rowland F. Kirks, chairman of the board's legislation committee.

Dr. Corning's Integration Policy

It is improbable that the Board of Education will support Dr. Corning's plan for integrating the school system by a unanimous vote, as desirable as unanimity on the board might be. Some members may conclude that it goes too fast; others that it goes too slow.

There are two matters of fact, however, which the board should seek to establish at the outset. For if these two facts are established beyond reasonable doubt, the policy announced by Dr. Corning can be examined with greater objectivity with at least some points of controversy eliminated.

Fact No. 1: How much time will be required to draw up new school boundaries, governing future assignment of pupils to schools?

Dr. Corning does not feel that it is physically possible to draw up such boundaries and announce them with all new school assignments before the opening of school next September. There are others who feel that this can be done, and announced well in advance of September.

What is the fact? If it is possible to announce the boundaries by mid-July, that should be done. Parents have every right to this information, as soon as it can be made available.

Fact No. 2: Is it desirable or undesirable (from an educational standpoint) to transfer pupils from one school to another if the only purpose to be served by such transfer is to bring about more rapid and complete integration?

Dr. Corning's policy is based on the theory that the less shuffling of school population, the better it will be from the standpoint of the child's education. Therefore, with the exception of transfers made necessary by overcrowding, children may continue to attend the schools to which they are presently assigned until they graduate, regardless of the new boundaries. The child who lives within a newly established school boundary, however, has priority over a child living outside the new boundary, provided there is not school room for both of them.

There may be those who will contend that Dr. Corning's policy in this respect is one of compromise, savoring of "gradualism," and that a wholesale shuffling of pupils from one school to another, in arbitrary conformance with new boundaries, should be made as soon as the boundaries are announced.

What is the fact? Does Dr. Corning's policy mean an unnecessary delay in total integration, or is it a legitimate method of avoiding unnecessary shifts, regarded as undesirable from the educational point of view?

These are questions, it seems to The Star, that the board must answer in deciding on the administrative policy to be followed in integration. The answers should be based on ascertainable facts.

The debate over the principle of segregated schools has been ended by the Supreme Court decision. The schools must be integrated under the supreme law of the land. The only real question now is the best way to bring that about with a minimum of confusion. There are those who may feel that immediate and complete integration is an objective which takes precedence over everything else. A fair interpretation of Dr. Corning's recommended policy is that integration must be effected without delay, but that avoidance of unnecessary transfers of pupils, already enrolled in schools which can accommodate them, does not represent "delay."

Ethel Meets Boy Made Immortal By U. S. Supreme Court Decision

By ETHEL PAYNE

WASHINGTON — After the Supreme Court announced its ruling outlawing segregation in public schools, the building went into an uproar. The members of the press went completely wacky. There I was — right in the middle of it and almost out of my mind!

I'm so excited I'm like I'm drunk. I'm turning around like one of those spinning tops.

Later that afternoon, after calming down, I got a cab and went out to 1122 Park Place. That's the home of Mrs. Sarah Bolling who lives here with her two sons, Wanamaker, 16, and Spottswood, 15, a student at Spingarn high school.

Spottswood is the boy who by now has become famous since his name appears on the legal brief as "Spottswood Bolling et al" of the case brought by the Consolidated Parents Group of the District of Columbia in 1950.

STARTED IN 1950

Sarah Bolling took her son on a September day in 1950 to seek admission to the Sousa Junior high school. He was refused admission and the historic case then got under way.

Over the loud speaker system at Spingarn high school had come a message to Spottswood from his mother for him to come home as soon as school was out. Sarah Bolling refuses to let his regular schedule be interrupted for anything. The message was followed by an announcement from the principal that "The Supreme Court has struck out segregation all over the land."

A TOM SAWYER

"Shucks," pouted Spottswood, a lithe, gangly boy with a ready grin who excels in athletics. "Those reporters will be back again." Spottswood did a Tom Sawyer and ducked to the baseball game. He didn't want any more publicity. He'd had enough last Fall.

Over at the General Service administration where widow Bolling works as a book binder to support her household, (her husband died six years ago) her supervisor came and told her that the office was being flooded with telephone calls and that she could go home whenever she got ready.

The house on Park place is a modest row home, unpretentious, immaculately kept. Outside a cordon of photographers and reporters kept an alert vigil. There are only a few colored families in the block and the neighborhood kids camped on the doorstep to wait for "Spotts." About 5:15 Spottswood sauntered around the corner. He spotted the photographers and started to back up. "Heck," he said, "I thought those guys would give up and go home."

LOCAL HERO

The kids crowded around him. "Hey Spotts you're a hero. Gee, it's swell. Now we can get a team together and nobody can stop us."

The boys went to work and finally it was over with and the widow could sit down to talk about this things.

"At first, I couldn't realize that it had really happened," she said. "It's been a long hard struggle, but it's faith which has kept us going." She wanted the credit to go to the Consolidated Parents as they were the ones who had worked so hard.

FROM ROCKY MOUNT

The family came from Rocky Mount, N. C. Mrs. Bolling attends the Jerusalem Baptist church. "I'm not a religious fanatic," she said, "but I do know that only with God's help can all things be possible."

Wistfully, she said she didn't want to stir up any antagonism because there were some people who resented her persistence and had tried hard to discourage her from letting her boy be used as the test case.

"I'm so happy it's over with and wasn't it wonderful that it was unanimous? I wish that all the people could understand that it's only that we want for our children the same rights as any other human beings. If we can't live together down here, how do we expect to live together in Heaven. I think it's a wonderful thing for this country. Now we can hold up our heads before the world."

SPOTTSWOOD BOLLING.

Boy, 15, Plays Dred Scott In School Ruling

By Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—If Spottswood T. Bolling is impressed by the role he's playing in history, he certainly doesn't show it.

The 15-year-old youth is the principal in the Supreme Court action that yesterday brought about the abolishment of segregation schools in the District of Columbia.

"It's good and will help the future race," is just about his only comment.

He got involved in 1951 when a group of Negro parents decided to protest the transfer of their children to an old school building which had been reopened.

SOUTHERN EDUCATORS TO MEET IN ATLANTA

Segregation Chief Topic As 50 Top Officials Convene

FIRST SESSION MONDAY

From The Commercial Appeal
Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Sept. 1. — Problems resulting from the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in public schools will be the principal topic for discussion at a meeting of 50 top school officials from 11 states in Atlanta Monday and Tuesday.

Attending will be chief school officers and members of state boards of education from Tennessee, Mississippi, Kentucky, Alabama, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia and Florida.

Tennesseans To Attend

Tentatively scheduled to attend from Tennessee are State Education Commissioner Quill E. Cope, Fred Elliott of Memphis, Chester Parham of Jackson, Norman Frost of Nashville, Will Webb of Bell Buckle, Sam Wilson of Loudon and Mrs. Ferdinand Powell of Johnson City. All are members of the State Board of Education.

The meeting, which will be held in the Dinkler-Plaza Hotel in Atlanta, is sponsored by the Southern States Co-operative Program in Educational Administration with headquarters at Peabody College here.

Dr. Truma Pierce, director of the SCPEA, said the decision to take up segregation as the principal subject was made after he polled members last March and learned "the overwhelming opinion favored study of this problem.

Ashmore to Speak

Three members of the SCPEA staff will report on studies which have been made in various aspects of segregation. They are Dr. James B. Kincheloe, Dr. Galen Drewry and Dr. Bennie Carmichael, all of Nashville.

Harry Ashmore, Little Rock editor and author of "The Negro and the Schools," will make a report and Cecil Sims, Nashville attorney, will discuss "some legal aspects of the Supreme Court's decision as a lawyer sees it."

Another report will be made on a survey of Florida schools to sample reaction to the high court's ruling.

Dr. Pierce said there would probably be no major recommendations or decisions to result from the meeting, that the officials would simply discuss the problem from their individual standpoints.

Florida Aide Raps Negro Move For Immediate Desegregation

Attorney General Warns of Threat To State's Public School System

By CHARLES HESSER
Staff Writer, Miami Daily News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., Aug. 21—Unless the desegregation program is put into effect very gradually the Florida Legislature "would seriously consider and probably abolish the public school system," is the belief of State Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin.

This opinion was reached by Ervin following a survey of the reaction of Florida leaders, including legislators, to United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

Ervin's statement came on the eve of an announcement by the Miami attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that the NAACP plans to seek admittance for Negro children to white schools throughout Florida next month.

Action "Premature"

The attorney general said he thought this contemplated action "premature as the U. S. Supreme Court has not supplemented its segregation ruling and any precipitate action of this kind appears rash and harmful."

Thomas D. Bailey, state school superintendent, said he believed the move was "unfortunate and I regret that they are attempting to force the issue so fast."

The strong stand on the part of the legislators was surprising as up until the survey, only one member, since defeated for re-election, had publicly backed such a course.

Questionnaires were sent to 176 legislators, which included outgoing, hold-over and new members of the state assembly. A total of 79 answered the inquiries.

They were asked to indicate which of five courses they believed should be followed by next year's Legislature.

Variety of Answers

Thirty-two of those replying voted to preserve segregation indefinitely in Florida schools by whatever means possible; eight favored legislation to preserve segregation for a few more years, contemplating eventual desegregation, but permitting time for developing public acceptance; four advocated voluntary compliance with the high court decision after consultations between county school officials and parents; 18 agreed that legal machinery should be set up to permit gradual adjustment on a local (county) option basis, with provision for interracial committees; and 10 said no legislative action should be taken. The remainder said they had not as yet formed opinions.

The survey was made by an interracial committee organized by Ervin and financed by a $10,000 emergency state appropriation to aid the attorney general in drawing up a brief to be presented to the Supreme Court in October. The court asked Southern states to give their opinions on how and when the ban on school segregation should be put into effect.

Ervin said he would attach a copy of the result of the survey, which together with tables is expected to run more than 100 pages, to his brief for examination by the court.

Studies by Universities

The study was made under the direction of the state's three big universities—the University of Florida, Florida State University and the University of Miami.

A total of 8,000 questionnaires were sent out to white and Negro leaders in all walks of life throughout Florida. More than half were returned. In addition, special field teams interviewed white leaders in 10 counties selected as representative of the state as a whole from big Dade County to rural counties with small populations. Negro leaders were interviewed in five of these counties.

As for other Florida leaders—the legislators were sent special questionnaires—a majority of both white and Negro citizens favored a gradual carrying out of the court's order. However, Negroes feel the process should begin sooner and be completed more quickly than do the white leaders.

A minority of about 30 per cent of the white leaders, according to the survey, "violently disagreed" with the court and said they "would refuse to cooperate with any move to end segregation or would actively oppose it."

A minority of both white and Negro citizens anticipate "serious violence to result from desegregation attempts" and there was found "widespread lack of confidence in the ability of peace officers to maintain law and order if serious violence does start."

Peace officers themselves share this attitude. Of 1,029 officers responding to questionnaires, 836 felt they couldn't maintain order if serious violence arose while only 193 believed they could.

"It is evident from this survey," commented Ervin, "that Florida is not ready for immediate desegregation in public education. This report indicates that these problems can only be worked out through a gradual transition with the primary responsibility for determining the 'when and how' resting with local communities."

The interracial committee indicated a Supreme Court decree recognizing local problems and allowing a gradual transition would provide the best chance of developing firm official and, perhaps, public support of any program of desegregation.

It was found that the problems, which will be occasioned by integration of the races, will vary greatly from one community to another.

GEORGIA'S INFLUENCE FELT

PTA Asked To Stand By Florida's Public Schools

TAMPA — (AP) — The Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers which begins its annual convention here Tuesday will be asked to stand behind the state's public school system.

Continuance of the public school system is one of the proposed planks in the 1954-55 PTA program.

This proposal has added significance because of last week's vote in neighboring Georgia, where a constitutional amendment to set up a private school system was adopted.

Also in the public school plank is a proposal that problems raised by desegregation be solved by individual and "local group responsibility for building the requisite understanding and emotional climate."

The state PTA group holds its first session tonight, when Dr. Doak S. Campbell, president of FSU, will speak. The convention ends Thursday night.

Nominated for two of the group's vice presidents are Mrs. S. P. Burton of Sparr and Mrs. Hugh Peters of Miami. Other nominations will be made later.

Integration Move Pleasing to Ervin

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— Florida Attorney General Richard Ervin said Wednesday he is glad the Eisenhower administration has urged the United States Supreme Court to allow federal courts to supervise school integration on a local basis.

"I am happy that they have accepted in part our theory o local determination," said Ervin. "I feel that not only the federal district courts but the state circuit courts should have jurisdiction also."

Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns was not available for immediate comment. Two weeks ago Johns requested the Southern Governors Conference to petition the President to call a special session of Congress to authorize a national referendum but the governors refused to take any official stand on segregation.

Quick Desegregation Opposed In Miami Area, Survey Shows

Efforts to Push Issue Might Lead To Violence, Report Declares

By CHARLES HESSER
Staff Writer, The Miami Daily News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 4—It had been anticipated that big Dade County (Miami), home to more transplanted northerners than any other section of the state, would lead the way in Florida in public school desegregation.

But, the Dade County phase of a statewide survey on the problem revealed that the attitude of Dade's 650,000 citizens varied only slightly from the state as a whole despite the county's diversified population.

Results of the study in Dade, released two weeks later than for the rest of the state, disclosed that a majority of the county's white population agreed in principle with the U.S. Supreme Court decision abolishing segregation but was opposed to it in practice.

Conditional Acceptance

The survey teams found that most Dade residents, both white and Negro, will abide by the ruling if integration is handled gradually.

But, it was also learned there is a distinct possibility that groups with "loosely formed convictions" can be driven into active opposition by early and abrupt transition.

These general conclusions were reached by the survey team of the University of Miami following the study:

1. Serious violence is anticipated if the court's decision is pushed by any minority group, white or Negro.

2. Virtual agreement existed among those polled that the most explosive areas in Dade would be in the communities highest and lowest on the socio-economic scale.

3. Only a few of those polled thought abolition of the public school system was a practical solution.

4. Some reluctance was noted on the part of the County School Board and other public officials to plan and lead the transition toward integration.

5. The problem of obtaining leadership outside official circles will be made more difficult by the tendency or "perhaps organized campaign of the more violently pro - segregationists" to identify such leadership with the Communist party.

The researchers reported that serious violence was "inevitable" if large-scale integration were to be attempted within the next year or two.

"Such violence would be perpetrated by a small segment of the population and would take the form of bombing of homes, hit-and-run shooting and individual beatings rather than lynchings and other more openly organized activities," it was noted in the survey report.

A belief also exists that violence is inevitable no matter how gradual the transition. However, it is felt the more gradual the transition, the more moderate and less frequent would be the outbreaks of violence.

Many leaders interviewed agreed that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People would do the entire cause of integration "immeasurable harm" should it seek to push the decision by test cases the coming school year.

But, the survey's small sampling of Negro leaders indicated there will be no organized plan to demand, by means of suits or otherwise, immediate action if state and local officials indicate they are planning in good faith and "with reasonable promptitude" the method of implementation which will be decreed by the Supreme Court this fall.

Other Points

Significant numbers of persons interviewed in all categories "minimized the difficulties that might arise among the younger children, but it was recognized that violent parental attitudes might change the situation radically."

"At the same time," the report went on, "the belief was widely expressed that social activities in junior and senior high schools would give rise to considerably more trouble, if not among students, then certainly among the parents."

Any consideration of a scheme to initiate integration in the first grade, it was reported, would be forced to take into account the fact that among the white teachers polled, first grade teachers were most resistant to the idea of desegregation.

It was found that 77 per cent of white leaders polled agreed in principle with the court's decision. This percentage was made up of 42 per cent of the leaders who believed that while the decision should have been made eventually, people are not yet ready for it. A total of 35 per cent indicated a more firm agreement with the decision.

Threat of Violence

The minority who disagreed with the decision in principle constituted 23 per cent of the county leadership, but only a handful of this group indicated any willingness to actively oppose the integration process.

Peace officers polled indicated considerable confidence in their ability to maintain law and order under any circumstances. This differed radically with a poll of law enforcement officers made in the state at large. Except in Dade County, most of the officers said they didn't believe they could cope with widespread violence.

Although an area of misunderstanding exists within each race as to the feelings of the other about segregation, it is thought that this is less marked in Dade County than was indicated for the state as a whole.

A small minority in the Dade Negro community without question oppose integration in the schools and others, among the majority, who strongly favor the court decision, are concerned about the practical problem of desegregation as it will affect the Negroes.

'Confusion' Clarified By Thomas

Will Operate Under Present State Law

By JAMES MILLER
Herald Staff Writer

There will be no desegregation when Dade county schools reopen Tuesday, Sept. 7, Supt. W. R. Thomas said Saturday.

Seeking to clarify "confusion and misunderstanding as to what is legally demanded of schools at this time," Supt. Thomas said "the schools will open under exactly the same conditions as have prevailed heretofore."

They will operate under Florida's constitution and laws of the state, "in view of the Supreme Court's not (having) instructed the states as to how and when" integration actually will take place.

"It may be desirable," the superintendent said, "for me to restate the comment on this matter which I made to our personnel during the post-school conference:

"During the next few months, there will be much discussion about the Supreme Court's decision abolishing segregation.

"It is my opinion that this is not the time for hurried thinking or hasty action. The court has asked that the Attorney General of each state affected present a brief in October as to how and when.

"The next step will probably be on the state level, action by the legislature and the state board of education. It is my belief that any change of this magnitude will require a period of considerable time.

"Until a comprehensive study and a recommendation for a course of procedure is made on the state level, I do not anticipate any deviation from present policies. It behooves each of us at this particular time to exercise discretion and good judgment."

"At the opening meeting of our school principals on Aug. 23, I issued instructions to this effect to all of our principals and administrative personnel:

"If either White or Negro students present themselves for registration in schools not now open to them, meet them courteously, but give them this definite information.

"Under the constitution and laws of Florida, Negro students cannot be enrolled in White schools, and White students cannot be enrolled in Negro schools.

"In other words, the Dade County schools will of necessity open under the same laws and regulations that we have followed in previous years. If a student or parent wishes to argue the question, simply refer him to the office of the superintendent.

"I would like further to suggest to you principals that you carefully instruct all your school staff—teachers, custodians, cafeteria workers, all, that students and parents who come to the school on this question be referred without any discussion directly to the principal.

"I am asking that you principals handle the matter as I have just stated. It is imperative that all employes deal courtesouly with all inquiries about registration, but that the principal himself interview each person involved."

FLORIDA

Integration Issue Hot Debate In Southland

MIAMI—(ANP)—An announcement by the NAACP, issued through its local attorney that the organization plans to seek admittance of Negro children to white schools throughout Florida last week drew a quick warning from State Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin unless desegregation is affected gradually, the Florida Legislature "would seriously consider and probably abolish the public school system."

Ervin's opinion on the legislature is said to be based on a survey conducted by three leading Florida universities—the University of Florida, Florida State university and the University of Miami—to ascertain reaction to the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision forbidding segregation in the nation's public schools.

But although the survey is reported to have been conducted among legislators and Negro and white leaders, the strong attitude of the legislature regarding the threat to abolish the schools was not evident until the NAACP action was disclosed. Up until the eve of the announcement, only one legislator, since defeated for re-election, had supported such a course.

Meanwhile, there were sideline reports that the survey showed that the majority of Negro and white leaders favored gradual integration. Negroes, however feel it should begin sooner and be completed quicker than do the whites.

Meanwhile, in other quarters of the South and Southeast, desegregation became the subject of a hot debate.

Form North Carolina came the report that Gov. William B. Umstead and his advisory committee are trying to work out a policy to strengthen and preserve the state's public school system. "The problem as I see it is to establish a policy and a program which will preserve the state public school system by having the support of the people," the governor stated.

In the background, however, was a report, compiled at the governor's request by the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill, which outlined three possible courses to the state:

1. Obey the high court order;
2 Leave it up to the Supreme court to enforce the ruling, and
3 Stall for time in which to study plans of action.

At Sumtor, N. C. the Farm Bureau and the States Rights League held a joint meeting to work out means and ways of maintaining segregation in schools.

Richmond, Va. —The Dinwiddie County Board of Supervisors sent a resolution to Governor Stanley requesting him "to take such action as may be lawful and necessary for the continuation of a segregated public school system in the state."

In Hobbs, N. M., the Rev. Bill Carter, a Baptist minister and leader of a group called the "segregationists," filed suit against the local school board which has ordered the end of separation of Negro and white students. His action was seen as a move for delay.

Rev. Carter said that hundreds of parents have pledged themselves to keep their children out of the schools unless the board reverses itself.

The one hopeful note came from Nashville, Tenn. where the Davidson County Board of Education authorized Supt. J. E. Moss to set up a biracial committee of educators to recommend a plan for complying with the Supreme Court's decision.

The board's action followed the reading of an NAACP letter asking the board to begin a program of desegregation, and to appoint a committee of citizens for the purpose of working with the NAACP in meeting the problem.

UM Researchers Report

Caution Advised On Mixing Races In Dade Schools

By DON CLAPROOD
Herald Staff Writer

See stories on Page 6-A and 1-B

Integration in the schools is "doomed to fail unless the transition is very gradual and approached cautiously," a three-man University of Miami research team reported to Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin Saturday.

Competent officials have been reluctant to take initial steps for fear of the possibility of being branded "Communist," asserted the UM group consisting of Dr. Donald R. Lawson, Professor Edward Sofen and Dr. T. J. Wood.

The UM professors conducted an opinion survey in connection with fulfilling Ervin's request for a report to assist him in preparing a brief for the United States Supreme court.

The court has asked state attorneys general for suggestions on how to carry out the historic ruling abolishing segregation of Whites and Negroes in public schools.

The report to Ervin said the problem of obtaining qualified leaders to carry out the transitional steps will be made more difficulty by a tendency — or perhaps an "organized campaign"—among some pro-segregationists to brand such leadership "Communist."

The survey, which is not an official UM report, pointed out that if the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, or any other organized group, should seek to push the court's decision by test cases this fall, "immeasurable harm would be done to the entire cause of integration of the schools."

Interviews showed the majority of the White population in Dade county is opposed to the decision as a practical matter.

Most, however, indicated they would go along with the court if integration is handled gradually and with an adequate period of preparation, the report stated.

Virtually complete agreement exists, the researchers said, that the most explosive area would be in the county's northwest section. The greatest proportion of southern-born Whites live in that area.

Next most dangerous, although not necessarily violent, were such places as Coral Gables and Miami Shores, in the upper income scale, the survey indicated.

Findings recorded after a survey of Negro leaders showed that a small minority, without question, opposes integration.

A sizeable majority favors the decision but is concerned about the practical problems involved and would accept a gradual approach so long as the White leaders act in good faith and with reasonable speed.

The research team stated that the school board and other top school administrative personnel have thus far given little attention to the problems raised by the decision and will require time simply to handle the mechanical issues involved.

Parents questioned were of the opinion, the report said, that the greatest difficulty would be at the junior and senior high school levels due to social activities, athletics and other extra-curricular events.

Gradual use of non-social extra-curricular mingling was seen as the best means to eventual integration, they concluded.

UNC Editor Says:

Desegregation 'No Problem'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Nov. 18 (UP)—A poll of campus newspapers in the South revealed today that a majority of Southern college students believe racial integration should be gradual in order to avoid trouble.

However, a few schools such as the Universities of North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas, seemed ready to accept the change now if necessary.

The poll was conducted by Florida State University's campus newspaper Flambeau, which said the survey of 11 schools reflected the views of editorial staffs at the various colleges as a result of letters, individual polls and general campus reaction.

Most of the opposition to desegregation expressed was centered at Mississippi State and the Universities of Alabama, Florida, Georgia and to a slightly lesser degree at Emory University, Atlanta.

If classroom segregation is to be abolished, "gradual integration is to be desired," Alabama Editor Bill Rascoe said. Art Smith, editor of the Florida Alligator, held much the same view and called for "time and patience."

Carron Dadisman, editor at the University of Georgia, said a majority of students there would be opposed to admitting Negroes at this time.

Wayne Smith of Mississippi State said it may be many years before integration would "even be feasible" there. He called for abolishment of public schools as a last-resort measure against integration.

The editorial staff of Auburn split with editor Carmer Robinson and managing editor Ronald Owen. While Robinson and Owen favored integration, the rest of the staff thought it would cause "racial friction" that might take 10 to 20 years to overcome.

The editorial board at Emory in Atlanta favored gradual integration but editor T. Elkin Taylor said the student body "as a whole probably would be about two to one against it."

Editor Charles Kuralt of the University of North Carolina said many students are in favor of "quick integration . . . and almost everyone in Chapel Hill agrees that desegregation will be no problem when it comes, whether next week or five years away."

Editor John Parker of North Carolina State's paper said students appear to feel Negroes should be admitted for courses not available at the State Negro college.

Tennessee editor Harvey Sproul said students voted four to one in a sample poll in favor of gradual integration. And a student poll at Texas, according to editor Shirley Strum, indicated some disapproval but few violent objections to mixed classes.

State Ready To Argue Segregation

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— Florida plans to take advantage of the United States Supreme Court's offer to give states appearing as "friends of the court" in the anti-segregation hearing one hour apiece of oral arguments.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum, who has been preparing Florida's brief on the question of how and when the court's segregation ruling should become effective, said it has not been decided who will present the argument.

Florida was not directly involved in the court's May ruling outlawing racial segregation in the public schools but accepted the court's invitation to file a "friend of the court" brief.

The briefs originally were to be filed with the court by Oct. 1 but the court has set the filing date ahead to Nov. 15. Florida's brief already is being printed and will not be altered unless late developments make a supplementary brief advisable, Odum said.

Integration to Stay, Fla. Official Warns

MIAMI — Refuting claims by "rabble-rousers ... demagogues" that Florida would defy the Supreme Court decision, Attorney General Richard Ervin said integration in the schools is here to stay and people of the South have to learn to live with it.

Ervin spoke to the Civic League of Miami Beach, summarized the brief his office filed with the United States Supreme Court and said people of Florida "want to live within the law."

HIS BRIEF requests that the high court give Florida sufficient time to adapt to the historic school segregation ruling.

Stating that, "if we fight one decision we may fight others, and when you do that

... have some form of anarchy," the attorney general said Florida is going to "stand up for law and order no matter what happens."

Ervin declared he could see the dangers of some states trying to throw out their public school systems in favor of private schools and warned that the South has got to give desegregation "a try" even though the majority of the people are "completely hostile" against it.

Florida Town Baffled By Race Of Children

MOUNT DORA, Fla. — Sheriff Willie McCall, self-constituted arch enemy of Negro rights is in the racial spotlight again.

McCall touched off an explosive incident here when he caused the barring of 7 children, members of the Platt family, from the white public school here, solely on his belief that they have Negro blood.

The same children have previously attended a white school in Holly Hill, S. C., where they had been regarded as white.

McCall, prior to this situation, had already made headlines in shootings of two handcuffed prisoners — Samuel Shepherd and Walter Lee Irvin — in the infamous Groveland "Little Scottsboro" cases.

He recently associated himself with the abortive attempts of Bryant Bowles and the National Association of White People to thwart the Supreme Court desegregation edict.

McCall joined Bowles in a Milford, Dela., mass meeting designed to stir up anti-desegregation feeling.

The Platt youngsters, four girls and three boys, ranging in age from 6 to 15, were suspended from school by the Lake County School Board without a hearing or investigation, simply on the strength of Sheriff McCall's word. The board forbade them to attend school, "pending further investigation."

Supervising School Principal D. D. Roseborough commented that the children "seem to be of an apparently mixed race." He added that school officials at Holly Hill, South Carolina, wrote him in reply to a letter that the Platt children attended a special elementary school when they lived in Holly Hill. Roseborough revealed the Platt family had also tried to get the children into Orange County schools. When authorities there learned of the situation, they refused to admit them, he alleged.

The children, whose parents are Mr. and Mrs. Alan Platt, are dark-skinned. They contend they are of Indian ancestry.

McCall has singled out 13-year-old Laura Belle because of the shape of her nose which the Sheriff says indicates Negro blood.

G. E. Brant, Holly Hills school superintendent, praised the children's father as "a fine fellow" and declared the children were good students. He said the family has Croata Indian and Irish blood, dating back to 1587, when members of Sir Walter Raleigh's "lost colony" apparently intermarried with the tribe.

The family came to Florida in October after selling their South Carolina farm.

Platt declared: "I was so poor I couldn't make a living at farming and take care of my big family." He is working here as an orange picker.

When the children were first enrolled in Mount Dora's school, other students were told by teachers that the children were Indian and Irish. This was done after the sheriff began his investigation and rumors went around the school that the Platts were Negroes imported into Mount Dora to test the effect of the recent Supreme Court desegregation edict.

Marriage license of the parents attests that Alan Platt and Laura Dangerfield were registered by J. M. Hughes, judge of Orangeburg County, South Carolina, as whites.

Fla. against integration, Afro-American poll will accept, poll reveal

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON — (NNPA) — While 75 per cent of Florida's white leadership opposes the Supreme Court's desegregation decision in principle, only 30 per cent say they will refuse to cooperate with the move to end segregation or actively oppose it.

These facts were revealed in a poll conducted by Richard W. Ervin, Florida attorney general at a cost of $10,000 to find out the views of colored and white people in Florida toward mixed public schools.

THE SURVEY points up in great detail the expected reluctance on the part of law enforcement officers to prevent violence stemming from mixing of the races in schools and the opposition of school officials.

The fact that the results of the poll are included in Florida's brief to the Supreme Court would seem to indicate that Florida officials hope the court may be induced to "go slow" in ordering desegregation in the South's public schools.

The poll was made under supervision of an interracial advisory committee that included in its membership Dr. Gilbert Parker, state teachers association head; Dr. Richard Moore, Bethune-Cookman president, and Dr. George W. Gore, Florida A. and M. University head.

— o O o —

MOST SIGNIFICANT points brought out in the survey follow:

1. While a majority of the white persons polled opposed the desegregation decision, most of them indicated that they were willing to do what the courts and school officials decided.

2. A large majority of colored people acclaimed the decision as being right.

3. Only a small minority of both colored and white leaders advocated immediate and complete desegregation, the majority favoring a gradual approach, the whites for a long and colored a short period of time.

— o O o —

4. THERE ARE definite differences of views between regions, counties, communities and sections of communities as to whether desegregation can be accomplished, even gradually, without conflict and public disorders.

Variations shown by the poll suggest that in some communities desegregation could be undertaken now, if local leadership so decided, but that in others wide-spread social disorders might result.

5. While a majority of both white and colored leadership expect "serious violence" to occur if desegregation is attempted, there is a widespread lack of confidence in the ability of peace officers to maintain law and order. This is especially true of peace officers themselves, except in Dade County.

— o O o —

6. OPPOSITION OF peace officers to desegregation, lack of confidence in their ability to maintain law and order in the face of violent resistance and the existence of a positive relationship between these two opinions, indicate that less than firm positive action to prevent public disorders might be expected from the police, especially in some communities.

Elected officials, county and school, also show a high degree of opposition.

Steps shown to be necessary to accomplish efficient desegregation are:

(1) a clear and unequivocal statement of policy; (2) firm enforcement of the changed policy and persistence in its execution in the face of initial resistance; (3) a willingness to deal with violations, attempted violations and incitement to violations;

— o O o —

(4) A REFUSAL by authorities to resort to, engage in or tolerate subterfuges, gerrymandering or other devices to evade desegregation, and (5) an appeal to individuals in terms of religious principles of brotherhood and acceptance of the American tradition of fair play and equal justice.

7. In view of the feelings of white people that immediate desegregation would not work, the chances of developing firm official and public support would be increased by a decree which would create the feeling that the court recognizes local problems and will allow a gradual changeover with some degree of local determination.

8. Many white children would be likely withdrawn from public schools by their parents and sent to private schools, particuly by families in the higher-income brackets, resulting in a form of "socio-economic class segregation."

— o O o —

9. A VAST AREA of misunderstanding as to each other's feelings exist between white and colored people. White leaders believe colored people are much more satisfied with segregation than they are aand colored leaders believe that whites are much more willing to accept integration gracefully than they are.

It is suggested as a first step by both white and colored leaders that positive cooperative steps be taken to breach this gap and establish better understanding between the two groups

FLORIDA

The sheriff said he visited the school Thursday and talked with L. B. Chastain, teacher and member of the board.

"I had a very friendly conversation with Chastain," McCall said. "One newspaper implied I had threatened the school. That is definitely not true. I haven't threatened anyone and I'm not going to."

Chastain said he did not consider the visit a threat.

The school has announced it will enroll the Platt children once their legal status is cleared up. It said it would conduct its own investigation of the case.

Platt, an orange picker, said he and his wife are a mixture of Cherokee Indian and Irish American, and that the children attended White schools when the family lived in South Carolina.

Suit Likely In Florida School Case

MOUNT DORA, Fla. — (AP) — Sheriff Willis V. McCall said Sunday criminal or civil actions may be brought if the Allan Platt children — who he contends have Negro blood — are admitted to the Christian Home and Bible School here.

But, he added, he has no objections if the private White school sends teachers to the Platt home.

Sheriff Dislikes Olive Skins, Child's Nose-Bars 5 From School

(The following article was reprinted from the Washington Post and Times Herald. The writer of the article and former Washington newspaperman and author of the 1947 best-seller, "Mr. Adams," and other novels.)

BY PAT FRANK

MOUNT DORA, Fla. —In an act reminiscent of Hitler's Germany, five children of English-Irish-Indian ancestry have been evicted from public school here because their skin is of olive complexion.

The youngsters were barred from attending classes after Lake County Sheriff Willis McCall suspected they might have Negro blood in their veins. Birth certificates attesting the children are white have gone ignored.

McCall received wide publicity in 1951 for the fatal shooting of a Negro prisoner and the wounding of another. McCall was transporting the pair, convicted in the controversial Groveland, Fla., rape trial, to Tavares, the county seat, for a hearing on a retrial when Sam Shepherd was killed and Lee Irvin was wounded.

TEAMED WITH BOWLES

McCall said he killed Shepherd after he and Irvin attacked him in an escape attempt. Irvin contended that McCall ordered the two out of the car to fix a tire, and then shot them. A Lake County coroner's jury ruled the killing justifiable.

McCall is also an active lieutenant of Bryant Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People. Two months ago he was heralded in Milford, Del., by Bowles as a "hero" to a crowd protesting integration. At that time, Bowels boasted that McCall had signed up 1000 members in the NAAWP, including six county and three circuit judges.

Bowles is here to establish a Lake County chapter of the NAAWP under McCall's sponsorship.

The youngsters barred from their classrooms are the 15 year old son and four daughters, 6 to 13, of Allan and Laura Platt, whose ancestors included Croatan Indians from the settlement founded by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1587. Platt is a hard-working orange picker who moved here from Holly Hill, S. C., where the children attended a white school.

Their trouble started last month when a local theater manager ejected an older son, Densell, 17, after a woman patron complained that she was sitting behind a Negro. Denzell showed the manager his birth certificate attesting he was white.

Because of their dark skin, the Platts find it expedient to keep a birth certificate in their pockets at all times. But the manager insisted that Denzell leave, and Denzell left without protesting.

MUST STAY HOME

The Platts decided to ignore the incident, but a few days later Sheriff McCall appeared. He charged that the children were Negroes. Platt denied it. McCall ordered the children to line up against a wall and photographed them, refusing to tell the father what the pictures were for. Then he left.

The sheriff reappeared, according to the Platts, with School principal D. D. Roseborough. Mrs. Platt was pleased when the principal complimented her on the cleanliness of her home, and the behavior of the children, Raymond, Laurabelle, Esther, Linda and Violet.

But then, she said, Sheriff McCall pointed to the 13 year old and remarked, "I don't like the shape of that one's nose."

There was a conference, and Roseborough told the mother the children would have to stay home "until the sheriff is satisfied."

The children have now been out of school for more than three weeks. County Superintendent C. A. Vaughn said they would have to stay out of school "until there is further investigation." It seems unlikely that school authorities will take any action contrary to the wishes of Sheriff McCall.

EDITOR THREATENED

However, a staunch believer in civil rights, a courageous woman editor has started a hard fight to seek justice for the children.

She is Mrs. Mabel Reese, editor of the weekly Mount Dora Topic, who has been threatened, a cross burned in front of her home and her dog killed by poison since she began to take editorial exception to the anti-Negro activities of county officials.

She took the case to the U. S. Attorney for the Southern Florida District, James Guilmartin, of Miami. Yesterday he assured her that the FBI has already started preliminary investigation into the possible violation of Civil Rights.

In a recent editorial she pleaded, "If you are a parent, look at your own child and think what it would mean to you if an adult said 'I do not like your child's nose and thereby decree that your child could not associate with other children and you must take him out of that association.'

Her latest account of the five Platt children was accompanied by an editorial relating the past record of Bowles, the NAAWP president.

Bowles marched into the newspaper office yesterday and announced he would boycott the paper. Mrs. Reese said she was out of the office at the time, but her husband, Paul, publisher of the paper, was in.

Bowles, bearing a copy of Mrs. Reese's editorial, scrawled the word "lie," across the article, she said.

BOWLES THREATENS

Then he turned to her husband, she said, and warned, "I will get even by some means or other, even boycott, even if I have to stay in this county for two years."

Mount Dora is a quiet and lovely town ringed by lakes, which has attracted many well-to-do northern residents.

The modern buildings of its fine combination elementary and high school spread over four blocks. Retired oldsters throng its shuffleboard and bowling greens nightly.

The town supports an excellent little theater. The owners of groves have become rich since the boom of frozen citrus. Extreme poverty is unknown, as is public indignation.

As for the plight of the Platt children, the "best people" do not care to comment. No local lawyer has come forward to protest their civil rights, although under any law, except perhaps, the Nazi racial decrees, they appear to have a right to attend school.

FBI Probe Urged in Fla.

FORT DORA, Fla.—The FBI has been asked to probe the ejection from Fort Dora High School of the children of an orange picker who denies being a Negro.

The eviction came about on a complaint by Sheriff Willis McCall.

The investigation was asked by U. S. District Atty. James Gulmartin after the matter had been aired by Mrs. Mabel Reese editor of the Mount Dora Topic a white weekly newspaper.

Mrs. Reese charged that the children of Allan Platt have been dismissed from the Lake County school after officials had bowed to dictation as surely as anyone in Russia ever did.

The notorious Sheriff McCall had requested that the children be refused admission to the school under a Florida state law stating that colored and white children attend separate but equal schools.

Platt, who moved to Florida from Holly Hill, S. C., said neither he nor his wife are of Negro heritage. He said both are a mixture of Cherokee Indian and Irish. His children, he added, attended white schools in South Carolina.

A check substantiated his claim, but at the South Carolina school they were known as Indians.

No law requires exclusion of Indian children from attending schools with whites in Florida.

This is the incident referred to by Bryant Bowles in his inflamatory speeches for the NAAWP last week in several Florida cities, who said there have been several attempts at integration in Florida already.

FBI probing McCall for new civil rights outrage

THE SHERIFF was the center of a storm of controversy when he shot two, killing one. "Groveland four" while escorting the boys on the way to a new trial. He claimed the boys tried to escape. Both of them were heavily chained and shackled when shot by McCall.

MOUNT DORA, Fla. — (ANP) —Sheriff Willis McCall, unrelenting foe of the civil rights colored people was again faced with an investigation of his activity by the FBI.

U.S. Dist. Atty. James Gulmartin said he has called the FBI to investigate whether the Allan Platt children were illegally suspended, Oct. 20, until further notice" by the Lake County School Board, acting on complaints by McCall, who said at he said he would enforce the Florida constitution. McCall said he welcomed an investigation by the FBI. "I've been through it so much I'm used to it," he remarked.

Five of the Platt children were suspended, Oct. 20, until further notice" by the Lake County School Board, acting on complaints by McCall, who said at he said he would enforce the Florida constitution. McCall said he welcomed an investigation by the FBI. "I've been through it so much I'm used to it," he remarked.

Brant, Holly Hill school superintendent, saying the Platts attended a spcial school there which was classified as white and had white instructors, but the children were from the Indian group. None was permitted to attend regular white schools, Walker said he was informed.

Supt. Judson B. Walker said he had a statement from G. E.

Fla. 'Lynch' Sheriff Bars Irish-Indian Children From White School

Mount Dora, Fla.—Sheriff Willis V. McCall is in the spotlight again! The sheriff, not contented with the unfavorable publicity he received concerning his handling of two of the four alleged rapists in the celebrated Groveland case, is now implicated in the hampering with certain rights of individuals to attend white schools more recently with the removal of a family of children from the white public school here.

Sheriff McCall touched off this explosive predicament when a family of children were barred from the white public school here only on the strength of Sheriff McCall's belief that they have Negro blood. These same children had previously attended a white school n Holly Hill, S. C., where they were regarded as white.

The irony of the situation is that the school board let this act be committed without a hearing or investigation beforehand; everything rested merely on Sheriff McCall's belief; consequently the Lake County School board suspended the children from school October 21 "until further investigation."

The FBI is now investigating whether the civil rights of the family were violated by Sheriff McCall. Mrs. Mabel Norris Reese, editor of the weekly Mount Dora Topic, contended the Lake County school board in acting on a complaint from Sheriff Willis V. McCall "bowed to dictation as surely as anyone in Russia ever did."

The Platt children, Linda, 9; Laura Belle, 13; Violet, 6; Esther, 10, and Raymond, 15, were suspended from school October 21st after the school board said it had received a series of complaints. Laura Belle was barred from the white school because Sheriff McCall thinks her nose indicates Negro blood.

Supervising Principal D. D. Roseborough said school officials at Holly Hill, S. C., wrote him in reply to a letter that the Platt children attended a special elementary school when they lived at Holly Hill. G. E. Brant, superintendent of schools at Holly Hill described the father as a "fine fellow" and the children as good students.

Brant said the family has Croatan Indian blood as well as white of Irish extraction. The Croatan Indians were established as a tribe by South Carolina law in 1887 after a dispute arose over their ancestry. Their joint Indian-white ancestry dates back to 1587, when members of Sir Walter Raleigh's "lost colony" apparently intermarried with the tribe.

The Platt family came to Florida in October after selling their farm in South Carolina. Platt said that "It was so poor I couldn't make a living at it and take care of my family." He is now working here as an orange picker.

The marriage license of the parents tells that Alan Platt and Laura Dangerfield were registered by J. M. Hughes, probate judge of Orangeburg County, South Carolina, as white Americans.

Patrons of a private Christian school voted recently to admit, under certain conditions, the five children who attended the Mount Dora white public school for three weeks until they were suspended on complaints of Sheriff Willis McCall of Lake County.

Orvel Boyd, president of the Christian Home and Bible School of Wildwood, Florida, said after a meeting that all of 40 parents attending approved admission of the children after their legal status has been cleared and after they have been tutored to bring them up to date.

Groveland Sheriff Faces FBI Probe

MOUNT DORA, Fla. — (ANP) — Sheriff Willis McCall, unrelenting foe of Negro civil rights, is again faced with a probe of his activity by the FBI.

United States Dist. Atty. James Guilmartin said he has called the FBI to investigate whether the civil rights of the Allan Platt family of nearby Sorento have been violated.

Five of the Platt children were suspended Oct. 21 "until further notice" by the Lake County school board, acting on a series of complaints by McCall, who said all he did was enforce the Florida constitution.

McCall said he welcomed an investigation by the FBI. "I've been through it so much I'm used to it," he remarked.

The sheriff was the center of a storm of controversy when he shot and killed one of the "Groveland four" while escorting two of the boys to a new trial. He claimed the boys tried to escape. Both of them were heavily chained and shackled when shot by McCall.

McCall's latest episode involves Cherokee Indians with a mixture of Irish blood.

Platt, an orange picker, denies he or his wife are of Negro extraction. His children, he said, attended white schools in Holly Hill, S. C.

In Orlando, Orange County School Supt. Judson B. Walker said he had a statement from superintendent, saying the Platts attended a special school there which was classified as white and had white instructors, but the children were from the Indian group.

None was permitted to attend regular white schools, according to Walker.

Recently, McCall went to Milford, Dela., at the invitation of race-baiting National Association for the Advancement of White People prexy, Bryant Bowles and addressed a mass meeting held there in opposition to the Supreme Court desegregation edict.

Segregation Candidate In Florida

JACKSONVILLE —(AP)— Marvin Strickland, 36-year-old owner of a wholesale government surplus business here, Wednesday announced his candidacy for governor in the November elections.

He said he was not aligned with either party; that he would run on a "states right ticket stressing complete segregation in the public school system."

Like Bill Hendrix, former Ku Klux Klan leader who also says he is running as an independent segregation candidate, there is no way for Strickland to get his name on the ballot.

They will have to depend on write-in votes because Florida law gives ballot space only to formally certified nominees of the Democrat and Republican parties.

State Sen. LeRoy Collins is the Democratic nominee, having defeated Acting Gov. Charley Johns in the May primaries.

J. Tom Watson of Tampa, former attorney general of Florida, turned Republican in an effort to stimulate a two-party system in the state and is the Republican nominee.

Strickland in a formal statement said:

"I am in this race of my own free will and I am obligated to no one except my country and my conscience. I want to serve the people of Florida.

"Segregation is but a small part of states rights. It happens to be the 'straw that broke the camel's back'. It is positive proof that the federal government is determined to take all our rights away from us—legally, or otherwise.

"The Supreme court ruling may prove to be a blessing in disguise if it is responsible for the awakening of the people to the fact that all their rights are in jeopardy.

"I am opposed to violence and bloodshed. I am equally opposed to the political dictatorship that is being attempted by the selfish politicians of our government who for the sake of the Negro vote, are rapidly destroying our free and democratic way of life that was guaranteed by the constitution.

"If I am your governor, I promise that there will be no mixing of the white and colored races in the schools of the State of Florida while I am in office."

This is Strickland's first venture into politics. He has been in private business. He is married and has four children. He was a master sergeant in World War II and served in Iceland, the Pacific, Europe and the Caribbean.

NAACP to Support Voluntary Integration

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

Willingness to cooperate "in every possible manner" to bring about voluntary desegregation in the public schools was expressed Thursday by the Miami chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Dr. G. W. Hawkins, acting president, said he was "greatly surprised by the apparent concern" over circulation of petitions among Negro parents for school admissions.

Announcement that the petitions were being circulated, and that court action was contemplated to bring about immediate desegregation brought comment from state and local school officials that such haste was unwise.

"There really is no comment to make on their action," said County School Supt. W. R. Thomas. "The law is still the law and hasn't been changed."

Associate Supt. Joe Hall said that if Negro children attempt to register at White schools next month they will be refused permission.

Dr. Hawkins said no drastic action is contemplated by the NAACP.

"Legal action in the courts is a traditional American way of seeking the protection of the constitutional rights of citizens," he said in a statement.

"But we shall resort to such action only where absolutely necessary. We seek orderly social transition without social disorganization."

Dr. Hawkins said the petitions were being circulated "to interpret to the school board the feeling of the people in the Negro community.

"We have had a record of cooperation with the local school board," he said.

In announcing the NAACP program to the school board Wednesday, Howard Dixon, Miami legal council for the group, said that it would file test cases if they were denied admission to a White school.

Dixon said the proposed plan was part of a nationwide program laid down by the NAACP at its convention in Dallas in July, and would be followed in states where segregation is now in effect.

One response came from Tallahassee where Thomas D. Bailey, state school superintendent, reiterated statements made earlier by Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin which called for patience until the Supreme court decreed its plan for orderly desegregation.

Floridians do not want "shock treatment" in the handling of the issue, Bailey declared.

Says Ruling Unpopular

Tom Watson Pledges To Keep Segregation

JACKSONVILLE—(AP)—The people of Florida are not reacting favorably to the United States Supreme Court decision on public school segregation, J. Tom Watson said Tuesday.

The Republican candidate for Florida governor enclosed the statement in a letter to Ernest Butt, vice chairman of the Florida Republican executive committee, for release.

He said it was in reply to a recent talk by state Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin before a civic club to the effect "there is nothing more we can do" about the Supreme Court's decision.

Watson, who recently underwent an operation and now is convalescing, said:

"The people of Florida are not reacting favorably to the acceptance of the United States Supreme Court decision by working out a plan of gradual non-segregation. It is my opinion that scarcely any of Florida's citizenship, White or Colored, are in favor of this holding, and both races want the continuation of the segregation practice heretofore and now in existence, and as provided for by Florida's constitutional and statutory laws.

"The decision is not final as to Florida, and unless Florida improperly becomes a party to the case in which such decision was made, the said decision will not become applicable to this state; and by proper proceedings Florida can have the issue determined in our own courts, and finally settled through our own State Supreme court, which in my opinion may be taken as a foregone conclusion, will unquestionably sustain the segregation requirement of our state law.

"If the people of Florida vote the two-party system into our political picture in November, by electing the Republican candidate as governor, assurance is now given by him that the Supreme court of Florida will decide the issue for the people of Florida, rather than any acceptance of the Supreme Court of the United States decision."

Ervin Gets Survey

Minority Found For Segregation

TALLAHASSEE —(UP) —A minority of Florida White citizens will "actively and violently" oppose integration of Negroes and Whites in public schools, a survey of the reaction of Florida community leaders to the recent United States Supreme court decision outlawing segregation said Monday.

The report said there is a minority of about 30 per cent of the White leaders which "violently disagreed" with the ruling and "would refuse to cooperate with any move to end segregation or would actively oppose it."

About one-fourth of the White leaders who answered the survey questions agreed that integration of the races in public schools should be accomplished.

"A large majority" of Negro leaders responding to the survey "acclaimed the decision as being right," the report said, but "only a small minority of leaders of both races advocate immediate complete de-segregation."

The report was read by Dr. Lewis Killian, associate professor of sociology at Florida State University, to a committee appointed by Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin. The survey was made to help Ervin prepare a brief he plans to file before the Supreme court in October.

"It is evident from this survey that Florida is not ready for immediate de-segregation in public education," Ervin commented.

"This report indicates that these problems can only be worked out through a gradual transition with the primary responsibility for determining the 'when and how' resting with local communities."

The study was made by selecting nine groups of White leaders and two groups of Negro leaders and mailing out some 8,000 questionnaires to them. A little more than half replied.

At the same time, special teams interviewed White leaders in 10 counties selected as representative of the state as a whole. Negro leaders were interviewed in five of these counties.

Newspaper editorial opinions throughout the state also were analyzed.

The report pointed out many problems which community leaders expect to face when desegregation is put into effect.

"While a minority of both White and Negro leaders expect serious violence to occur if desegregation is attempted," the surveyors said, "there is a widespread lack of confidence in the ability of peace officers to maintain law and order if serious violence does start. This is especially true of the peace officers themselves.

The withdrawal of White children from public schools and placing them in private schools by parents who could afford it, the report said, would create "a form of socio-economic, class segregation" which would be substituted for racial segregation in education.

The surveyors said that "White answers indicated Negro teachers would encounter great difficulty in obtaining employment in mixed schools."

Florida Leaders Move to Meet Problem of Non-Segregation

Issue Won't Be Sidestepped, School Spokesman Indicates

By CHARLES HESSER
Staff Writer, Miami Daily News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., July 31—It is becoming apparent that Florida is going to meet head-on the problem of desegregation in its public schools instead of trying to sidestep the issue through devices such as abolition of the public school system.

This is indicated by a spokesman for the state's Continuing Education Council.

The council, which is credited with being the stabilizing and synchronizing agency in the development of Florida's modern public school system, is a lay group made up of representatives from such organizations as labor unions, parent-teachers associations, league of women voters, the American Legion, the womens clubs and the state bar association.

Leaders Meet

J. Velma Keen, chairman of the council, who represents the Florida Bar Association, declared that "to abolish the public schools would set education in Florida back 50 years."

"This organization would not join in any such move," he added.

Keen's statement and the stand of the council followed a closed meeting of the group. He also apparently spoke for most of the state's governmental leaders.

Present at the session, in addition to Keen and other council members, were State School Supt. Thomas D. Bailey; Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin; Dr. Louis Killian of Florida State University, who is directing a statewide non - segregation survey; Secretary of State R. A. Gray, and several members of next year's Legislature.

Keen said that while no definite recommendations have yet been formulated by the council, those attending the meeting were in agreement that the U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring segregation unconstitutinnal "must be obeyed and segregation must end in Florida."

It was also the general opinion, he reported, that the desegregation process must be carried out county-by-county and not under an arbitrary time limit for the entire state.

This plan was earlier advanced by Ervin who said he hoped to gain approval of such a procedure when the state files its brief with the Supreme Court this fall.

Keen noted that school systems are set up under various governmental frameworks in various states.

"But, in Florida," he said, "the control of the schools is not in Tallahassee (the state capital), but in the 67 counties as set up under our county system. If suits are brought to enforce the Supreme Court ruling, they will have to be brought in the counties envolved, not against the state."

Keen added that because conditions vary in Florida counties it is hoped the Supreme Court will allow the state to end segregation "at different times in different places."

"We want to follow the ruling and put it into effect as rapidly as possible, but conditions are not right for it to come all at once."

December Meeting

The council will meet again in December to discuss recommendations to be made to the 1955 Legislature regarding non-segregation.

In the meantime, Keen will appoint a committee from the council to meet with a group of Negro leaders before the recommendations are decided upon.

Ervin, who assumed state leadership in preparing to meet the problems which will result from the court decision, sees no way to get around it "short of abolishing the public school system," a course he does not advocate.

Instead, he believes Florida and the other southern states permitting or enforcing segregation laws should join with South Carolina and Virginia, which were directly involved in cases before the high court, in an effort to delay integration of the races as long as possible.

'Serious Mistake'

In a letter to the attorney general of North Carolina, Ervin wrote that "Our sister states are making a very serious mistake in failing to present their situations directly to the Supreme Court. It is quite clear in our state that our people do not want non-segregation and it it must come, it should come gradually I would be derelict in not trying to present the wishes of the people of my state to the court."

Teachers Get Advice On Duties

By DORIS McABEE
Herald Staff Writer

Encouraging students to think for themselves at a high level is one of the most important jobs of school teachers today, Dr. C. Raymond Van Dusen, chairman of the Dade county school board, said Thursday.

VAN DUSEN

Dr. Van Dusen addressed some 800 new school teachers at two orientation programs at Miami Jackson and Booker T. Washington High Schools.

"We must not only teach our children to think, but teach them to think Keenly," Dr. Van Dusen said. "We must educate them, but also give them time to educate themselves through positive thinking."

The programs were sponsored by the Classroom Teachers' Association for the White personnel and the Dade County Teachers' Association for Negro personnel.

Introductions of the administrative staff and short speeches by department heads helped to give the new teachers a picture of the Dade school system and familiarize them with its method of operation.

Associate Supt. Joe Hall presided at the Miami Jackson conference and Dr. Baker M. Hindman, director of secondary education, co-ordinated the Negro program at Booker T. Washington.

The new teachers will join more than 5,000 teachers from Dade, Broward and Monroe counties today at simultaneous conferences of District 12, Florida Education Association and District 10, Florida State Teachers Association.

The FEA convention opens at 9 a.m. in Dinner Key auditorium while FSTA members will meet at the same time in Booker T. Washington High School.

Sen. LeRoy Collins, Democratic governor-nominee, will speak before both groups. He will be introduced by Thomas D. Bailey, state school superintendent.

Platform guests will include educators from the three counties in both districts, as well as school superintendents W. R. Thomas, Dade county, Horace O'Bryant, Monroe county, and O. K. Phillips, Broward county.

The FEA meeting will also feature election of new officers and a panel discussion on "FEA and its program."

FLORIDA'S RACIAL STUDY IS PRAISED

State Preparing Brief on Segregation Ruling

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Sept. 5 (AP)—Arkansas newspaper editor Harry Ashmore said Saturday Florida appeared to be further along than other Southern states in preparing recommendations for the United States supreme court on how and when the ruling outlawing segregation in public schools should be put into effect.

Ashmore conferred several hours Friday and Friday night with Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin and his staff who are preparing a friend of the court brief for filing with the supreme court Oct. 1.

Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, was invited by Ervin and Florida school superintendent Thomas D. Bailey to consult with them on the matter in view of Ashmore's extensive research work on segregation matters.

Ervin and Ashmore expressed general agreement on a recommendation to the court that desegregation, now that it has been ordered by the supreme court, should come only after a reasonable period of time, and then on a local district or county by county basis.

Ashmore has recently written a book on the basis of his research for the Ford Foundation's fund for the advancement of education on population trends and school segregation problems.

The Arkansas editor praised work done by a Florida interracial study group which sounded out the state's citizens on how they feel about the US supreme court ruling outlawing segregation in the public schools.

The interracial study group in its preliminary report indicated people of Florida think the state isn't ready for desegregation and that any change at this time in the segregated system would be unwise.

Ashmore said he believed the supreme court would be considerate of the South's viewpoint, as based on public opinion studies, and for this reason thought it highly important that all Southern states file briefs.

"If we don't let the court know how the people feel about it and make some definite recommendations, we'll find the NAACP up there all alone," he said.

Ashmore expressed belief that the Northern tier of the Southern states would begin setting desegregation patterns "after two or three years," but that it would be many years before some of the districts in the Deep South would desegregate.

One important factor in the situation, he said, is a population trend of Negroes migrating from the South to other parts of the country.

"In communities which has only a small number of Negroes, the integration problem isn't nearly as difficult as those with a predominantly Negro population," he said.

And he added that there would be less pressure against desegregation generally in the rural areas than in the cities.

Eglin Continues Segregated Basis In School System

CRESTVIEW, Fla., Feb. 24 (AP) —The large elementary school at Eglin Air Force Base will be operated for another year on a segregation basis under county school board supervision.

H. L. Hilton, chairman of the Okaloosa County School Board, reported today the board had agreed to continue operating the school until the close of the term in 1955.

After that the school will be operated on a non-segregated basis under control of the Federal government.

A presidential order banned segregation in schools on all military reservations.

The Air Force had asked the board to adopt one of three proposals:

1. To operate the school as a non-segregated institution under control of the federal government. 2. Operate the school on a non-segregated basis under control of Florida, or 3. Operate the school under the present segregated basis for one more year.

The board voted unanimously to accept the third proposal, which is the only one of three acceptable under Florida law.

Segregation Panel Slated

Dade county school board members and school trustees have been invited to participate in a question and answer session on the subject of segregation in Dade county public schools at 8 Monday night at Temple Beth Sholem, Miami Beach.

Harry Zukernick, program chairman of the Temple's Men's Club, sponsors of the event, said the school board and trustees were invited because of "the importance of the subject to every Dade resident."

A panel will discuss the impact on Dade county schools by a possible United States Supreme court decision abolishing segregation in public schools."

Mrs. Mayme Williams, national president of the Negro PTA; Dante Fascell, state legislator; and Miss Alice MacVicar, former assistant director of education for Dade county, will comprise the panel.

Moderator for the event will be Dr. H. Franklin Williams, vice president of the University of Miami.

Non-Segregated Schools Topic

"How Will Dade County Schools Face the Impact of a Possible United States Supreme Court Decision Abolishing Segregation in the Schools?" will be the topic of a public panel discussion next Monday at Temple Beth Sholem, Miami Beach.

Participating will be Mrs. Mayme Williams, national president of the Negro PTA; Dante Fascell, state legislator, and Miss Alice MacVicar, former assistant director of education of Dade County.

Dr. H. Franklin Williams, vice president of the University of Miami, will be the moderator.

A question and answer period will follow the discussion.

Segregation Panel Topic

Abolition of segregation in public schools—the major question now pending in suits before the United States Supreme Court—will be the theme of a panel discussion at 9 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 18, before North Shore Lodge, B'nai B'rith, in the North Shore Jewish Center.

Participating will be Dr. Edward Van Cleef, chairman of the Inter-Group Education Committee of Dade County Teachers; Mrs. Mayme Williams, a teacher of social studies at Booker T. Washington High School; and Dr. Jacob Cunningham, director of the Florida regional office, National Conference of Christians and Jews.

The panel will discuss how a Supreme Court order that segregation be abolished in the public schools might be implemented or thwarted in Dade county and where and how a program of integration might be carried out.

Gilbert Balkin, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League, will moderate the program.

Dade Co. Orders Segregation Of Migrant Children

MIAMI, Fla. —(INS)— The Dade County School Board Wednesday ordered the 85 children of Mexican and Puerto Rican migrant workers segregated from white children in the agricultural area south of Miami.

The school board took the steps to appease white families who have held more than 400 children out of the Redlands school to protest the mixing.

The school board ordered a temporary building set up in the area where the children can continue their studies.

It was emphasized that children of Mexican and Puerto Rican parentage who are permanent residents of the area will not be barred from attending classes with the white children.

County Commissioner Preston Bird was one of the biggest supporters of the separate school proposal.

"NO BIGOT"

"I'm no bigot," said the commissioner, "but I think that the health and welfare of our children is at stake."

However, School Attorney Edward Boardman said the legal aspects of the separate school order were muddled.

"If they demand to be enrolled at the Redland school we must enroll them," said the attorney.

It was also admitted by the school board that finding a teacher for the migrant workers would be no easy task.

One teacher who praised the Latin American youngsters for their willingness to learn—while noting that many white children came to school in need of bathing—received a barrage of cat calls at a mass meeting called to discuss the problem.

Florida Grants $10,000 To Fight Segregation Law

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 9 (AP)--Atty Gen. Richard Ervin was given $10,000 in emergency funds by the Florida cabinet yesterday for research assistance in his effort to delay mingling of the races in public schools until the state "is ready for non-segregation."

Ervin asked the cabinet, composed of the governor, attorney general and five other elective administrative officers, for the money to pay the costs of studies by University of Florida, Florida State University and University of Miami experts which, he said, are necessary in preparing his agruments to the U.S. Supreme Court against an immediate mandate to enforce the federal court's ban on segregation.

"I don't believe Florida is ready for non-segregation," he said. "If we have to accept, it should be on a gradual basis."

The court will give the affected states an opportunity this fall to present their views on methods of bringing about non-segregation in the schools. Briefs must be filed by Oct. 1.

Ervin said he wants surveys conducted to give him "the factual situation in Florida—such things as the school facilities available and what the people, both in metropolitan and rural areas, think of non-segregation."

Non Segregation Studies To Be Continued In Fla.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — State Attorney General Richard Ervin said Thursday that Florida's three major universities will continue their study of the effects of non-segregation in public schools even though acting Governor Charley Johns has voiced objections to the study.

Ervin declared in Tallahassee that the schools would continue their survey "until the order is rescinded."

The University of Miami, the University of Florida and Florida State University were granted a $10,000 emergency appropriation last week in order to finance the project.

The purpose of the survey is to gather data to be used in a brief to be submitted to the U. S. Su-

But on Tuesday Johns said that he would ask the state cabinet to cancel the appropriation.

Johns said that the state should not submit a brief since it was not directly involved in the high tribunal's historic ruling banning segregation in public schools.

Ervin said that he would try to convince Johns that the state should submit a brief because "if we don't take advantage this time, we won't again have the opportunity."

Race Study To Begin This Week

An informal study of the problem of non-segregation of races in public schools of Dade county will begin this week.

Dr. Don Larson, who will direct the study for the University of Miami, said Saturday he expects to call a meeting of his committee early in the week.

The members of this committee have yet to be named. However Dr. Larson did state that it will have Negro representation.

The state has agreed to give the university $3,000 for the study. The UM group will submit its report to Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin.

Ervin will file a brief with the United States Supreme court outlining the effects the court's recent anti-segregation ruling will have in Florida and suggesting a time limit for the state to bring about non-segregation.

Dr. Larson, a professor of government at the university, met with Ervin and representatives of the University of Florida and Florida State University Friday to discuss plans for the study.

The two state universities will make similar studies in counties in central and north Florida.

As contemplated by Dr. Larson, the study will be two-fold. The first task will be to "pull together all facts and figures with regard to population to get the racial picture," he said.

"Then it will be necessary to interview key leaders, both White and Negro, to get their views.

"After we have all of this information we will have to take the mass of data and set down our conclusions," he stated.

Dr. Larson noted that Ervin wants the report by Aug. 15, leaving only two months to complete the entire study.

Florida Starts Study Of Segregation

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 8 (AP) — Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin was given $10,000 in emergency funds by the Florida Cabinet today for research assistance in his effort to delay ordering of the races in public schools until the state is ready for non-segregation."

Ervin asked the cabinet, composed of the governor, attorney general and five other elective administrative officers, for the money to pay the costs of studies by University of Florida, Florida State University and University of Miami experts which he said, are necessary in preparing his arguments to the U. S. Supreme Court against an immediate mandate to enforce the Federal Court's ban on segregation.

The cabinet, composed of the governor and six elective administrative officers of the state, voted $10,000 for the attorney general for a study by experts from the University of Florida, Florida State University, University of Miami, the Citizens Continuing Education Council, the Florida Education Association and the State Department of Education of the practical effects in Florida of the ending of segregation.

Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns, who met with other Southern governors at Richmond, Va., last week to discuss the segregation ruling, said on his return he would ask the cabinet to rescind its action providing funds for the study.

Johns said the governors of Virginia and South Carolina had asked that states not actually having segregation cases before the court remain aloof from the proceedings in which the court probably will decide whether segregation must end immediately or in gradual steps.

Segregation Brief Favored by Ervin

Virginia and South Carolina Should Have Veto, He Says

TALLAHASSEE —(AP) —Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said Thursday he believes Florida should present to the United States Supreme court its views on the practical effects of putting the anti-segregation ruling into effect, but he would not file a brief if its terms met with the disapproval of Virginia and South Carolina.

However, he expressed belief the brief he would file would "help rather than hurt, not only Florida but other states similarly situated."

Ervin said he does not believe Florida is ready to accept integrating the races in its public schools and he hopes to convince the court that the process of ending segregation must be gradul and spread over a long period.

The supreme court has invited all states affected by the recent decision outlawing segregation of the races in public schools to submit briefs on when and how the ruling shall be carried out

'Moving Smoothly'

Integration Studies To Finish Aug. 1

By ROLLIN ROGERS
Herald Staff Writer

A study of how racial integration in schools will affect Dade county is "moving smoothly" and will be finished about Aug. 1, Dr. Donald Larson, head of the University of Miami government department, said Thursday.

Dr. Larson, who is making the survey with Dr. T. J. Wood and Prof. Edward Sofen of the UM government department, said a report is to go to state Attorney Gen. Richard W. Ervin the first week in August.

Similar studies are being made in 11 other Florida counties to help Ervin prepare a brief by October for the United States Supreme court.

The high court, which ruled out segregation in public schools last May, will hear arguments in October on how integration can be accomplished.

Dr. Larson and his two-man team met Thursday with an advisory committee made up of White and Negro citizens to discuss progress of the study.

"We reported only on the techniques we are using," Dr. Larson said, "and the committee checked on progress and whether we are leaving any gaps. Our general approach was discussed but essentially no changes were made."

On the advisory group are Walter Cogdell, principal of Douglas High School; the Rev. Theodore Gibson and the Rev. Edward T. Graham; Daniel H. Lang, executive secretary of the Greater Miami Urban League; Mrs. Terry King, executive secretary of the Dade County Council on Community Relations; Dr. Grover Noetzel, dean of the UM business administration school; Malcolm L. Ross, UM publicity director; Dr. Jesse Spirer, director of the UM child guidance center, and Daniel Westfall, administrative assistant to county school Supt. W. R. Thomas.

Dr. Larson said the team plans to sample public reaction to integration's effects, problems and the time that will be needed to solve them from 1,500 questionnaires being sent out and from 100 to 150 personal interviews.

"Everybody has been very co-operative and everything is moving smoothly," Dr. Larson said.

Face Segregation Issue, Ervin Asks

TALLAHASSEE— (UP) — Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said Friday he sees no way for the Southern states to get around the Supreme court decision abolishing segregation "short of abolishing the public school system."

Ervin said he believes the only sensible thing for the states to do is join with Florida, South Carolina and Virginia in an effort to delay integration of the races as long as possible.

"Our sister states are making a very serious mistake in failing to present their situations directly to the Supreme court," Ervin said in a letter to Atty. Gen. Harry McMullen of North Carolina who is considering filing a brief for his state.

The court ruled in suits from Virginia and South Carolina that segregation in tax-supported schools is unconstitutional, but invited all states affected to file briefs recommending how integration should be put into effect.

Some states intend to boycott the fall proceedings on the premise that the ruling cannot be forced on them without an actual ruling on a suit coming directly from each state.

Some states have passed or proposed legislation to abolish the public school system and set up private institutions for White children.

"It is quite clear in our state," Ervin wrote, "that our people do not want non-segregation and if it must come, it should come gradually. Therefore, I would be derelict in not trying to present the wishes of the people of my state to the court."

Ervin wrote the North Carolina official that integration should be administered by county school boards with the aid of inter-racial committees in order to take care of existing local conditions.

"The community picture as a whole should be considered rather than the claims of a few children who are demanding admittance," he said.

Thomas Orders Segregation

Removal of Students Ends Boycott at Redland School

By JACK E. ANDERSON
Herald Staff Writer

A three-day boycott of Redland School by nearly half its student body, apparently was ended Wednesday after school officials ordered 85 migrant laborers' children moved to a separate classroom.

The speedy action to segregate the 85 youngsters, children of Puerto Rican and Mexican farm workers, came from county school Supt. W. R. Thomas, backed by authority of the school board assembled in special session Wednesday morning.

It followed a protest meeting Tuesday night at the Redland school of about 500 parents, who demanded that the migrants' children be removed from the school, and said they would keep their own youngsters out of school until the demand was met.

But Thomas was reluctant to call the problem solved.

"This is only a temporary arrangement," he explained. "We're going to have to get a policy for the future, if we continue to have these people (the migrant workers imported here for farm labor)."

Thomas sent three members of his staff, including assistant Supt. Joe Hall, to the Redland school Wednesday and said they would help Principal Joseph L. Logan arrange the transfer of the 85 children. And he said "we hope to have a teacher" for the children on the job today.

The board Wednesday authorized Thomas to use his discretion in fixing a salary for the special teacher, instead of being bound by regular pay schedules.

Meanwhile, 33 of the 85 Puerto Rican and Mexican children have applied, Logan said, for transfer to the Homestead school because their parents are moving to that vicinity from the Redland school area, in following their work on South Dade farms.

Mrs. George Freiburger, president of the Redland Parent-Teacher Association, who presided at Tuesday's protest meeting, said she was not an official spokesman for the parents but she believed the boycott was ended and "we can settle down now."

Negro School Ruling Can Benefit All

Editor The Herald: Does the Negro have a right to go to school with Whites? I feel this question is answered by the Declaration of Independence, and no one has a right to set aside the declaration. It is the guiding principal of the American Revolution or even more, of the American nation.

However, let's ask another question. Why doesn't the Negro have a right to go to school with his fellow creature of one God? And no one can tell me that this God created one more superior than his fellows or endowed him with the sacred right to rule the other man.

Let us move forward, throw off the chains of the past, with its dark prejudices, and step into the light of the future. Let the American people throw off hatreds and prejudices. May we forget the past and with the Negro race found a new America void of prejudices, strong and united.

The Negro race has a contribution to our country and society, the same contribution made by the English, French, Jew, Greek and all the others. I beg of you America, give him that chance.

Segregation Ruling Won't Cover Florida Schools. Bailey Asserts

State school superintendent Thomas D. Bailey said Wednesday that Florida will not be affected if the United States Supreme court orders an end to segregation in the schools.

BAILEY

"This is so," he said, "despite the general belief that such a decision would affect Florida schools."

Here to attend the Florida Education Association convention which opens today, Bailey explained in an interview that the cases the Supreme Court are weighing involve other states.

Any segregation case involving Florida schools would have to be ruled on by the Supreme Court on its own merits, he indicated.

The Supreme Court is expected to hand down a decision soon on segregation cases involving schools in South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

While he emphasized that the court's decision would not affect Florida schools, Bailey acknowledged the type of decision handed down might be "indirectly indicitive" of what other states could expect.

Regardless, he said, "we will have time to give thought to the problems involved" if the court orders an end to segregation.

Bailey also said "it is a matter we will have to face intelligently and deal with if the advances we have made in our school program are to be preserved."

Concerning the progress of education in Florida, Bailey said there are two critical problems facing a continued progressive education program.

These he said are providing adequate school facilities and sufficient and qualified teachers.

He said some progress was made last year in providing adequate school facilities through a $15,000,000 bond issue.

Further advances can be expected, he said if a proposed $30,000,000 bond issue is approved. He said action on the latter issue is expected within 30 to 60 days.

While there is still a dire need of qualified teachers, Bailey said, the state's teacher recruitment program has made considerable progress.

Five thousand new teachers including additions and replacements, were obtained last year, he said. Of these, 4,000 were recruited from other states.

However, Bailey emphasized that more Florida youths are needed to bolster the recruitment program.

He praised the state's high school youth as being the best educated of any past generation and said they are needed in the recruitment program "because good teachers are the heart of any school program."

Bailey also called for continued support of the general public and the state Legislature "for the best educational program possible."

Non-Segregation Ruled For School At Tyndall Fie

Special To The Advertiser

PANAMA CITY, Fla., April 13 —Bay County Commissioners today declared it could not operate Tyndall Elementary School on a non-segregation basis in accordance with state laws.

The United States Defense Department has ruled the school cannot be operated on a segregated basis after Sept. 1, 1955, and asked the school board for a declaration of its intentions after that time.

The board will operate the school the remainder of the present term and possibly through the 1954-55 term but after that will turn over to Tyndall the operation of the school.

The Defense Department communication described the school board's past operation of the school as "excellent."

Florida 'Samples' 10 Counties For Nonsegregation Reaction

5,000 Questionnaires Mailed Out; White-Negro Interviewers in Field

By CHARLES HESSER
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution
Staff Writer, The Miami Daily News

MIAMI, Fla., July 10—Florida's study of the effects of non-segregation on the state's public schools got under way this week.

Fifteen trained interviewers began sampling sentiment in 10 counties on integration of the races and questionnaires have been sent to 5,000 white and Negro business, professional, educational, governmental and religious leaders.

The study is under the direction of the state's three big universities—the University of Florida, Florida State University and the University of Miami.

It is expected that the survey will be completed by Aug. 15 and the results turned over to Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin, who will file a brief with the U.S. Supreme Court in October.

"The material gathered in Florida, I believe, will add up to good arguments for additional time before we are desegregated," said Ervin.

Plans Further

The Supreme Court's decision, declaring segregation unconstitutional, applied to cases involving schools in South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. But the high tribunal called for further arguments this fall on the question of how it should be carried out and invited the attorneys general of states requiring or permitting segregation to file briefs on this subject as friends of the court.

Ervin said he would check with the attorneys general of South Carolina and Virginia before submitting his brief to the court.

The interviewers were chosen from among top school personnel, mainly principals. Four of the interrogators will be Negroes who will talk to Negro leaders.

"Questions are designed to allow interviewees to express freely their own feelings about the Supreme Court decision," said Dr. Louis Killian, associate professor of sociology at Florida State University, who is coordinating the efforts of the survey.

In general the interviewees will be asked how they feel about non-segregation; whether it should go into effect immediately; of those opposed, would they take their children out of the public schools and put them into private institutions; whether there would be violence, and if so, how serious.

Peace officers are being asked the specific questions of whether they could cope with situations of serious or minor violence, and if they would enforce compulsory white-Negro attendance laws.

Names of the 10 counties being sampled were not disclosed as sociologists directing the study said identification of the counties before the interviewing would affect the research adversely. However, it is known they are 10 "representative" counties extending from Escambia in far West Florida to Dade in South Florida.

"The general purpose of the survey," said Ervin, "is to find out exactly the situation in each section of the state — we know there is some difference. We want to know what the local leaders, business, professional, educational, religious and political think about the way their particular communities will be affected if the court orders immediate integration."

A $10,000 emergency appropriation for the survey was voted by the Florida cabinet last month at the suggestion of Ervin.

But, Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns, after attending a special session of the Southern Governors Conference, a few days later, threatened to ask that the survey be called off because the governors had taken the position states not directly parties to the court cases should hold aloof.

Johns, however, did not press the matter, after Ervin explained that the way he read the court opinion, "if we should fail to file this time (in October), we won't again have the opportunity."

Ervin said: "We are approaching the problem of nonsegregation on as constructive a basis as possible and we will use the data in an effort to convince the court we ought to be given a long period of time to adjust."

Will Help Legislature

The attorney general said it was his opinion that the Florida study, "instead of tying anybody's hands, will be helpful" to the states directly involved in the cases which the Supreme Court ruled on.

In addition to needing the data for his brief, Ervin pointed out that information gathered by the universities would also be helpful to the State Department of Education and next year's legislature.

Regardless of how long the court may give the states to integrate their schools, segregation is certain to present a serious problem to the 1955 Florida Legislature.

So far, most of the lawmakers have indicated nonsegragation should be approached in a serious and sober manner, with only one publicly advocating abolishing the present educational system and replacing it with private schools.

Hit Fla. NAACP Test Case Plan

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS)— State School Superintendent Thomas D. Bailey echoed Thursday the criticism voiced by Florida Attorney General Richard Ervin in the face of an announcement by a spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People that the group will try to enroll Negro children in white schools in Dade County this fall.

Bailey, commenting on an announcement in Miami by Howard Dixon, attorney for the local NAACP chapter, that the organization is planning such a move, declared:

"I think they're making a great mistake by pushing things too fast. We have state laws prohibiting the mixing of races at this time and until the Supreme Court hands down a direct decree, it is not legal for the schools to change the procedure."

He said the people of the state do not want a "shock treatment" in the handling of the de-segregation issue.

Earlier, Attorney General Ervin stated that the action would "flout the United States Supreme Court," and that the NAACP was "defeating its own purpose."

But Dixon said that the "test cases" were part of a nation-wide program laid down by the group at its convention in Dallas last July.

Test in Miami

IN MIAMI, FLA., the situation is somewhat similar to that in "liberal" eastern Tennessee, except that southern Florida in recent years has become almost Yankee, thanks to the great influx from the North where people have long been accustomed to integrated public schools and are not frightened by the prospect of black and white children studying in the same classrooms.

In a bold gesture, Miami's NAACP plans to make the attempt next month to enroll some Negro pupils in "white" schools, and petitions are being circulated among Negroes to determine which parents want their children to go to these schools.

If the school board "does not show good faith toward ending segregation, says NAACP attorney Howard Dixon, "then we will file suit."

This plan must have come as something of a surprise to the local school authorities who earlier had said that they did not anticipate any attempts to enroll Negro pupils in "white" schools until after the state had filed its legal briefs with the U. S. Supreme Court on Oct. 1, and regarded any such attempt as "premature."

News for them is that Negroes are deadly serious about this matter and are scarcely in the mood to regard immediate implementation of the Supreme Court's May decision as "premature."

No change is "premature" which has been anticipated for over sixty years.

South Urged To Speak on Integration

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— An Arkansas newspaper editor urged Friday that all soituern states file briefs with the United States Supreme court advising how and when they think the ruling outlawing racial segregation in public schools should be put into effect.

Harry Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, said it was "unfortunate" that Georgia state officials had taken the position that they would decline the Supreme court's invitation to file friend of the court briefs in the case.

"I feel that the South's point of view needs to be represented as fully as possible," he told newsmen here.

"The court deliberately delayed ordering its decision into effect in order to get the views of the Southern states as to how the decision should be implemented."

Ashmore, who is en route to Atlanta to speak to a group of southern school officials on the Suprme court dcision, stopped off here on invitation of Thomas D. Bailey Florida Superintendent of public instruction, and Attorney General Richard Ervin for consultation.

Large Family Dining Table Built Discipline, Teacher Says

CHICAGO, Aug. 16 (AP)—A teacher bemoaned today the passing of the American dining room with its large family table. It helped curb juvenile delinquency, she said.

"The catch-as-catch-can food supply for youth, from can to stove to gulp down—or perhaps from icebox directly down, is a part of the loss of family discipline," said Miss Selma Borchardt, of Washington, D.C., in an address to members of the American Federation of Teachers (AFL).

"Teachers wish that parents could have more time together with their children, as a family. We believe it would reduce the school discipline problem."

Miss Borchardt, the federation's vice president and legislative representative, said that increased federal aid to education and implementation of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation are the most critical needs of democracy.

Integrate Gradually, Dixie Urged

State school superintendents and board of education members from over the South were advised by a Tennessee attorney here Tuesday to work for gradual elimination of segregation in the region's schools.

Cecil Sims of Nashville, Tenn., who often has served as a consultant to Southern governors and educators, told the school officials that the Supreme Court did not order compulsory integration when it banned compulsory school segregation.

Speaking at the final session of a two-day closed-study meeting on the problems arising from the Supreme Court decision, Sims declared:

"Historically, the segregated schools of the South did not emerge from any illegal practice and design. . . . They were a natural growth, and since the year 1898 they were recognized legally and their operation was adhered to by the Supreme Court itself in a series of lawsuits attacking such schools."

Sims said in the light of this history and the absence of a compulsory integration ruling by the Supreme Court, he thinks "school officials can set their sights toward gradual desegregation."

Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin of Florida also addressed the meeting and described some of the findings of a recent state-sponsored survey to determine urban and rural reaction to the Supreme Court ruling.

The attorney general said 75 per cent of those polled, white and Negro, believed Florida would need a time period in which to adjust and prepare for public school integration.

READERS' POINT OF VIEW:

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

The executive secretary of the N.E.A. asked some time ago three questions in his annual report on public school conditions that should provoke serious thought.

First: What shall we teach in our schools? So far as we are able to see the road ahead, the learner will need to know the way of a breadwinner, the advantage of honesty, saneness of sobriety, importance of industry, steadiness of character, goodness of kindness, need of neighborliness and discernment of spiritual values. Recitation of matter is a minor. Classroom work and the study of books are means to an end, but the teacher is or should be unequivocally the heart of the school, leaving the world a bit more beautiful and better because of the life he lived and demonstrated among young lives.

Second: What kind of persons should teach our children? One can sum the whole matter into a single imperative sentence: Be what you would have your pupils become. If political boards, group control, and economic planners were not in the way, we might see more hope for those who teach our children. Scholastic requirements must be met to satisfy the law, but in the long run character is more important than much knowledge channeled in the wrong direction. No one should make application for teaching who does not love the work and see the destiny of our country in these little groups of children across the nation.

Third: What shall we pay for education? There is little danger of paying too much, therefore no means should be spared in the education of a child—not even in taxes. We advocate money spent, not lavishly, for the children of this nation but judiciously. Education means more than dollars and cents.

Oneida, Ky. THOMAS L. BRITTON.

Rebels Against Mixed Schools

I would like to know why colored people think they do not have rights and good schools? If not, how then did they get to be doctors, lawyers, and the like? And they have such good educations that they want to make the white race do as they say.

Do they expect the white people to sit back and do just that? No sir, we won't. I think they had better let well enough alone. All this mess will not better our country one bit. What may come from it all may be worse than the Wade situation.

Why go to all the expense of mixing the schools when the colored can have better schools built for themselves. This will not help one iota. More kids will be playing hooky than did when I attended school. There will also be scraps among the kids.

What are they going to do with the many people who refuse to send their kids to a mixed school and do not have money to send them to a private school or can't get them in one? Throw them in jail, I guess. Well they'd better be getting more jails built; because they're going to need them. Mine are not going to mix. Here's where more taxes are going to hit us; taxes for mixing the schools, more truant officers, more jails. So therefore, to save money and a lot of upsets, keep the schools separated.

Where has our Bill of Rights gone to? On a vacation I guess. Just as well throw it in the waste paper can if we cannot use it and have a vote on this issue by the people.

Some say we are Commies if we do not mix. No, sirree! We are not; but we like a voice in the government, too. It might make Commies out of some if an issue like this is forced upon us. If America is to remain the No. 1 land of the world, it must let all the people have a voice in everything and not just let a few make the laws of the land. And furthermore, if any race needs a helping hand, help the Indians. They are the forgotten race. We did take of their land but we sure gave the colored people great opportunities.

Let's do as Mayme Rawlings suggests; rebel. Better still, let's all go South where they have a little sense. MILDRED SWITZER.

FAST INTEGRATION IN SCHOOLS URGED

This Would Lessen Chance to Evade Court Ban, 19 Race Relations Experts Say

By MURRAY ILLSON

The quicker the United States Supreme Court ban on segregated schols is put into effect the less chance there will be to evade it, according to a committee of nineteen race relations experts.

The committee's conclusions were made public yesterday at a special conference held in conjunction with the American Psychological Association's sixty-second annual meeting in the Statler Hotel. Among those taking part was Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Marshall, who argued before the Supreme Court in support of the ban on segregation, said he had not seen the committee's report and would not comment until he had had a chance to study it. The court is scheduled to hear arguments this fall on whether its ruling should be effected forthwith or gradually and whether it should issue detailed or general instructions on desegregation policy.

Report Based on 81 Studies

Three members of the committee were present at yesterday's meeting. They were Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate Professor of Psychology at City College; Dr. John P. Dean, associate Professor of Sociology at Cornell University, and Dr. Isador Chein, Professor of Psychology at New York University.

They said that the committee represented educational institutions in all parts of the country and included a number of members who were Southerners. The committee's report, they declared, was based on eighty-one studies in the field of race relations.

Observing that "the threat of violence has often been used as device to postpone or prevent desegregation," the report said:

"Violence can be perpetrated by a small minority of frustrated and disgruntled individuals whose basic motivations are not necessarily directly related to race.

"Though rare, violence has been found under conditions of ambiguous, inconsistent or dilatory desegregation policy on the part of authorities; ineffective, weak and at times conspiratorial police action, and as a reflection of the type of inconsistency which is associated with conflicting and competing governmental agencies and authorities."

The report asserted that studies of violent acts in areas where desegregation had occurred indicated that such acts were "more likely to occur in those communities in which there is a tradition of general lawlessness, political corruption and criminal contamination of the police power."

'Techniques' of Delay Cited

Various "techniques" for delaying or evading desegregation were cited in the report. Among them were the establishment of "voluntary" desegregation policies, gerrymandering or other manipulation of school district lines to insure that schools in effect would remain segregated, "prolonged periods of public education," and token admission of Negroes to "desegregated" schools.

An effective desegregation policy in the public schools, the report said, should include the following points:

¶All children should be assigned to the available school facilities without regard to race.

¶The only delay permitted should be that time required by specified and necessary administrative adjustments. There is no available evidence to suggest that this time need be any longer than a school year.

Mr. Marshall observed that white and Negro children traditionally played together in the South and that "the only time they are segregated is in school and in church." He added that "from the earliest days of slavery, Negroes have been teachers of white childen—spanking them, wet-nursing them and teaching the manners."

3 States To Enter Segregation Debate

By PAUL M. YOST

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—The first step toward resumption of Supreme Court arguments on school segregation was taken today when attorneys for three Southern states filed notice they want to take part in the legal debate.

Attorneys general for Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma informed Supreme Court Clerk Harold B. Willey they wish to present their states' views when new arguments are heard sometime in the fall.

The question for debate then is how and when the tribunal should order desegregation of white and Negro pupils.

"FRIEND OF COURT"

Arkansas, Tennessee, Maryland and Texas also notified Willey they wished to file "friend of the court" briefs later. The court clerk said it was not clear whether these four also wished to take part in the oral arguments and he planned to ask them to clarify the point. If they wish to take part they will be permitted to do so on the basis of the notices received.

A spokesman for the state said at Nashville today Tennessee filed its notice merely to protect the state's right to intervene, if it finally decided to do so.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said in Atlanta that three other Southern states were joining Georgia in boycotting the hearings. And Bernard Sykes, Alabama's acting attorney general, said that state would file no brief because it might "legally or morally" obligate Alabama to conform immediately with any order the Supreme Court might issue.

Cook said he had been authorized by the governors of South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana to say their states would have nothing to do with the hearings.

The Supreme Court decision last May 17 that segregation of public school pupils violates the Constitution was given in cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The court left these five cases on its docket in calling for new arguments on how to put integration into effect. Thus attorneys in these decided cases may appear in the renewed debate without filing notices today.

ONLY 3 STATES

Court observers were interested in the fact that apparently only three states not directly involved in the May decision had responded to Chief Justice Warren's invitation to all states that require or permit segregation.

This invitation was that their attorneys general join orally in offering the Supreme Court advice on working out the mechanics and timetables for final integration. Apparently 14 states decided to ignore the invitation. This was the last day for acceptance.

As of now, it appears the renewed arguments will be by attorneys for only seven states, the District of Columbia and by U.S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell. Attorneys for Negro parents in the five decided cases also may argue without advance notice.

However, "friend of the court" briefs may be filed by any interested party.

DULLES TRIP

A damper was shut down on the opening of the conversations with the announcement here that Secretary of State Dulles was on his way to Europe with proposals of his own for Germany's rearmament to bring about a nonsupranational association which Western Germany could join. This could bring Britain into a continental combination such as would have been organized in the European Defense Community, which the French National Assembly has rejected.

OKAYS PLAN

Mendes-France is said to have approved the basic idea of the Eden proposal, but the French demurred at the suggestion that after the Brussels pact is reorganized Western Germany would also be admitted into membership in NATO.

The French, moreover, wanted to discuss in full detail all of the features for revision of the Brussels plan, which might prolong negotiations over weeks or months.

School Segregation Proposals Top Record List Of Referenda

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—Two proposals to continue school segregation in the deep South highlighted a record list of special issues decided today by voters of 37 states.

In all, they balloted on 232 constitutional amendments and special proposals, while also electing state and national officeholders.

The issues ranged from Michigan's fight over legalizing bingo for charitable organizations to a California plan for raising maximum old age pensions from $80 to $100 monthly.

Louisiana and Michigan citizens voted on special Korean War bonuses. In several states there was the question of whether to borrow millions of dollars for public projects. Fourteen states considered raising wages or changing working conditions for state officials.

Louisiana, Georgia Decide

Louisiana and Georgia voted on proposals frankly designed to bypass any Supreme Court order to carry out its May decision that segregation of white and Negro children in public schools is unconstitutional. The court is expected to decide how to implement this decision after hearing plans from interested parties in December.

Louisiana voters had before them a proposed amendment to the constitution to provide for continued segregation in elementary and secondary schools, under the police power given the states by the 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The high court's ruling was based upon the 14th Amendment.

The Louisiana proposal also called for a special election to consider the next step, if one is deemed necessary.

Would Grant State Funds

In Georgia, the issue was a proposal to permit granting of state funds to individuals for educational purposes, thus paving the way for eliminating the public school system in favor of state-supported schools.

South Carolina took a similar step to avoid integration by voting two years ago to eliminate a constitutional provision requiring free public schools.

In Mississippi, voters decided whether to require prospective voters to show ability to read the U.S. Constitution. The proposal admittedly was designed to reduce the Negro electorate.

Washington decided whether to ban TV liquor advertising between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m. South Carolina considered eliminating an old constitutional clause requiring officeholders to foreswear duelling.

Voters in Nevada were asked to repeal a law banning union shop labor contracts. Montana considered an amendment permitting a presidential primary.

Cheerful picture of integration painted

Afro-American, Pg Baltimore Md

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — David Lawrence, newspaper columnist and prophet of gloom, Sept. 7, posed a problem in education which was shown to be an absurdity by a professor of education at Tuskegee Institute here last week.

Mr. Lawrence under the caption of "Colored Teachers . . . What Will Happen to Them When Schools Are Integrated," had this to say:

"If the South goes in for integration and many colored colored teachers lose their jobs, as seems inevitable, will the northern states accept them and put more and more colored teachers in classrooms where white children predominate?"

It took Dr. William A. Hunter of the Tuskegee faculty to see through Lawrence's subtle attack on integration and puncture his theses altogether.

Dr. Hunter, in a letter to the newspapers which published Lawrence's syndicated column, clearly pointed out the fallacies in the reporter's article.

— o O o —

HE WRITES:

In the article, Mr. Lawrence asked if parents of white children in the North are prepared to accept an influx of colored teachers to take over many of the classrooms hitherto occupied by white teachers.

Judging from the way this question is structured it appears that Mr. Lawrence has assumed that there will be an influx of colored teachers into Northern schools — thereby displacing teachers presently employed there.

I THINK THE spirit and purpose of the question are clearly prepossessed. If one should examine the implications of Mr. Lawrence's article in the light of some data which were not presented, the arguments of the article become rather illogical.

Have to be taught

On the national scene it is estimated that the total enrollment of public elementary and secondary schools for the current year will be over 27,500,000 pupils.

These pupils will have to be taught—integration or no integration—if America is to exemplify and follow its democratic principles and requirements for an educated citizenry. In 1953, there were about 981,000 classroom teachers employed.

With the services of the public school being extended to accommodate approximately 3,165,900 adults in adult education program, and about 100,000 veterans in addition to the regular school enrollment—the conditions today portend a very significant demand for more teachers.

— o O o —

NATIONALLY, school officials are unable to fill all their vacancies; an estimated need for approximately 200,000 qualified teachers has existed for some time.

Not only has this condition existed for several years, it still exists, and yet there has been no influx of teachers of any race into the profession in places where non-segregation is considered to be—or where there is an expressed policy of segregation for that matter.

I do not see the need for alarm among Northern teachers to fear to be displaced from their positions as a result of this hypothetical mass influx of exscinded colored teachers from integrated Southern schools.

First of all, a mass influx would have to result from mass dismissal, and mass dismissal would have to result from a defined plan of integration—and a defined plan of integration is not universally apparent in the South today; consequently, no mass influx is currently imminent.

Second of all, suppose there are dismissals; I cannot conceive of them following the same pattern in the several states to cause an influx, but if an influx were to occur the need for teachers is so grat that it would be absorbed in satisfying the need.

IN THE THIRD PLACE, integration in the South will not alter the fact of the number of children of school age to be taught.

The dictates of the principles of program consolidation, practical organization, academic standards, accreditation standards, learning requirements, instructional procedure, and the expediency of common sense indicate that American education can ill afford to lose any of its teachers, now, or in the near future.

A fourth consideration is that state unemployment agencies and state retirement programs would either face bankruptcy or dissolution in the face of such mass dismissals; I do not think these agencies would encourage actions which would lead to this or similar fate.

In the light of these and other conditioning factors, I do not forsee and influx of colored teachers into Northern schools.

Anent discrimination

Mr. Lawrence points up a sectional difference in the ratio of colored and white teachers to the effect that there are proportionately fewer colored teachers in the North than in the South, but this does not prove nor disprove discrimination in teaching.

We must remember that teaching is an occupational pursuit and in the South it represents one of the few public supported jobs of respectability that colored persons can acquire.

In the North, such a person has a greater choice of jobs in which he can engage; he may work in industry, in public or civil service, in government, in politics, and in other jobs which will pay as much or more than he would receive for teaching; consequently, fewer in the North go into teaching.

In the South he does not have such wide choice of job opportunities. I dare say there are many colored teachers in the South who would qualify and choose to work in industry, politics, civil service, or some other pursuit if they had the opportunity.

— o O o —

I AM SURE the fact is recognized that job opportunity has much to do with the racial distribution of pursuants of the occupation. The fact that fewer are teaching in the North does not, per se, support nor refute a contention of discrimination in teaching; nor does it constitute tenable evidence that there will be an influx of colored teachers in the North.

But rather it does attest that more colored persons in the North are in other equally respectable and remunerative professional and occupational endeavors than teaching.

False assumption

Mr. Lawrence further suggests that "if the South goes in for integration" it seems inevitable that many of the colored teachers will lose their jobs."

Why do some people feel that colored teachers will suffer such great job mortality in integration? On what basis can such an assumption be made? Do they feel that the colored person is less qualified to teach? Or is just less acceptable?

— o O o —

IN THE EVENT that these people would have us believe that the colored teacher will be discharged because he is less well trained than white teachers, they need to be reminded that colored and white teachers qualify in the same way, and have to satisfy the same certification requirements in their respective states.

They might be reminded further that in many instances (I know of over 100 school systems where this is true) colored teachers hold degrees from as many or more nationally renowned accredited colleges than white teachers, and in some cases, not only do they hold more degrees but also hold more advanced degrees.

Some who argue the point of the colored teacher losing his job say that there will be some consolidation of schools, and consolidation usually entails some teacher unemployment.

To this we agree. Consolidation of schools may cause the elimination of positions—but it has never been known to eliminate a professional Communities have been consolidating schools [illegible] at no time have the encountered personnel problems constituted valid argument against the necessities and advantages of consolidation.

I grant you some teachers may be displaced if schools are consolidated, but since the attestments of school officials in courts have indicated that their actions, selections, and differentials are not made on the basis of race—I am sure that there will be as many white teachers as others displaced as would be in any process of school consolidation.

Answers David Lawrence's Column

Tuskegee Professor at Odds With Writer on Integration

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Dr. William A. Hunter, associate professor of education at Tuskegee Institute, Ala., has come up with an answer to David Lawrence's controversial column on "Negro Teachers" which appeared in the Sept. 7 issue of the Birmingham News.

Mr. Lawrence, a syndicated columnist, had compared the small number of Negro teachers in the North with the large number of Negro teachers in the South. He also asked whether or not the "parents of white children" in the North were prepared to accept an "influx" of Negro teachers.

Mr. Lawrence's statements were taken by the Tuskegee professor to mean that following integration in the South, Southern Negro teachers would probably "flee" North for jobs.

DR. HUNTER'S letter, addressed to James E. Chappell, editor of the Birmingham News, was as follows:

"Dear Mr. Chappell:

In the Sept. 7 issue of the Birmingham News appears an article by David Lawrence titled "Negro Teachers — What Will Happen to Them When Schools Are Integrated?" I should like to take issue with on a few viewpoints expressed.

In the article, Mr. Lawrence asked if parents of white children in the North are prepared to accept an influx of Negro teachers to take over many of the classrooms hitherto occupied by white teachers. ALL-OUT BATTLE IN OVER SCHOOL INTE GRATION

New Court Cases Loom as 2 Cities Ignore U.S. Ruling

(By Courier Press Service)

Pro-segregationists were still holding the upper hand this week in their war on integration with "victories" recorded in Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, and Florida.

These "victories" drew the lines for possible further action in the Federal courts by defeated integrationists.

In Montgomery, Ala., R. T. Anderson, principal of the city's newest school, the William R. Harrison Elementary School, commented that the attempt of twenty-three Negro children to enroll without fanfare or confusion was "a credit to the Negro race."

THE MONTGOMERY incident occurred when the children

Station Cops Near Schools

WASHINGTON—(INS)—Officials drew up plans Saturday to station a uniformed police officer near every local school building when racial integration begins with the new school term.

Deputy Police Chief Howard V. Covell said the precaution will be taken because there may be "some friction" when white and Negro students attend classes together for the first time.

District of Columbia education officials ordered the end of racial segregation in the public schools shortly after a Supreme Court decision that such policies were unconstitutional.

led by the son of a Montgomery publisher, Aubrey Williams Jr attempted to register for classes.

Mr. Anderson said that the applicants were registered like any other children and then turned down after the school "checked their addresses and told them they lived in a district that is served by a Negro school. They were trying to register at the wrong school," he said.

Williams said that he had gone along with the children because, "I want to see these children get decent schooling."

IN BATON ROUGE, La., thirty Negro children were denied admittance to the Gilmer Wright "white" Elementary School. Some of these children lived within one block of the institution.

The school's principal, Mrs. Lily May Taylor, told the group that registration hours were over and turned down their applications.

The children involved have to pass the white school en route to facilities in other parts of Baton Rouge.

In Austin, Tex., Marion George Ford Jr., honor graduate of a Houston Negro high school was refused admittance to the University of Texas.

FORD LAMENTED that "In a few years there will be hundreds of Negro students at the University. Why hold me back for this one year." Ford indicated that he felt court action was a waste of time and that he would seek admittance by "some other method."

Ford had previously been accepted by the University whereupon he announced his intention of trying out for the freshman football team. The cancellation of Ford's acceptance soon followed.

Registrar H. Y. McCown informed Ford that he could obtain his required freshman courses at Prairie View A. and M. College, after which he would be eligible to have his credits transferred to the University of Texas.

IN DADE COUNTY, Florida, Superintendent of Schools W. R. Thomas issued a flat statement that the schools "will open under exactly the same conditions as have prevailed before."

Mr. Thomas cited the constitution and state laws of Florida under which, he said, "Negro students cannot be enrolled in white schools and white students cannot be enrolled in Negro schools."

A graduate of Tuskegee Institute, J. C. Duckworth, who heads the Marion County Training School for Negroes in Columbia, Miss., took his stand against integration.

DUCKWORTH was quoted as having said, "I will not advocate the mixing of races in either schools or churches. How any court or foreign group can take it upon themselves to untangle a web which doesn't exist in this peaceful paradise where white and colored races work in unison for the benefit of all is far beyond my comprehension."

Up in Hillsboro, Ohio, Negro elementary school children returned to their slightly charred jim crow building which had been set afire recently by an anti-segregationist white county engineer.

10 Southern States Continuing To Guard Traditions As New School Terms Begin

ATLANTA, Sept. 11 (AP)—Although the final decree still is months away, the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation already has opened the same classroom doors to some white and Negro children in at least nine areas where racial separation has been practiced.

Ten of the Southern states continued to guard jealously their traditional patterns as September brought the first new school terms since the court said that to separate pupils "solely on the basis of race" violates the Constitution.

And there was evidence that the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which pushed the lawsuits leading to the antisegregation ruling, is preparing to carry its fight to the last strongholds of segregation as the court makes it final ruling.

Court Said

In handing down its decision, the Supreme Court only held broadly that public school segregation is illegal. It invited attorneys general of affected states to appear in October and discuss the final decree which will lay down rules for implementing the decision.

An Associated Press survey today showed that in Missouri, Maryland, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Washington, D.C., Arkansas, Kansas, New Mexico and North Carolina integration is underway.

It ranges from a few Negroes attending white Catholic schools in North Carolina and one high school in Arkansas to complete desegregation in New Mexico.

Gov. Talmadge

Headed by Georgia, whose fiery Gov. Herman Talmadge has announced determination to resist the court decision if the state has to stand alone, 10 states are holding out. The others are Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, Florida, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

Nowhere is there any consistent pattern either to integration or resistance. Nor does there seem to be any uniformity in NAACP strategy.

In North Carolina, for instance, a few Negroes are attending Catholic schools in Raleigh and Charlotte without incident. But no Negroes have been admitted to white schools and no application for admission of Negroes to white schools has been reported.

NAACP Head

However, Kelly Alexander, North Carolina NAACP head, said his organization "will come to assistance of any pupil denied educational opportunity in relation to the Supreme Court decision. The methods of providing assistance are those peculiar to our organization." He declined to amplify.

Meanwhile, Gov. William B. Umstead said North Carolina will take part in the Supreme Court hearing on the question of how the court will put its decision into effect. Some of the segregation states have indicated they will boycott the hearing on the theory that to appear would "morally bind" them to abide by the decree.

Generally, Arkansas also is maintaining status quo on segregation. But in Fayetteville in northwest Arkansas, where the Negro population is small, six to 10 Negro students are to enter the Fayetteville High School when it opens Sept. 13. The city, site of the University of Arkansas, has no Negro high school and the Negro students have been going to Fort Smith, 60 miles away.

Atlanta Declaration

In line with the "Atlanta declaration" of the NAACP, petitions have been filed with several Arkansas school boards asking admission of Negroes to white schools. But Mrs. L. C. Bates, NAACP president, says the organization is not planning to attempt to register Negroes in any white schools at this time.

West Virginia schools began opening Sept. 1, but most will open next week. The pattern there generally has been adoption of integration in the northern counties where the Negro population is small and maintaining segregation in the southern counties.

However, in Ohio County (Wheeling) and Summers County, which are maintaining separate schools, some Negroes have been admitted to white schools without incident or protest.

No Plans For Action

NAACP leaders have been displeased with action of some school boards to continue segregation but have announced no plans for legal action.

The state adopted a policy of having the counties proceed individually with their nonsegregation programs.

Negro and white children will begin attending seven Baltimore elementary schools next week, but schools in Maryland counties will not be integrated until the Supreme Court hands down its final decision.

Baltimore school Supt. John H. Fischer said the Baltimore students registered without incident last week. He reported there may be more integration when the schools open.

Maryland Allows

The University of Maryland also will have its first undergraduate Negro students at College Park campus this term. Of seven Negro applicants three were admitted, one rejected for academic reasons, and three are pending.

Washington, D. C., rules require old students to return to schools they attended last year. But new students will be accepted in schools of their residential zone regardless of race. Supt. Hobard M. Corning appealed to principals and officials for cooperation in the integration operation.

At nearby Ft. Belvoir, the Army will operate its own nonsegregated post school without cooperation of Fairfax County, Va., which is abiding by Virginia law and awaiting further Supreme Court action.

New Mexico has been quietly eliminating segregated schools for about five years, at the rate of one or two towns a year. The last holdouts, Artesia, Carlsbad, Clovis, Hobbs, Las Cruces and Roswell now are all nonsegregated to make New Mexico what the NAACP calls "one of the first desegregated states in the nation."

A threatened tempest over desegregation in Hobbs failed to materialize and integration was accomplished without incident.

Integration will come first in Missouri high schools because most elementary school teachers' contracts were signed before the Supreme Court ruling. The State Department of Education reports there have been no incidents.

In St. Louis

In St. Louis, integration will not begin generally before the fall of 1955. But segregation will be eliminated in the special schools, for the deaf and crippled, which open next week, and also at two public teachers colleges.

Because of an unusual and complex financing of Negro schools, Atty. Gen. Mac Q. Williamson says it will be at least another year before segregation can be eliminated in Oklahoma public schools.

But the state Catholic education system announced last week that segregation would be eliminated in its 80 Oklahoma schools. However, in at least two cities, McAlester and Okmulgee, Catholic schools have not followed the announcement. But overcrowded conditions were blamed at one. There were no incidents as about a dozen Negroes enrolled at the Oklahoma City Catholic high school.

Segregation In Kansas

Segregation has not been practiced widely in Kansas and state school officials say integration will not be much of a problem. Topeka has had segregation in the first six grades. Integration was begun last year in two elementary schools without incident. It will be extended to about a half dozen more this year and to all 23 elementary schools next year.

Most of the solidly segregated states are maintaining their separate schools and awaiting the final Supreme Court decision to determine their course of action.

Like some other Southern states, Georgia's constitution requires separate schools for the white and Negro races. In addition the appropriation bill through which the state supplies about 20 per cent of the cost of operating Georgia schools, denies funds to any school permitting mixed classes.

Georgia Pledges

Gov. Talmadge and eight of the nine candidates to succeed him are pledged to maintain segregation by one means or another. Talmadge also sponsored a constitutional amendment, which will be voted on in November, which would permit operation of private schools, if necessary, to maintain segregation.

NAACP leaders say some petitions for admission of Negroes to white schools may be presented to school boards, but more positive action is awaiting the final court ruling.

Some Georgia schools already have opened but most begin their terms next week. There have been no reports of attempts by Negroes to register in white schools.

Mississippi Schools

Mississippi schools begin opening next week and no incidents have been reported during registration. The State Legislature will meet in special session Sept. 7 to consider a proposed constitutional amendment which would permit the Legislature to abolish public schools as a last resort to maintain segregated schools.

In Louisiana, where the Legislature recently adopted a proposed constitutional amendment and two acts intended to preserve segregation, 30 Negro children, accompanied by an attorney, attempted to register at a white Baton Rouge elementary school. They were refused. School officials indicated the incident may be the basis for a test case.

NAACP Says

NAACP officials said that petitions requesting desegregation have been filed with school boards in 14 parishes (counties) and with the State Board of Education. They said there has been no action as yet on any of the petitions.

Louisiana schools begin opening next week.

A group of Negro students also attempted to register at a Montgomery, Ala., white school and were turned down.

The Alabama State Board of Education adopted a resolution to continue segregated schools for another year. State Supt. W. J. Terry declined to comment on the Montgomery incident.

A legislative committee was set up a year ago to study the segregation problem.

Alabama Schools

Alabama schools began opening last week.

Kentucky plans to operate during the 1954-55 school year with the traditional pattern of segregation and Wendell P. Butler, superintendent of public instruction, says he knows of no plans for any integration this year. Kentucky leaders are awaiting the final court decision and apparently plan to comply with the ruling.

Kentucky schools began opening last week.

Under a directive of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, Virginia public schools, opening next week, will continue the traditional segregation policy.

Gov. Stanley recently appointed a 32-member commission to formulate a new school policy and study means to maintain segregation.

Petitioning Schools

NAACP leaders say they will follow the policy of petitioning local school boards for integration.

Beyond petitioning local boards for integration, Tennessee NAACP leaders say they plan no other immediate action. A spokesman said they are "well pleased" with informal talks with Davidson County (Nashville) officials and the prospects that there might be some integration. State and local officials declined to comment beyond saying the matter is being studied.

Florida schools began opening Aug. 23 and will continue opening through Sept. 9. State School Supt. Thomas D. Bailey said his office has received no reports of Negroes attempting to enter white schools and no incidents.

Petition Abandoned

A petition was circulating in Miami to have Negroes attend schools nearest their homes, but it was reported abandoned.

Texas is maintaining segregation in public grade schools and Gov. Allan Shivers said in his recent hot campaign for renomination that segregation would continue "as long as I am governor."

The Texas Education Agency said after the Supreme Court decision that it would abide by the ruling, but later said it would take at least a year for Texas to comply.

A number of Negroes have been admitted to Texas colleges and universities, both private and tax supported. In the case of tax supported schools, Negroes are admitted when courses needed for degrees are not available at the state's two Negro institutions of higher learning.

In wake of Supreme Court opinion—

Though final decree long way off, some classes are already de-segregated

ATLANTA, Sept. 4 — (AP) — Although the final decree still is months away, the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation already has opened the same classroom doors to some white and Negro children in at least nine areas where racial separation has been practiced.

Ten of the Southern states continued to guard jealously their traditional patterns as September brought the first new school terms since the court said that to separate pupils "solely on the basis of race" violates the Constitution.

And there was evidence that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which pushed the lawsuits leading to the anti-segregation ruling, is preparing to carry its fight to the last strongholds of segregation as the court makes its final ruling.

IN HANDING DOWN its decision, the Supreme Court only held broadly that public school segregation is illegal. It invited attorneys general of affected states to appear in October and discuss the final decree which will lay down rules for implementing the decision.

An Associated Press survey Saturday showed that in Missouri, Maryland, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Washington, D. C., Arkansas, Kansas, New Mexico and North Carolina, integration is under way.

It ranges from a new Negroes attending white Catholic schools in North Carolina and one high school in Arkansas to complete desegregation in New Mexico.

Headed by Georgia, whose fiery Gov. Herman Talmadge has announced determination to resist the court decision if the state has to stand alone, 10 states are holding out. The others are Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, Florida, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky.

NOWHERE IS THERE any consistent pattern either to integration or resistance. Nor does there seem to be any uniformity in NAACP strategy.

In North Carolina, for instance, a few Negroes are attending Catholic schools in Raleigh and Charlotte without incident. But no Negroes have been admitted to white schools and no application for admission of Negroes to white schools has been reported.

However, Kelly Alexander, North Carolina NAACP head, said his organization "will come to assistance of any pupil denied educational opportunity in relation to the Supreme Court decision. The methods of providing assistance are those peculiar to our organization." He declined to amplify.

Meanwhile, Gov. William B. Umstead said North Carolina will take part in the Supreme Court hearing on the question of how the court will put its decision into effect. Some of the segregation states have indicated they will boycott the hearing on the theory that to appear would "morally bind" them to abide by the decree.

GENERALLY, ARKANSAS also is maintaining status quo on segregation. But in Fayetteville in Northwest Arkansas, where the Negro population is small, six to 10 Negro students are to enter the Fayetteville High School when it opens Sept. 13. The city, site of the University of Arkansas, has no Negro high school and the Negro students have been going to Fort Smith, 60 miles away.

In line with the "Atlanta declaration" of the NAACP, petitions have been filed with several Arkansas school boards asking admission of Negroes to white schools. But Mrs. L. C. Bates, NAACP president, says the organization is not planning to attempt to register Negroes in any white schools at this time.

West Virginia schools began opening Sept. 1, but most will open next week. The pattern there generally has been adoption of integration in the Northern counties where the Negro population is small and maintaining segregation in the Southern counties.

However, in Ohio County (Wheeling) and Summers County, which are maintaining separate schools, some Negroes have been admitted to white schools without incident or protest.

NAACP LEADERS have been displeased with action of some school boards to continue segregation but have announced no plans for legal action.

The state adopted a policy of having the counties proceed individually with their non-segregation programs.

Negro and white children will begin attending seven Baltimore elementary schools next week, but schools in Maryland counties will not be integrated until the Supreme Court hands down its final decision.

Baltimore Supt. John H. Fischer said the Baltimore students registered without incident last week. He reported there may be more integration when the schools open.

The University of Maryland also will have its first undergraduate Negro students at College Park campus this term. Of seven Negro applicants, three were admitted, one rejected for academic reasons, and three are pending.

Negro teachers

What will happen to them when schools are integrated?

BY DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON—Are the parents of white children in the North prepared to accept an influx of Negro teachers to take over many of the classrooms hitherto occupied by white teachers?

This is the new problem which the American people face now, that the full meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has undergone further study. For it is likely that many of the Negro teachers who have been employed in segregated schools in the South will be displaced when integrated schools, with both whites and Negroes, are fully established.

There are, according to the latest U. S. census figures, 76,390 Negro teachers employed in the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, as compared with 310,319 white teachers. This is one Negro out of each five teachers.

IN THE 31 SO-CALLED non-segregated states, there are only 10,248 Negro teachers, as compared with 722,487 white teachers. This is a ratio of one Negro teacher out of each 73 teachers.

Careful reading of the Supreme Court decision would seem to indicate that any such ratio of employment in the North as between white and Negro teachers could be held to be discrimination. Inasmuch as the Supreme Court decision says, in effect, that the federal government can intervene in the field of education and pass judgment on what kind of education pupils are receiving, it may be inferred that examination of the quality of teaching has also come within the federal power. The Supreme Court said:

"There are findings below that the Negro and white schools involved have been equalized, or are being equalized, with respect to buildings, curricula, qualifications and salaries of teachers, and other 'tangible' factors. Our decision, therefore, cannot turn on merely a comparison of these tangible factors in the Negro and white schools involved in each of the cases. We must look instead to the effect of segregation itself on public education.

"We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does."

With such a direct intervention into the subject of what constitutes a good education, the Supreme Court undoubtedly has decreed that any palpable inequality in the selection of the number of Negro teachers as compared to whites would be considered as discrimination if it can be proved that Negro teachers who are well qualified to teach are not being given jobs they deserve.

It will be asked, for instance, why, as the latest census figures show, only three Negro teachers were qualified in Maine whereas 7,483 white teachers were employed. Similarly, Montana has only two Negro teachers and 5601 white teachers.

Even Massachusetts, which has prided itself on its historic attitude toward the Negro, employs only 110 Negroes out of a total of 36,553 teachers. Indiana, with a large Negro population, has only 680 Negro teachers out of 27,290. California has only 923 Negro teachers and 73,525 white teachers. Illinois, another state with a large Negro population, has only 1961 Negro teachers, while it employs 55,712 white teachers.

The same small ratio of Negro teachers prevails in other Northern states. New York has only 1693 Negro teachers, as compared with 101,387 white teachers. Ohio has 1051 Negro teachers and 50,895 white teachers. New Jersey has only 759 Negro teachers and 34,118 white teachers.

HAS THERE BEEN discrimination in the North? Plainly congressional committees—now that federal power over education is involved—would have authority to summon witnesses and take testimony and find out what has been happening in the process of selecting or banning Negro teachers.

The South and the border states, which have 76,390 Negro teachers, are employing seven Negroes to every one on the teaching rolls of all the 31 so-called non-segregated Northern states put together.

If the South goes in for integration and many Negro teachers lose their jobs, as seems inevitable, will the Northern states accept them and put more and more Negro teachers in classrooms where white children predominate! That's the new question, and it will furnish the acid test of sincerity in the North, which has always assumed that the South was the only section where discrimination was taking place in the field of education.—©

Box Score

The see-saw battle against segregation in the nation was marked by the following developments last week:

1. Tennessee officials plan to ask the U. S. Supreme Court to institute de-segregation in the first grade and move gradually through the upper grades.

2. Nancy Smith, 17-year-old Knoxville student, reported that she had been admitted to previously all-white Maryville (Tenn.) College.

3. The Vermillion Parish School in Abbeyville, La., has embarked on a school program set forth by the Governor and the State Legislature to keep segregation in the schools.

4. Angry whites in Philippi, W. Va., pulled a mass demonstration protesting the assigning of a white teacher and twelve white students to what had been an all-Negro school.

5. Schools in Morgantown, W. Va., will be integrated beginning with the fall term.

6. An organization aimed at amending the Constitution so as to curb the power of the U. S. Supreme Court is being planned by Southern whites, according to Mississippi Sen. James O. Eastland.

7. Some 120 North Carolina Negro principals and supervisors have voted to support the Supreme Court edict.

8. The Virginia State Board of Education met but took no action on the segregation issue. An official said the board contemplates no change until the high court hands down its decree.

9. Mississippi Attorney General J. P. Coleman said separate schools for Negro and white children would be maintained in his state.

* * *

10. In Milwaukee, the Royal Craft Grand Lodge of the Scottish Rite Masons ordered implementation of the Supreme Court decision.

SCHOOL BIAS EASES SLIGHTLY IN SOUTH

Survey Shows Most of Area Clinging to Segregation— New Court Step Awaited

ATLANTIC, Sept. 4 (AP)—Although the final decree is still months away, the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public school has already had some results.

For the first time in at least nine areas Negro children are permitted to study in the same classrooms with white children.

Ten of the Southern states continue, however, to guard jealously their traditional patterns as September brought the first new school terms since the court said that to separate pupils "solely on the basis of race" violated the Constitution.

There was evidence, nevertheless, that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which pushed the lawsuits leading to the anti-segregation ruling, is preparing to carry its fight to the last strongholds of segregation.

In handing down its decision, the Supreme Court held only broadly that public school segregation was illegal. It invited attorneys General of interested states to appear in October and discuss the final decree, which will lay down rules for implementing the decision.

Details of Survey

An Associated Press survey showed today that in Missouri, Maryland, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Washington, D. C., Arkansas, Kansas, New Mexico and North Carolina integration is under way. It ranges from a few Negroes attending white Roman Catholic schools in North Carolina and one public high school in Arkansas to complete desegregation in New Mexico.

Headed by Georgia, where Gov. Herman Talmadge has announced determination to resist the court decision if his state has to stand alone, ten states are holding out. The others are Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, Florida, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky.

In North Carolina no Negroes have been admitted to white public schools and no application for admission of Negroes has been reported. However, Kelly Alexander, head of the N. A. A. C. P. in the state, declared that the organization "will come to assistance of any pupil denied educational opportunity in relation to the Supreme Court decision."

Gov. William B. Umstead said that North Carolina would take part in the Supreme Court hearing on the question of how its decision is to be put into effect. Some of the segregation states have indicated that they will boycott the hearing on the theory that to appear would "morally bind" them to abide by the decree.

Arkansas also is maintaining in general the status quo on segregation, but in Fayetteville, in northwest Arkansas, where the Negro population is small, six to ten Negro children are to enter Fayettevill High School when it opens Sept. 13. The city, site of the University of Arkansas, has no Negro high school and the Negro pupils have been going to Fort Smith, 60 miles away.

In line with the "Atlanata Declaration" of the N.A.A.C.P., petitions have been filed with seevral Arkansas school boards asking admission of Negroes to white schools. Mrs. L. C. Bates, N.A.A.C.P. president, says however, that it is not planning to attempt to register Negroes in any white schools at other points in the state at this time.

West Virginia schools began opening Sept. 1, with most to open next week. The pattern in the state generally has been adoption of integration in the northern counties, where the Negro population is small, and maintaining a segregation in the southern counties.

However, in Ohio County (Wheeling) and Summers County, which are maintaining separate schools, some Negroes have been admitted to white schools without incident or protest. The state has adopted a policy of having the counties proceed individually in decisions on the issue.

Negro and white children begin attending seven Baltimore elementary schools next week, but for schools in Maryland counties generally the Supreme Court decision is being awaited.

The Superintendent of Schools in Baltimore, John H. Fischer, said that the Baltimore Negro pupils registered without incident last week. He asserted that there might be more integration when the schools opened.

The University of Maryland will have its first undergraduate Negro students at its College Park campus this term. There were seven Negro applicants. Three were admitted, one was rejected for academic reasons and the applications of the others are pending.

In Washington, D. C., new pupils will be accepted in the schools of their residential zone regardless of race. Superintendent of Schools Hobard M. Corning has appealed to principals for cooperation in the integration operation.

At Fort Belvois in Virginia the Army will operate its nonsegregated post school without cooperation of Fairfax County, which is abiding by Virginia law requiring segregation as it awaits the further Supreme Court action.

New Mexico has been quietly eliminating segregated schools for about five years at the rate of one or two towns a year. The last houdouts, Artesia, Carlsbad, Clovis, Hobbs, Las Cruces and Roswell, now are nonsegregated to make New Mexico what the N. A. A. C. P. calls "one of the first desegregated states in the nation." A threatened fight against desegregation in Hobbs failed to materialize.

Integration in Missouri will come first in the high schools. In St. Louis, integration will not begin generally before the fall of 1955, but segregation will be eliminated in the city's special schools for the deaf and crippled, which open next week, and at two public teachers colleges.

In Oklahoma, because of an unusual and complex system for financing of Negro schools, it will be at least another year before segregation can be eliminated in the public schools. The state's Catholic education system announced last week, however, that segregation would be eliminated at its eighty schools. In at least two cities, McAlester and Okmulgee, Catholic schools have not followed the policy of the announcement, but overcrowded conditions were blamed in one case. About a dozen Negroes enrolled at the Oklahoma City Catholic high school.

Kansas Problem Slight

Segregation has not been practiced widely in Kansas and state school officials say that integration will not be much of a problem. Topeka has had segregation in the first six grades. Integration was begun last year in two elementary schools without incident. It will be extended to about a half dozen more this year and to all the city's twenty-three elementary schools next year.

Like some other Southern States, Georgia has a Constitution that requires separate schools for whites and Negroes. The appropriation bill through which Georgia supplies about 30 per cent of the cost of operating the public schools denies funds to any school permitting mixed classes.

Governor Talmadge and eight of the nine candidates who are in this year's race to succeed him are pledged to maintain segregation by one means or another. Governor Talmadge sponsored a state constitutional amendment, to be voted on in November, that would permit state operation of private schools if necessary to maintain segregation.

N. A. A. C. P. leaders say that petitions for admission of Negroes to white schools may be presented to some school boards in Georgia soon, but that more positive action is awaiting the final court ruling.

Some Georgia schools have opened, but most begin their terms next week. There have been no reports of attempts by Negroes to register in white Georgia schools.

Mississippi schools begin opening next week. The Legislature will meet in special session Sept. 7 to consider a constitutional amendment that would permit abolishing of public schools as a last resort to meaintain segregation.

Test Case in Prospect

In Louisiana, where the Legislature recently adopted a proposed constitutional amendment and two acts intended to preserve segregation, thirty-nine Negro children, accompanied by an attorney, attempted to register at a white Baton Rouge elementary school. They were excluded. School officials indicated that the incident might be the basis for a test case.

N. A. A. C. P. officials said that petitions requesting desegregation had been filed with school boards in fourteen Louisiana parishes (counties) and with the State Board of Education. There has been no action as yet on any of the petitions.

Negroes attempted to register at a white school in Montgomery, Ala., but were turned down. The Alabama State Board of Education adopted a resolution to continue segregated schools for another year. A legislative committee was set up a year ago to study the segregation problem.

Kentucky plans to continue operating under its traditional pattern of segregation and Wendell P. Butler, Superintendent of Public Instruction, said that he knows of no program anywhere in the state to adopt integration this year. Kentucky leaders are awaiting the final court decision and apparently plan to comply with it. Kentucky schools began opening last week.

Under a directive of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, Virginia public schools, opening next week, will continue the traditional segregation policy. The Governor recently appointed a thirty-two-member commission to formulate a new school policy and study means to maintain segregation.

N. A. A. C. P. leaders say they will follow in Virginia the policy of petitioning local school boards for integration.

Tennessee N. A. A. C. P. leaders assert that there may be some integration in Nashville.

Florida schools began opening Aug. 23. The State Superintendent of Schools, Thomas D. Bailey, said that his office had no reports of Negroes attempting to enter white schools. A petition was circulating in Miami to have Negroes attend the schools nearest their homes, but it was reported abandoned.

Magazine's desegregation article hit by educators

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C.—The claim by the magazine, U.S. News and World Report, that when and if desegregation comes colored teachers would suffer a calamity in the South was vigorously disputed this week by leading South Carolina educators.

In a special feature two weeks ago, the magazine produced figures of white and colored teacher employment by sections and states and pointed to a few illustrations which it said indicated that, once integration came into southern schools, numbers of colored teachers would be replaced.

—o O o—

PRESIDENT JOHN F. Potts of Voorhees Junior College at Denmark, a former president of the Palmetto (state teachers) Education Association, said:

"For one thing, the magazine didn't consider that the major reason there are more colored teachers in the South is that there are few other professions to which the people can turn."

While he doesn't envison many layoffs under integration, Mr. Potts reasons that those who may become so affected would turn to other jobs and wouldn't suffer seriously.

Dr. J. C. Parler, administrative principal (supervisor) of Orangeburg city schools and himself a colorful past president and yet an executive officer of PEA, was more detailed in disagreeing with the U.S. and World Reports feature.

His opinions are documented under the following points:

—o O o—

1. THERE IS CURRENTLY a shortage of white teachers and surplus of colored teachers. This situation would work generally in favor of colored teachers under desegregation.

2. Many colored teachers now working in the South actually live in northern states and this fact invalidates figures the magazine used in reporting distribution of teachers. "By what standard is a teacher called 'southern' or northern?

3. Heretofore, too many inefficient and poorly prepare teachers have been allowed in "colored" schools. This fact has left a black mark on the general group and hamstrung effective and progressive classroom work.

"I have met scores of teachers that I wouldn't want to teach my daughter," he observed, "and many of us have seen and heard others in the same category. I believe in being frank about it.

"And any teacher who is prepared and proud of the profession will agree with this and also that the sooner we weed out the poorly prepared and the ineffecient teachers, not only will it make us stronger as a professional group, but it will soften integration."

—o O o—

TO SUPPORT his "not-well-enough-prepared" charge, Dr. Parler pointed out that when South Carolina imposed its certification system of teachers in 1945, some 70 per cent of the colored examinees on the first series of tests fell uniformly into the two lowest categories, exactly the opposite of whites, who scored some 70 per cent in the two top brackets.

He pointed out further that under the state's current program of consolidating colored schools, something long ago done in white schools and in colored schools in North Carolina, scores of colored teachers are not being employed, largely because of unpreparedness.

But when a teacher loses out, he said, be it because of integration, consolidation or other reasons, "there is not necessarily a calamity. They find other work."

—o O o—

"I KNOW of many teachers caught in the examination cheating cases several years back who have never been re-employed. Most of them have entered other fields." He estimated that upwards from 800 colored teachers were involved in the examination frauds.

Dr. Parler said further;

"And, another thing, remember that most of our people living in the North migrated there. These were not particularly interested in teaching. They could find so many other professions and jobs open which paid better.

"Why, I know of a friend who left school teaching down here to work at Pennsylvania Station. He makes twice as much money, or more."

—o O o—

MRS. MADGE P. Harper, first woman president of PEA and assistant director of instruction for Orangeburg County schools, laughed over the magazine analysis.

While, like both Mr. Potts and Dr. Parler, she agreed that some ferreting out of unqualified school teachers is long overdue, she doubts that desegregation itself will hurt colored teachers.

A former Jeannes teacher, Mrs. Harper said that most teachers "always had something else in mind when they entered the field." Eventual marriage, final paying off of a family debt, etc.

"I don't say this is true in every case. but certainly in most of them."

—o O o—

WALKER E. SOLOMON, exective PEA secretary, Columbia, said he thought perhaps the magazine feature was correct insofar as the number of teachers employed about the nation, but took vigorous exceptions to its other facts and interpretations.

For example, he said, U.S. News and World Reports "picked towns where the picture was darkest."

His records, he said, indicated that in contradiction with the magazine story, more colored teachers are now employed in desegragated systems at Indianapolis, Ind., and New Jersey schools than under segregation.

"I read somewhere last year that some 200 more colored teachers are now employed in New Jersey than before integration came."

School officials, he continued, find more colored teachers experienced and otherwise qualified whenever they omit certification as a requirement.

—o O o—

AS TO THE difference in numbers employed in the South and the North, Mr. Solomon explained that the difference is accounted for partially in the fact that in the North there are many other positions and jobs paying more than school teaching.

He told of one teacher who left his classroom to drive a beer truck for a salary gain of approximately $200 per month.

Mr. Solomon agreed with the other educators that a little weeding out would improve the profession and added:

"I can say that in my getting about over South Carolina I find our teachers ready and eager for desegregation. Most of them are proud of their profession and are willing to stand the test as to capability in a highly competitive field.

"YOU SEE, most of us feel we are the better generally prepared teachers and aren't afraid of being put to the test."

Other Jeannes teachers, principals and classroom teachers sought out for reactions to the magazine's story, agreed, in substance, that prepared colored teachers weren't fearful of displacement by integration and welcomed a pruning off of incompetent teachers they considered "liabilities" to the profession.

Advise for Parents

Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, writing in Look Magazine recently, answers pertinent questions of many parents with some sound advice. One of the questions asked of Dr. Peale which may have some special significance in the days, weeks and months to come as schools reopen was:

"My daughter is going to a school which has some colored students. One of them, a boy, is very brilliant. My daughter finds his company interesting. I am terribly afraid that she will fall in love with him. What can I tell her that will not make me seem prejudiced?"

Dr. Peale's answer was?

"The best way to cause her to fall in love is to show any sign of feeling against this boy. Sympathy and defensiveness might easily become romantic sentiment. Do not treat colored young people any differently than you act toward white young people, and a normal relationship will be maintained. Trust young daughter to handle her own love affairs. She is more competent than you think."

We agree! Most young people when left alone will solve their personal relationships. Too many parents still regard their young people as infants, and are needlessly apprehensive that they are incapable of right decisions.

Freedom's not painful

The United States News and World Report published in Washington, is usually a reliable publication.

It was the first periodical to present in full question and answer interviews with important people.

But its discussions of the Supreme Court's decision abolishing segregation, and what is to follow, have not been enlightening.

An article in the current issue, on "Colored Teachers for the North" is a dud.

It says colored teachers in the South — thousands of them — ought to lose their jobs when segregation end in public schools

That is a lie!

Mississippi, where colored people comprise approximately half of the population has 10,000 white teachers and only 5,000 colored. The schools in Mississippi cannot possibly get along with fewer colored teachers.

The District of Columbia has 3,000 white and 1,960 colored teachers. No way can be devised to mix the schools in the nation's capital without utilizing all of the teachers of both races.

In the North, there has been a shortage of teachers for years and in many of the states, there is such a thing as longevity, preventing the discharge of a teacher except for cause.

The United States News and World Report further states: "If colored teachers are to go on teaching, the North will have to give them jobs."

That is what the logicians call a non-sequitor. It is a conclusion, which does not follow from the premise.

According to the publication, this problem is causing real concern among school officials, and it is the first big test in the lifting of racial bars.

It has worked elsewhere

Desegregation has worked smoothly in 24 communities where there had been serious prediction of violence and bloodshed.

Professor Guy B. Johnson of North Carolina says: "To the best of our knowledge, the first drop of blood is yet to be shed."

Protests from colored and white parents are inevitable. Some white parents, who resisted the idea, had a change of heart after first-hand experience.

New Jersey had 497 colored teachers before integration. Today the statewide total has increased to 625.

All of this caterwauling on the part of some of our white brethren seems designed to create a disturbance.

The threat that desegregation of schools will be a real test of something is unfounded. Integration has been a way of life for the majority of Americans for more than 100 years.

At this moment 31 States have mixed schools.

Only 17 backward states, beginning at Maryland and going South, have jim-crow schools.

All the problems that they say are now to be tested have already been tested and solved.

Through the years, the United States Department of Education has gathered all the answers on how to desegregate schools and what the results are going to be.

Neither teachers nor pupils have anything to fear. There is too much goodwill and good sense in the white community to make it otherwise.

The few dissidents and loud mouths are up against the highest law of the land.

Whenever the Supreme Court of the United States speaks, all good Americans bend their ears.

Two must become one

We are engaged in building a new world in which all racial tags are eliminated.

For 300 years the whole United States has been divided into two parts, one segregated part (the inferior) called the black and another (the superior), called white.

These two parts of America must be made one.

Franklin D. Roosevelt began it. Harry Truman carried it on and so provoked the ex - slave holders in the South that they withdrew from the Democratic party and formed their own Dixiecrat conspiracy in 1948.

Truman defeated them and earned a second term in the White House.

This proved beyond all doubt that the majority of the people in this country are for the new program of freedom for everybody.

The Dixiecrats moved over to the Republican Party in 1952. They were looking for a new Andrew Johnson or a Jeff Davis and found out that President Eisenhower is just as ardent an advocate of freedom as was Harry Truman or Franklin Roosevelt.

So now they wind up now with no place to go and are crying their heads off.

Another prophet of doom

The U.S. News and World Report is not the only prophet of doom.

There are newspaper men like Hodding Carter, editor of a Greenville, Miss., daily, who writes an article in the Saturday Evening Post entitled, "The Republicans Muffed the Ball in Dixie."

Having carried Virginia, Florida, Tennessee and Texas, President Eisenhower, he says, has failed to establish a two-party system in these states.

There has never been a two - party system in Dixie.

When the Dixiecrats voted for Eisenhower, they were not voting for Republican party principles. They were voting against Harry Truman and his man, Adlai Stevenson.

Once they defeated the Truman - Stevenson combination, they were back to their business of being Dixiecrats.

Republican Presidents Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover all made an effort to make Abe Lincoln Republicans out of the Southerners and they failed.

All that any president can do is to "open the doors of the Republican church" and hope that the Dixiecrats in this generation or the next will get religion, hit the sawdust trail, repent of their sins and ask for the right hand of fellowship.

Principal point missed

Editor Hodding Carter has six reasons why the Republican administration has failed.

All six can be combined into the one in which he blames President Eisenhower for sending his attorney general into the Supreme Court to argue against segregated schools.

What both Hodding Carter and the U.S. News and World Report fail to recognize is that the Supreme Court did not abolish segregation anymore than it banned restrictive covenants.

In the restrictive covenant cases, the Supreme Court simply said that they could not be enforced in the courts, because under the 14th Amendment the states have no power to discriminate against colored people.

Of course, the courts cannot do what the States are prohibited from doing.

The program will work

In the school segregation cases, the Supreme Court said the States are without power to setup and maintain segregated schools.

Private and parochial schools may do what they please, but no State can pass a law segregating school children on the basis of race or color.

To put it even more simply, the high court decreed that public institutions are for the public, and colored people are part of that public.

The new program will work. It has worked in 31 States. It will work in the remaining 17.

If the Dixiecrats will use as much effort in working out a proper solution to this problem as they do in attempting to block it, they will be surprised to find how easy it is.

They will find no difficulty in attending the same public schools with colored people than sharing the streets with them.

Streets, like the schools, are for everybody.

As for colored teachers, there will be some resentment in the beginning, but it will quickly disappear.

Colored women do the most intimate things for white children in the far South.

They nurse the white baby as soon as it is born. They guide its infant steps, change its diapers, bathe it, dress it from infancy to adolescence, feed it, comfort it, are closer to it and share more of its confidences, in many cases, than its own mother.

Why an unlettered colored nurse should be praised for suckling a white child and a colored teacher be condemned for teaching it its a, b, c's, or its multiplication table, no student of logic can understand.

Too many are color blind

Actually, what we have, in some sections of the South, is a minority group which has become intellectually color blind.

Every other color is desirable save black or brown.

They have been indulged in their color blindness so long that this generation can no longer humor them.

Just as the South in the last 25 years has changed from an agricultural to an industrial economy, in the next 25 years it will change from a jim crow to an integrated community.

The last operation will be no more painful than the first.

Is The North Ready For Teacher Integration?

AN INEVITABLE byproduct of school integration will of course be teacher integration. When white and Negro children march into the same classrooms in the South, their teachers will logically be selected on an unsegregated basis.

What will this mean to the Negro teacher in the South? If conclusions can be drawn from the picture in the Northern states today, Negro teachers will be discriminated against.

In Alabama, for example, the state employed 8,000 Negro teachers to 16,000 white teachers during the last school year. Thus, of 24,000 teachers in this state, one in three was Negro—about the same ratio of Negro school children to white school children. This is one of the highest ratios in the country, higher even than the average for the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, which is one Negro teacher out of each five.

In the 31 "non-segregated" states, there are only 10,000 Negro teachers compared with 722,000 white teachers: a ratio of 1 to 73.

The reason for the discrepancy? It couldn't be discrimination because as everybody knows there's no such thing above the Mason-Dixon line. Anyway, that's the picture.

TAKE a few individual states in the North:

¶ In Maine, according to the latest census figures, there are only three Negro teachers compared with over 7,000 whites.

¶ Montana has only two Negro teachers to 6,000 whites.

¶ Massachusetts, serene in its pretensions of racial tolerance, employs 110 Negroes to 36,553 whites.

¶ Indiana, with a heavy Negro population, has less than 700 Negro teachers out of 28,000.

¶ California, 900 Negro teachers; 74,000 white.

¶ Illinois, another state with a large Negro population, less than 2,000 Negro teachers to 56,000 white.

¶ New York State, 1,700 Negro teachers, 101,000 white.

¶ Ohio, 1,000 Negro; 51,000 white.

¶ New Jersey, 700 Negro; 34,000 white.

For every Negro employed in the 31 unsegregated states, the 17 Southern states employ seven.

THUS, if the South follows the pattern of the North, thousands of Negro school teachers will be looking for jobs

Where will they go? A Washington Evening Star columnist puts it bluntly:

> Will the Northern states accept [unemployed Negro teachers from the South] and put more and more Negro teachers in classrooms where white children predominate?
> That's the new question, and it will furnish the acid test of sincerity in the North, which has always assumed that the South was the only section where discrimination was taking place in the field of education.

5 BORDER STATES AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BEGIN MIXING NEGRO AND WHITE CHILDREN SEPTEMBER, 1954
12 STATES (MID-SOUTH AREA) ARE WAITING FURTHER SUPREME COURT ACTION

Some Schools In Five States Moving To End Segregation As Term Opens Next Month

Survey Shows Integration Will Be Spotty In 'Border' Area And District Of Columbia—12 Other States Wait Further Action By Supreme Court

By LEE NICHOLS
United Press Writer

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—A historic social step will be taken next month when public schools in five "border" states and the District of Columbia begin mixing Negro and white children in compliance with a Supreme Court decision.

The high court declared May 17 that race segregation in public schools in unconstitutional. Although the court has postponed formal decrees to enforce its decision, schools in Arkansas, West Virginia, Missouri, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia will mix Negro and white children in compliance with the decision.

Schools in 12 other states, chiefly in the South, are waiting further Supreme Court action before doing anything about their secregated schools. Some are talking about abolishing public schools entirely rather than mixing Negro and white children.

Mid-South Area

The 12 are Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Texas.

But in the District of Columbia an dthe five states bordering the traditionally race-conscious South, Negro children will start attending classes with white boys and girls for the first time in publicv elementary and high schools this fall.

A United Press survey of steps planned for the coming school year shows that in all the "border" states integration will be spotty. Some school districts in each state will take the plunge this fall, others will hold off for another year or more.

There is no clear pattern of de-segregation actions. In Delaware, for instance, Wilmington will mix Negro and white children in elementary schools only this fall. Another Delaware district will integrate only junior and senior high school children this coming term, saving the elementary schools for next fall.

State and school officials in the affected states generally predict little trouble in putting across the new pattern of bi-racial education. But local resistance by parents and others has caused one or two setbacks in integration plans.

In West Virginia, where at least six of 55 counties plan full public school integration this fall, the first public demonstration occurred Aug. 18 at Philippi. Police were called to an unruly board of education meeting at which residents protested plans to mix white and Negro pupils in some eight Negro grade schols, and to assign 29 high school students formerly sent to a neighboring Negro high school to Philippi High. Among those present were parents of 12 white children assigned to a predominantly Negro grade school at Hanging Rock.

Change Made

There was no violence. But next night the board met secretly and decided to assign the 12 children to white schools up to 1½ miles from their homes to meet parents' objections. However the board said integration in other grade schools and in the high school, where there has been no protest, were affirmed.

The United Press survey covered principally the 17 states and the District of Columbia, which have had compulsory school segregation laws or regulations. In certain other states with laws permitting but not requiring segregation, steps were under way even before the Supreme Court ruling.

Kansas, one of the states involved in the Supreme Court ruling, has a state law permitting segregation in 12 cities, only nine of which actually have had it. Even before the high court ruling, Topeka, the capital, abandoned segregation and began working toward a unified school system.

New Mexico and Arizona, which also have laws permitting seggregation, have taken steps to integrate existing white and Negro schools. But in Hobbs, N. M., Baptist Pastor Bill Carter is leading a move to prevent the immediate end to segregation ordered by the Board of Education.

Most Northern states have abolished segregation generally, although there are some areas where it remains, such as some southern portions of Illinois and Indiana.

Steps Planned

Here are the de-segregation steps planned in the border states and the District of Columbia:

D.C.—In line with President Eisenhower's plea that the capital serve as a model for the rest of the segregated states, Washington is starting a general process of integration Sept. 13, the opening day of school. New school boundaries have been drawn. Pupils entering a D.C. school for the first time—either starting in kindergarten or the first grade, or moving to town—may attend the school in the zone where they live, regardless of race. Approximately 2,903 Negro children who attended overcrowded Negro elementary, junior and senior high schools last year will be transferred to hitherto all white schools.

Missouri—The state's attorney general has ruled that Missouri's 800-plus school districts may integrate this fall but do not have to until final court rulings are issued. Some mergers are not be known until questionaires not be known until questionnaries sent out by the state Board of Education are returned by school districts in September.

Maryland—Public school segregation is slated to end this fall in Baltimore, but not elsewhere in the state. Maryland's attorney general ruled it would be illegal to end segregation until the final high court decree is handed down, since the state law requires segregation. But Baltimore Solicitor Thomas Biddison said the court decision outlawing segregation required its elimination in Baltimore.

Other States

Delaware—This is one of five states involved in cases before the Supreme Court. Several cities and schools in Newcastle County in the northern part of the state plan integration moves this fall. In Wilmington, all elementary schools will have new attendance districts and children living in each district will attend the nearest school. Integration of junior and senior high schools is being postponed, probably until the 1955 fall term.

Arkansas—Gov. Francis Cherry has left action up to school districts but has taken the position that nothing need be done until the Supreme Court hands down specific decrees. The City of Fayetteville has voted for integration this fall and is sticking to it. The Sheridan School District voted for integration but reversed itself because of inflamed local feeling. Little Rock has tentatively decided against integration in four schools now being built.

West Virginia — The state Department of Education has told all county school boards to proceed with plans to end segregation by the fall term of 1955. Several counties have announced plans to integrate schools this fall, chiefly in areas with small Negro population. Counties with larger Negro population generally have announced they will wait until the high court issues decrees spelling out formal steps to end segregation. At least six counties plan integration this fall. Some other counties start gradually by integrating school bus transportation.

Southern Educators Hear Plans For Desegregation Of Schools

By International News Service

Two Southerners, appearing at a meeting of Dixie schoolmen, declared Tuesday that de-segregation of schools must come gradually, and at the local level.

Cecil Sims, constitutional expert from Nashville, Tenn., said local school boards must solve desegregation problems, and added:

"The court didn't mean to so these things overnight. They realized it would take time and patience since it involved the whole structure of the South."

Florida Attorney General Richard Ervin said his state is not ready for immediate integration, and also declared:

"Integration of the schools must not be done on a statewide level, but be done locally."

Ervin plans to appear as a friend of the court next month when the U. S. Supreme Court considers ways to implement its school segregation ruling of last May. The attorney general said he will present information gathered in Florida in a community survey.

He hoped the high court will give the state latitude in making decisions about the schools. He added:

"Integration might not be necessary in some communities since children will voluntarily go to the school of their own color."

GENERAL CONCLUSION

Ervin cited these general conclusions from the Florida survey:

1. "Florida is not ready for desegregation, but the majority agree with the court's ruling. He put those who are violently opposed to the decision at 30 per cent.

2. "Whites expressed a preference for a gradual transition in integrated schools, while most Negroes favored a quick change.

3. "Inter-racial meetings are promoting harmony.

4. "Highest percentage of opposition to integration comes from elected officials."

Sims told newsmen he does not "like those who would kill our public school system for the sake of preserving white supermacy," and continued:

"I have no patience with those who would force integration on the South. It will take time."

Both men spoke at a closed conference of the Southern States Cooperative Program in Educational Administration.

School Bells Ring Death Knell For Segregation In Some Southern Towns

Mo. Leads 17 States; Not Awaiting Further Action

NEW YORK — When the school bell rings this month, Negro and white children will be sharing classrooms in a number of Southern localities where strict school segregation formerly was maintained by state law, according to a survey of the Southern school situation being made by the NAACP. Without waiting for the Supreme Court to issue decrees implementing its decision which held public school segregation to be unconstitutional, some Southern localities simply are integrating their public schools at the beginning of the fall term, the Association's survey shows.

Similar action has been taken by several Southern colleges and universities, as well as by some private schools in the South.

The Supreme Court decision banning segregated schools was the result of cases brought to the high judicial authority by the NAACP.

FIVE STATES

Communities and cities located in five Southern states have announced public school integration for this month, according to an incomplete tabulation still underway in NAACP offices. These states are West Virginia, Missouri, Arkansas, Maryland and Delaware.

In addition, public schools in the District of Columbia will be integrated for the first time this September.

In the five Southern states where school integration already is scheduled on the local level, a total of at least 23 towns or cities and one county have set the action for next month.

In some cases, integration has been accomplished during the summer term. In Kansas City and Columbia, Mo., and in Wilmington, Del., Negro students were enrolled this summer in what has been all-white public schools.

MISSOURI AHEAD

Of the five Southern states in which public school integration plans are proceeding on the local level, Missouri is out front in de-segregating her schools, judging by preliminary results compiled by the NAACP.

In addition to the Kansas City, Mo., public summer schools which opened their doors to all students, Kansas City Teachers College will follow suit next month. The Kansas City board of education adopted a plan to end segregation in public summer school, integrate vocational and junior colleges this fall, and complete integration in all public schools in September, 1955.

IN ST. LOUIS

In St. Louis, Mo., a carefully drawn-up desegregation plan has been made public which specifies integration of the two teachers' colleges and the handicapped childrens' schools this September, of the high schools February 1 of next year. St. Louis elementary schools will stop segregating children in September, 1955.

In Columbia, Mo., home of the state university, public school integration started this summer.

Race barriers will be dropped this fall at the University of Missouri and at its School of Mines in Rolla, as well as in the kindergarten, primary and high schools operated by the University's School of Education in Columbia.

Other Missouri towns which will integrate all public schools next month are Springfield, New Haven, Fredericktown, Kirksville, Clayton and St. Joseph. High schools only will be desegregated next month in Kennett, LaBelle, Macon, Butler, Woodcrest, West Plains, Shelbina, Fulton, Jefferson City, Mexico and Carthage. Similar action for elementary schools only will be carried out in September in Kirkwood and St. Charles.

OTHER STATES

Segregated public schools will end this month in Baltimore, Md., and Monongalia County, W. Va., while the Fayetteville, Ark., high school will enroll students of both races for the first time in September.

In the field of higher education, the fall term will find both white and Negro students welcomed at previously segregated Middle Tennessee State College, Murfreesboro, Tenn.; University of Arkansas, Little Rock, Ark.; Hardin Junior College of Midwest University, Wichita Falls, Tex.; the two teachers colleges in Washington, D.C.; the nine state colleges in West Virginia; Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.; Southwest Missouri College, Springfield, Mo.; Joplin (Mo.) Junior College; and Central Missouri State College, Fayette, Mo.

In several communities outside the 17 Southern and border states which enforced segregation by state law, the segregation of public school children on a municipal basis will be ended next month. These towns include Hobbs, N.M.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Pasadena, Calif.; and Chester, Pa.

LATER DATE SET

Integration has been set for 1955 in a number of Southern communities where plans to desegregate the schools have been made public. In January, 1955, the junior and senior high schools of Kirkwood, Mo., will begin operation on an integrated basis. In September, 1955, the high schools in St. Charles, Mo., and all the public schools in Charleston, Hancock County and Kanawha County, W. Va., and in Warrensburg, Mo., will integrate.

Since the Supreme Court declared public school segregation unconstitutional, a number of private Southern schools have voluntarily given up segregation. This past summer, a vacation Bible school conducted by the Parkersburg, W. Va., First Baptist Church for the first time welcomed and enrolled children of both races. In Virginia, the Catholic schools in Roanoke, Arlington, Fairfax and Falls Church will be integrated this fall, as will the four Catholic high schools in Richmond.

It has been announced that the Catholic school system of Baltimore, Md., will be desegregated at an unspecified later date.

LITTLE TROUBLE

Scattered instances of complaints from white parents following school board desegregation plans have occurred, according to NAACP information. No trouble from children or college students has been reported during the newly-integrated summer sessions in various localities.

In Clarkton, Mo., and in Sheridan, Ark., the school board reversed its decision to integrate the schools this September following protests from white parents.

Segregation: Deep South—

Expert says tree is cut, time for South to do some acting

(In the Deep South one organization stands out as likely to wield the most powerful influence in shaping the region's attitudes toward integration. Here is the story of the Southern Regional Council, whose executive director believes segregation in schools will be ended in a dozen years.)

BY BEM PRICE, Associated Press writer

ATLANTA, Sept. 14—(AP)—"When the tree has done been cut and it is falling over at you, that ain't no time to holler 'hold it back!" It's time to git."

George Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, grinned, and paused to roll a cigaret.

"Old Negro told me that," he said, "when I was talking to him about this segregation business. Well, the Supreme Court decision on the public schools cut the tree and it is time for the South to do some 'gittin'."

Mitchell, doctor of philosophy, economist and sociologist, is one of the South's foremost authorities on race relations. His council is expected to play a major role in shaping the region's attitudes toward integration.

HE BELIEVES segregation in public schools will be ended in the South within a dozen years. The solutions to its problems, he believes, will have to be worked out at the community level and that "the church women will make it work."

As the only southwide organization with a going program for racial tolerance, the council recently was granted $240,000 by the Ford Foundation Fund to help prepare the region for the calm acceptance of the court's decision.

Last May the Supreme Court unanimously ruled the South's cherished doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities in public schools was unconstitutional and scheduled hearings in October on how best to end segregation.

Any story on the South and segregation must almost of necessity begin with Mitchell and the council, which functions as a sort of clearing house of information on the region.

IT IS COMPOSED entirely of Southerners, white and Negro, and operates on the simple thesis that all men are entitled equal opportunity—a thesis which often arouses bitter resentment among Southerners long nurtured on the theory of white supremacy.

One of these is Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, who has charged in his personal political newspaper that the council is pink-tinged.

Msgr. T. J. McNamara of the Catholic Church's Atlanta-Savannah Diocese calls the charges "absurd and ridiculous."

Mitchell, who travels 40,000 miles annually through the region, was asked in an interview: Can segregation be ended in the South without much trouble?

His answer is "Yes, but . . . "There will be some trouble," he said, "but not much. Some violence perhaps, but then the Negroes have a philosophy about trouble. After the Detroit race riots some told me, "it was terrible, but things are much better now. They can even see good in trouble.

"In dealing with this problem you have to raise the sweet voice of facts and reason. Southern places are imitative. If something has been done before, they figure they can do it too.

"Our mission is to find the frontiers of progress and make them known honestly and temperately. We must give the facts and persuade.

"I expect the whole thing to be over in a dozen years at the outside."

MITCHELL, gray haired and friendly, continued:

"You know the conscience of the South on racial matters is borne by the women.

"I like to remember the work of Mrs. Jesse Daniel Ames back in Texas. She's retired now and lives at Tryon, N. C. Well, there were some lynchings and every time the excuse was that somebody had to protect the honor of Southern white women.

"Mrs. Ames, when she'd hear about a dangerous situation, would go into the county and talk to her fellow church women and then she'd get up a petition and take it around to the sheriff stating that they, as white women, didn't want anybody protecting their honor but the sheriff.

"The sheriff got the hint. The church women wanted law enforcement. You know, the sheriffs didn't give up so many prisoners to mobs after that.

"If this whole problem is worked out at all, it will be worked out by the church women and it will be worked out on the local level."

Mitchell, who was born in Richmond, Va., believes segregation will end first in the regions with sparse Negro populations—less than 10 per cent—and will end last in the Deep South's plantation regions—Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and parts of Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee.

MITCHELL, WHO was given the 1953 award of the Catholic Committee of the South, added, "If we are to prove to the dark-skinned people of the earth that we mean democracy in its truest sense, we must go along with the Supreme Court's ruling. The Negro is making tremendous strides. He is scratching at the door and he is going to come in. Whereas the white people are settled and secure—and conservative—the Negro is a people on the make. He is going to make a place for himself in the world."

The council came into being during World War II.

A group of Negroes met in Durham, N. C., and said in substance that if the United States were fighting for democracy it ought to practice what it preached.

An invitation was issued to Southern leaders to get together and talk over the situation.

The meeting was attended by 97 white Southerners and ultimately led to a second meeting in Richmond, Va., where the council was born.

It was chartered by Methodist Bishop Arthur J. Moore of Atlanta, Editor Ralph McGill of The Atlanta Constitution, Dr. Charles Johnson and Dr. Howard Odum, sociologists at the University of North Carolina, and Dr. Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University.

IN ITS EARLY DAYS it was financed in large measure by the Julius Rosenwald Fund, but until the Ford grant it drew its money from the major religious denominations in the South—Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics, Jews and the Society of Friends.

It is difficult to say what the council has done in concrete terms, for it often stays in the background, working through the churches or individual members in local communities.

The council has sponsored inter-racial committees to work out mutual problems throughout the South, fought to have Southern newspapers use courtesy titles for Negroes in news stories and campaigned successfully to have Negro policemen patrol Negro neighborhoods.

Virginius Dabney, editor of The Richmond Times-Dispatch, had called the council, "The sanest and best informed organization dealing with race relations."

Segregation Plea Set By Florida

State Notifies Supreme Court

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Three Southern states told the Supreme court Wednesday they want to take an active part in its decision barring segregation in public schools.

The states, each of which has separate schools for Whites and Negroes, are Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma.

Three others—Arkansas, Tennessee and Maryland—notified Court Clerk Harold B. Willey they wish to file briefs as "friends of the court." Willey said he had yet to learn whether their attorneys general plan to participate in the hearing.

The high court declared last May 17 that segregation has no place in public schools. But it withheld a mandate putting the decree into effect pending arguments on methods and timetables for carrying out integration.

The court set Wednesday as the deadline for interested parties to report if they desire to appear in the new arguments.

Schools already have opened in most areas, and segregation has continued in many parts of the south.

The six notices received so far are routine forms, giving no indication of the stands the states will take when their briefs are filed.

Attorneys for Virginia, Kansas, Delaware, South Carolina and the District of Columbia—the places directly involved in the May 17 decision—are intitled to argue the procedures without giving notice.

Attorneys for other states may file briefs as "friends of the court" during the fall, even though they do not declare before the deadline that they wish to participate in the oral arguments.

The court is expected to announce early next month when it will hold the new hearing.

School Integration Brings Varied Reaction in Nation

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Oct. 2—The complex problem of how to bring about varying measures of racial integration in the public school systems of more than one-third of the country has produced a checkerboard pattern of reaction.

Reports from New York Times correspondents in the seventeen Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, where dual schools were established by statutory requirements, and the three states where permissive segregation affected certain communities, sketch the picture in the following general terms:

In the four and one-half months since the Supreme Court's decision banning public school racial segregation laws, developments have mostly followed the predictions of race relations experts that integration would come first in areas with low percentages of Negro population.

Trouble in Two States

There have been two dramatic flare-ups in the border states of West Virginia and Delaware in recent days, both resulting in local school officials reversing their stands on integration orders. But the record shows scores in other border areas, some regarded as even stronger in their attachment to Southern customs.

As was expected, the "Old South" has made no significant steps toward school integration, except for two small communities in Arkansas, each with very special conditions.

In the "Old South" extremists in the pro-segregation ranks, particularly among political leaders, were the principal voices heard and quoted on the issue.

In the "Old South" the temporary absence of a Supreme Court decree spelling out specific terms for implementing its decision against segregation handicapped those pledged to try to attain some degree of compliance; they could not cite any program with details and with sanction from high levels.

Ten days ago the Supreme Court set Dec. 6 as the date it would begin hearing arguments on the kind of decrees it should issue to enforce its decision.

The court gave parties to the suits and others wishing to be heard as friends of the court until Nov. 15 to file written briefs and applications to be heard in the debate on the implementation procedures.

The cases on which the Supreme Court made its May 17 decision came from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The court invitedthe Attorney General and all of the other interested states to join these original parties in helping consider the knotty subject of implementation.

It also invited them to counsel the court concerning its equity powers to direct gradual adjustments toward enforcement of the anti-segregation ruling.

Seven States have asked to appear as friends of the court. They are North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Oklahoma and Tennessee.

Meanwhile, the political leadership in Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina has moved with almost unbroken ranks in expressing determination to accept no measure of public school integration. These are the southern States with the heaviest percentages of Negro population.

In Georgia and Mississippi the voters next month will vote on constitutional amendments, overwhelmingly approved by the State Legislatures, that will give authority to abolish the public schools as a "last resort" if state officials conclude that the Supreme Court's implementation decree is "unacceptable." South Carolina voters approved similar measures at the polls in 1952.

Louisiana to Vote

Louisiana's political leadership has taken a similar hard line. Voters next month will ballot on a statute that, in effect, would allow local school superintendents to assign students to specific schools on the basis of "welfare."

Similar attitudes have been expressed by some political figures in Alabama, but no concrete proposal has been evolved for the voters' consideration.

Other Southern states have adopted more of a wait-and-see policy with study groups of legislators and educational consultants preparing assessments to "guide" future decisions. Leaders in these states have stressed that there are numerou Piedmont and mountain counties with very small populations of Negroes and coastal areas with high Negro populations.

An important figure in the segregation ranks is Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina. On the day of the Supreme Court decision, Governor Byrnes urged South Carolinians to show "patience and restraint." The following day, President Eisenhower, asked to comment on the court ruling, said he would point to the remarks of Governor Byrnes.

Illustrative of the wait-and-see states is Florida, whose Attorney General on Friday filed with the Supreme Court the first of the friend-of-the-court briefs.

'Time and Tact' Needed

The Florida brief asked for a decree permitting a gradual and discretionary adjustment to the desegregation decision. It said the yardstick for compliance should be "time, tact and wisdom."

In the border and non-Southern states, the picture of successful schoolroom integration is impressive despite the West Virginia and Delaware incidents.

In Delaware, aside from the "failure" of the integration move in Milford, other sections of the state were having successful integration. In Wilmington, some 600 Negroes were attending schools previously all-white, twenty whites were in schools previously all-Negro and of fourteen elementary schools, eight were integrated, all without incidents.

In the last two days the pattern of the Milford protests and disturbances spread to several school areas in Batlimore, which had ended public school segregation at the start of the school year and experienced no disruption.

In Baltimore, the desegregation policy was a "voluntary" one, with students permitted to attend the school nearest their homes if they so desired. At present, only a small number of Negroes, about 2.5 per cent of total Negro pupil enrollment, had chosen to go to previously all-white schools. For weeks there had been on trouble.

In West Virginia, aside from a "failure" in Greenbriar County, there was classroom integration without incidents in twenty-five of the state's fifty-five counties. Of these counties, twelve had been integrated completely, thirteen had partial integration, eighteen were awaiting the implementation decrees and twelve had no Negro students.

Successful in Washington

In the District of Columbia, whose attachments to Southern racial attitudes has always been considered stronger than those of Delaware or West Virginia, school integration was markedly successful, even though Negro pupil enrollment exceeds that of whites. An accelerated program was started two weeks ago, putting the city's original desegregation timetable a year ahead of schedule.

In Missouri, large sections of which have always been regarded as strong in Southern sentiments, the school integration was widespread and resulted in no incidents. Negroes were integrated in public schools in sixty-nine Missouri counties. The pattern varied, some integration starting in high schools and some in elementary schools, but all without disturbances.

In the "permissive" states of New Mexico, Arizona and Kansas, the school integration was successful. In New Mexico the three communities with past segregation were now completely integrated. In Arizona there were similar successes in eight or nine communities, with Phoenix as the focal point. In Kansas there was official state commitment to "expedite" integration that was almost completely attained this school year.

Against this background of widespread success in integration moves in border and non-Southern areas, most race relations experts were inclined to view the disturbances and "failures" in Delaware and West Virginia as striking exceptions.

Throughout the reports from the areas affected by the school segregation issue, however, the main item appeared to be fairly general recognition that the checkerboard pattern would prevail until the Supreme Court implementation decree defined the methods for compliance.

Following is a series of reports from the various states, showing what steps have been taken so far to implement the Supreme Court decision:

Alabama

Alabama will not participate in the school segregation cases awaiting court action.

The acting Alabama Attorney General, Bernard Sykes, made this clear by saying that while the state was not directly involved in the pending cases the filing of a brief might obligate the state "legally or morally."

"The facts surrounding Alabama's separate schools for white and colored," he asserted, "have not been presented to, and are not now before, the United States Supreme Court. Alabama, by filing a brief in cases not arising within its own borders, in cases based on facts not the same as those in Alabama, may find itself morally bound by decrees requiring both white and colored pupils to attend the same public schools."

Meanwhile, the opening of schools and colleges in Alabama brought one significant change. Spring Hill College, a Jesuit institution at Mobile, admitted colored students to its day classes for the first time in its 124 years of operation.

The Very Rev. Andrew C. Smith, S. J., president of the college, described the step as "a gradual integration." He said colored students had been admitted to night classes during the last several years.

In Montgomery, twenty-three colored students unsuccessfully attempted to enroll at an all-white elementary school. They were told the State Constitution barred the mixing of white and colored in public schools.

Arizona

Integration of the races in Arizona school systems, started long before the Supreme Court ruling, has gone off smoothly.

The all-Negro high school in Phoenix has been closed and 500 Negroes are studying alongside whites in the city's six other tax-supported high schools. Thirty-six Negro teachers formerly employed at one school are instructing mixed classes at other schools.

The city's elementary school system, with an enrollment of 13,000, has been desegregated from kindergarten to the eighth grade. There are about 1,700 Negroes enrolled.

There are 416 Negroes now attending twelve former all-white schools.

Tucson took the lead in Arizona toward desegregation. Officials there and in other school districts said segregation has been abandoned with less pain than many anticipated.

Arkansas

The Arkansas brief to be filed with the Supreme Court has not been made public. But authoritative sources suggest the brief may urge that the court not attempt in its decrees to specify fixed time limits for the transition to integration in any district.

Thus far, only two Arkansas public school districts are permitting Negro and white pupils to attend classes together. At Fayetteville, six Negroes are attending the formerly all-white high school. The Fayetteville school board was forced by economic necessity to integrate its school system.

There have been no public expressions of disapproval at the integration in Fayetteville.

Eleven Negro pupils are attending a heretofore all-white public high school at Charleston. There has been no public demonstration of disapproval.

State officials have declared they will abide by the letter and the spirit of the court ruling.

Delaware

Integration in Delaware schools is operating very smoothly in the schools that have it in the northern part of the state, including Wilmington, but is just the reverse in the lower part of the state.

At Milford, school officials attempted to start integration without any advance knowledge to the residents of the district. The schools were closed by protests and reopened with a greatly reduced attendance and the integretion move was abandoned.

In contrast to this is the situation at Dover, where school officials held meetings with parents.

They discussed the problem with them with the result that a limited plan of integration has been working very smoothly in Dover schools.

District of Columbia

Desegregation of schools in the District of Columbia continued at a fast clip this week. Five hundred and eleven students of senior high schools exercised their "option" to get transferred now to schools into which they had been "redistricted" instead of finishing at their old schools. Almost all were moving from a school formerly all-Negro to a school formerly all-white.

Processing of similar junior high school requests resulted in approval of 427 requests. Transfers of 354 of these will be effective on Monday.

He said that there is no indication of any group reaction against the integration plan.

Florida

In a brief to the United States Supreme Court, Florida contended Friday that the state was not now ready for an across-the-board application of the desegregation ruling.

Richard W. Erwin, State Attorney General, said that "if it [desecregation] must come eventually, it should come only after a reasonable period of time, and then only on a county to county or local basis, pursuant to administrative determinations made by local school authorities."

Mr. Ervin based his brief on the findings of an interracial committee he set up to seek out the opinions of both white and Negro leaders in Florida.

The report showed that some citizens questioned expect serious violence to arise. However, a majority of those polled opposed an immediate end to segregtaion and believed integration in public schools should be a gradual process.

About 30 per cent of white leaders interviewed in a survey violently disagreed with the decision, and said they would not cooperate, or would actively oppose ending segregation. A fourth of the white leaders agreed in principle with the Supreme Court decision. A great majority of Negroes favored it.

Georgia

Georgia will not be represented at the Dec. 6 Supreme Court hearing on means of putting into effect its May 17 ruling outlawing segregation in the public schools.

Attorney General Eugene Cook, backed by Gov. Herman Talmadge, has repeatedly said he would not accept the invitation to take part in additional arguments

Meanwhile, the Georgia Democratic party, holding its convention in Macon this week, asked Congress to strip the Supreme Court of all authority to decide cases involving the public schools of Georgia or any other state.

The convention also joined in the campaign for voter approval of Georgia's so-called "private school" constitutional amendment. This amendment, passed by the General Assembly, would abolish public schools in the event an end to segregation in the public schools was ordered in Georgia. It would, in turn, set up a system of private schools permitting grants to indivdual citizens.

Roy V. Harris, Augusta attorney and political leader, is one of those opposing this move. He would "shut down all schools in any county where they (the races) are mixed."

Negroes have not been admitted to white public schools in any counties in Georgia since the court's ruling.

Kansas

Ten Kansas school systems, which segregated elementary pupils under a permissive state law, are preparing to comply with the Supreme Court order.

Eight of the ten first-class cities previously permitted to have separate schools for white and Negro pupils already have started to abolish segregation. The 1867 Kansas segregation law applied only to first-class cities.

Topeka and Wichita moved toward integration even before the court's decision.

In Topeka, where one of the cases arose on which the court acted last May, the Board of Education will file a brief for the Dec. 6 hearing. It will ask that the Topeka segregation case be remanded to the United States District Court with the power to amplify the anti-segregation decree. The board will ask the high court to advise the lower court to request Topeka to end segregation "as rapidly as practicable."

Topeka, the capital city, opened two white schools to Negro pupils a year ago. Twelve more were opened this fall. This leaves eight segregated schools, four for white pupils and four for Negroes. The school board has indicated it plans to take further integration action this winter.

Wichita, the state's largest city, abolished all segregation months before the decision. Kansas City, having more Negro pupils than any other city in the state, began integration this fall and plans to complete it "as rapidly as classroom space can be provided."

Kentucky

Kentucky is taking no part in the Supreme Court hearings, but is continuing to operate separate schools at least until the court's final order is issued and put into effect.

When the Supreme Court outlawed segregation Gov. Lawrence Wetherby and the state Superintendent of Public Instruction, Wendell P. Butler, expressed willingness to comply, but said they would study the opinion first.

There is some speculation that the state board may attempt to block desegragation, but none will discuss it.

Last July 2 the Governor appointed five whites and two Negroes to an advisory committee but has not called it to meet.

Committees also have been appointed by the Kentucky Parent Teachers Association and the Kentucky Education Association to advise on the subject.

Crosses were burned in Lexington and Winchester a few days after the court ruled last may, and here and there groups of white parents protested to local school boards against admitting Negroes to white schools, but that situation quieted down after the court announced it would hold further hearings

Louisiana

Louisiana will not file a brief in the segregation case now before the court, according to Gov. Robert F. Kennon.

He declared that Louisiana planned to maintain "segregation in fact" regardless of the court decision.

Meanwhile, segregation laws are still maintained in Louisiana public schools. Petitions have been filed with a number of parish school boards asking that classes for whites and Negroes be integrated, but these have not been acted upon in most cases or flatly disapproved in others.

The only attempt made to enroll Negroes in white schools occurred in East Baton Rouge parish, site of the state capitol. Thirty-nine Negro children, accompanied by two Negro attorneys, sought to register on Sept. 3 in Gilmer Wright School.

Permission was refused. The school board said that admission of Negroes to white schools was in violation of state laws on segregation. On Sept. 23 the school board asked the Committee on Professional Ethics and Grievances of the Louisiana Bar Association to investigate the two Negro attorneys to see if professional ethics had been violated.

Governor Kennon said that Louisiana laws would be sufficient to maintain segregation no matter what the Supreme Court did if the voters of the state approved on Nov. 2 a proposed constitutional amendment that authorized the state to use its inherent police power to maintain segregation in the elementary schools.

Maryland

Segregation in the Baltimore schools ended so quietly and apparently amicably at enrollment Sept. 7 that little more was heard of it—until last Thursday. In the Maryland counties desegregation was postponed until further word from the Supreme court.

Meanwhile rumbles of opposition arose in the counties and on Thursday they were echoed in Baltimore. About fifty mothers picketed a southwest Baltimore elementary school with twelve Negro children in the kindergarten.

About 500 of almost 600 white pupils stayed home or left. A policewoman urging the pickets to leave was shoved and, in the excitement, another woman fainted. There were no arrests. Superintendent John Fischer declared the school would "stay open." The pickets, staying on, said they planned to picket other schools in the neighborhood.

On Friday violence erupted when white adults and students attacked four Negro pupils. Five men, including one Negro, were seized. Picketing of the schools continued.

In Baltimore Negroes have been enrolled in any schools of their choice — thirty-nine elementary and twelve secondary schools. Enrollments vary from a few to about half and half. Soon after desegregation of the schools the Baltimore Housing Authority desegregated public housing.

The Maryland Congress of Parent Teacher Associations issued a statement in July requiring compliance by local units with the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court.

Recently about thirty Southern Maryland P. T. A.'s held a joint meeting at Lothian, near Annapolis. Leaders, including some Naval Academy officers, said the purpose was "to maintain a local voice in the schools." They would not say it was to circumvent desegragation. The Southern Marylanders named a steering committee to decide whether to drop their P. T. A. titles.

Mississippi

Mississippi will vote on Dec. 21 to ratify or reject a proposed amendment to the State Constitution authorizing the Legislature to abolish public schools to keep Negroes out of white schools.

The amendment is the first official action of the state's Legal Education Advisory Committee, established by the 1954 Legislature, to provide a means of evading the Supreme Court decision.

The measure passed both Houses overwhelmingly in a special session called by Gov. Hugh White.

Under Mississippi's Constitution of 1890 integration of white and Negro students is prohibited.

Citizens in many counties began organizing to assure continued segregation.

The amendment authorizes the Legislature to:

¶Abolish schools throughout the state by a two-thirds vote.

¶Set up a local option plan by a majority vote of the Legislature whereby individual counties and school districts can abolish their schools.

¶Sell, lease or rent state-owned school property to private individuals or corporations.

¶Pay tuitions for students to attend private schools.

Missouri

Some form of integration of white and Negro pupils is under way in every section of Missouri, according to a survey concluded recently by the State Department of Education.

Because of the steps that have been taken on a purely voluntary basis, Attorney General John M. Dalton has decided to take no part in litigation before the Supreme Court this fall and will submit no brief on behalf of Missouri. Mr. Dalton believes the problem is gradually solving itself in Missouri.

Questionnaires returned to the Department of Education by 431 of 592 high school districts showed that eighty-five districts were operating under some form of integration. In fifty-four districts, an integrated high school program has been set up, but separate elementary schools are still maintained. Of a total enrollment of 15,992 in these districts, 449 are Negro pupils.

Nine districts with an enrollment of 1,973 reported integration in elementary schools with separate instruction on the high school level. The number of Negroes enrolled was ninety-three.

Integration on both the high and elementary school level was reported in twenty-eight districts. Total high school enrollment was listed as 9,087, of whom 209 are Negroes. Of a total elementary enrollment of 12,917, Negroes numbered 224.

In nine districts continued operation of Negro schools was reported, with Negro pupils having the choice of attending either their own or a white school. In four of the districts, Negroes chose to attend their own school.

Forty-two districts reported transportation of white and Negro children on the same school bus, and, in 277 districts replying, no Negro pupils were enrolled. Some form of integration was reported under way in fifty-two of the state's 114 counties and thirty-nine counties replied that they had no Negro pupils.

New Mexico

Segregation of Negroes in the public schools of New Mexico is a thing of the past, and desegregation was accomplished in an orderly manner at the beginning of the fall term this year. Only in one city—Hobbs—was there a threat of violence, and that situation was controlled.

Tom Wiley, State Superintendent of Public Instruction in New Mexico, summed up the situation in this manner:

"Segregated schools in New Mexico had been on the wane for many years prior to the ruling handed down by the United States Supreme Court. Out of a total of ninety-five administrative units in the state, only three had segregated schools at the time of the ruling. In two other units there was partial segregation, but this was due chiefly to the geographic location of the Negro population and would, I am confident, have been done away with this year whether the Supreme Court had ruled on the subject or not."

In Hobbs, county seat of Lea County in the southeastern tip of New Mexico, a self-styled "Segregation Committee" was organized and headed by the Rev. William Thomas Carter, a Baptist minister there.

He said he had 8,000 signatures to a petition urging continued segregation. Hobbs has a population of about 15,000, of whom 6,000 are children of school age, 400 of them Negro children.

Mr. Carter said that Hobbs would "erupt into violence" if desegregation were carried out on schedule. Leaders of his church denounced his views, and by the time school began there was no trouble as the Negroes took their places in classrooms with the others. Mr. Carter refused to send his children to the desegregated schools.

Indians are still segregated in New Mexico schools, but this is an administrative rather than a racial matter. There is a movement under way to absorb Indians into the state school systems.

North Carolina

North Carolina will file both written and oral briefs before the United States Supreme Court when arguments are presented in December on the implementation of the decision abolishing segregation in the schools.

The Attorney General, Harry McMullan, said that he and Gov. William B. Umstead have agreed that this state's brief should ask for more time in which to desegregate the schools. It is expected also that the brief will ask dividual school situations.

Meanwhile, under an order of the state Board of Education, public schools in the state are continuing to operate on a segregated basis. Negroes have not attempted to enter any of the white schools.

Oklahoma

Oklahoma is making plans to end segregation in its public schools by the beginning of the 1955 school term.

State school authorities took the attitude that the Supreme Court's decision would not become final until formal mandates were handed down. A state statute makes it a criminal offense for school authorities to permit mixed classes of white and Negro students. Until these laws are repealed, or declared void by a court decision, school officials will follow these laws.

The Legislature meets in January and is expected to bring statutes into conformity with the Supreme Court ruling.

However, state and school officials are hoping to have until the 1955 school term to do this, in order to make the transition without undue confusion and hardship.

The public is accepting the situation calmly. Roman Catholic high schools this autumn admitted Negro students for the first time.

South Carolina

South Carolina is playing a waiting game on the school segregation issue, hoping that some solution will turn up that will enable the state to abide by the law of the land and yet maintain separate schools.

The schools are operating as usual. A $175,000,000 equalization program is proceeding at full speed; $100,000,000 has already been spent or authorized for approved projects, two-thirds of it for Negro buildings.

An effort is being made to locate schools in such a way that district lines, drawn around residential areas, will accomplish a natural type of segregation in as many instances as possible.

No public schools have been opened to Negroes. A Roman Catholic parochial school has been desegregated in Rock Hill, an upstate textile and educational center with a relatively small Negro population and a large Catholic population.

The state will neither file a brief nor take part in the December arguments before the court concerning the decree in the five school cases, one of which originated in Clarendon County.

Tennessee

Tennessee's state government is awaiting developments before taking any definite action regarding desegregation.

The state has reserved the right to file a brief on the subject with the Supreme Court, but Gov. Frank G. Clement has given no indication whether a brief will be filed.

Meanwhile, public schools in Tennessee are continuing to operate on a segregated basis. An effort by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to have three white students admitted to a Negro school in Nashville was rejected by the city school board. The State Board of Education also rejected a request for admission of Negroes to Memphis State College at Memphis.

Parochial schools in Nashville are operating on an integrated basis, but technically in violation of the state law. Several Negro students were admitted to two white high schools after the Roman Catholic Negro high school was closed. A few Negroes were admitted to a white grammar school.

Catholic school officials declined to say how many Negroes had been admitted so far. There have been no incidents and students have accepted integration without argument.

Texas

Attorney General John Ben Shepperd will stress the need for continued local management of public schools in his brief to be presented to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Shepperd plans to follow the suggestion of Gov. Allan Shivers and state school leaders that Southern states be given ample time and authority to work out the segregation problem without disorder.

No disorder in Texas has been directly attributable to the Supreme Court's decision. Negroes have sought admission to white schools in several places, but they have been refused except in colleges.

The State Board of Education ordered schools to continue operating on a segregated basis through the 1954-55 year. It noted that the Supreme Court's decree was yet to be written and that Texas law and the State Constitution required segregation.

Meanwhile, integration was well under way in Texas public junior colleges. These are maintained largely by local taxes and tuition, but with some state financial aid. Last year—prior to the May 17 decisions—Negroes were admitted to junior colleges in Amarillo, San Angelo, Big Spring and Corpus Christi.

The Supreme Court last summer ordered a Wichita Falls junior college to admit Negroes. This fall, doors also were opened to Negroes for the first time at junior colleges in Victoria, Odessa, Borger, Edinburg and Wharton.

Virginia

Virginia, source of one of the school cases that led to the court's decision, is moving calmly and rather quietly along two lines in apparent efforts to uphold as far as possible the present traditional system of separate schools for white and Negro pupils.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. said he and attorneys for the Prince Edward County School Board involved in the Virginia case expected to file a joint brief with the court before the Nov. 15 deadline.

On a long-range basis a thirty-two member legislative group has started work as the Virginia Public Education Commission. It has decided on closed deliberations, but has indicated it will hold public hearings to get as many viewpoints as possible on the question of segregated and integrated schools. Gov. Thomas B. Stanley declared that "the overwhelming majority of the people of Virginia favor separate schools * * * in the best interest of both races" and "I shall use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools in Virginia."

Mr. Almond has suggested as a legal basis for action his beliefs that "Negro teachers are not going to be engaged in Virginia to teach white children" and "No child of any race is going to be compelled to attend a mixed school."

Governing boards of more than twenty of Virginia's ninety-eight counties have urged retention of segregated schools, as have a number of legislators.

West Virginia

Despite isolated incidents of threatened violence, West Virginia has made considerable progress toward integration in the public schools and has pledged full compliance with the Supreme Court's decree when it is handed down.

State officials have no plans now for submitting a brief or participating other than as observers in the court arguments. There has been not so much as a hint of resistance by public officials, either on the state or local level.

Protests made by individuals have been based chiefly on the contention that until the Supreme Court issues a formal decree declaring segregated schools unconstitutional, West Virginia must be governed by a state constitutional provision that says that white and colored persons shall not be taught in the same school.

The state school superintendent, W. W. Trent, notified the fifty-five county boards of education that it was up to them to act individually.

As a result, twelve counties with sparse Negro population completely integrated their white and Negro pupils this fall, thirteen others have accomplished partial integration, eighteen are awaiting further Supreme Court clarification, eleven have no Negro pupils, and one county (Greenbrier) returned to segregation after protests.

The Greenbrier County board had adopted a policy of "voluntary" integration under which twenty-three Negroes enrolled at White Sulphur Springs High School and fourteen at the Rupert combined elementary and high school.

After protests the Greenbrier board decided to end its experiment in gradual integration and ordered Negroes to attend only Negro schools pending further court clarification.

MOVE TO BLOCK DESEGREGATION IN MISSISSIPPI

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 7 [Special]—The Mississippi legislature took preliminary steps at its special session opening today for enactment of a program designed to keep racial segregation alive in schools despite the United States Supreme court.

The legislators—49 senators and 140 members of the house—convened in a joint session to listen to a brief message from Gov. Hugh White outlining a proposed amendment to the state constitution which would authorize abolition of public schools on either a statewide or local option basis.

White said the amendment is necessary "to meet a crisis we did not seek" and described the thinking behind the measure as "in my opinion unanswerable both as to logic and merit." His remarks were broadcast over a Mississippi network.

"May we never yield, and may success crown our humble efforts," he said. "We shall resist by every legal means at our command." He added that there is no "present intention" of abolishing schools.

Adoption Held Certain

A resolution embodying White's recommendations was promptly introduced in the lower house where it must lay over for a day before being referred to a committee. Its adoption within a few weeks by a two-thirds vote of each house is regarded as a certainty.

The resolution provides for a state-wide referendum Dec. 21 at which a plurality of votes cast would determine whether the proposed amendment is to become a part of the state's basic law.

The proposed amendment is the product of a legal educational advisory committee set up by the legislature at its regular session early this year.

Function Frankly Stated

This committee, composed of 25 members, included numerous state officials, educators, and constitutional lawyers. Its frankly stated function was to devise a legal method for evading the United States Supreme court opinion outlawing racial segregation, and to set up a system whereby white and Negro children will continue to receive education in separate institutions.

The first step in its plan, it became clear thru the governor's message, is to empower the legislature thru constitutional amendment either to abolish all public schools in the state or to confer on counties and school districts the right to abolish public schools in their jurisdictions.

Power Seen as Deterent

Several legislators have voiced a belief that the mere existence of this power will be sufficient to keep the segregation issue from coming to a head for several years. In the event the state's segregation system is successfully challenged legally, however, the legislature might exercise its power to abolish schools and follow thru by disposing of "school buildings, land, and other properties by lease, sale, or otherwise."

The legislature would have further power under the amendment to appropriate state funds and to authorize appropriations by counties, municipalities, and school districts for the purpose of aiding "educable children to receive education."

Would Aid Pupils

Persons who have studied the plan have described it as contemplating transfer of all public school properties to private groups supplanting school boards, and direct appropriation to pupils of funds required as tuition by "private" schools willing to accept them as pupils.

Widely differentiating views were expressed by legislators as to whether the plan will stand up under attack in the federal courts. Many members said they thought it more drastic than necessary for the preservation of segregation but there was no audible opposition from the standpoint of antipathy to the principle of such preservation.

Mississippi schools began opening this week and will be in full operation next week with white and Negro children attending separate schools. The legislature at its regular session appropriated 34 million dollars for the 1954-1955 school year, a sum regarded as sufficient for a year's operation, but cut the 1955-1956 school year allotment to 16 million dollars.

A special session will admittedly be necessary early next year to insure operation of the schools thruout the 1955-1956 term, but legislators created the situation deliberately to give them close control of the purse strings while the segregation issue is unresolved. The legislature has also refused to advance a proposed 80 million dollar school building program designed to give white and Negro children equal but separate facilities.

The current special session is expected to last at least three weeks and there were some predictions it will run until Christmas. The legislators are paid on a per diem basis.

The governor has indicated he will ask action on about 19 other matters, most of them noncontroversial.

50 Negroes Enroll

Hillsboro, O., Sept. 7 (AP) — Fifty Negro children today enrolled in the previously all white Washington and Webster elementary schools in Hillsboro. Only 17 reported to the segregated Lincoln school.

The board of education, which had pleaded for time to allow for construction of new schools, called a special meeting tonight to discuss the situation.

Hillsboro, county seat of Highland county in southwestern Ohio, has a population of 5,126, including about 1,200 Negroes. The junior and senior high schools have been integrated for about 20 years, but the school board has continued to operate grade schools on a segregated basis.

Enter Parochial Schools

Arlington, Va., Sept. 7 (AP)— Negro and white youngsters turned up in the same classrooms today in two military posts and three Catholic parochial schools in the north Virginia environs of Washington.

Thruout the rest of Virginia, segregation continued to be practiced in public schools. Parochial high schools in Richmond were admitting Negro pupils who had been graduated from parochial elementary schools.

Negro pupils reported for class at the schools at Fort Belvoir and Fort Myer, and St. Thomas More and St. Charles schools in Arlington, and at St. Michael's in Annandale.

Newspaper Backs Brownell Answers To Supreme Court

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — The Washington Post and Times Herald believes that the answers of Attorney General Herbert J. Brownell, Jr., to the questions posed by the United States Supreme Court in the five school segregation cases are sensible.

Discussing the brief filed by Mr. Brownell for the United States, at the invitation of the court to participate in the further argument of the questions of how and when its decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools, shall be ordered put into effect, The Post on Sunday, under the heading, "Justice and Patience," Sunday said editorially:

COMMON SENSE

"Attorney General Brownell has made a common sense reply to the Supreme Court's request for counsel as to the manner in which it should implement its order forbidding racial segregation in the nation's public schools.

"He recommends that integration should not be required simultaneously and uniformly in every part of the country. The reason for this is self evident—and was recognized by the court itself, indeed, when it invited counsel. Differences in local folkways, attitudes and conditions make enforcement of a general rule and schedule of integration an impossibility.

"Mr. Brownell is equaly sensible, we think, in recommending that the formulation of specific decrees for ending dual school systems should be left to lower courts under general principles to be set forth by the Supreme Court. This procedure will permit maximum flexibility and allow room for discretion to judges familar with local circumstances.

SOBER RECOGNITION

"Such awareness of the resistance which the Supreme Court's great decision of last spring is bound to encounter in communities where it runs counter to established patterns is no more than a sober recognition of reality.

"The Attorney General does not suggest, however, that there be any more than a rational accommodation to this resistance. The unconstitutionality of racial segregation in tax-supported schools has now been unequivocally decided. Segregation must be abondoned, therefore, Mr. Brownell says, 'as quickly as feasible, regardless of how much it may be favored by some people in the community.'

ORDERLY ARGUMENT

"There is an important difference between consideration of the time needed for an orderly adjustment and paltering to the intransigence of those who do not desire to adjust at all. There are still some leaders in the South who seem determined to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision.

"The Federal courts can have no truck with evasion. Bogus private school systems in place of public schools are as obvious an evasion of the Constitution as the white primary devine of a few years ago. But where, as in most parts of the South, there is good will and a desire to make a difficult transition smoothly, firmness can best be tempered with patience and understanding.

N. C. Editor Says Talmadge, Byrnes Will Back Down On School Threats

By ARNOLD DE MILLE

(See Story Page 6)

NEW YORK—Gov. Herman Talmadge will not call out his militia and Gov. James F. Byrne of South Carolina will not end public school education if the United States Supreme Court outlaws segregation in elementary education, the editor of the North Carolina newspaper declared.

Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh, N. C. News and Observer, said in a speech here last week that however sweeping the decision may be "it will be met in the South with the good sense and good will of the people of both races in a manner which will serve the children and honor America."

However, he said "I am not among those eagerly hoping that the Supreme Court this spring and in one decision will wipe out segregation in all the public schools of the South."

Daniels was the principal speaker at the 4th annual dinner of the National Urban League and the Urban League of Greater New York, held last Wednesday night in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel. The league's two annual awards were presented to the National Newspaper Publishers Association and the International Harvester company. More than 1,700 persons attended.

BROKE KLAN

Daniels is the author of "A Southerner Discovers the South," "A Southerner Discovers New England," "Tar Heel,' and "A Portrait of North Carolina." He is credited with breaking the back of the Ku Klux Klan in North Carolina.

He said that the white and Negro people of the South have business together. It might be the most important on earth, and together it will be accomplished.

In waiting for the Supreme Court decision in the school segregation cases — if anyone could really separate the Negroes and the South — the expectation may be too high.

The hope which attends it is colored with impatience, Daniels asserted. "I know the impatience is there. The fear is there, too. Governor Herman Talmadge will not get out his militia to resist the declared law of the land," he said. "The South has been to Appomattox. More importantly its men have been to Belleau Wood and Okinawa and Korea."

SAYS BYRNES BLUFFS

Governor James F. Byrnes of South Carolina will not end public education in the South where it is needed more than anywhere else in America, and more than anywhere else for America to which its white and Negro sons have dispersed in search of a better chance," Daniels said.

He stated that the simple fact is that the end of segregation will give a weapon to those who are always more interested in low taxes than good schools for any children or all of them.

"I am not as sure as I wish I were that the nation which may impose its will upon the South as to how it should run its schools will be as quickly read with federal aid to education to help the states with the most children and the least wealth to give any of the childen the education which the equal opportunity of the American child requires."

He said that it is not required "of us that we be always happy in change."

MUST HONOR FAITH

"It is required that we honor a faith which we would have the world defend," he added. "We will be most secured in the world when the least and the last among us walks in his right in dignity and pride."

The other speakers on the program were Ivan L. Willis, vice president of International Harvester, who accepted the award for his company, Carl Murphy, president of NNPA, Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York, Mrs. Cernoria D. Johnson of the Oklahoma Urban League, Harry L. Alston, National League Southern Field director, and Lester Granger, executive director, National Urban League.

The dinner was chairmaned by James Felt, the league's president and Emily Kimbrough, CBS radio commentator, was toastmistress.

Claims South Would Obey Court Decree

NEW YORK (INS)—A noted Southern newspaper editor said last week that the Supreme Court's devision on segregation in the public schools "will be met in the South with the good will of the peoples of both races."

Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, said that "however sweeping" the decision of the court may be, "Governor (Herman) Talmadge (Ga.) will not get out his militia to resist the declared law of the land, and Governor (James F.) Byrnes (S. C.) will not end public education in the South where it is needed more than anywhere else in America."

Speaking at the Urban League dinner in New York, Daniels added:

"Do not misunderstand me. I am not among those eagerly hoping that the Supreme Court this spring and in one decision will wipe out segregation in all schools of the South."

He concluded, however, that the South will respect the forthcoming Supreme Court decision because "the great mass of the good people, white and Negro, in the South show themselves capable of living and working, growing and gaining together."

Booker T. Washington Pitied 'Ignorant' Men

To the Editor:

The public issue that arose in the Southern states in 1953 pertaining to segregation in public schools was argued pro and con by Negroes and white persons.

There is one thing in particular that Negro race leaders, North and South, should realize. People who live under jim crow and disfranchisement laws are deprived of their Constitutional rights which makes them second-class citizens and have no birthright. It is not the sole purpose of trying to abolish segregation in public schools in an effort to bring about social equality among Negroes and white people. Its purpose is to build a foundation that will break down the bars of segregation in all public walks of life. Negro race leaders who advocate any form of jim crowism should remember the quotation of Booker T. Washington, the greatest of all Negro race leaders. A white man called him a "nigger." He was asked if he hated the man for calling him such a name. He quoted, "There isn't a man white nor black, North nor South, that could do enough to me to cause me to hate him. I don't hate the man. I pity him because he is ignorant."

FACTS BEHIND THE NEWS

By REID E. JACKSON

BYRNES SHOULD KNOW BETTER

SEVERAL STATEMENTS which Gov. James F. Byrnes made to the South Carolina Education Association last week need closer examination.

Dr. Jackson

In fact, his remarks carried the overtones of a political speech rather than the ring of truth.

To begin with, Gov. Byrnes declared that any court decision outlawing school segregation would "mark the beginning of the end of civilization in the South as we have known it."

A Rigid Separation

It is fairly safe to assume that Byrnes was talking about a South that has consistently endeavored to maintain rigid separation between the two races in all spheres of everyday life.

If this is true the "good governor" needs to take a jaunt around his own state. He would find that such a South is rapidly disappearing right under his nose.

Only forty miles from Columbia — the state's capital — he would see colored and white living together without tension in the interracial Birnie housing project.

Close to Sumter is the Shaw Air Force Base. Colored citizens of Sumter, denied use of public facilities in the town, travel there to play on the golf courses and tennis courts.

What is more, they play right along with and beside white patrons of the same sports fields.

White and colored soldiers from Shaw walk down the streets of Sumter with arms locked around each other. They even visit the same places of entertainment together. In the process they often eat at the same table.

The only "fly in the ointment" here is that these places are so-called "colored" establishments.

Hovel - Like Homes

Years ago our people in South Carolina lived in hovel - like homes, for the most part, that were located on unpaved streets without sanitary facilities.

Today many own pretentious homes in mixed neighborhoods. It is significant to note that this is happening in cities like Columbia, Greenville, Sumter, Florence, Hartsville, Darlington and Orangeburg, where educational facilities are good.

It is more in the rural communities that the effort is made to "keep us in our place."

Gov. Byrnes further reminded the teachers that he would try to "preserve the public school system and at the same time maintain segregation," if separate schools were declared illegal.

This, even a child should know, is not at all possible!

In a desperate move to stave off integrated schools, Byrnes is now engaged in a multi - million dollar school building program.

Fully 75 per cent of this money is being used to construct "colored schools" that are supposed to be "equal" to "white" schools.

As one might suspect, this has been a husty program. Consequently many "eyecatching" buildings have been rushed up that are not the best in planning and construction.

A Separate Office

Ironically enough the lone colored member of the educational commission, supervising this program, does not have office in the state education building with the rest of the committee. He is housed in one of the city's "colored" junior high schools.

The working people in the field of education, though, do not seem to entertain this zeal for segregation. Many meetings called by the state department of education to study curricular problems are attended by both races, without any discrimination.

If colored and white were "forced" into the same class, Gov. Byrnes claims, "instead of thinking about mathematics, the children would be thinking of race relations."

He is absolutely correct. But, that is what they should be doing!

Democratic education strives, first of all, to have children develop desirable concepts of democratic living. Then, a search is made for facts necessary to make such living possible.

This means that children should acquire the disposition to live together harmoniously as human beings. Then they would secure the principles of mathematics which would be adequate for the pursuit of democracy.

"Racial conflicts between children," Gov. Byrnes warned, "would result in conflicts between parents."

Objective teachers know better than this. Racial conflicts between children are usually brought on by racial prejudices held by their parents!

Gov. Byrnes should know that present - day children would be free of bias, if only the older people would leave them alone!

Byrnes Cannot Cancel Words On Schools, Says Walter White

NEW YORK — Gov. James F. Byrnes' attempt to explain away his 1951 declaration that "we will abandon the public school system" if the U. S. Supreme Court bans segregation is "puerile and lacking in substance," the U. S. Supreme in substance," Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said here today.

Mr. White referred to a recent address by the Governor before the white teachers of South Carolina in which Mr. Byrnes charged that "leaders of the NAACP deliberately misrepresented" his remarks about the schools three years ago. He repeated that he had said at that time: "If the court changes what is now the law of the land, we will if it is possible live within the law, preserve the public school system and at the same time maintain segregation. If that is not possible, reluctantly we will abandon the public school system."

The South Carolinian complained that the NAACP accused him of saying he "would personally close the public schools." Further, he asserted, the NAACP ignored the word "reluctantly" in his original statement.

"Now that he has found that his words have been widely condemned not only by the NAACP, but also by all believers in a free democratic society, Gov. Byrnes is trying to backtrack on the clear implications of his statement," Mr. White said. "We charge that the Governor's 1951 statement clearly reveals that he (1) values segregation above education; (2) urges action to evade a possible anti-segregation ruling by the court; and (3) plans to 'abondon the public school system' if unable to maintain segregation in the face of a decision banning such discrimination.

"We do not care whether this last step is taken 'reluctantly' or eagerly. The result is the same—defiance of the supreme law of the land and denial of public education to both Negro and white children of South Carolina.

"Further, we charge," Mr. White continued, "that Gov. Byrnes has spearheaded the drive to close the public schools if segregation is outlawed. He urged the Legislature to submit the issue to a referendum and campaigned vigorously and successfully to have the voters empower the Legislature to remove the constitutional provision requiring the state to maintain a public school system. He cannot now escape his responsibility for the role he has played in a frantic effort to retain Jim Crow education. He cannot cancel the true meaning of his words of 1951."

Box Score

Here are the latest developments in the war on segregated schools:

1. All divisions of the University of Missouri have been opened to "all races."

2. Charleston High School (W. Va.) has enrolled its first Negro student, Herman Canady Jr., son of a West Virginia State College professor.

3. Alabama's State Board of Education has called for the continuance of jim-crow schools through the 1954-55 year.

4. Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina revealed his state's plans to continue segregated schools for the forthcoming term.

5. The National Conference of Methodist Men has denounced racial segregation in public schools at sessions held in Indiana.

6. Catholic Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummell has announced that New Orleans parochial schools have no intention of abolishing segregation this year because of the "tremendous problems" involved.

7. The Arkansas Presbytery of the Northern Presbyterian Church has taken a stand in favor of an integrated church and an integrated society.

8. Mississippi's Legal Education Advisory Committee has recommended that public schools be abolished if necessary to maintain segregation.

Report Thousands Of Teachers To Lose Jobs

WASHINGTON—The magazine, U. S. News and World Report in its issue of August 27, reports that thousands of Negro teachers in the South will lose their jobs under integration and will have to look to the North for new positions.

The article says that this is due to the ratio of one out of five teachers in 17 Southern states and the District of Columbia being Negro while in 31 states of the North and West, one out of every 73 teachers is Negro.

Calling the employment of these displaced Negro teachers by the North the first big test in the lifting of racial bars, U. S. News points out that objections are often raised in the North when Negro teachers are assigned to teach white children.

Sounding a gloomy note, the magazine said that the answer to whether they will be absorbed appears to be "no." It predicts that thousands of them will leave the South with the beginnings of integration.

In the North, protests from white parents tend to drive Negro teachers out of the schools to which their children go. The same thing is expected in the South when desegregation comes to the schools there.

Jeffersonville, Ind., is cited as an example of this. The town is just completing de-segregation, with few incidents. But there has been a real teacher problem.

In 1948, there were 16 Negro teachers there. By 1951, the number dropped to 11 and finally only three Negro teachers were retained.

These had attained permanent stature and could not be discharged only for cause. One of the three was given an administrative job, the others assignments in remedial reading and speech therapy where pupil attendance is optional.

The gradual elimination of Negro teachers has caused resentment among the town's Negroes, so the article says.

In Indiana, all teachers train at the same colleges, meet the same standards. But desegregtion has cost Negro teachers many jobs in Southern Indiana.

In Illinois, Negro teachers are also finding themselves in a highly competitive field. For the most part in 111 counties in southern Illinois, Negro teachers were shifted to schools where the pupils were predominantly Negro under de-segregation.

In New Jersey, the integration plan has fared better with teachers placed without regard to race where they were needed. The article concludes by saying:

"As it stands, Negro teachers are finding their way into northern schools now in a competitive job market. And this is a slow process."

"Leaders say this is what will happen in the South. But it will be a long slow process, and it will be hard on the present crop of Negro teachers in the South. A lot of them seem destined to lose their jobs."

School Bells Toll Death For Jim Crow

NEW YORK—When the school bells ring this month, children of all races will be sharing classrooms in a number of Southern localities where strict school segregation formerly was maintained by state laws.

Without waiting for the Supreme Court to issue decrees implementing its decision which held public school segregation to be unconstitutional, some Southern localities simply are integrating their public schools at the beginning of the fall term, an NAACP survey shows.

Similar action has been taken by several Southern colleges and universities, as well as by some private schools in the South.

—o O o—

COMMUNITIES AND cities located in five southern states have announced public school integration for next month. These states are West Virginia, Missouri, Arkansas, Maryland and Delaware.

In addition, public schools in the District of Columbia will be integrated for the first time this September.

In the five southern states where school integration already is scheduled on the local level, a total of at least 23 towns or cities and one county have set the action for next month.

In some cases, integration has been accomplished during the summer term. In Kansas City and Columbia, Mo., and in Wilmington, Del., colored pupils were enrolled this summer in what has been all-white public schools.

—o O o—

OF THE FIVE Southern states in which public school integration plans are proceeding on the local level, Missouri is out front in de-segregating her schools, judging by preliminary results compiled by the NAACP.

In addition to the Kansas City, Mo., public summer schools, which opened their doors to all students, Kansas City Teachers' College will follow suit next month.

The Kansas City Board of Education adopted a plan to end segregation in public summer schools, integrate vocational and junior colleges this fall, and complete integration in all public schools in September, 1955.

IN ST. LOUIS, Mo., a carefully drawn - up desegregation plan has been made public which specifies integration of the two teachers' colleges and the handicapped children's schools this September, of the high schools February 1 of next year.

St. Louis elementary schools will stop segregating children in September, 1955.

In Columbia, Mo., home of the state university, public school integration started this summer.

Race barriers will be dropped this fall at the University of Missouri and at its School of Mines in Rolla, as well as in the kindergarten, primary and high schools operated by the University's School of Education in Columbia.

—o O o—

OTHER MISSOURI towns which will integrate all public schools next month are Springfield, New Haven, Fredericktown, Kirksville, Clayton and St. Joseph.

High schools only will be desegregated next month in Kennett, LaBelle, Macon, Butler, Woodcrest, West Plains, Shelbina, Fulton, Jefferson City, Mexico and Carthage. Similar action for elementary schools only will be carried out in September in Kirkwood and St. Charles.

Segregated public schools will end next month in Baltimore, Md., and Monongalia County, W. Va., while the Fayetteville, Ark., high school will enroll pupils of both races for the first time in September.

—o O o—

IN THE FIELD of higher education, the fall term will find both white and colored students welcomed at previously segregated:

Middle Tennessee State College, Murfreesboro, Tenn.; University of Arkansas, Little Rock Ark.; Hardin Junior College o Midwest University, Wichita Falls, Tex.;

The two teachers colleges in Washington, D.C.; the nine state colleges in West Virginia; Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.; Southwest Missouri State College, Springfield, Mo.;

Joplin (Mo.) Junior College; and Central Missouri State College, Fayette, Mo.

In several communities outside the 17 southern and border states which enforced segregation by state law, the segregation of public school children on a municipal basis will be ended next month.

These towns include Hobbs, N.M.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Pasadena, Calif.; and Chester, Pa.

—o O o—

INTEGRATION HAS been set for 1955 in a number of southern communities where plans to desegregate the schools have been made public.

In January, 1955, the junior and senior high schools of Kirkwood, Mo., will begin operation on an integrated basis. In September, 1955, the high schools in St. Charles, Mo., and all the public schools in Charleston, Hancock County and Kanawha County, W. Va., and in Warrensburg, Mo., will integrate.

Since the Supreme Court declared public school segregation unconstitutional, a number of private southern schools have voluntarily given up segregation. This past summer, a vacation Bible school, conducted by the Parkersburg, W. Va., First Baptist Church for the first time welcomed and enrolled children of both races.

In Virginia, the Catholic schools in Roanoke, Arlington, Fairfax and Falls Church will be integrated this fall, as will the four Catholic high schools in Richmond.

It has been announced that the Catholic school system of Baltimore will be desegregated at an unspecified later date.

—o O o—

SCATTERED INSTANCES of complaints from white parents following school board desegregation plans have occurred, but no trouble from children or college students has been reported during the newly-integrated summer sessions in various localities.

In Clarkton, Mo., and in Sheridan, Ark., the school board reversed its decision to integrate the schools this September following protests from white parents.

Outright plans to resist integration of schools have been broached in only a few states like Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida.

In reply to a warning by the NAACP that it plans to effect speedy admission of colored children to white schools in Florida, Attorney General Richard Ervin stated that unless desegregation is affected gradually, the Florida legislature "would seriously consider and probably abolish the public school system."

—o O o—

FROM NORTH Carolina came the report that Gov. William B. Umstead and his advisory committee are trying to work out a policy to strengthen and preserve the state's public school system. "The problem as I see it is to establish a policy and a program which will preserve the state public school system by having the support of the people," the governor stated.

In the background, however, was a report, compiled at the governor's request by the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill, which outlined three possible courses to the state:

1. Obey the high court order;
2. Leave it up to the Supreme Court to enforce the ruling, and
3. Stall for time in which to study plans for action.

Meanwhile, there were sideline reports that the survey also showed that the majority of colored and white leaders favored gradual integration. Colored ones however, feel it should begin sooner and be completed quicker than do the whites.

N. C. Methodist youths call segregation 'un-Christian'

DURHAM. N. C. (ANP)—White delegates to the third annaul conference of the North Carolina Conference Methodist Youth Fellowship passed a resolution branding segregation as "un-Christian" at a meeting at Duke University here last week.

The conference also accepted a proposal of its Christian Citizenship Area Committee to report resolutions to both the North Carolina Methodist Conference, meeting in Raleigh in October, and to Gov. William B. Umstead's Committee on Segregation.

Both resolutions will declare that "the youth of this conference feel that segregation is un-Christian."

Five Areas Wiping Out Jim Crow; No Incidents Reported

(By Courier Press Service)

As the school bell rings summoning the nation's children back to the classroom, healthful signs of the crumbling of racial barriers in the public schools of the country have been reported from many sections.

School officials in New Mexico, the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and West Virginia report positive approaches to desegregation of the classrooms without incident.

Catholics in several sections of the country also move into implementing the Supreme Court decision in parochial institutions although the order was directed only at tax-supported schools.

IN WASHINGTON, D. C., nearly 3,000 Negro students in the District of Columbia will transfer to new schools on Sept. 13 when racial integration begins in the nation's capital. When the new term opens there will be a uniformed police officer near every local school as a precaution against possible friction between white and Negro students.

Last week eight Negro students were registered at five senior and junior high schools hitherto restricted to whites. These were students entering the District school system for the first time or moving from one school zone to another.

FIVE CITIES IN New Mexico opened the doors of newly integrated schools without incident. The cities of Las Crecas, Clovis, Artesia, Carlsbad and Hobbs saw the end of segregation in public schools implemented this week. Only the Roswell, N. M., system, which, while it has desegregated the higher grades, still has segregated classes in the lower grades. Segregation in these grades are expected to end very shortly.

At Hobbs, where a furor over the non-segregation school board order has raged for weeks, the Rev. William Carter, a Baptist minister, who although claiming he was "just a moderator" for the issue, had publicly predicted that this New Mexico community would "explode into violence" if segregation ended.

When the Hobbs schools opened without incident, the Rev. Carter announced: "I thought the people would abide by law."

DOVER, DEL., joined the ranks with the announcement that its Board of Education had adopted a plan for racial integration in the public schools. Dover will start with the admission of Negro students to the ninth grade of the high school this year.

Dover is the first school system in lower Delaware to take steps toward implementing integration. Wilmington and school boards adjacent to it took action to abolish segregated schools some time ago.

IN LITTLE ROCK, ARK., more than 400 Negro parents throughout the state filed petitions to fourteen school boards, asking immediate reorganization of school districts for integration of Negro and white pupils.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas State NAACP Conference, made it clear that the parents were asking not only for the integration of students, but the integration of Negro and white teachers as well.

DR. WILSON H. ELKINS, new president of the University of Maryland, said this week that he anticipated no difficulties arising from the admission of Negro students this fall at College Park. He said already seven Negro students have applied for admission to undergraduate school at the university and that three have been admitted, one was rejected on academic basis and three are pending.

Canton, Ohio's, McKinley High School, gets its first Negro faculty member this week. Alvin C. Boyd, former high school principal in Tallahassee, Fla., will be the counselor for boys at the school where the number of Negro students has been described as negligible.

CATHOLICS IN Southern states moved into the positive picture by declaring that Catholic Negro children be admitted to any Catholic school available in places where there is no Catholic school especially for them.

Such a statement was issued by Bishop Albert L. Fletcher of Little Rock, Ark.

In Newton Grove, N. C., the Father J. F. Rouche, intimated that Negroes would be admitted to the school if they applied. He confirmed the report that his church is following the non-segregation policy and is opening its parochial schools this fall.

There have been some indications that some of the Catholic churches might attempt to drag their feet in an effort to delay the integration program a while longer, but the Rt. Rev. Waters, Bishop of the diocese of Raleigh, which embraces all of North Carolina, except Gaston County, declined to comment, but hinted that he might have a statement later.

Bishop Waters told the Courier last week, "I've got to run this show and I'm going to run it."

ACTING PRESIDENT L. H. Terrell of Harpers Ferry, West Virginia's Storer College, announced that two or three white students are expected to enroll there when school opens this fall.

In Staunton, Va., the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia took the position that enforced racial segregation "is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics."

SPACE AND THE LAW

Separate Schools-- What's to Be Done?

By BEM PRICE

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 11 (AP)—This may be th last year for a way of life in which racial discrimination i legal.

Across the fringes of the South—Delaware, Maryland, Missouri and the District of Columbia—the color bars already are being dropped here and there in the public schools.

Every major religious denomination in the region has taken a stand in support of the Supreme Court decision of last May 17 holding that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

But while the fringe states are acting, 14 of the 17 states affected by the court ruling plan to do nothing about the problem in the coming school year. Some don't expect to act, however, in 1955 or 1956.

In ruling against public school segregation, the court refrained from issuing an order specifying how its decision should be put into effect. It asked interested states to submit advice which could be used to formulate a plan of action.

Until the Supreme Court does spell out a plan in detail, none of the "Old South" states plans to do anything. In fact, until the order is given, the states are proceeding on the assumption that segregation laws still are on the books.

THE SOUTH'S segregation problem is incredibly complex. "The South" as an entity, in which whites are uniformly prosegregation, just doesn't exist.

Large sections have essentially "Yankee traditions" — sections which opposed slavery from the beginning and whose citizens fought on the Union side in the War Between the States.

The school situation is a vast hodgepodge of prejudice and politics, budgets and buildings, population and poverty.

The 1861-65 War left the South without an economic base on which to build public schools. Even by 1900 only one state, Kentucky, had a compulsory school attendance law. Public schools, in brief, were late arriving in the South.

When the states did acquire public school systems, the white Southerners—the taxpayers—were primarily concerned with taking care of their own children first. Whatever was left over went to the Negroes.

JUST AS THE SOUTH began pulling itself up by its economic bootstraps, the Great Depression of 1929-1935 nearly wrecked the public school system. Building lagged, especially building for Negroes.

As the area recovered from its economic setbacks, it embarked on a school building program which was halted by World War II and only resumed in 1946.

With the end of World War II, the South once again set out to catch up with the rest of the nation. War's end brought demands from Negroes that the South practice its "separate but equal" doctrine in the schools. More and more public money was put aside for Negro education.

By the time the Supreme Court handed down its ruling, the Southern states were spending a higher percentage of income on public schools than any other section.

But if a program of integration were begun immediately, the simple problem of space would be acute, especially in rural areas.

RURAL WHITE CHILDREN in the South as a rule go by bus to schools in town. Negro children go to country schools, many of them one-room affairs, near home.

If the white children were suddenly dumped on these country schools, many of which already are overcrowded, there would be children hanging from the rafters.

In the face of these general facts, the question for most Southerners is: "When and How?"

Two of the region's most widely recognized authorities on race relations, while cautioning against the specific application of a generality, believe that the white-Negro population ratio is the best index.

They are Harry S. Ashmore of Little Rock, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, and George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

THEY HOLD that desegregation probably will end first where the Negro population is lightest and last where it is heaviest.

Almost half the 1,328 counties in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Virginia have 10 per cent or less Negro population.

One-fifth of these counties contain 40 per cent of the entire Negro population in the region. Most of the counties with the smallest Negro populations are in mountain areas—the Ozarks and Applachians.

In the decade from 1940 to 1950 more than a million Negroes left these 13 states and went north. The increase in white population was 33 times as great as the Negro gain.

The Negro farm population declined by 1,300,000.

THESE STATISTICS mean the South is growing whiter and the Negro is being urbanized.

Ashmore and Mitchell believe that if the Supreme Court permits a local option system of ending segregation, with a time limit for compliance, many of the hill counties will integrate swiftly.

Moreover, under their theory, about half of Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee, a third of Kentucky, about a fifth of Virginia and spots in Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina also will integrate quickly and with a minmum of trouble.

HIGH COURT AWAITS SEGREGATION "ADVICE" FROM 17 STATES AND D.C

While the idea of racial integration on the grade school level came as a shock to many white Southerners, it has been taking place without friction on the college level in most of the South since 1935. Approximately 2,000 Negroes attended previously all-white colleges or universities last year.

EVEN PRIOR to the Supreme Court decision, 24 state colleges or universities admitted Negroes—usually as the result of Supreme Court action—on the graduate or professional level.

Thirteen state and municipal colleges admitted Negroes on the undergraduate level, as did 46 private denominational colleges.

The only states which have not admitted Negroes to white colleges on any level are South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi.

These states, with the exception of Florida, have the heaviest concentrations of Negro population, ranging up to 71 per cent in some counties.

South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, along with Louisiana, which also has a heavy Negro population, have been the most outspoken in announcing intentions to evade the Supreme Court mandate.

WHILE A COURT ORDER actually ending segregation still is some time away, the question arises as to what kind of mandate it may be considering.

The substance of the questions asked by the court in delaying an order were:

1. Must the court order admission of Negroes to schools nearest their homes immediately, or may the court permit "an effective gradual adjustment?"

2. If the court orders a gradual adjustment, should it appoint a special master to study and recommend methods?

In 27 days of traveling, I encountered an enormous variety of white opinion in the "Deep South," most of it prosegregation and anti-Supreme Court.

Among Negroes — not the leaders, but the so-called little people —there was hope that segregation, the legal badge of inferiority, was on its way out.

NO ONE SECTION of the South could be called typical, but Arkansas comes close to it. The state is a sort of "South" in miniature.

It has uplands and lowlands, small farms and rich plantations, areas where Negroes outnumber the whites and areas where there are no Negroes at all.

In the north and west most of the counties have a Negro population of less than four per cent, while the concentrations range up to 67 per cent in the east and south.

The attitude in Arkansas is one of calm appraisal. Says Arkansas Commissioner of Education Arch W. Ford:

"In writing anything about Arkansas, you must remember this. East Arkansas is like Mississippi. Northern Arkansas resembles Missouri, while the west and southwest are oriented toward Texas and Oklahoma. As for central Arkansas, it can be called South—but not as South as in other regions.

"The people in the southeast and south don't favor integration. There is no strong feeling about it in the central section and the people in the north and west don't care."

ARKANSAS, Ford said, will do nothing to evade the orders of the court. He adds state school officials will never go along with abolishing the public school system as in Mississippi where 800 teachers and school superintendents approved a proposed constitutional change which would empower the state legislature to abolish public schools, after which whites and Negroes would be free to establish their own "private" schools.

The Ozark mountain town of Fayetteville intends to integrate nine Negro high school students this year.

There may be other districts which will do the same, Ford says, "but they'll just stick the kids in school and say nothing about it."

Fayetteville, home of the University of Arkansas, has been sending its Negro high school students out of the county at a cost of about $5,000 annually.

THIS YEAR, because of overcrowded schools elsewhere, it has to keep them at home. While the Negro high school students will be integrated, the junior high school and elementary school for Negroes will be maintained.

Among Negroes—waiters, bellhops, cooks, porters and housewives—there is an air of quiet hope.

Probably the best summation came from a Negro Air Force sergeant on the plane from Nashville to Louisville. "We've always had a place in the sun down South," he said. "Now I reckon some of us would like a little of the shade, too."

West Virginia schools picketed—

Mississippi steps up segregation battle

By The Associated Press

Parents are picketing unsegregated schools in two West Virginia counties and there have been moves to set up "citizens' councils" to enforce segregation in Mississippi.

"The white people in certain counties are organizing to protect themselves," a Mississippi legislator said Thursday. "Practically every county in the state has organized or is organizing," he added.

Mississippians soon will be voting on a constitutional amendment which could lead to abolition of the public school system. One legislator said the "citizens' councils" might aid passage of the amendment.

A member of one of the councils, refusing to be quoted by name, declared: "We want the people assured that there is responsible leadership which will and can handle local segregation problems. If that is recognized, there will be no cause for any hot-headed bunch to start a Ku Klux Klan. If we fail though, the temper of the public may produce something like the Klan."

THE MISSISSIPPI Legislature passed a bill Thursday designed to guard against Negro suits forcing admission to the University of Mississippi Medical School. The legislators recently abolished out-of-state medical scholarships to Mississippi students. New scholarships are to be given to the University of Mississippi school, now under construction.

Fearing that Negroes might try to force admission to the school because no other facility is made available to them, the legislators voted Thursday to continue scholarships for Mississippi Negro students to attend Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tenn., a Negro institution.

At the same time the Mississippi House passed on a second reading the constitutional amendment which would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools. The amendment is virtually assured of passage. It must be passed on a third reading and, after almost certain Senate approval, would be submitted to the voters in a Dec. 21 referendum.

IN TWO WEST VIRGINIA counties Thursday parents protested the racial integration of school children.

A picket line was set up at the combined high and elementary school at Rupert in Greenbrier County, where 12 Negroes have been attending classes since the school opened Tuesday. And mothers of some white students in Marion County turned out to protest the admission of 13 Negro students.

Supt. J. J. Straight of the Marion schools said many of the parents kept their children away from school.

Segregation was ended in many West Virginia counties soon after the U. S. Supreme Court held that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

IN WASHINGTON, a move to hold up racial integration in the District of Columbia's public schools was blocked by U. S. District Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut. He denied a plea submitted by the Federation of Citizens Associations, an all-white group which had called for an order restraining the registration of students for unsegregated classes.

Georgia's new governor-designate, a protege of Gov. Herman Talmadge, declared Thursday that he will campaign for passage of the Talmadge-sponsored "private school" amendment, similar to Mississippi's measure.

LT. GOV. MARVIN GRIFFIN, nominated Wedensday in a landslide, said he will plug for the amendment as "insurance" to help preserve school segregation. Behind the plan is a proposal to convert public schools to "private" schools if necessary to maintain segregation.

The superintendent of Little Rock, Ark., told a group of Negroes Thursday that "honest studies" of integration will be completed in 30 to 60 days.

Virgil T. Blossom said he will be glad to talk to Negro leaders about the school system's plans after the studies are finished. The Little Rock school board earlier had been asked by Negroes not to follow a "wait and see" policy of integration but to go ahead and map plans to end segregation immediately.

Segregation parley canceled in Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 10 —(AP)—A scheduled conference of school authorities and Negro parents whose children had tried to enter a white school was abruptly called off by the school superintendent yesterday when a newspaper reporter showed up.

Supt. C. M. Dannelly said he didn't want the meeting publicized or given any undue importance.

Purpose of the conference, called by Principal Irene Davis of the Negro Abraham's Vineyard School, wasn't disclosed, but a mimeographed letter sent out under the principal's typewritten name said "some very important matters" were to be discussed.

Twenty-three Negroes living in the Abraham's Vineyard School district tried to enroll at the newly opened all-white William R. Harrison School last Thursday but were turned down. Principal Robert Anderson told them they lived in another district, the Vineyard area.

The two schools are only 200 yards apart.

A letter dated Wednesday of this week and sent to parents of children in the Vineyard School said:

"Dr. C. M. Dannelly, superintendent of education for Montgomery City and County, and W. S. Garrett, assistant superintendent . . . would like to meet you at the school tomorrow afternoon, Thursday, Sept. 9, at 3:30 p.m. Please try to be present.

"I realize you are working, but please ask your employer to allow you time to attend this meeting. The superintendents have some very important matters to discuss with you."

Five parents showed up for the meeting, along with a Montgomery Advertiser reporter, but the principal told them it had been called off.

EQUALIZE or INTEGRATE

If Supreme Court Rules Out Bias, Millions Will Be Saved To Equalize Would Cost At Least $2,140,398,582

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — If the United States Supreme Court outlaws racial segregation in public schools, the 17 states and the District of Columbia, which have dual school systems, appear ready for integration, despite the clamor of demagogs.

The decision will affect approximately 10,879,021 pupils in the 17 southern states and the District of Columbia.

According to the National Education Association, the estimated pupil enrollment in the public schools of those states in the current school year is as follows:

Alabama, 694,000; Arkansas 470,110; Delaware, 54,153; District of Columbia, 102,694; Florida, 641,000; Georgia, 862,730; Kentucky, 565,000; Louisiana, 548,527; Mississippi, 548,000 Missouri, 710,000; North Carolina, 900,000; Oklahoma, 520,000; South Carolina, 536,000; Tennessee, 710,000; Virginia, 690,000, and West Virginia, 441,083.

(As of March 4, actual enrollment in the public schools of the District of Columbia totaled 101,971, of which 43,582 were white pupils and 58,388 were colored pupils.)

The 17 southern states and the District of Columbia have 10,673 schools (8,336 for white pupils and 2,337 for colored pupils), which would have to be integrated.

In its brief on reargument of the five school segregation cases which are pending in the Supreme Court, the Department of Justice discussed the obstacles to integration in a change over from existing segregated school systems to new ones not based on color distinctions.

It placed the difficulties to be encountered into two groups — those of an administrative nature, and those due to the fact that racial segregation in public schools has been in existence for many years.

The Justice Department points out that in many areas existing boundaries of school districts may require extensive revision.

FEAR GERRYMANDERING

This may lead to gerrymandering— the cutting up of school districts in such an unnatural and unfair way that nearly all of the white children will continue to go to "white" schools and nearly all the colored children will continue to go to "colored" schools.

As a matter of fact, because of racial ghettos which have grown up in most cities, it will not be difficult to gerrymander school districts so as to maintain racial segregation.

The 1948 decision of the Supreme Court holding that racial restrictive covenants cannot be enforced in the courts, however, is giving colored families an opportunity to buy homes outside of the ghettos.

The Justice Department also said schools may have to be consolidated, teachers and pupils transferred, teaching schedules revised, and bus arrangements altered.

In some jurisdictions, like South Carolina and the District of Columbia, where by law the allocation of public school funds depends upon the relative number of white and colored children of school age changes in the law may be required, the Justice Department stated.

In other jurisdictions, like the District of Columbia and Maryland, the Government brief asserted, it may be necessary to eliminate duplication of functions arising from the existence of separate sets of supervisory and administrative officials for colored and white schools.

The Justice Department also said the law may require amendment in states like Mississippi and Texas which have statutory provisions for separate training schools.

The Justice Department, however, discounted financial cost as any "substantial obstacle" to integration. It agreed with the statement of Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., of Virginia, in the brief on the merits in the case which arose in Prince Edward County, Virginia, that "It is crystal clear that segregation is more expensive than amalgamation."

The Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfares has estimated the capital outlay of as much as $2,000,000,000 might be required to make the Jim Crow schools for colored pupils "equal," in a physical sense to those now maintained for white pupils.

On the basis of the 1949-50 level of per capita expenditure for colored pupils in the 17 southern states, the Office of Education also estimated that it would take an additional $134,824,000 to bring for each colored child up to that for each white child— an increase of almost 70 per cent.

To raise the cost of transporting colored pupils at the 1949-50 level to a par with that of transporting white pupils would require an additional $55,574,582, according to the Office of Education.

Of 13, only four indicate fight—

Most Southern States take 'wait and see' stand, few plans, on school segregation

ATLANTA, March 12—(AP)—Most of the 13 Southern States which maintain separate white and Negro schools are calmly awaiting a United States Supreme Court ruling on public school segregation.

A survey today showed that only in Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina and Mississippi is there any serious effort to devise means of circumventing a decision outlawing segregation.

Virginia, Louisiana, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Kentucky, Florida and Texas are doing nothing or maintaining a "wait and see" attitude.

As it has been doing for several years, Arkansas is going ahead with efforts to equalize white and Negro schools, and Tennessee authorities are saying as little as possible about the segregation problem.

RACIAL SEGREGATION in public schools is under direct attack in five cases now before the Supreme Court. A ruling is considered likely in the near future.

South Carolina is the most advanced in preparatory planning for an adverse dicision. The state in 1952 adopted a constitutional amendment under which the legislature can eliminate the mandatory provision for free public schools. A bill to implement the amendment now is pending in the South Carolina Legislature.

In addition, the general appropriation bill includes a section giving school boards authority to transfer a pupil from one school to another "so as to promote the best interests of education."

It provides for appeals first to the county board of education and then to the state board both of which can hold new hearings. From there appeals can go to the court of common pleas and then to the state supreme court.

Something along that line also appears to be gaining some favor in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

Some Georgia sources who advocate it, hold that thereby the case of each individual child would have to be tried on its merits and carried all the way to the United States Supreme Court.

However, Georgia Gov. Herman Talmadge doesn't favor a plan. He has proposed a cinstitudtional amendment under which the public school system could be abolished, and has created a commission to study means of circumventing a decision prohibiting school segregation.

IN ALABAMA, the Legislative Reference Service is studying the problem, but Director Charles M. Cooper said no one has submitted "a real, whole plan." However, the South Carolina plan is attracting increasing attention of legislators and educators.

Also being readied for proposal is a system of abolishing public schools and allocating funds directly to each student.

Mississippi is frantically attempting to work out financing to equalize white and Negro schools, hoping the Supreme Court will reaffirm previous rulings upholding "separate but equal" schools for the two races.

Gov. Hugh White has said "Frankly, I don't know what we would do" if segregation is outlawed.

The Virginia Legislature killed a resolution calling for a constitutional convention to reexamine public school laws if segregation is thrown out. Given little chance of adoption is another proposing a commission to study the effect of ending segregation.

Louisiana's attitude, according to legislators and educators, is strictly one of waiting to see what the court will do, with no action planned or even discussed.

Oklahoma, which already admits Negroes to its colleges and universities along with white students, likewise is waiting quietly for the segregation decision on public schools.

There are no indication of any plans for action in North Carolina if segregation is knocked out. The Legislature last year approved a second $50 million dollar school bond issue, part of which is to be used to equalize white and Negro facilities. The Legislature was told it might be called to reexamine the building program if segregation is outlawed.

Kentucky's constitution requires separate white and Negro schools and the current Legislature turned down a bill to submit the segregation issue to a vote of the people. Attorney General J. D. Buckman Jr. has expressed belief Kentucky will comply strictly with whatever ruling the Supreme Court hands down.

FLORIDA AND TEXAS report nothing being done about segregation and nothing to indicate that it will come up either in the Texas Legislature or the Florida gubernatorial campaign.

The situation is being discussed in Tennessee and Gov. Frank Clement has said "I have some very definite opinions on the matter." But he did not elaborate. He also has said the state's public school system will continue regardless of the court decision.

Arkansas is conducting a survey of opinion on segregation and Ed McQuistian, director of the state's Negro education division, said results indicate "Arkansas has the best attitude of any Southern state."

But he said "if the court tries to break down segregation, it will put a different complexion on the situation, causing a heavy strain on understanding and good will."

McQuistion said he thinks Arkansas can attain equality both in school buildings and teacher salaries by 1960.

Full Redress Will Be Pursued

SPEAKING before the convention of the Louisiana School Board Association here last week, Governor Robert F. Kennon joined his counterparts of Mississippi, Georgia and South Carolina when he spoke out against removing segregation from public schools of the Nation.

Declaring that he was not disposed to change the present bi-racial school system, the Governor takes the identical attitude which a large segment of Southerners have taken with respect to anything proper for Negroes since before the Civil War. Such persons were against emancipation, against equal sufferage and equal opportunities for personal development of Negroes. They were against equalization of teachers' salaries, the lifting of restrictive covenants which relegated Negroes to slums and ghettoes. They were against every decent aspiration of the race.

We think it unfair for the Governor or anyone to infer that should the U. S. Supreme Court outlaw segregation in public schools this will mean Federal interference with the operation of the schools. There will be no more interference of operations of public schools than there is of State schools where racial barriers have been removed. Of course we are assuming that once the court has acted there will be strict compliance by all concerned.

Negroes generally take little comfort in Mr. Kennon's statement that we have a "strong school board" when Negroes have no representation on that board. Experience has taught that where public officials refuse or fail to appoint qualified Negroes to such policy making bodies they give bad evidence of their proper concern for the welfare of the Negro population.

Regardless to his personal feeling in the matter we were surprised that Governor Kennon should suggest that this is the proper time for Louisiana to take necessary steps to control assignment of children in public schools. This could only mean a move to circumvent the contemplated decision of the Supreme Court. Any public official who makes such a suggestion does a disservice to both his state and to his country. Moreover, when people are permitted to violate Federal laws they will likewise violate state and city laws.

The violation of laws to short-circuit the rights of Negroes is a long standing practice in the South. However, Governor Kennon, as well as others of his inclination should wake up to the facts of life. These facts are that the South is a part of the Union and that Negroes are fed-up on half measures and broken promises and that whenever and wherever the South fails to live up to its moral obligations to Negro citizens because of race, full redress will be diligently pursued in every court of the land. To do less than this would suggest that Negroes are not ready or worthy of the human rights for which Negroes have so recently fought and died to secure for other peoples of the world.

Court sets segregation arguments for October

WASHINGTON, July 8—(AP)—The Supreme Court will decide in October when to hear arguments on how to carry out its decision banning racial segregation in public schools.

A court spokesman said today the date will be considered at the court's first conference session in October.

It was believed likely that Oct. 11, when the court holds its first formal session of the new term to issue orders or opinions, it will be ready to announce the argument date.

Arguments will be limited to methods of putting the non-segregation order into effect. They will not be permitted to go into the segregation issue as such. That was decided May 17 by unanimous opinion.

Desegregation Can Come With Time, Editor Says

The South can live with racial integration in public schools if allowed a "gradual transition," the executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette said in an interview here Monday.

Harry Ashmore, who is also author of "The Negro and the Schools," was main speaker at a closed study session of school superintendents and board of education members from 11 Southern states at the Dinkler-Plaza Hotel.

URGES BRIEFS

Ashmore said he felt it was important for the attorneys general of Southern states to file briefs with the Supreme Court this fall so their "complex local conditions can be understood."

He said he was hopeful the high court eventually will remand the five specific cases it will be considering back to federal courts within the states.

Ashmore said federal district court judges are completely familiar with local situations and could stave off "intolerable social situations" and at the same time see to it that local school districts were "acting in good faith toward eventual integration."

LONGER IN SOME

Integration, he pointed out, will take longer in certain Southern states than others.

The two-day meeting here which continues through Tuesday was called by the Southern States Cooperative Program in Educational Administration with headquarters in Nashville, Tenn. Function of SSCPEA is to help improve the level of education, help the respective state school groups with their programs and to do research and similar work.

Richard W. Ervin, Florida's attorney general, is to address the group Tuesday morning along with Cecil Sims, attorney and member of the Davidson County, Tenn., Board of Education.

Courier Conducts Poll

Teachers Okay Mixed Schools

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

DURHAM, N. C.—An independent Courier-conducted pilot poll of forty-two teachers from North and South Carolina and Virginia attending summer school at North Carolina College, revealed that thirty-seven or 88 per cent favored integration.

The poll which was conducted at random and without any contact with the teachers at all showed that only two teachers were opposed to integration and three were undecided.

The results of the pilot survey proved conclusively that Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia and other pro-segregationists who claim that Negroes want segregation either are mistaken or deliberately spreading false information.

OF THE thirty-seven teachers who voted in favor of integration, ten were men, twenty-seven women, four were from South Carolina, two were from Virginia and thirty-one from North Carolina.

The two teacners who voted against integration were both women, one married with two children, ages 2 and 4 years, the other woman was single and between the age group of 20 to 30.

Of the thirty-seven teachers who voted for integration, twenty-seven were married, twenty-three were parents and twenty-nine taught in the elementary grades.

THE POLL revealed further that ten of the respondents were in the age group between 20 and 30, 20 were in the group, 31-40, and five were between 40 and 50.

Perhaps the most interesting response to the questionnaire was seen in the answers to the question: "Do you feel that Negro children will be unhappy with white children?

"Twenty-three of the respondents who voted in favor of integration noted in the negative, eight voted "uncertain" and two voted yes.

"Of the two who voted against integration, one did not feel that the Negro child would be unhappy, while the other was 'uncertain'."

Thurgood Marshall, Himself, Is Proof Nation Has Qualified Colored Teachers

All lawyers know that it is good strategy to tell a "big whopper" sometimes in order to win a lawsuit. The public also knows this to be true. But in the year of our Lord, 1954, colored lawyers at least can say that the "big whopper" was told in the lawsuit filed to outlaw compulsory separate schools.

Now let's look at the record.

A United Press story, printed in the papers of last December 12 told of the part that Attorney Jack Greenberg, took in the Big Lawsuit as an aide of Chief Counsel Thurgood Marshall. It said:

"Jack Greenberg, a white attorney, representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, urged the court to adopt a finding by a Delaware court of chancery that state imposed segregation is injurious to Negro children.

"(Justice) Frankfurter broke in to demand: 'How can we do that? It is all a matter of opinion, not that we don't respect the opinion, but we are dealing with very subtle testimony.

"Greenberg replied that the testimony before the court was uncontradicted.

"Just because a man says this much is three yards," Frankfurter said, spreading his arms, "It doesn't mean it is so, just because he is not contradicted."

Now this coloquy between Attorney Greenberg and Justice Felix Frankfurter, both of them of the same, racial (or religious) group, indicated there was going to be a split decision when the Supreme Court acted on the school cases. But this didn't happen. The the parties having authority to pass on the question were white. This included Justice Frankfurter, a member of a minority that is as much persecuted as the Negro.

When time came for the Chief Justice and the eight associate justices to reach a solemn decision in the school cases, they had before them the very persuasive argument that it is detrimental to the NEGRO child to separate him from white children in public education. The court so ruled.

Here is what the eminnent Chief Justice of the United States wrote in his epoch-making decision and got all of his associates to endorse:

"Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater, when it has the sanction of the law. For the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system."

Now as a matter of fact, Mr. Greenberg was all wrong and the Supreme Court was all wrong when they said in effect that separating the races in school matters was detrimental EXCLUSIVELY to the Negro child.

Fact of the matter, it is just as detrimental to the white child as it is to the Negro child. The best proof of this is found in the number of cases in which individual Negroes have demonstrated superior knowledge and skill to that of their white contemporaries.

And regardless of all of the amount of pity that has been expressed for the Negro child forced to go to schools populated by Negroes only and taught by Negroes only, some of the outstanding talent America has been able to put on display before the world has come from these despised, separate Negro schools, taught by Negro men and women.

The more important "evidence" the Supreme Court had before it to refute Mr. Greenberg's theory and that of the array of psychologists and other bookworms, mobilized to give the court "expert testimony," was right there in the court inn the person of a young man named Thurgood Marshall.

Mr. Marshall, the records show, got his public school education in the Negro schools of Baltimore. He got his college education at Lincoln University, in Pennsylvania and his law training at Howard University. It was exclusively "Negro education" that young Marshall had received and to cap the climax, he sat at the feet of the eminent Chas. Houston, a brilliant Negro lawyer, who got great glee in training young colored men to dedicate their lives to fighting racial discrimination that plainly violated the Constitution of the United States.

Chief Justice Warren and the other justices have before trem currently a "sample" of the Negro who got "retarded" in his education by going to a Negro school and being forced to get his teaching under Negro teachers, exclusively. The person is Willie Mays, center fielder of the New York Giants who hails from Alabama. Willie has not yet learned that, for benefit of the white man, you are supposed to show that "Negro education" afflicts the student with inferiority complex.

Folks who are unacquainted with what goes on within the walls of Negro schools would be amazed to know how much "superiority complex" colored youngsters are getting The colored teachers are telling their charges that they, too, can come out of these colored schools, put on their traveling shoes and go places just like Thurgood Marshall and Willie Mays.

The Northern Negro, blessed with a form of integration all his life, didn't realize how much the Negro, as a race, could accomplish until the Southern Negro went up North aand taught him. The Northern Negro, very generally had been lulled to sleep by Northern politicians most of whom were just as hostile to Negro advancement as the white politicians of the South.

It is unfortunate that some very valuable, eye-opening, expert testimony was not put into the record to show the Supreme Court that separatinng colored children from white children in public education is just as detrimental to the white child as to the Negro child.

For instance in one Southern city, when colored and white teachers held a joint meeting, the colored teacher refused to present any of their problems with colored pupils and parents. The white teachers had much worse problems.

The colored teachers had not a single problem of children coming to school with vermin on their bodies making it necessary to undress the pupils and give them special clothes before letting them enter the class room.

Bad manners were more prevalent among white pupils and their parents, these white teachers disclosed, than anything the colored teachers had to contend with. Colored teachers could point with pride to the big recommendation they got from the drivers of special busses who carried colored pupils on vacation trips. The white bus drivers, generally, were saying they preferred to carry colored pupils on such trips because they were so orderly and showed better manners, when compared to white pupils of the same city.

Cleanliness, orderliness and good manners are all a part of education. White children, in many instances can learn a lot along these lines from contact with most colored pupils. Keeping their children clean and teaching them to have good manners are considered by most colored parents a duty they owe these children, their teachers and their school.

There are plenty "white areas" in Southern towns that ought to be thrown into competition with some of the colored areas to see who of the parents and pupils show a higher respect for the truth that cleanliness is next to Godliness. Each side could learn plenty from the other—both with regard to what should and should not be done daily to reach the mark of high calling.

The New Schools: Let's not be Caught Dragging Our Feet

From the Fayetteville Observer

REGARDLESS of how anybody feels about segregation or amalgamation of the races in the public schools systems of the South, the fact remains that we cannot afford to get caught napping with a system that will not meet the blueprint of the United States Supreme Court.

We may criticize the Supreme Court all we want for its action in ruling out segregation. We can maintain that the Supreme Court over-reached its authority by making itself a legislative body rather than a judicial one in the segregation matter.

But the fact remains that the Supreme Court has the fiddle and that we in the South are going to have to dance by its tune.

In justice to the Supreme Court there is the fact that it has invited the several interested states to submit briefs to it suggesting how the non-segreted schools of the South shall be operated when they open in the Fall of 1955.

North Carolina should not drag its feet in the submission of such a brief.

The preparation of the brief should have the thought and advice of the best brains in North Carolina. Of course, it needs the school authorities at the table. It also needs the financial authorities, because the new system of public schools is going to present financial differences with the old system. If the school people think they can come up with a system which will take some of the dangers out of amalgamation, then the financial people should be sitting at their elbow to tell them whether North Carolina could inaugurate such a system in its strike or whether it would require back-breaking new taxation.

Sociology and psychology will play a part in the changes which will be required in the school system. Will it be a system which both races can accept with pride and without anger, or will it be an irritant which will eat away the base of the splendid racial relations which North Carolina painstakingly has built up?

Sound legal advice will also be needed at the conference table. Anw plan presented by North Carolina must be a plan which will be within the law as now interpreted by the Supreme Court. The most logical plan will be of no avail if it is doomed to beat out its brains against the hard dictum of the nation's highest court.

The brief should be presented so that the rising legislature will know where it stands in its approaching regular session at the beginning of 1955.

The Legislature will have the duty of passing the laws and appropriating the moneys for our redesigned system of public education. We cannot start our planning too soon. Time is of the essence.

Fight to Finish!

Negro Leaders Take Firm Stand

Hit Bias In Miss., Florida

(By Courier Press Service)

Standing firm against the continuance of segregation in public schools, Negro leaders in Florida and Mississippi were confronted with different attitudes last week in important and historic meetings on the recent Supreme Court decisions.

In Jacksonville, Fla., approximately fifty representatives of varied phases of Negro activity, heard Attorney General Richard Irvin and State Superintendent of Schools Thomas Bailey, imply that Florida would not attempt to oppose segregation but would appreciate being given time to effect integration.

ON THE OTHER hand, Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi announced Friday that he would call the Mississippi Legislature into special session, Sept. 7, to consider a Constitutional Amendment to abolish the state's public school system.

This announcement came after a group of ninety Negro leaders from throughout the state told the governor that they would not accept a plan of voluntary segregation presented them in an attempt to by-pass the Supreme Court decision.

The stand of the Negro delegation was recognized as a defeat to a reported group who had attempted a "back-door" agreement on accepting voluntary segregation.

IN FLORIDA, a committee was selected to meet in the near future with a similar committee of nine members recently selected by the "Continuing Education Council of Florida" for the purpose of studying ways and means of implementing the Supreme Court's decision in Florida.

Members of the committee are: the Rev. Edward T. Graham, pastor, Mount Zion Baptist Church, Miami; Dr. Royal Puryear, president, Florida Normal and Industrial College, St. Augustine; E. D. Davis, realtor, Ocala; E. E. Broughton, president, Central Life Insurance Company, Tampa; Mrs. D. V. Sanders, state president of the Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers, St. Augustine; George Ingram, Daytona Beach; Atty. Charles Wilson, Pensacola; C. Blythe Andrews, editor, Tampa, and Dr. Gilbert L. Porter, executive secretary, Florida State Teachers Association.

Dr. William B. Stewart, president, Edward Waters College, Jacksonville; Atty. W. D. Perkins, Jacksonville, and Dr. George P. Schanks, Orlando, were chosen as alternates.

Although some of the Floridians indicated that they would go along with a proposed program of gradualism, others opposed the suggestion of "hands off" made by Attorney General Irvin and Superintendent Bailey.

Dr. Royal W. Puryear of Florida Normal asked for assurance that counties would not be permitted to indefinitely delay desegregation. Although there was some expression of concern about the gradualist approach, it was generally felt that this would be the better way with some reservations to be urged in Florida.

FLORIDA OFFICIALS indicated that they would not oppose the Supreme Court decision because they felt that integration was "inevitable," but the way should be cleared for implementation and the court would be asked to allow the matter to be placed in the hands of local administrators.

Both the Mississippi and Florida meetings were significant in that it indicated the concern of the officials of the two states and that they recognized the fact the Supreme Court means business in the matter of the desegregation of school systems.

Action on Federal Aid For Schools Promised

Majority Leader William Knowland (R., Calif.) and House Education and Labor Committee Chairman Samuel K. McConnell, Jr. (R., Pa.) promised Congressional action on Federal aid for public school construction to a labor-led delegation.

Senator Knowland promised the group, led by AFL and American Federation of Teachers representatives, "my full support for the bill for school construction which is now on the Senate calendar." Knowland said, "I have cleared the bill with the Policy Committee. I shall give it high priority on the 'must' list."

Pledge Action

Representative McConnell pledged to do "all that can possibly be done to get action on this legislation."

Urging action at this session, Selma Borchardt, of the American Federation of Teachers, said:

"Twenty percent of our Nation's children will this Fall enter unsafe and unsanitary school buildings."

The bill now in the Senate is a two-year, $250 million-a-year aid measure.

Representatives of women's organizations, religious and civic groups were among those who called on Knowland and also wired President Eisenhower.

With Miss Borchardt to see McConnell were Andrew J. Biemiller, AFL legislative representative; and representatives of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the American Parents Committee, the National Council of Negro Women and the National Council of Jewish Women.

Organizations Listed

Indicative of the wide support for increased Federal aid were the organizations that backed the school aid. Among them, in addition to those named, were the National Education Assn., American Association of University Women, American Library Association, American Parents Committee, American Vocational Association, Friends Committee on National Legislation, Jewish War Veterans, National Grange, National Jewish Welfare Board, the CIO, the Cooperative League, and the PTA Congress.

State and local leaders are being urged to wire their Senators and Congressmen urging action in this session of Congress.

Change Is Not Difficult

(From The Louisiana Weekly)

The fight to abolish segregation in the public schools of the nation received added support last week when representatives of eight million Catholic women urged all Americans to accept with good graces a Supreme Court decision that would end segregation in the nation's public schools—that is if the court so rules.

Urging this action was the Board of Directors of the National Council of Catholic Women. In a prepared statement the NCCW said "Some people are already working on subterfuges to avoid implementing the decision of the court should it ask for integration. We know from experience in some of our Catholic schools that a change from segregation to integration can be made without difficulty. We are convinced that such a change can be made in the public schools'.

Thus for the record and for enlightened public opinion we have more evidence that many of us in this country are willing to be counted in the struggle of making democracy work like we tell the world it does. The sooner more organizations like the NCCW take similar stands on the issue of segregation in the nation's public schools, the sooner will we convince the world that we ourselves believe in the democracy we preach about.

Educational Racketeering

WALTER WHITE, executive secretary of the NAACP, makes the point that abolition of the public school system which has been threatened by authorities in South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi in order to save racial segregation, would lead to all sorts of "educational quackery and racketeering."

We believe it is a good point, because the public school system on a segregated basis has always led to such racketeering as shown by the disparity between what was spent per capita on colored and white pupils in equipment, buildings, teachers' salaries, and in other ways.

Since this happened under public supervision, one can well imagine what would happen under private control, with no regulation and generally lowered standards, as harmful to white as to Negroes.

This threatened move, in the event that the U. S. Supreme Court decides that segregation is in effect discriminatory, would hamper and retard the great progress and enlightenment that has occurred throughout the South which, prior to the advent of the public school system, was the nation's most ignorant and backward area.

However, we feel certain that even in South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, the majority of the voters will not tolerate such tampering with the public school system into which so much of the wealth of those states has been poured.

The masses of white people in the South are not nearly as hysterical about the prospect of white and colored children sitting in the same classrooms as are some of their elected officials, and if the latter do not know it they soon will.

Segregation of races is on the way out in this country, and whether it exists now or five or ten years from now, it definitely will go, despite the efforts of a few animated road blocks on the highway of progress.

High Court Meets Today; Segregation Stand Waited

WASHINGTON, March 7 (AP)—The Supreme Court returns to the bench tomorrow after four weeks of working behind closed doors on many of the 32 cases already argued and on scores of review petitions.

Tomorrow is decision day but there was no indication here which cases will be acted on.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, however, said last week that a "reliable legal source" had predicted the court would announce a decision on racial segregation in public schools tomorrow or "shortly thereafter."

The unnamed lawyer was quoted by Talmadge as noting that the court has never suspended its meetings for an entire month before.

However, veteran court observers here said the four weeks' recess was not unusual. They said the court almost always closes public business for four weeks at midterm.

Besides the question of whether racial segregation in the nation's public schools is constitutional, there are other important issues which have been argued before the high court and on which action could come tomorrow. They include such questions as:

1. The constitutionality of key sections of the Federal Lobbying Act.

2. The validity of a Federal Communications Commission ban on radio and television giveaway shows.

3. Whether to grant Alabama and Rhode Island permission to file suits questioning the constitutionality of the 1953 act of Congress which gave the coastal states title to oil-rich offshore submerged lands.

CAPITOL NOTEBOOK

Segregation Panel Lauded

By M. L. ST. JOHN

The Legislature and the governor have named a good commission to find the answer to any segregation problems which Georgia's schools may face. The commission must study any decision the United States Supreme Court hands down on segregation in public schools, and then make recommendations to the General Assembly for action.

The commission may be one of the most important ever established by the Georgia Legislature.

St. John

Its members are capable of solving any segregation problem involving education.

The committee will not meet unless the court outlaws segregation in schools. If this happens, it will be the commission's duty to recommend the best plan of educating Georgia's children without disturbance.

Gov. Talmadge obtained legislative approval of a constitutional amendment to permit abolition of public schools in event segregation falls. This will be submitted to the people in November for ratification or rejection. The governor says it doesn't have to be used, even if ratified, if the study commission can find a better plan of maintaining segregation.

LOOKING FOR PLAN

Those who oppose the idea of abolishing public schools are looking to this study commission to produce a plan—if a court decision makes their work necessary at all—which will continue public schools for Georgia's children.

Two outstanding school superintendents are on the commission. Miss Ira Jarrell of Atlanta and Mark Smith of Macon would do nothing to harm the educational system. Neither would Mrs. Ralph Hobbs of Cataula, former State PTA president, or John Sammons Bell of Atlanta, representative of the Georgia Bar Association, who were also named by the Governor to the commission.

Other appointees include House leaders George Smith of Swainsboro and Frank Twitty of Camilla; Former Congressman John Wood of Canton, Atty. W. S. Mann of McRae, and Roy Harris of Augusta, a member of the Board of Regents who is pushing a long-range plan to improve public schools.

OTHER MEMBERS

The General Assembly, in writing the resolution, put Chancellor Harmon Caldwell and State School Supt. M. D. Collins—workers for better schools—on the commission. It also named the chairmen of the Regents, R. O. Arnold of Covington, and George Whitman Jr., of Atlanta; House Speaker Fred Hand of Pelham, who happens also to head the State School Building Authority; Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin and Gov. Talmadge. And it included a legal authority and a financial authority by naming Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr.

There will be some disagreement over the ability or spirit of an appointee here and there, but on the whole the Legislature and governor put together a commission capable of finding a solution to the problem of public education and segregation—if such a problem arises.

VETERAN OF HOT SPOT

As to the attorney general, it's nothing new for him to be on the hot spot as a member of a commission. He had to decide in 1947 which of three claimants was the legal governor. Then he had to decide which of two factions was the legal Democratic Party. Now he's in a more awkward spot on something other than the school study commission. The governor has asked him whether the proposed Traffic Court of Atlanta would be constitutional.

The problem is made unusual because of Cook's personal trouble with traffic laws. He is to be tried soon in Fulton Criminal Court. The prosecutor in the county court is against the proposed city traffic court — the prosecuting witnesses (city police) are for the proposed city court. Either way the attorney general rules will make one of his personal courtroom opponents happy and one sad.

Waring Calls Jim Crow Schools Cause Of Bias

NEW YORK — Former federal district coourt Judge F. Waites Waring last week declared racial prejudice and discrimination "come from the training of little children in segregated schools."

"The wall of segregation crumbles only when somebody swings a hammer," he told the congregation of Randall Memorial church.

Judge Waring was the dissenting member of a three-judge court which upheld segregation in South Carolina public schools in 1951. That case is one of five now awaiting a Supreme Court decision.

OPENED PRIMARY

A 1947 decision by Judge Waring opened South Carolina's Democratic primary to Negro voters.

He told the New York congregation, "The core of racial discrimination is in the deep South, and it must be excised by an operation."

Children of all races mingle freely and know nothing of discrimination until they start the first grade, he said.

STAMP INFERIORITY

"When you tell a child that he can't go to the school on the corner but must go to the one behind the tracks, it impresses on his mind a stamp of inferiority which will remain with him the rest of his life," Waring said.

He cited court decisions opening graduate schools to Negroes and outlawing racial discrimination in interstate transportation. Other court decisions banned discrimination on juries and in suffrage.

Judge Waring said terrorism had been used against complainants in some of the cases which brought about these decisions.

However, he said, "It is up to little people like us to tell our leaders to clean up, and we have to clean up our back yard if we 're to avoid the horrors of Hitler's Germany and Stalin's Russia.

WARING SAYS:

Segregation leaves imprint on childrer

NEW YORK (ANP) — Former Judge J. Waties Waring last week said "the wall of segregation crumbles only when somebody swings a hammer."

Speaking before the congregation of Randall Memorial Presbyterian church, the former federal judge in South Carolina said:

"The core of racial discrimination is in the deep South and it must be excised by an operation."

Many will recall Judge Waring as the magistrate who, in 1947, rendered a decision which opened South Carolina's Democratic primary to colored voters. He also was the only one to cast one of three judges hearing the Clarendon county case dissenting opinion that segregation was constitutional.

Commenting on the effects of segregation on children, Judge Waring said:

"When you tell a child that he can't go to school on the corner but must go to the one behind the tracks, it impresses on his mind a stamp of inferiority which will remain with him the rest of his life."

Waring commended J. A. DeLaine, a South Carolina minister, for his determined fight against school segregation.

He said DeLaine was shocked when, in 1951, he saw the "filthy shacks" in which Clarendon county's colored children were taught. It was DeLaine who brought the case before the federal court.

"It is because of that one man's tenacity that this case is now in the Supreme Court," he said.

Waring has retired from the federal bench and now lives in New York. Because of his liberal attitude toward colored people, he was the object of much criticism from his fellow South Carolinians.

DREW PEARSON Says:

Politics and Segregation Lie Behind The F.B.I. Probe of Warren

WASHINGTON.—Inside reason for the request for an F.B.I. report on ex-Governor Earl Warren of California before he is confirmed as Chief Justice is complaints inspired by the ex-Attorney General of California, Fred Howser, and opposition by Senator Jim Eastland of Mississippi, who is afraid Warren will vote for ending segregation in schools below the Mason-Dixon Line.

All of this is why Senate Judiciary Chairman William Langer of North Dakota has bluntly notified the Justice Department that his committee will hold up Warren's confirmation until it gets a full F.B.I. report on him.

Complaints Checked

Meanwhile, Langer has sent his own investigators to the West Coast to check into 97 complaints that the Judiciary Committee has received against the distinguished ex-Governor of California. Many of these complaints appear to be from cranks.

It was at the prodding of Senator Eastland that Langer requested an F.B.I. report several weeks ago. When it failed to arrive, Langer phoned Deputy Attorney General Bill Rogers and repeated his demand.

"But Earl Warren is one of the most distinguished men in this country. He has been elected Governor of his state three times," protested Rogers.

"Well, he's going to be treated just like everyone else who comes before our committee," snorted the North Dakotan.

Langer then made it clear that Warren won't be confirmed to the nation's highest judicial post until an F.B.I. investigation has been made.

The chief source of the complaints against Warren, Howser, who would like to see Warren's confirmation blocked, was overwhelmingly defeated for re-election after this column exposed his friendship with California gamblers. Howser sued for libel, but a jury ruled that the charges were true. Howser, incidentally, was elected Attorney General of California, not appointed by Warren, and the two men were at loggerheads most of the time. In fact, Warren appointed a special crime commission, operated by Warren Olney, now U.S. assistant attorney general, which kept an eye on Howser's activities.

A Democrat On Lincoln

NOW THAT all the high-powered oratory commemorating Lincoln's Birthday, most of it by Republicans, has died down and Congress is ready to get back to work, it might be interesting to note the speech of a Democrat—Senator Tom Burke of Ohio.

Burke, long-time Mayor of Cleveland, made a modest little speech about Lincoln the other day which hardly got a line in the newspapers and certainly isn't going to be relished by some of the boys on Capitol Hill.

Among other things, he dug up some pungent quotes from Lincoln.

"Lincoln," said Senator Burke, "was deeply preoccupied with the rights of people, not just the high and mighty, but of all the people. Lincoln was opposed to sacrificing principle for political gain and he was opposed to sacrificing people for political gain.

"Lincoln said: 'Never add the weight of . . . character to a charge against (a) fellow man, without knowing it to be true. . . . I believe it is an established maxim in morals that he who makes an assertion without knowing whether it is true or false, is guilty of falsehood, and the accidental truth of the assertion does not justify or excuse him. This maxim ought to be particularly held in view when we contemplate an attack upon the reputation of our neighbor.'"

Summerfield Quoted

"Recently Postmaster General Summerfield," continued Burke, "said in a prepared speech that the Government had rid itself of 2,200 security risks and added this calculated phrase, 'Somehow I do not feel too amiably inclined toward people who make treason a preoccupation.'

"Lincoln said: 'I believe we need nothing so much as to get rid of unjust suspicion of one another.'

"The President's legal counsel, Bernard Shanley," Burke said, "recently asserted that '1,456 subversives have been kicked out of the Government since the President took office.'

"Lincoln said: 'Persisting in a charge which one does not know to be true is simply malicious slander.'"

"The Administration," continued Senator Burke, "has said that it is not feasible to break down the categories of the security-risk cases to show how many were suspect of treason and how many were guilty of suspect of misconduct.

"Lincoln said: 'A man cannot prove the negative, but he has the right to claim that when one makes an affirmative charge he must offer some proof to show the truth of what he says.'"

Washington Whirl

SECRETARY of Defense Wilson has a bent for tidiness. At the G.O.P. box dinner, he gnawed on a chicken leg for photographers, who littered the floor with used flashbulbs. After the camera boys left, Wilson carefully swept aside their discarded flashbulbs, remarking: "Somebody could be seriously hurt by these." . . . Just before President Eisenhower's triumphant entry, Vice-President Nixon did some hasty janitor work, picking up papers and straightening the speakers' platform.

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee stopped all work for two weeks and assigned its investigators to make arrangements for the gala, $7.50-per-plate dinner for outgoing chief counsel Robert Morris, who is to become a City magistrate in New York. . . . At the dinner, all celebrities were introduced except Maryland's G.O.P. Senator John Marshall Butler. Slighted at the oversight, his dinner companion scribbled a note to the master of ceremonies, calling attention to the fact that Butler was a celebrity, too. Upon reading the note, the M.C. obligingly introduced Butler to the bored crowd.

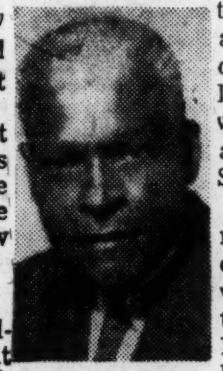
OUR NEGRO COMMUNITY

Segregation Ban Won't Bring Revolt, Mays Says

By CLAUDE GEORGE SR.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, says that talk of revolution in the Deep South in event of a school segregation ban is "nothing but poppycock."

"The good people of the South would not stand for it," the Negro educator told a large audience at the Hungry Club, an organization of Atlanta Negro leaders who hold weekly forums at the Butler Street YMCA.



Dr. B. E. Mays

Dr. Mays reminded his audience that there were no revolutions when the Negro got the ballot and when segregation was outlawed in interstate rail and bus travel.

He admitted that desegregation will be a slow progress in the South, but he added, "I don't believe teachers who are academically qualified will suffer any disadvantages in a desegregated school system.

"It may force some to seek better paid jobs."

After the forum was adjourned, an independent Citizens Committee was organized to study problems which would arise from any decision of the U.S. Supreme Court on school segregation.

The committee is composed of Jacob Henderson, Mrs. W. A. Scott, the Rev. R. B. Shorts, T. M. Alexander and Dr. Mozell Hill.

Morris Brown College has appointed Mrs. Cecelia Mercer as dean of women and Mrs. Margaret Y. Jackson as associate professor of English. Both will begin their work in the second semester.

Supreme Court Decision Expected—

Educators, Legislators Continuing Search For Answer To School Segregation Problem

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

With the Supreme Court's ruling on school segregation only days or weeks away, Alabama educators and legislative experts haven't agreed yet on a fallback program.

But they may be getting close.

Anxiety was quickened this week with a prediction by Georgia's Gov. Herman Talmadge that the decision may come Monday or soon afterward.

Many ideas have been suggested in Alabama. Some have been discarded as unworkable; others are still under consideration. But Director Charles M. Cooper of the Legislative Reference Service says no one individual has submitted a "Real, whole plan."

"There are several ideas and we're working on them," says Cooper, whose office is doing much of the detailed research for the specially created Legislative Committee appointed during the 1953 session to study the segregation problem.

"But they're nebulous for the most part," Cooper added, "just a thought."

Attractive Approach

Nevertheless, there is one approach which seems to be attracting more and more attention among school authorities. That is the authority already granted to local school boards to fix attendance districts and compel children to attend classes in their designated area.

And out of that has grown the suggestion that compulsory attendance laws might be changed to permit children to attend other schools under certain circumstances.

In most cities, the educators say, attendance districts themselves will segregate white and Negro pupils in the event the Supreme Court outlaws the South's traditional dual school system.

Schools in Negro sections of town can be zoned for Negro children and those in white residential areas can be restricted to white pupils, the school authorities say.

But in fringe areas and in rural communities, where the two races live close together, the attendance district rule might not work. So some educators have proposed an elastic zoning arrangement, giving the boards wide latitude in letting students attend other schools.

For example, suppose Negroes were eligible to enroll in a previously all-white school. White children who objected could transfer to classrooms elsewhere in white residential areas.

Legal Aspect

Whether that would be legally workable is another question. But it represents the thinking of a growing number of school authorities who talk freely in private but won't be quoted by name.

Another approach is one by State Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County (Tuskegee), whose original outline of a "free private school" system financed with state funds was junked by the legislature last year.

Englehardt is working on a plan to allocate funds directly on a per-student basis, patterned after the Southern states regional Education Program for institutions of higher learning. But the Macon County legislator hasn't worked out the details yet.

That is all predicated, of course on the possibility that the Supreme Court will outlaw classroom separation. If the justices leave the segregation laws undisturbed, the solution will be immeasurably simpler.

If the court, for instance, reaffirms its previous separate-but-equal doctrine but with a time limit for compliance, the school boards will face primarily a financial question. The cost in dollars and cents will be tremendous, but the approach is easy and direct.

But whatever the outcome, State Supt. W. J. Terry and other education authorities say there's no cause for panic. For one thing the Supreme Court's ruling will apply only to the states involved in the litigation and only indirectly to Alabama.

As an illustration, they point to the famed Texas decision of 1936 which opened the doors of a white university to a Negro. Although that ruling came 18 years ago, there are five states which still don't admit Negroes.

Vinson, Preston See Equal Facility Segregation Upheld

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS
Constitution Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, March 8—Two members of Georgia's congressional delegation predicted today that the U.S. Supreme Court's pending decision on segregation in public schools will uphold the prevailing "separate but equal facilities" doctrine.

Reps. Carl Vinson of Milledgeville and Prince Preston of Statesboro aired their views as the high court failed, as predicted in some quarters, to hand down a decision in the segregation cases today.

The two Georgia representatives told The Constitution that they believed that if the court had decided to ban segregation its decision would have been announced today.

"The Supreme Court resumed its work today after a somewhat unprecedented four weeks midterm recess," Vinson said. "The fact that no decision was rendered may be significant. It indicates to me that the justices will adhere to the tribunal's past precedents and will refuse a ban on segregation as practiced in Southern schools."

Rep. Preston said he fully subscribed to Vinson's views.

Sen. Russell, while declining to comment on the court's delay in handing down a decision, reiterated his view that the court would not reverse decisions it has rendered on the question in the past.

BLAMES PUBLIC APATHY

Public Schools To Fade By '60, NEA Head Says

WARRENTON, Feb. 4 (AP)—A prediction that the public school system in the United States will collapse just prior to 1960 was made here tonight by William Early, president of the National Education Assn.

The prediction was based on statistics which show that while the school enrollment is increasing rapidly, teachers are being lost at the rate of three to each one trained, Early said.

Early said only a major depression will drive teachers back into the classrooms. "Either that or they must be enticed back," he asserted.

He condemned public apathy toward school improvements and teacher training, and said that to avoid the collapse the public must be awakened to the impending danger.

Early addressed the Warrenton County Chapter of the Georgia Education Assn. here tonight.

His prediction was shared by Harvey C. Cutts, president of the GEA, who also addressed the gathering.

Voice Of The People

Let The Negroes Help With Segregation

To the Editor:

The banning of segregation in the public schools is not the will of the majority of the colored people, but the will of a few, influenced by political wolves, who in turn may be, wittingly or unwittingly, influenced by Communists; anyway, it is strife and contention thrust upon all the peoples of the South.

I believe, if a fair vote were taken of every colored person in the South, there would be an overwhelming majority in favor of keeping the races separated in the schools. The mass of the conscientious colored people realize that neither they nor their children could be happy in a mixed school; and children must be happy to be able to assimilate knowledge to the best advantage.

A few years ago I asked my nieces, who went to high school in Dayton, Ohio, how they liked to go to school with the colored children. They said, "We don't like it, and nobody else does." If I could have asked the colored children how they liked it, I would have expected the same answer.

About 1946 I remember reading in a Ft. Wayne, Ind., paper that the high school children of Gary, Ind., had struck and refused to go to school with colored children. Of course, children can't carry out a strike.

All children must go to school and all should have equal advantages, regardless of who pays for it, but why should such a burden and dissatisfaction be thrust upon either race to please the political whims of those not concerned?

The colored people can do more to remedy this situation than the white people can. They know it would be much better for their children to have good schools of their own, where they can be happy, than to be unhappy where they are not wanted and where they don't want to be; or, maybe —worse—to have no school at all.

Should our school system be discontinued and private schools substituted, not many colored people—especially those with large families—could afford private schools for their children; and if they could, they would not be equal to what the state would otherwise furnish.

Much can be accomplished by cooperation, but it is up to them whether they want their race to progress or go backward.

LSTC Paper Devotes Issue To Race Views

LIVINGSTON, Ala., Jan. 27—The current issue of the school paper at Livingston State Teachers College has devoted two pages to student and faculty discussion of segregation in public education.

A feature editorial, written by Editor Bill Northcutt of Birmingham, declares: "Of all the groups of people to be affected by a change in the segregation status, no group will be more seriously affected than the future teachers. . .

"Although the consensus of opinion is that segregation will not be completely abolished in the South for perhaps ten years, even if the court should outlaw it, it is time for prospective teachers to start thinking of the possible implications."

Articles on the subject by seven students were published. Four expressed the hope that segregation could be maintained. Two opposed segregation. One writer found himself "torn between two ideas," admitting his preference for segregation but asserting: "Probably God is grossly dissatisfied with man's outlook on the equality of all men. Christ's theachings included the commandment to love ALL men."

Of six faculty members polled, two believed the Supreme Court would outlaw segregation in the public schools. One thought the court would uphold the "seperate but equal" formula; one thought the states would be given a choice between no segregation and strict equality of facilities for the two races. Two declined a prediction, but said "abolishing segregation would definitely mean a social revolution and a breakdown of the public school system in the South."

Neither of the two teachers who foresaw a ruling against segregation thought it would be carried out quickly. "Perhaps a sensible plan could be worked out in a short period of time in sections of the South where there is a small quantity of colored people, but in more densely populated cities and rural areas, I think a longer period of time would be required," one said.

New Segregation Plan Wins Favor

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Some members of the segregation study commission are favorably impressed with a proposal to try to continue operating public schools on a segregated basis instead of abolishing them—if the U.S. Supreme Court should outlaw segregation in public schools.

The plan, suggested by gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen, would attempt to maintain segregation through administrative procedure rather than state law. Should the court strike down Georgia law on segregation, the Legislation would empower the county school superintendent to assign students to the schools they must attend. The superintendent would be given wide discretion, making the assignments for the "best interests of the child and also the best interests of the public school system."

St. John

Some members of the commission established to study segregation decisions of the court say privately they would like to consider this proposal. In event the court outlaws segregation, the commission will have to study a number of proposals.

The plan to try to deal with the problem by administrative remedies rather than by getting out of the public school field altogether was approved in Mississippi this week. The Mississippi Senate earlier had failed to pass a proposal to abolish public schools.

Florida, which hasn't taken any preliminary steps yet, is talking of this administrative proposal.

Cook Barwick of Atlanta has performed fine service on the State Merit Board. Time and again he has spoken out against the two majority members (Stanley Brooks of McRae, and R. M. Walker of Jesup) as they scuttled the merit system. His voice was in vain, however, because Brooks and Walker effectively junked the "merit" part of the system of state employment.

This week, Barwick made sense when he spoke out against state agencies hiring members of the General Assembly.

However, Barwick led with his chin when he criticized Atlanta Sen. Everett Millican's fight against lobbying in the Legislature. Barwick is no lobbyist or "legislative representative," but he is attorney for one or more firms interested in legislation. As such, he spent as much time on the floor of the House in November as some members did—although legally he didn't have the privileges of the floor.

The Fulton County Republican Club has launched a membership campaign, seeking to enlist 5,000 dues-paying members. McCready Johnston, membership chairman, implies that the Republicans will spend some money to try to elect candidates in Fulton County this year.

"Stamps, stationery and food for the out-of-door barbecues cost money, hence the urgent request that you send in your dues today," he writes to prospective members. "Tell your friends of the need for a two-party system, come to the Thursday luncheons, express your political thoughts, volunteer spare time to help work at our headquarters."

Some leaders have said Republicans may run for the Legislature and County Commission seats here.

South crying crocodile tears for Negro teachers who'll lose jobs

NEW YORK—(By Olive A. Adams for Global)—A story in last Sunday's New York Herald Tribune by W. D. Workman, Jr., carrying a Columbia, South Carolina dateline, asks the question, "What will happen to the 113,000 Negro school teachers, principals, and administrators now employed in segregated school systems when and if segregation is abolished?"

Mr. Workman points out that North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia together employ more Negroes in public education than all the States of the North, East and West combined, reminding us that, "South Carolina alone employs more Negroes in education than do all the states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, with more than 2,000 teachers to spare. Yet the combined Negro population of those 9 states exceeds that of South Carolina by more than a million persons."

Funny thing about a Southerner. Whenever you start asking for what's rightfully yours, his h[eart] suddenly starts bleeding for [the] teachers who'll lose their jobs, too. Or is Mr. Workman saying that Negro teachers couldn't make the grade? If so, then he tears the whole "seperate but equal" theory down to the ground. For, if Negro teachers cannot qualify and meet the standard, the Negro children have been gypped all along and would never have "equal" schooling under any circumstances.

Perhaps Mr. Workman doesn't know that Negroes in the North have a wider choice of vocation than those in the South.

If schools are integrated, certainly teachers would have to be appointed on a basis of merit, perhaps by competitive exam. This would mean that many white teachers would undoubtedly lose

New Segregation Plan Wins Favor

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Some members of the segregation study commission are favorably impressed with a proposal to try to continue operating public schools on a segregated basis instead of abolishing them—if the U.S. Supreme Court should outlaw segregation in public schools.

The plan, suggested by gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen, would attempt to maintain segregation through administrative procedure rather than state law. Should the court strike down Georgia law on segregation, the Legislation would empower the county school superintendent to assign students to the schools they must attend. The superintendent would be given wide discretion, making the assignments for the "best interests of the child and also the best interests of the public school system."

St. John

Some members of the commission established to study segregation decisions of the court say privately they would like to consider this proposal in event the court outlaws segregation, the commission will have to study a number of proposals.

The plan to try to deal with the problem by administrative remedies rather than by getting out of the public school field altogether was approved in Mississippi this week. The Mississippi Senate earlier had failed to pass a proposal to abolish public schools.

Florida, which hasn't taken any preliminary steps yet, is talking of this administrative proposal.

Cook Barwick of Atlanta has performed fine service on the State Merit Board. Time and again he has spoken out against the two majority members (Stanley Brooks of McRae, and R. M. Walker of Jesup) as they scuttled the merit system. His voice was in vain, however, because Brooks and Walker effectively junked the "merit" part of the system of state employment.

This week, Barwick made sense when he spoke out against state agencies hiring members of the General Assembly.

However, Barwick led with his chin when he criticized Atlanta Sen. Everett Millican's fight against lobbying in the Legislature. Barwick is no lobbyist or "legislative representative," but he is attorney for one or more firms interested in legislation. As such, he spent as much time on the floor of the House in November as some members did—although legally he didn't have the privileges of the floor.

The Fulton County Republican Club has launched a membership campaign, seeking to enlist 5,000 dues-paying members. McCready Johnston, membership chairman, implies that the Republicans will spend some money to try to elect candidates in Fulton County this year.

"Stamps, stationery and food for the out-of-door barbecues cost money, hence the urgent request that you send in your dues today," he writes to prospective members. "Tell your friends of the need for a two-party system, come to the Thursday luncheons, express your political thoughts volunteer spare time to help work at our headquarters."

Some leaders have said Republicans may run for the Legislature and County Commission seats here.

School Bias Ruling Won't Cause Rioting

BY EDWARD PEEKS

"We here in the deep South are unnecessarily excited over what decision the United States Supreme Court may hand down in the cases before it involving segregation in the public schools.

So said Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, in an address yesterday to the Hungry Club at the Butler Street YMCA.

"I believe we are confusing the issue," Mays declared. "The main issue before us is this: Can the United States Supreme Court, representing the greatest Democracy on earth, a nation that has assumed the economic and moral leadership of the world, announce to the world in 1954 that it believes in segregation based on color and race?

"Can the United States afford to say a billion colored people in Asia, millions of colored people in Africa, the Middle East, South America, and the European democracies that we believe in second-class citizenship for 15 million people solely because their race is Negro and their complexion colored?

NO POLITICAL ISSUE

"This is not a political issue. This is not a racial issue. This is a moral issue."

Mays said whatever decision the Supreme Court makes "will affect our leadership in the world either for good or ill." The Western world must win the loyalty and respect of the peoples of Asia and Africa through deeds and action.

"We are unduly excited because whether we like it or not the process of de-segregation will be much slower than we think, and it will be easier than we think," Mays stated.

He said de-segregation or integration will be slow for the following reasons, in the event the Supreme Court outlaws segregation in public schools:

1. The decision of the high court will apply only to the five cases involving Clarendon County, S. C.; Prince Edward County, Va.; Topeka, Kans.; the District of Columbia, and a case in Delaware.

"Some localities will move immediately toward de-segregation as some states have done in the case of higher education, but others may have to be ordered to do so by the courts," Mays observed.

EXPECTS "CAUTION"

2. Negro parents will move very cautiously in many parts of the South.

"There will be no run on the bank," Mays said. "Parents will not risk their children being embarrassed and for that reason they will not rush in just because the Supreme Court has voted against segregation.

He buttressed his point by citing interstate travel in which racial segregation is unlawful. Though many colored persons "ride across state lines unsegregated, the vast majority of Negroes ride segregated across state lines."

3. There will be a tendency for Negroes to relax once segregation has been knocked out by law.

"The very fact that the law says to Negroes, 'You cannot' and 'You must not,' makes them determined to get the law changed," Mays said. "Human nature is like that. In many areas of the North, Negroes are free to worship in white churches but they prefer the Negro church were they hold membership and where their fathers and mothers were members."

RESIDENTIAL SEGREGATION

make de-segregation slow.

"Both in the North and South Negroes are segregated," Mays explained. "Even in the North there are segregated schools due mainly to the fact that the people who live in the area are either Negroes or whites. This pattern will be followed in the South.

"There will be more mixture in some places than in others. In many areas there will be no mixture for some time to come."

He said people are unnecessarily excited because past experiences indicate that their fears are not well grounded.

"De-segregation will be easier than we think because it has been in process for 15 years or more and no calamity has fallen upon the South," Mays stated. He referred to the outlawing of segregation in the dining cars, interstate travel and Southern universities.

"DISTURBANCE" NOT ANTICIPATED

"Negroes are enrolled in every Southern state university except in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi," Mays said. "The Supreme Court has ruled that residential segregation cannot be enforced by law. There has been no race riots as a result of it. Segregation in the armed services is almost a thing of the past and nobody is disturbed."

He believes order will prevail in the South if the Supreme Court rules against segregation in public schools.

"I suppose I have more faith in my native South than most Southerners," Mays declared. "If the United States Supreme Court rules against segregation in the public schools, I believe the Southern people will meet the challenge with dignity, poise and calm.

"In other Supreme Court decisions the South has made the adjustment and I believe the South will make the adjustment if segregation in the public schools is declared unconstitutional."

COMMITTEE FORMED

After the close of the question and answer period, a temporary citizens committee at large was seected to spearhead action for a larger committee to formulate a statement representative of opinions in the Negro community on the question of segregation in public schools.

"This is not a committee of the Hungry Club," R. O. Johnson said, speaking as moderator of the club. He said his impression was that "the committee would strive to clarify issues and would seek ways of implementing whatever decision the United States Supreme Court hands down on racial segregation in public schools." The committee would work for these objectives as well as for a statement of collective views, he said.

Those selected are Benjamin E. Mays, T. M. Alexander, Rev. R. B. Shorts, Rev. E. R. Searcy, C. L. Harper, J. R. Henderson and Mrs. G. T. Hamilton.

Negro Jobs May Be Lost If Bias Goes

By W. D. Workman Jr.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 9.—One of the collateral issues caught up in the school segregation cases now pending before the United States Supreme Court is embraced in this question: "What will happen to the 13,000 Negro school teachers, principals and administrators now employed in segregated school systems when and if segregation is abolished?"

If the Southern states were to follow the example set by the non-segregated states of the North, East and West, then thousands of Negro school teachers are likely to lose their jobs. Only in the Southern and border states do Negroes hold teaching jobs in anything approaching a fair proportion to their numbers.

That conclusion is based on a study of individual census returns from every state and the District of Columbia. The study embraced such considerations as the percentage of Negro population to total population, along with a more detailed scrutiny of the ratio of white and Negro employment listed under "Educational Services, Government."

Out of that study has come findings such as these:

The three states of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia together employ more Negroes in public education than do all the states of the North, East and West combined.

South Carolina alone employs more Negroes in education than do all the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hhampshire and Maine, with more than 2,000 teachers to spare. Yet the combined Negro population of those nine states exceeds that of South Carolina by more than a million persons.

Only 3,000 in N. Y. C.

The state of New York, which has a Negro population of 918,000 according to the 1950 census, employs fewer than 3,000 Negro educators. On the other hand, South Carolina, with a smaller Negro population (822,000) employs three times as many Negro educators (8,845).

Of the 133,000 Negro teachers in the United States, only 20,000 are employed in the North, East and West. The remaining 113,000 are employed in the seventeen states and the District of Columbia, where segregation is required.

In South Carolina, where Negros make up 38.8 per cent of the total population, Negro teachers make up 36.1 per cent of the total persons in "Educational Services, Government." In North Carolina, the population ratio is 25.8 per cent Negro; the educational ratio, 29.1 per cent. In Georgia, the population ratio is 30.9 per cent Negro; the educational ratio, 30.5 per cent. In the District of Columbia, where Negros make up 35 per cent of the population, Negro teachers make up 45.5 per cent of the total educational force.

But in New York, where Negroes comprise 6.2 per cent of the total population, Negroes comprise only 2.5 per cent of the total number of teachers. In New Jersey, the Negro ratio is 6.6 per cent of the population, but only 2.8 per cent of the educational force. In Michigan, the ratio is 6.9 per cent as to population; 2.7 per cent as to teaching force. In Illinois, the comparative ratios are 7.4 per cent and 4.3 per cent, and in Ohio, the ratios are 6.5 per cent and 3.6 per cent.

JUDGE TALKS OF SCHOOLS, SAYS:

Race segregation is discrimination

By JAMES L. HICKS

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — Associate Justice of the Appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York stated flatly Friday that racial segregation in schools "does not constitute equality of treatment and is, therefore, discriminatory."

The statement was made by Justice Philip Halpern of Buffalo in a spirited press conference held in the United Nations where he is serving as U.S. representative on a UN sub-committee set up to study the prevention of discrimination and the protection of racial minorities.

The statement came only after Judge Halpern had tried to "go off the record" and a reporter had challenged him to show his "moral courage" by answering the question "on the record."

Answer Later Qualified

After answering "Yes" to the question on the record, Judge Halpern hastily added that he did not mean by his answer that such segregation necessarily violates the 14th Amendment.

He pointed out that he did not think it would be proper to comment on the question now before the Supreme Court in the school segregation cases.

The question came after Judge Halpern had attempted to explain to reporters the necessity for his committee's taking some two years to produce evidences of discrimination against racial minorities before laying such evidence before the UN as a whole.

UN reporters raised the question of why it was necessary to take so long to produce evidences of discrimination when, as one said, "we all know it exists."

Hint No 'Search' Necessary

They followed this question with others which virtually amounted to asking the Judge whether he did not feel that his committee was simply wasting its time in "searching" for evidences of discrimination.

One reporter bluntly asked Judge Halpern if he felt the work of the committee "will do any good". Judge Halpern then launched into a rather lengthy explanation in which he dwelt on the "moral suasion" which such a report might produce.

But veteran UN reporters hammered away at him as to what he felt could be accomplished by "moral" suasion in countries like South Africa and others and finally one reporter fired the question:

"Judge, do you think racial segregation in schools constitutes racial discrimination?"

Judge Halpern tried every other honorable means of getting around the question without a direct answer, but when he was asked whether he, as a member of a committee studying such matters, had the moral courage to answer, he finally answered "Yes" and permitted himself to be quoted.

Defends American System

The UN reporters had earlier witnessed Judge Halpern figuratively slap down a representative of the World Federation of Trade Unions when she had taken the floor of the subcommittee and quoted Census Department figures to show that the United States is guilty of racial discrimination in education.

Miss Eleanor Kahn, the WFTU representative, stated in the committee that 1950 census figures show that the average colored male in the southern states has completed only 5.9 years of schooling and said that this was almost 40 per cent below the national average for the total population.

She charged this was the result of educational discrimination against colored people.

Called 'Random Example'

Judge Halpern admonished her for giving "random examples" and citing "isolated figures" and told the chairman that Miss Kahn was out of order to raise such data at that point in the discussion.

He said the committee at that time was considering the "scope" of the study it would make and it was not the time to present data on the question itself. The chairman sided with him.

Enforcing Racial Segregation

It Is Viewed as Violating the Rights of All Americans

The writers of the following letter are, respectively, Assistant Professor of Sociology and Assistant Professor of Political Science at Haverford College.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

At a time when the Supreme Court of the United States is considering the question of the legality of racial segregation in the public schools and when the dubious legal umbrella of "separate but equal" facilities, enunciated in Plessy v. Ferguson just before the turn of the century, is being challenged on its own merits, it may be well to remind the American people that the issue joined is fundamentally a broader one than that of the rights of a racial minority.

It is true that those who have opposed the segregation of the Negro have done so on the basis of the material and spiritual injury accruing to Negroes as a result of such segregation and the attendant deprivation of civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution and implicit in the democratic way of life. Nevertheless, seen in its larger context, enforced segregation in the United States constitutes a deprivation of the rights of both whites and Negroes, not Negroes alone.

A white person in a Southern state or municipality which enforces segregation does not have the option of deciding whether or not he wishes to sit in the rear of the bus, attend an educational meeting with Negroes, send his child to a school which enrolls Negro children, or dine in a restaurant with a Negro colleague or friend. He is forced to observe the segregation pattern whether he wants to or not. Are not his civil rights, too, being violated by the state or municipality?

Religious and Ethical Beliefs

Furthermore, persons now residing in the North who might wish for occupational or other reasons to take up residence in the South and who might be unable to comply with the segregation laws because of religious or ethical beliefs about the dignity of man, or who might comply with them but with considerable reluctance, are put in the position of weighing the alternatives of compromising conscience, accepting imprisonment or fine (and possibly physical attack), emotional unhappiness or relinquishing the move entirely. Are not their rights being violated?

Nor, outside of the specifically legal, is the problem exclusively a Southern one. For instance, because of formal and informal agreements, the Northern white person who might wish to live in a neighborhood composed of persons of all racial backgrounds finds it exceedingly difficult to do so, especially if he resides in a desirable, so-called residential neighborhood.

If it should be claimed that the rights of those whites who favor segregation would be violated were segregation to be abolished, it must be pointed out that the fundamental right of any person to choose his own intimate social companions is nowhere and in no way threatened by the movement to abolish segregation.

Point at Issue

The point at issue is the essentially impersonal access of all persons to the general rewards of society in terms of individual merit and general ethical norms, and precisely the right of individuals to effect such intimate social relationships as they personally prefer.

These remarks are in no sense intended to suggest that the rights of whites, even those opposed to segregation, should be considered as of greater moment than the rights of Negroes, at whom the segregation is fundamentally directed. The problem is, after all, one of common human, not racial, rights. Nevertheless it may be of value to have labored the point that a fence has two sides and that those who have built it jail the jailer as well as the jailed.

If the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to all persons the equal protection of the laws, is interpreted in this larger framework its fundamental repugnance to segregation laws may become even more apparent.

'Live With The Change'

A Southerner Speaks On Segregation

(Editor's note: Because of the current interest in the anxiously awaited decision of the United States Supreme court on the issue of segregation in the public school, the following refreshing comment is herewith reprinted from a recent issue of [illegible] magazine.)

On the question of segregation in Southern public schools, Editor Ralph McGill of the influential Atlanta Constitution (circ. 173,591) has long steered an enlightened but [illegible] course. But last week, in his daily column, McGill spoke bluntly. "What the various Southern state legislatures are doing," said he, 'as they busy themselves with plans to carry on school segregation without legal compulsion, is admitting (that) segregation by law is finished . . . It, therefore, seems important that we discuss the problems as rationally as possible.

"There are those who insist that segregation protects the 'integrity' of both races. There are others who believe, with deep sincerity, (that) Negroes are 'better off' under it. Conceivably this might be argued with some logic. It does not matter. The world, in the throes of a social revolution which began with the coming of the industrial revolution, and which was tremendously accelerated by two great world wars, has moved on. Segregation by law no longer fits today's world . . .

"As a matter of fact, segregation has been on its way out for a good long time . . . Two great forces have been at work on . . . the problem of race. One is secular, the other religious. The Christian of today cannot help but wince at the full implications and the jarring clash of his creed, with discrimination against any person because of color. To send missionaries to colored peoples and then to argue that because of the color of skin the two may not . . . worship the same God together is an impossible contradiction.

"It is this very fact which causes our Communist enemies to be able to present us in a bad light before the Oriental and Asiatic peoples. They can say . . . that our claims to Christian brotherhood and democracy are hypocritically untrue. Christianity cannot well afford to be on the wrong side of a moral force.

"The other influence is secular. Segregation implies inferiority . . . Across two great wars now we, along with other free peoples, have preached the rights of men everywhere to be free and equal—we have encouraged long-oppressed peoples to rise. They have done so, and to date the Communists, with great shrewdness, have exploited successfully many of these nationalistic revolutions.

"An end to segregation—when it comes—will not, of course, force people to associate socially . . .

But it will bring on change . . . Segregation is on its way out, and he who tries to tell the people otherwise does them great disservice. The problem of the future is how to live with the change."

Educator Raps Eisenhower On Handling Segregation

Special To The Advertiser

AUGUSTA, Ga., Jan. 21—Within almost a tee shot distance of his golf Shangri-La here, President Eisenhower was severely criticized for promoting anti-segregation moves by a veteran Alabama educator and former State Department employe who was a member of a diplomatic mission to Albania in 1935.

Hugh G. Grant, speaking to the Exchange Club here, warned:

"Mr. President. . . elimination of segregation, especially where large numbers of people of both races are involved, will increase interracial difficulties, result in strife, perhaps bloodshed in race riots . . ."

Grant, who had taught journalism at API, Auburn in 1923, and was secretary to Justice Hugo Black, while the jurist was in the U. S. Senate, 1927-31, was speaking on the effects a Supreme Court decision might have on the nation, if segregation in the public schools is knocked out.

Grant told the Exchangites not to "accept defeat on this momentous issue even if the Supreme Court rules against segregation." He said that such an attitude would be "defeatism (which) never won a battle."

Pointing out that four of the five school segregation cases before the Supreme Court are based on the 14th Amendment, Grant said:

"This Amendment . . . was added to the Constitution through trickery, subterfuge and oppression while the Southern states were under rigid federal military rule." He added: "The legality of the 14th Amendment. . . is very dubious."

After criticizing President Roosevelt's FEPC, established in 1938, which "began functioning effectively against segregation in the ranks of organized labor," he passed to an attack on President Eisenhower for insistance and development of anti-segregation in the armed services.

Grant charged that it was the President who, when supreme commander of Allied armies in Euprope "gave the initial push for the integration of the races in the armed services."

Quoting Time Magazine (May 11, 1953) said it was claimed that "this experience worked well and became an argument for post-war integration policies in the armed services" but that Time "failed to point out that men in the armed services have their mouths sealed."

The speaker noted that on Jan, 7, in his State of the Union message, "President Eisenhower told the Congress and the people of the nation. . . that 'segregation in the armed services and other federal activities is on the way out." Also, the President added: "We have made progress towards its abolition in the District of Columbia. These are steps in the continuing effort to eliminate interracial difficulty."

Grant observed: "The fact of the matter is, certain leaders of the present Republican Administration, among whom is Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, former handy-man for Gov. Tom Dewey, are playing with the issue of segregation for votes—votes in the coming Congressional elections this fall, and in the next Presidential election in 1956."

Grant then lambasted Brownell's action "in urging the Supreme Court to outlaw segregation in the public schools."

The speaker said: "I sincerely and earnestly hoped that Mr. Eisenhower would refuse to join the game of politics on this explosive question. I was keenly disappointed in his negative response."

Grant also criticized Atlanta Constitution Editor Ralph McGill for his alleged too-liberal approach to this problem and called him "a dangerous man to the cause of the South in its battle to maintain its traditional way of life and to preserve the integrity of both white and black races."

Statistics Cited as Proof Negro Teachers Fare Ill in Unsegregated School Systems

Blue Mountain, Miss.—Collateral to the school teacher situation is the question of how the Negro teachers will fare under unsegregated school systems.

If southern states follow the example of [illegible] states, Negro teachers will suffer.

From a study of census facts of all states the following facts appear: North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia employ more Negro teachers than all the other states combined.

South Carolina alone employs more Negro teachers than 10 of the northern industrial states including the three most populous. Yet the combined Negro population of these [illegible] states exceeds the Negro population of South Carolina by more than a million.

New York according to the 1950 census has 918,000 Negroes but employs less than 4,000 Negro teachers. South Carolina with 822,000 Negroes employs 8,845 Negro teachers.

GOD, SUPREME COURT AND SCHOOLS:

Reporter prays as he awaits decision

By JAMES L. HICKS

WASHINGTON

What does a man who loves freedom do while he is waiting for nine other men to decide whether or not he shall have that freedom?

Each Monday, while the Supreme Court is in session, my assignment as a reporter is to wait in the pressroom of the court until court adjourns—or hands down a decision in the school segregation cases.

I don't know what the other reporters are doing while they wait for the decision — but I know what I do as a freedom-loving American:

'This Is My Prayer'

I pray. And this is my prayer:

O God, Thou creator of justice for all men.

I ask You today for that which I have been taught to believe is rightfully mine.

My prayer is for full freedom

I would not ask You for that which is not mine for I have been taught that it is Your divine creed in dealing with moral men that all men share, and none are favored in Your eyes.

And if I did not honestly feel within my heart that I am entitled to that full freedom, again, I would not ask it; for my study of Your Divine Word has taught me to shun hypocrisy.

I'm No Preacher

And I know that as a searcher of men's souls, every true belief in my heart is as open to You as the doors of this courtroom in which I pray.

As I offer my prayer to You today, I am not clothed in the robes of the clergy that would entitle me to preach Your Divine Gospel; nor can I lay claim to being a staunch disciple who has followed You from the days of my birth.

No, Father, my prayer is the prayer of the average man. Often, all too often, have I strayed from the road which You so clearly marked for all men. Often, all too often, have I contented myself with the half truth when the whole truth could have been won.

Often have I compromised with sin and injustice when Your chosen ministers were preaching Your word and Your loyal disciples were urging me to follow in Your footsteps.

'Courage To Pray Because . . .'

Yes, Lord, I pray to You today as one who has often sinned.

But I have the courage to pray because these same men—these men who preach Your Word and who follow straight in Your footsteps — have told me, have taught me that you, in your infinite wisdom, will forgive men for their sins.

And, Dear God, as I have sinned, I ask You to forgive me. And in the same breath I beg of you that as I am a man, give me those things in which You promise all men.

In the shadow of my sins and in the light of my repentance I beseech You to give me the freedom to which all men created in Your image are entitled

Prayer For Full Freedom

My prayer is for full freedom I ask for the right to walk about on Your green earth and not have evil men bar my path because of the color of my skin which You gave me in Your own image and which I wear so proudly.

I pray for the right to drink deeply of the springs of knowledge, and not have these same evil men bar me from the sources of highest knowledge because of my proud, black skin.

And, Lord, I ask You for the right to live peacefully wherever I may choose to settle among your green acres.

To have neighbors whom I can love as neighbors and who will love me as a neighbor even as I love myself.

Freedom Of Home Choice

I pray for the privilege and the right to live in a house—a house on a hill or a hut across the railroad tracks—to live there and be respected and not scorned either by my neighbors who live on the hill or those who dwell in huts.

Continue to give me strength, Dear God, to work either with my hands or with the talents that you have given me. But spare me the humiliation of being barred from work because of the color of the skin which You also gave to me.

Often, Dear God, when evil men have thus barred my path in my search for the things for which I pray, I have been prone to lash out at them and to connive with the devil to unleash the smoldering fury which their actions cause within me.

Have 'Turned Other Cheek'

But though often I have been tempted and though sometimes I have yielded to temptation, for the most part I have turned the other cheek—to keep the faith with Your teachings.

And it is in this spirit of humility that I pray to You today. I am fighting the fight as You would have me do. I am keeping the faith even as You would have done.

But, as You once called upon Your Father to lighten Your load, so I call on You, my Heavenly Father, today.

I appeal to You today not to fail me in my hour of prayer. My fate, my destiny reposes in the peaceful folds of the black robes of the Supreme Court of this nation which I love.

"I know, O Lord, that, like me, these nine learned men, representing such an august body of Your Divine justice, do not approach the weighty question of my full freedom without first seeking Your divine guidance.

'Give Them Divine Light'

"And, devout men that You are O Lord, I pray that You will give them the full glare of divine light which will enable them to search their own souls before deciding the fate of mine.

"As they are men, let them judge me as a man. As they love freedom, let them be considerate of mine. Let them see the truth that none can be free so long as one remains in bondage. And, as they are Americans, show them that I am an American, too.

"This is mp prayer—hear me, Oh Heavenly Father!"

Court To Outlaw Segregation In May Says Powell

Raleigh, N. C. (ANP).—Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., New York Democrat, told North Carolina teachers that the United States Supreme Court will outlaw segregated schools in a decision which will be made "the first Monday in May." The congressman said the "high court is tied four to four on the issue" with Chief Justice Earl Warren abstaining from voting. He explained that his information came "from the inside."

Powell said he believed the chief justice will break the deadlock by voting in favor of unsegregated schools, giving a five to four decision for abolition of segregation in the public schools.

Mr. Powell made his prediction on the five-school suit outcome while addressing the 73rd annual convention of the North Carolina Teachers Association on the theme "Responsibility of Negro People in the Progress of Education."

He said the Supreme Court's decision will be the most important governmental action since the Civil War, and "will come as a complete shock to whites and Negroes having separate schools." He suggested a three-year period for compliance with a ruling against segregated, schools to cushion the shock.

During the first year he suggested that white and Negro children of pre-school age and the first three grades should attend classes together. The next four grades should be mixed the second year, and the remaining grades the third year.

Dr. Brownell Urges U.S. To Consider School Aid

Special to the Herald Tribune

SAN FRANCISCO, March 19. —The cost of providing good public school education in America is now such that Federal aid—without strings—must be seriously considered.

This contention was made here today by two speakers at the opening session of the two-day meeting of the National Citizens' Commission for the Public Schools.

One was economist Beardsley Ruml. The other was Dr. Samuel M. Brownell, United States Commissioner of Education. Columnist Walter Lippmann also warned that education is falling behind because of lack of financial support, but he proposed no specific remedy.

Dr. Brownell, who spoke at a luncheon session, emphasized that as a Federal official he neverthless believes "the control and management of schools is properly a local and state function."

"But America is confronted by educational problems so serious we must examine whether the state can meet them without financial aid from Federal taxation."

Mr. Ruml told a winner audience of 1,200 laymen interested in education that by 1960 there will be 44,000,000 children of school age, five to seventeen, as compared with 36,000,000 now —an increase of 23 per cent.

The burden of providing new facilities and teachers to teach the growing number of students can no longer be borne by state and local communities, he said.

To avoid the danger of "coercion in the school program by Federal authority," he said, the money should be dispersed through state channels, with the state guaranteeing only that the money was spent for education under concepts and supervision legally specified by the state.

Schools Get Smaller Share

Mr. Lippmann, also a dinner speaker, gave figures to show how the amount of money spent on primary and secondary school education today is less—percentagewise—than in 1900 when compared with money spent for other public services

In 1900, he said, $3.40 a year was spent on each school child, compared to $6.85 spent per capita for all other public services—a ratio of 2 to 1. Today the ratio is 6—1, $76 per capita in school, $467 per capita for other public services.

Important research report—

'The Negro And The Schools'—a Southern writer seeks the facts

BY CHARLES MERCER, Associated Press writer

NEW YORK, May 15—If Negroes and whites were immediately reshuffled throughout the South's school system "the same general deficiencies in physical facilities, teacher training, curricula and the like would exist."

This is one of several conclusions set forth in the most intensive non-partisan study of school segregation ever undertaken i nthe nation. It was made by the fund for the advancement of education, formed by the Ford Foundation, and made public today.

Entitled "The Negro and the schools," the study is the result of research by some 50 educators, sociologists and economists. It is written by Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, Ark.

In such a reshuffling of white and Negro students in the South, says the study, "abstract justice might be achieved, in that the deficit would fall evenly upon members of both races, but the over-all standard of public education would not be materially improved."

What are existing conditions over U. S.?

THE STUDY does not recommend changes but describes existing conditions in many sections of the country. The foundation made Ashmore's book available to newspapers and periodicals for unrestricted use. Following are some of its highlights.

"The South is only now reaching the point where there are enough classrooms for education. There has been general discrimination against Negroes it is true, but it could have been corrected only by pouring additional money into the total system or by lowering the standards of white schools.

"If at any point in the past discrimination had been wiped out by total integration the effect would have been that some Negroes would have gone to better schools and some whites to worse—but no appreciable economies would have resulted to make additional funds available for improvement of the total system."

Gap between schools only one aspect

SOUTHERN schoolmen "have had to recognize—as the public often has not—that the gap between white and Negro schools is only one aspect of the region's total problem, and that there is no way that it can be considered apart from the over-all deficiencies of the Southern school system.

"The general disparity between white and Negro schools has its counterpart in the inequalities between urban and rural schools in the South. In every state there are counties in which the best white school by any standard of comparison is inferior to the worst Negro schools in the larger cities. And the educational problems of the rural South have been increased by recent population trends, which in the decade after 1940 saw a loss of 4,200,000 people in the farm areas of the 13 states."

The states are Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

"Recent improvements in the South's rural schools have only begun to scratch the surface of the accumulated deficiencies." Between 1940 and 1952 "the gap between per pupil instruction expenditures in metropolitan and rural counties widened from $20 to $44, and in capital outlay from approximately $2 to almost $37."

Could the South afford the costs?

WHITE-NEGRO "equalization," considered in the perspective of the total needs of the South's school system, "would become a secondary item in a budget that also took into account the increasing school population, urban-rural equalization, and a modest degree of general improvement.

"If the South undertook to meet all of these needs by 1962, its total school bill in that year would amount to about $2½ billion, an increase of more than 50 per cent over the 1951-52 figure.

"Could the South afford these costs? The answer is yes—if its income continues to rise at the rate of 3.1 per cent a year, and if it continues to spend 3.3 per cent of its income on public schools."

Outside the South "the most conspicuous generalization is that segregated schools are now principally the product of a larger pattern of separation of the races."

From rural South to slums in cities

NEGROES migrating from the South have most often settled in the decaying hearts of cities. A striking example of this is Chicago where about ½ million Negroes are jammed into 11 square miles of the south side.

"In Chicago it can be demonstrated that segregated housing has not only made for segregated education, but for inferior education. The schools in or near the Negro neighborhoods are the oldest in the entire system, and provide the least adequate physical facilities."

In the words of Dr. N. G. Fawcett, superintendent of schools in Columbus, Ohio: "If integration of races is a by-product of establishing better schools, then we shall have integration of races. I can see no good reason for drawing district lines just to create integration any more than to create segregation."

The book then states: "This issue is not likely to be resolved soon, but those on both sides can agree that segregation in education in the non-South will not be eliminated so long as rigidly segregated residential patterns survive."

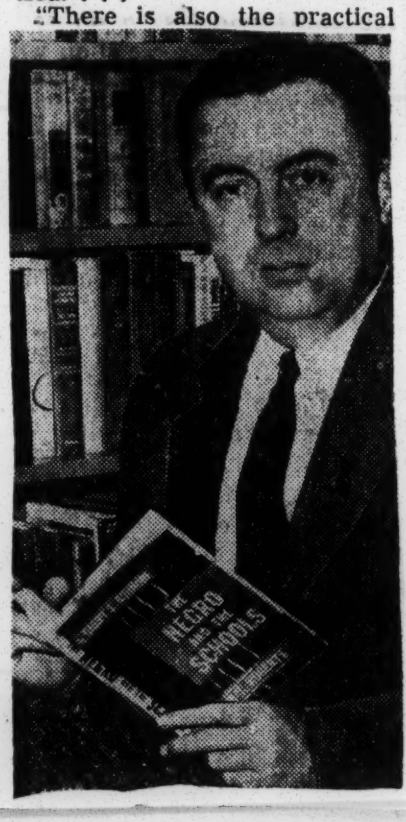
Techniques used for integration

IN COMMUNITIES where educational integration of whites and Negroes has been carried out under permissive or mandatory state laws a variety of techniques have been used.

In Tucson, Ariz., for example, where Negro population is small, it was accomplished at one stroke. In Phoenix, on the other hand, it was approached gradually, beginning with kindergarten and the first three grades.

"Proponents of the gradual approach argue that it minimizes public resistance to integration. But some school officials who have experienced it believe that the reverse is true. A markedly gradual program, they contend, particularly one which involves the continued maintenance of some separate schools, invites opposition and allows time for it to be organized. . . .

"There is also the practical consideration that partial integration is likely to intensify the scholastic handicaps of successive classes of Negro children, who receive their initial schooling in inferior segregated schools and then are thrown into direct competition with better-prepared whites.



Studied problem — Author Harry S. Ashmore holds his recent book which is a report on the South's problem in education. (Associated Press photo.)

"The matter of integrating faculties is generally regarded as more of a problem than mixing classes. In community after community school authorities who have experienced no serious difficulty in admitting Negroes to formerly all-white schools expressed the fear that white patrons would not tolerate Negroes teaching their children.

"The most important factor in integration of the public schools in the upper South, finally, is community attitudes. It is axiomatic that separate schools can be merged only with great difficulty, if at all, when a great majority of the citizens who support them are actively opposed to the move. No other public activity is so closely identified with local mores."

Success and failure in 'selling' campaign

CASE STUDIES SHOW that whenever there has been a well-planned program to "sell" integration to the community at large it has succeeded. "The most notable examples are to be found in New Jersey where a well-staffed state agency made it its business to work closely with those communities which had long practiced segregation and appeared resistant to the change required by the new constitution . . .

"At the other end of the scale is Cairo, Ill., where the effect of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to force a reluctant school board to accept the state ban on segregation led to violence. Cairo, in almost every aspect of its community life, may be classified as a 'sick city', and there is no indication of anything approximating an orderly inter-racial approach to the problem either before or after integration became an explosive issue."

A study of the problems of the dual school system in the nation's capital concludes thus:

"While the immediate future of bi-racial education in Washington apparently hinges on the action of the Supreme Court, the peculiar nature of the city's government structure and of its symbolic importance as the nation's capital means that the dual school system cannot escape sustained pressure no matter what the court may do. At any time Congress could end segregation by the passage of a simple resolution."

GENERAL

Segregation vs Integration

By GUY B. JOHNSON

Reprinted From Crisis, December, 1953

(EDITOR'S NOTE—The article written by the executive secretary of the Southern Regional Council, is perhaps the most exhaustive treatment we have recently seen on the burning and controversial question of separate schools; and because Mr. Johnson is a Southerner we commend it especially to both our white and black readers. While we do not agree with all he says we certainly feel that in this man we have a Southerner who is willing to attack this subject head-on and refuses to dodge any of the issues involved.)

The Supreme Court of the United States is about to make a momentous decision on the question of the constitutionality of compulsory segregation in the public schools. This decision may precipitate a grave crisis in the relations of the races in the South. It behooves us all, therefore, to understand the possible consequences of the court's decision and to be prepared to act with wisdom and intelligence in whatever crisis may arise.

In the South today there is a great uneasiness over the imminent threat to the legal structure of compulsory segregation in the public schools. Last December the United States Supreme Court heard arguments on this question. Five cases, sponsored by the NAACP on behalf of the parents of Negro school children in South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Kansas, and the District of Columbia were before the Court on appeal. The cases were consolidated for the purpose of the hearing. The NAACP argued through counsel that even though the separate Negro schools were equal to white schools, segregation on grounds of race is in itself an act of discrimination and is therefore contrary to the federal constitution.

The defense argued, of course, that there is nothing inherently wrong or discriminatory in racial segregation, and it asked the court to reaffirm its long-standing view to the effect that racial separation may lawfully be required by the states if facilities for the two races are equal. As you all know, the strategy of the NAACP for the past several years has been to try to push the Supreme Court to a show-down decision on segregation per se. There was every indication that the Court was now ready to meet this issue head-on. The fact that six months have elapsed and the decision is still not ready is an indication of the gravity of the case. This is indeed one of the hottest potatoes that the court has ever had to handle.

Possible Ways

Now there are several possible ways in which the Supreme Court might dispose of this group of school cases, but they boil down to two basic possibilities. On the one hand, the court could make a "separate but equal" decision. This would be in line with the doctrine in the case of Plessy vs Ferguson in 1890. In that case the Court declared that a state may require a public carrier to provide separate accommodations for whites and Negroes if it requires the carrier to make the accommodations equal. That case set a precedent which has governed nearly all of the subsequent decisions on the question of segregation. On the other hand, the court could declare that state laws requiring racial segregation are acts of discrimination committed by authority of the state and are therefore contrary to the constitution of the United States. Admittedly, this would be a new precedent, that is, an overruling of previous decisions, but the court has done this sort of thing a number of times. One example is the decision against the "white primary" in the case of Smith vs Allwright in 1944. In fact, it is this flexibility, this perogative of the Supreme Court to change its mind that keeps our constitutional law in step with the changing needs of the nation.

If the Supreme Court takes the latter stand in the school segregation cases, the effect is exactly the same as if all the constitutional and statutory provisions requiring the segregation of the races in the public schools in the South were suddenly repealed. For reasons which I cannot take time to discuss here, I believe that this is the decision which the court will make.

Expected Consequences

However, since either of the above decisions is possible, let us take them in order and explore the probable consequences. If the court makes the "separate but equal" decision, the white South will for the most part feel relieved, perhaps even somewhat exultant, and the Negro for the most part will feel greatly disappointed. I suggest that both of these attitudes are short-sighted. Let me explain that statement. If the court takes this line, it will most certainly put a heavy accent on the word equal. It would say in effect that the Negro schools in any given district must in fact be made equal to the white schools in that district within a certain reasonable period of time, otherwise the law requiring segregation is void, and any Negro plaintiff may obtain a court order for his admission to the superior white school in his district.

The South would at once find itself faced with a tremendous financial burden. It is estimated that the new capital outlay required to equalize physical facilities alone will be from fifty million to more than a hundred million in each state, or more than one billion dollars for the whole South. Added to this would be the increased cost of operating and maintaining the Negro schools at the new level—probably half a billion dollars a year. This all adds up to a staggering financial problem. Certain things begin to happen. For example, the South suddenly gets completely converted to the idea of federal aid to education. It also begins to look at the price tag on segregation. Here and there segregation begins to go, first in the counties which have few Negroes, later in other areas. The change is not dramatic but it is inevitable and it is progressive.

Current Trends

Consider also the trends of the times. In the past fifty years we have learned many lessons in interracial understanding and cooperation. Two world wars and a great depression have taught us a great deal. Urbanization, industrialization, better education, better income, better health—all these have broadened the opportunities for both races. Even some of the legal bulwarks of discriminatio have been nibbled away by court action. The Supreme Court has nullified the white primary, and hundreds of thousands of Negroes are now playing their part in political decisions in the South, to say nothing of running successfully for public office. The court has opened the way for non-segregated interstate travel, and such travel is becoming commonplace in the South. It has also made decisions which have resulted in the admission of Negroes to state-supported "white" graduate and professional schools in all except four or five of the southern states. Furthermore, several white private institutions have voluntarily removed the color bar.

When Ralph Bunche can speak to unsegregated audiences in Raleigh, Miami, and Atlanta, and when Rufus Clement can win election to the Atlanta school board in spite of the ruthless efforts of certain politicians to smear his good name—well, a new day is dawning in the South. In short, the idea of integration is gaining, and we approach nearer and nearer to the American ideal of justice and equality under the law. This is why I say that although the Negro may be bitterly disappointed by a "separate but equal" type of Supreme Court decision, he really can't lose. Integration and segregation are like two unequally matched boxers in the ring. Segregation is groggy and he can't win. It is just a question of whether he loses the decision on points or goes down under a knockout punch.

What about the consequences of the other possible decision of the Supreme Court, the knock-out punch against segregation? The decision which I think it will make. If and when this legal atom bomb is exploded, the South is going to experience a great shock. There are many white people who will feel that their world has come to an end. It is tragic that the South has let itself get into this sort of psychological fright.

The big mistake, of course, was made many years ago when the South was sick and angry about the emancipation and Reconstruction. For a while after the Civil War there was a trend toward reconciliation. In South Carolina in 1876 Wade Hampton ran for governor on a Democratic platform which declared "acceptance, in perfect good faith, of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Federal constitution." He was elected. Negroes were welcomed into the Democratic party. An Abbeville newspaper said in 1878: "The color line has been obliterated, and we are all moving along together upon a higher and better platform of equal rights and equal justice for all." But powerful reactionary forces came to the front. They raised the cry of white supremacy. They murdered, they intimidated, they drove the Negro out of political life. Having gained complete control, they wrote segregation into the state constitutions and laws, and they ostracized any white man who dared to speak out in favor of equal rights.

It is ironic that some of the southern states got along for thirty years or longer after the Civil War without completely segregating and disfranchising the Negro, but when they did this they did a thorough job of it. They felt that it was a sort of all-or-none proposition. They put the South in a legal racial straight-jacket, with no middle ground, no freedom of local or individual choice. Two generations of white people have grown up under this heritage, and it is no wonder that to them segregation has seemed right, natural, and they hoped—eternal. And so it is no wonder that the vast majority of southern white people have a very real fear of the drastic changes which will confront them if the Supreme Court outlaws segregation in the schools.

Advice For Southerners

On April 12, I had the honor of delivering the Founder's Day address at Tuskegee. I spoke on this same subject, and I took the opportunity to offer some advice to the southern people. First, I suggested that we should "count to ten" and try to refrain from doing anything in haste or anger. Second, this period of waiting and "cooling off" should be a period of full public discussion, during which all persons, white and Negro, who believe in the Christian and Democratic way of life should take the initiative away from the racial baiters—in short stand up and be counted. Third, I suggested that the southern people should try to keep clearly in mind the probable consequences of whatever actions they decide to take after the Supreme Court decision.

Given the state of mind of many of the southern white people, and particularly of their political leaders who are often more reactionary than the people themselves, what are some of the probable courses of action? I am convinced that there will be a rather general effort to evade the coming of complete integration of the races in the public schools. In the Upper South and border states there will be on the whole a tendency to accept the new situation gracefully but reluctantly. Even so, on the personal level there is going to be a good deal of intolerance and friction, and on the local administrative level there is going to be quite a lot of dodging and compromising.

In the Deep South, where fear and anxiety are much more pronounced, there will probably be some drastic and unintelligent public policies adopted. As you know, there are certain politicians who openly predict wholesale violence if the schools are mixed. Actually, I think they are merely hoping there will be violence in order to get support for their plans to abandon the state support of public schools. Georgia has passed a law providing for the withdrawal of state funds from any institution that admits both races. South Carolina has adopted a constitutional amendment which can be put into effect at any moment by the legislature and which will wipe out completely the state's legal obligation to support a public school system. These are dire threats, but they are going to be tried out.

The theory behind the South Carolina plan is that if the state supports no public schools, it is not discriminating against anyone. Supposedly, the schools would be taken over, operated, and financed by all sorts of private educational agencies. Some of these would be white and some would be colored agencies, but they would all be acting as voluntary private agencies and not as agents of the state. Thus South Carolina would hope to do through private action what it can no longer do by official action.

Educational Confusion

What are the logical consequences of the South Carolina plan? The present public schools will have to be conveyed to the private agencies, otherwise the state is still legally involved. This step alone could lead to untold confusion, but assuming it is taken, then what? All school taxes are abolished, of course, and their equivalent must be raised from private citizens in some way or other in order to finance the system of private schools. The result is obvious: well-to-do communities or classes of people get fairly good schools, while most of the Negro and poor white people have the barest minimum of opportunity for education. Next there will be a great cry for state aid. Many white people will say: "This is a sorry mess. Either give us a subsidy or have a mixed public system and be done with it."

Then the state faces a real dilemma. It wants to see its children get an education, but the moment it gives a subsidy to a private agency, the Supreme Court decision enters the picture again. And so the state may find that after several years of confusion and educational injustice to the majority of its children, it is right back where it was on the day of the Supreme Court decision. If any state wishes to try this plan, it should at least do so with its eyes open.

Now I come to the Negro's role in this coming integration process in the public schools. What is his stake, his attitude, his obligation? I venture the opinion that the masses of Negroes in the South have some anxieties of their own in this situation. They resent the existence of compulsory segregation, and they will be thankful to see it go, but they realize well enough that this does not mean the millennium. For a long time they have been conditioned by the fact that the South is really two societies, one white and one Negro. They have built up certain patterns of compulsion and defense, and they have found a measure of emotional security behind the curtain of color.

Many of the younger generation have never had the experience of continuous contact and competition with white people. Now when they enter the school situation with white children, will encounter some new problems. Along with new opportunities for self-expression and recognition in competition with white students, there will also be hurt feelings and self-consciousness because of social snobbery and personal frictions. No dobut many Negro parents forsee these problems and are already trying to anticipate the best ways of giving comfort and emotional security to their children when they encounter the new school situation.

Role of P-TA

In this connection I want to point out the part which parent-teacher associations can play. Parents and teachers are, in a real sense, the key to the problem of racial tensions in the schools. They, as well as the children, need to be indoctrinated with a spirit of fair play. In commmunities where racial coeducation is about to begin, the white and Negro P-TA's should meet together and discover that they really have some common problems. If parents and teachers are fair but firm in their insistence on good conduct and good manners in the classroom and on the playground, they can make a great contribution to the peace and welfare of school and community.

There is another kind of dilemma which will confront the Negro school teacher and administrator; namely, the prospect of having to sacrifice a certain number of jobs during the process of integration. Now, I do not mean that integration, even if it were carried out completely, would automatically involve the abolition of a large number of races have become mutually acceptable as fellow-citizens, friends and neighbors. If this is true, then the coming process of integration imposes upon all of us some new personal and civic obligations. Since it is the Negro who has the greatest stake in the crisis of integration, his leadership is crucial, and that leadership will come primarly from the ranks of those who have had the benefit of college and professional training.

Indeed, I would say that those who have argued for integrated schools on the ground that they would save a lot of money have a very weak cas The argument should be rested on moral grounds where belongs. Actually most of the schools are crowded a teachers are overloaded, and therefore the total numb of jobs eliminated should be relatively small. The Negro teacher and administrator have built up strong vested interests in the way of jobs, status, and prestige in the separate school system, and it is natural that they approach integration with some anxiety. There will be some loss, some of it just and some of it unjust. At any rate, we have here a problem which must be met with wise leadership and constant pressures in behalf of fair play in school race relations

A new Negro leadership is already emerging in the South, but it needs to be strengthened and expanded. In the process of de-segregation there are four important functions which the Negro leader must serve. First, he must be able to interpret the needs and aspirations of the Negro community to the white community in such a way that the majority group sees the total situation and is willing to cooperate for the advancement of the whole community. Second, he must be willing to stand up for justice and equal rights for all, even when this means sacrificing some of his popularity. Third, he should contribute his tact and good judgment in alleviating the interracial tension situations that will inevitably arise from time to time. Fourth, he should be active in voluntary, civic associations such as the P-TA, civic clubs, forums, and committees which will, as time goes on, take on more and more of an interracial character; and he should certainly not hesitate to offer himself as a candidate for election to his local school board, city council, or other public offices. Someone will lead, someone will represent, someone will help make decisions, and it is important that those someones be the best that the race can offer rather than the common variety of that self-centered species, Americanus politicus.

Negro Physicians

From personal observation and from discussion with members of your own profession and with others, I have concluded that the Negro medical profession as a whole, like its white counterpart, does not take quite as active a part in civic affairs as do the teachers, professors, college presidents, preachers, and lawyers. I do not mean to be over critical, and I hasten to say that I realize that there are those in this room and elsewhere who are notable exceptions to the general rule.

If I am right about the relatively low batting average of the medical profession in civic affairs, I think I understand why this is so. The practice of medicine is a demanding, wearying task. You know what it is to go without sleep or recreation or relaxation with your families. You have been called out of church or movie or bridge party time and again because old man Jones had a sudden heart attack, or John Smith got smashed up in an automobile wreck, or Mrs. Brown's baby just wouldn't wait until a more convenient time to be born. Some of you have struggled to make a decent living with a clientele which one friend of mine described as "slow pay, po' pay, or no pay," and you have had to develop certain business sidelines to supplement your income. I certainly cannot blame any physician for thinking that the practice of medicine is itself a charitable enterprise and a sufficient contribution to human welfare.

Yes, there are many extenuating circumstances, but, after all, history does not ask, "Why didn't you? but merely "Did you?" And so I suggest that all of us should ask ourselves a few questions: Am I ready to meet the challenge of the new trend toward integration in the schools and in other aspects of southern society? Am I ready to shake off the psychological effects of having lived for a long time in the ghetto of secregation? Am I keeping abreast of the times by wide reading and by personal contacts outside of my profession? Am I doing my full duty toward my community by participating in those activities which are crucial for the proper integration of the interests of Negro and white?

How then shall we meet the problems in the impending transition from segregation to integration? The eyes of the world are upon us, and what we do here in the South will have its weight in the struggle of the free world against the menace of totalitarianism. God grant that we shall act in a spirit of justice and cooperation and that we may establish a new charter of race relations which will make the next fifty years the brightest in the history of the South. We, the people of the South, Negro and white, have known one another since the foundation of this nation. We have great spiritual resources, great capacities for friendship if we will only use them. When we are at our best, we are hard to beat. Surely this is a time when we need very much to be at our best.

Writer Says Negro Teachers Will Lose Jobs in Integrated Schools

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — Writing in Sunday's Herald Tribune from Columbia, S. C., W. D. Workman, Jr., declared:

"If the southern states were to follow the example set by the non-segregated states of the North, East and West, then thousands of Negro school teachers are likely to lose their jobs. Only in the Southern and border states do Negroes hold teaching jobs in anything approaching a fair proportion to their numbers.'

Workman bases his findings on the study of individual census reports from every state and the District of Columbia. The study embraced such considerations as the percentage of Negro population to a total population, along with a more detailed scrutiny of the ratio of white and Negro employment listed under "'Educational Services, Government.'

Using statistical analyses to back his argument—giving overall figures the writer said "of 133,000 Negro teachers in the United States, only 20,000 are employed in the North, East and West. The remaining 113,000 are employed in the 17 states and the District of Columbia, where segregation is required."

Last fall in the District of Columbia, there was a shortage of white students with some white teachers having no classes and a shortage of colored teachers with many colored classes without teachers until last minute shifts, took salaries surplus allocated to white teachers to hire colored teachers.

In direct contrast to this writers opinion, experts who have surveyed the entire situation in the District say no one will lose their jobs if the schools are integrated and they hold that same opinion covers the entire educational system. There is a shortage of teachers on a national basis and a growing fear that this shortage will increase.

The argument advanced by Workman has been the scarecrow flaunted in front of Negro school teachers but only in a few instances has the scare been successful. One white southerner went so far as to say he was glad to see new and costly modern schools going up for Negroes because "sometime in the very near future, it looks like our kids will have to attend them, too.'

If School Segregation Is Wiped Out

'No Need for Fear,' Says Dr. Mays

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Deep South is "unnecessarily excited" over the looming United States Supreme Court decision on public school segregation, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College and internationally known [illegible] declared last week.

In an address to the Butler Street YMCA Hungry Club, the noted Courier columnist pointed out his belief that the issue is being confused.

"The main issue before us," Dr. Mays pointed out, "is this: Can the United States Supreme Court, representing the greatest democracy on earth, a nation that has assumed the economic and moral leadership of the world, announce to the world in 1954 that it believes in segregation based on color and race?

"Can the United States afford to say to a billion colored people in Asia, millions of colored peoples in Africa, the Middle East, South America and the European democracies that we believe in second-class citizenship for fifteen million people solely because their race is Negro and their complexion colored."

Declaring that the issue is neither political nor racial before the court, but rather "a moral issue," Dr. Mays pointed out that the highest tribunal's decision will affect United States leadership in the world.

THE SPEAKER pointed out "four reasons" why he believes there is "undue" excitement in the South. He said "whether we like it or not the process of desegregation will be much slower than we think and it will be easier than we think."

Dr. Mays said the Court decision will apply only to the five cases before it, that Negro parents will move very cautiously in many parts of the South, that Negroes will have a tendency to relax once a favorable decision is given and the problem of residential segregation will tend to maintain other areas of segregation. He pointed to specific examples in his contention that the process of desegregation will be slow.

Declaring that "There is nothing to fear," Dr. Mays said desegregation will be easier "than we think" because "it has been in process fifteen years or more and no calamity has fallen upon the South."

THE SPEAKER pointed out that the South had accepted the Supreme Court outlawing of the white primary and that Negroes are enrolled in every state university of the South except in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi.

"The Supreme Court has ruled that residential segregation cannot be enforced by law," Dr. Mays asserted. "There has been no race riots as a result of it. Segregation in the armed services is almost a thing of the past and nobody is disturbed. The prophets of doom who predicted catastrophe if these changes were made, were wrong, and I predict that the current prophets of doom will be equally wrong. And we must never forget that there are thirty-one states in this great nation of ours that have no segregation based on law."

"... A few years from now we will see that we were excited about nothing in the public school cases just as we were excited about nothing when we were afraid to educate women and let them vote. Our greatest fears are fears of things that never happen."

In conclusion, Dr. Mays said:

"It will be much easier for America and the South to adjust to a non-segregated economy than it will be for us to explain to the world why we draw distinctions based on race and color. In our efforts to justify legal segregation based on race and color let us beware lest we find ourselves fighting against a high moral law, against the democracy which we fought two world wars to maintain and against the Christian religion which we claim to believe in. If legal segregation is wrong, we need have no fear of its abolition."

As the result of Dr. May's speech, a citizens committee was appointed to work on a statement to represent the Negro point of view on the pending decisions, to clarify the issues and seek ways of implementing whatever decision the Supreme Court hands down.

Segregation in Schools

TO the N. Y. Herald Tribune:

The story in the Herald Tribune by W. D. Workman from Columbia, S. C., detailing the danger to the employment of Negro teachers embodied in a possible decision by the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in the public schools, ignores several important factors.

First, the vast majority of the Negro school teachers in the South now function in elementary schools that are in fact Negro schools because of more or less rigid residential segregation patterns. The assumption that these teachers would be dismissed and their places awarded to whites is not only grossly unjust but very far-fetched. It is common knowledge that the over-all shortage of school teachers runs into the scores of thousands and is growing annually. From what source would come replacements for the 113,000 Negro teachers who Mr. Workman assumes would disappear?

Second, the comparison between the number of Negro teachers employed in the South with the number employed elsewhere in the country is invalid because it ignores the occupations, in addition to teaching, that are open to Negroes in areas outside the South. Mr. Workman picks New York for comparison with South Carolina, pointing out that only about 3,000 Negroes are employed in schools in this state compared to 8,800 or so employed in South Carolina, despite the fact that South Carolina has some 90,000 fewer Negroes in its population than has New York. But thousands of jobs paying as well or better than school teaching are open to Negroes in New York and other Northern and Western states.

The outlawing of segregation in the public schools will not threaten the jobs of 113,000 Negro teachers now employed in the South. Best proof of the belief that it will not do so is furnished by the teachers themselves who, through their national organization, contributed $5,000 toward the expenses of carrying the argument against segregation to the United States Supreme Court.

Admittedly the feeling runs deep in some areas on this question; but Mr. Workman and others would be astonished—if they took the trouble to investigate—how many white Southerners (with the exception of political figures) are but awaiting an authoritative pronouncement by the highest court to put into practice what they realize is not only inevitable, but best for the children and for the nation as a whole.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Will School Integration Cause Negro Teachers To Lose Jobs?

To the Editor:

In the Sept. 7 issue of The Birmingham News appears an article by David Lawrence titled "Negro Teachers—What Will Happen to them When Schools Are Integrated?" I should like to take issue with him on a few viewpoints.

Mr. Lawrence asked if white parents in the North are prepared to accept an influx of Negro teachers to take over many classrooms hitherto occupied by white teachers. Judging from the way this question is structured it appears that Mr. Lawrence has assumed that there will be an influx of Negro teachers into Northern schools—thereby displacing teachers presently employed there. I think the spirit and purpose of the question are clearly prepossessed. If one should examine the implications of Mr. Lawrence's article in the light of some data which were not presented his arguments become rather illogical.

On the national scene it is estimated that the total enrollment of public elementary and secondary schools for the current year will be over 27,500,000. These pupils will have to be taught—integration or no integration—if America is to exemplify and follow its democratic principles and requirements for an educated citizenry. In 1953 there were about 981,000 classroom teachers employed. With the services of the public school being extended to accommodate approximately 3,165,900 adults in adult education programs, and about 100,000 veterans in addition to the regular school enrollment, there is a significant demand for more teachers. Nationally, school officials are unable to fill all their vacancies; an estimated need for approximately 200,000 qualified teachers has existed for some time. And yet there has been no influx of teachers of any race into the profession in places where nonsegregation is considered to be—or where there is an expressed policy of segregation for that matter.

Teaching Is Favored Job Among Southern Negroes

I DO NOT SEE the need for fear among Northern teachers that they will be displaced from their positions as a result of this hypothetical mass influx of exsciended Negro teachers from integrated Southern schools. First of all, a mass influx would have to result from mass dismissal, and mass dismissal would have to result from a defined plan of integration—and a defined plan of integration is not universally apparent in the South today. No mass influx is currently imminent. Second, suppose there are dismissals. I cannot conceive of their following the same pattern in the several states to cause an influx, but if an influx were to occur, the need for teachers is so great that it would be absorbed. In the third place, integration in the South will not alter the fact of the number of children of school age to be taught. The dictates of the principles of program consolidation, practical organization, academic standards, accreditation standards, learning requirements, instructional procedure, and the expediency of common sense indicate that American edcation can ill afford to lose any of its teachers, now, or in the near future. A fourth consideration is that state unemployment agencies and state retirement programs would either face bankruptcy or dissolution in the face of such mass dismissals. I do not think these agencies woud encourage actions which would lead to this or similar fate.

Mr. Lawrence points up a sectional difference in the ratio of Negro and white teachers to the effect that there are proportionately fewer Negro teachers in the North than in the South; the author presents this difference as evidence of discrimination against Negro teachers in Northern schools. It is correct that there are proportionaely fewer Negro teachers in the North than in the South, but this does not prove or disprove discrimination in teaching. Teaching is an occupational pursuit and in the South it represents one of the few public supported jobs of respectability that Negroes can acquire. In the North the Negro has a greater choice of jobs in which he can engage; he may work in industry, in public or civil service, in government, in politics, and in other jobs which will pay as much or more than he would receive for teaching; consequently, fewer Negroes in the North go into teaching. I dare say there are many Negro teachers in the South who would qualify and choose to work in industry, politics, civil service, or some other pursuit if they had the opportunity.

Negro And White Teachers Meet Same Qualifications

PEOPLE WOULD have us believe the Negro teacher will be discharged because he is less well trained than white teachers, need to be reminded that Negro and white teachers qualify in the same way, and have to satisfy the same certification requirements in their respective states. Some who argue the point of the Negro losing his job say there will be some consolidation of schools, and consolidation usually entails some teacher unemployment. To this we agree. Consolidation of schools may cause elimination of positions—but it has never been known to eliminate a professional group. Communities have been consolidating schools for years, but at no time have the encountered personnel problems constituted valid argument against the necessities and advantages of consolidation.

If two families live in the same house, neither family can tolerate the other to be a victim of fire or pestilence without both being effected. So it is with the races of men. They must learn to live together or suffer the inevitable consequences. Through our daily endeavors as well as our occupational pursuits we can all contribute to the achievement of harmonious living together—or we unwittingly bring about our own insecurity.

One of the greatest enemies of social as well as economic well being is ignorance. It controls so many of our acts, so much of our thinking. One of the most effective institutions in combating ignorance is the school. America needs good schools and strong teachers for her well being; and one of the reasons educational integration is expedient in America is because disciples of democracy come from institutions set up on democratic principles.

Schools in South Bow To Decision

Negro and White Students Enroll In Same Classes

By the NNPA News Service

Throughout the South last week racial segregation in the schools was in the news.

Three Catholic schools in northern Virginia—St. Thomas More and St. Charles in Arlington, and the new St. Michael's in Annandale—were opened to colored students for the first time this year.

Catholic schools in Maryland and the District of Columbia have been enrolling colored students for some time. (The Supreme Court decision only applies to public schools.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The public schools of the District of Columbia opened Monday on a partially de-segregated basis.

In the schools which were racially mixed for the first time the opening went off as smoothly as if there had been no change in the public school system.

The Police department, which sent an officer to every school building, reported no incident anywhere. A similar report was made by Dr. Hobard M. Corning, superintendent of schools, to C. Melvin Sharpe, president of the Board of Education.

Mr. Sharpe said he was "very glad to hear it . . . It shows that the people realize this is the law of the land and must be observed."

At the formerly all-colored Francis junior high school, a police sergeant reported that six white students stood outside the building, hesitating to go in. The sergeant told them everything would be all right. They went inside and enrolled with hundreds of colored boys and girls.

At the formerly all-white Eastern Junior-Senior high school, 504 seventh and eighth grade colored students arrived with no prior room assignment. They were sent to the auditorium until they could be assigned with about 100 white students to their respective rooms.

At Petworth school, where so many colored pupils enrolled that the ratio will probably be five to one in most classes, colored and white children played together at morning recess as if they had been doing so all along.

The Washington school board has adopted a two-year de-segregation plan with complete integration to be effected by September, 1955.

This September, the students from 22 overcrowded Negro schools are being integrated with pupils in 18 white schools in which there were unused classrooms.

Fort Myer, Va., opened its first post school Tuesday—a brand-new brick building—and admitted colored children under a Defense Department directive for integration of all schools on military reservations.

Their presence was taken matter-of-factly. The principal of the new school, Theodore Craig, was much more concerned about the dozens of mixed-up mothers and children trying to find the right classrooms.

Mr. Craig, a native Virginian who came to Fort Myer from Covington, Va., anticipated no difficulties over integration.

"If I didn't think it was going to work, I would never have taken this job," he said.

From Montgomery, Ala., it was reported that a scheduled conference of school authorities and colored parents whose children had tried to enroll in a white school was abruptly called off by the school superintendent when a newspaper reporter showed up.

City-county superintendent C. M. Dannelly said he did not want the meeting publicized or given any undue importance.

The purpose of the conference, called by Mrs. Irene Davis, principal of Abraham's Vineyard School for colored children, was not disclosed.

The superintendent of a white rural school near Dallas, Texas, rejected moves by a group of colored parents to enroll their children. Superintendent Mark Hitt said he would follow instructions from the Texas Board of Education to continue segregation this year.

Seventeen colored students enrolled in the Dover high school Wednesday, it being the only school outside of the Wilmington metropolitan area to admit colored students at the opening of the new school year in Delaware.

Dover school officials reported that everything worked smoothly as the eight colored girls and nine boys joined with the white students in following their class assignments.

From Columbia, Mo., a long-standing eligibility rule that might have prevented colored students from participating in athletics at desegregated schools this year has been lifted. The rule barred transfer students from participating in athletics for one year.

In Little Rock, Wiley A. Braxton, a colored leader, urged immediate reorganization of the rural school system to end segregation. He said the segregation issue had boiled down to "how shall integration be put into effect?"

But the Pulaski County Special School District, before which Mr. Braxton appeared, has been advised by its legal counsel that it was under no obligation to end segregation at present.

About 1,000 delegates to the North Alabama Methodist Conference, meeting in Birmingham, adopted a resolution supporting

Mix Classes In 5 Dixie States As Schools Open

National mix classes in 21 Gray

The first school year after the May 17 Supreme Court ruling against segregation in public schools started last week in many states and, as expected, some cities complied with the edict while others gave notice that no action would be taken until further notice from the high court.

At the outset, five states along the borderlines of the South and the District of Columbia agreed to obey the court's decision without waiting further instructions on how and when integration of Negro and white children must take place.

But the other 12 Southern states affected by the Supreme Court's ruling have served notice that no Negro child will mount their white marble stairs without bloodshed. There have been threats of funerals for Negroes who will try to go to Mississippi schools and orders issued to call out the state militia in South Carolina, North Carolina and Georgia.

All public chool segregation, however, is not in the deep South. There have been some changes and, state by state, the changes are:

Mississippi

Integration of Negro and white children in Mississippi public schools is bitterly opposed and last week the Mississsippi House of Representatives voted 109 to 24 to give first reading passage to a resolution authorizing the legislature to abolish all public schools in the state or to empower counties, municipalities, and school districts to abolish public schools on a local basis.

If passed by both houses the meaure will be submitted to the voters at a state-wide referendum Dec. 21.

Said Rep. John Southward of Tishomingo county: "The first time that a Negro goes to a white school up there, that's the time we'll have a funeral."

Louisiana

In Baton Rouge last week officials flatly refused to admit 30 Negro children to the all-white Gilmer Wright school located a block from Negro homes. School authorities told the children that "registration hours are over" as they sought to enroll.

"It is not significant enough," said Sen. W. M. Rainach, "that white control has receded all over the world? Its high time we white people in Louisiana and in the nation reassert the leadership for which we are famed."

Alabama

Alabama is awaiting further instructions from the Supreme Court before taking any action on integrating its schools, but even at this stage state officials have already vowed to keep Negroes out of white schools "at all cost." In Montgomery, Ala. 23 Negro children were recently turned back from entering a white school.

Florida

It had been indicated that Dade County (Miami, Fla.) would lead the way in Florida in public school segregation but a statewide survey on the problem revealed that the attitude of Dade's 650,000 citizens varied only slightly from the state as a whole. The report declared that efforts to push the issue might lead to violence. So here is another state waiting for further Supreme Court action.

West Virginia

School districts with small Negro populations in West Virginia are launching integration plans this fall but districts with large Negro populations are waiting.

In Arlington last week Negro and white children turned up in the same classrooms at two military posts and three Catholic parochial schools in the North Virginia environs of Washington.

District of Columbia

School opened in Washington Sept. 13 and the District of Columbia integrated its kindergartens. This fall some 2,900 Negroes will be moved out of overcrowded Jim Crow schools into white schools. By September, 1955, integration will be complete.

Maryland

Maryland is one of the five states with plans to integrate its public schools but rural counties —in contrast to Baltimore— have done nohing yet to end segregation.

Negro and white children went to public schools in Baltimore for the first time last week, thus scratching Baltimore as having the country's largest segregated school system.

Kansas

Nine cities in Kansas have laws making segregation optional but the state, on the whole, is ready to comply with the Supreme Court decision. Such cities as Topeka plan to integrate their schools within the next two years.

Tennessee

School opened here last week and Negro students were still attending the same prejudiced schools as last year. Taking the "wait and see" attitude, the state is prepared to suggest to the Supreme Court in mid-October that school children be integrated gradually by grades, starting with the first grade and moving up as the years pass.

Missouri

Another of the so-called progressive states, Missouri has left the issue of desegregation up to the various local authorities. A few have acted, with St. Louis brashly leading the way by ending segregation in its two city-owned teachers colleges and schools for the handicapped. High school segregation will end in January, 1955 and elementary school segregation next fall.

Oklahoma

Roman Catholic parochial schools began mixing 1,000 Negro pupils this week but public schools have taken no action.

Texas

Texas plans not only to wait and see as some other states are doing, but also is plotting ways and means by which it can circumvent the Supreme Court decision. But last week, on the university level, Texas university cancelled a notice which it had sent to Marion George Ford, jr., of Houston, accepting him as an undergraduate for the coming year.

The only Negroes attending the university now are those taking studies not offered at the state's schools for Negroes.

Arkansas

As an economy move, Fayetteville, Ark. was scheduled to integrate 12 Negro high school students. But other schools throughout the state, although they said they will comply with the court edic, have not acted and are not compelled to act this semester.

The 12 Negro students being integrated this semester have been boarding 50 miles from Fayetteville at Fort Smith, site of the nearest Negro high school. Picking up their tabs, the state figured it cheaper to integrate them in a local school.

Desegregation Plan Cited

A gradual transition from segregated to desegregated schools (beginning with the first grade? has been recommended to Chiefers the I.Q. and achievement testJustice Earl Warren of the U. S. Supreme Court by a novelist living in Chapel Hill.

Louis DeJean said his "unsolicited counsel as to a rational approach to desegregation was based on a background which includes "14 years of applied psychology" at Williams Institute in Berkeley, Calif.

DeJean wrote Chief Justice Warren, in part:

"Already there has been alarming evidence of the explosive elements inherent in the enforced association of the teen-age levels, 7th to 12th grades. A gradual transition may prove to be the only practical procedure. Why not give school boards in the segregated districts the option of changing over one year at a time, beginning with the first grade? (Perhaps the I.Q. and achievement tests would be in closer!)

"After six years of classroom and playground comingling, today's first year pupils of both races, and their parents, will have faced the social and other adjustments as they arise, and will have learned how best to meet them. Such an evolutionary progression will surely be more palatable, and safer than an abrupt conversion by a Federal mandate which is obviously odious to the majority of parents in our Southern States."

DeJean said he sold Williams Institute, a demonstration school in 1948. He wrote a book, "Junior Citizen," about the demonstration and the "group adjustment" techniques. For the past two years, he has been living in Chapel Hill.

Segregation Under Another Name

(From The New York Herald Tribune)

Mississippi, like Georgia and South Carolina, has adopted an amendment to its state constitution which would authorize legislative abolition of the public school system. It is not so much that Mississippi is prepared to get along without education, but rather that a way is being sought to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation.

What is proposed is that the Legislature could at any time end all the traditional provisions for public education and then in the next breath allow the sale or lease of the schools to private operators. That way, it is reasoned, everything could remain about as is on the separation of children by color. The state, having at least theoretically divorced itself from the function of education, would consider that the Supreme Court's edicts had no applicability.

Of course this is purely an exercise in evasion. It also puts a rather low value on education. Presumably the sponsors are indifferent to any standards of teaching or even whether school attendance should be required at all, because the scheme calls for the state getting completely out of the educational picture. But such nonsense, if it should ever be attempted, will hardly deceive the Supreme Court for this is a crude attempt to bypass the spirit of the law.

As a lot of people in Mississippi realize, judging from the substantial size of the opposition vote to the amendment, the "private" school notion is strictly a trick. Segregation practiced under any other name is still just as unconstitutional.

in only eighteen counties (of a total of eighty-two) where the preponderance of Negroes, two-thirds of the qualified voters, creates an acute social and economic problem. In this area the amendment carried 10 to 1, but the large majority of those who went to the polls was white.

"Elsewhere in the state the vote was close, and 'nobody seemed excited.' In Washington County, where Carter's newspaper opposed the amendment, the vote was only 2 to 1 in favor. And though a bond issue proposal to modernize the port of Greenville was up for decision, and a 60 per cent affirmation was required for its adoption, the city vote was light and the proposal barely

Forced integration next, Reddick sav

ATLANTA—Dr. L. D. Reddick, librarian and historian of Atlanta University, last Thursday, gave the historical background of the Supreme Court decision of May 17 and then outlined the next most likely steps in the process of desegregating American society.

Dr. Reddick was speaking at Morris Brown College under the auspieces of the combined history departments of all of the schools that make up the Atlanta University Center.

The speaker listed six definite steps that have already occurred in the history of the de-segregation issue.

The first step came with the Dred Scott decision in 1857. The Supreme Court held at that time that colored people even when not slaves, were not citizens and it took the Civil War to reverse this decision.

THE SECOND STEP came with the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments that abolished slavery and granted full citizenship.

The third step came in 1875 when Congress enacted the Civil Rights Act that prohited racial discrimination by hotels, theaters public carriers, etc. This gave civic equality. Congress made the mistake of not submitting this law as an amendment to the Constitution.

The fourth step came in 1883 when the Supreme Court declared the Civil Rights Act of 1875 unconstitutional. This was a disheartening reversal for colored people and for all others who also believed in full democracy for all citizens.

THE FIFTH STEP came in 1896, when the "separate but equal doctrine" was handed down by the Supreme Court.

The sixth step came on May 17, 1954 with the unanimous decision of the court outlawing public school segregation.

The speaker concluded by pointing out that in the next phase to come, the Supreme Court and the Federal Government must take a positive stand enforcing desegregation, unless they are willing to have domestic chaos and a serious decline in the international reputation of the United States.

Newspapers Take Unfavorable Stand On Private School Plan

NEW YORK — (NNPA) — Editorial comment in the two leading New York newspapers on the vote in Mississippi on a proposed amendment to the state constitution which would authorize legislative abolition of the public school system was highly favorable.

The New York Times Friday, under the heading "Mississippi Votes in Part," said:

"Mississippi this week joined Georgia, South Carolina and Louisiana in an effort to evade the Supreme Court decision against segregation in the schools. Under an amendment to the State Constitution Mississippi would authorize the Legislature to abolish public schools and pay tuition for students attending private schools.

FEW NEGROES

"The amendment which would make this possible was carried by a vote of 89,434 to 38,341. Mississippi has a population of over three million, of whom about 450 are registered as voters. Few Negroes, it is reported, voted. This is not democracy though the vote may reflect a dominant opinion within the white race."

The New York Herald Tribune, in an editorial headed "Segregation Under Another Name," Friday called the proposed amendment "an exercise in evasion." It added:

"It also puts a rather low value on education. Presumably the sponsors are indifferent to any standards of teaching or even whether school attendance should be required at all, because the scheme calls for the state getting completely out of the educational picture.

"But such nonsense, if it should ever be attempted, will hardly deceive the Supreme Court for this is a crude attempt to bypass the spirit of the law.

As a lot of people in Mississippi realize, judging from the substantial size of the opposition vote to the amendment, the 'private' school notion is strictly a trick. Segregation practiced under any other name is still just as unconstitutional."

Arthur Krock, New York Times' columnist, Friday, noted that the stay-at-homes amounted to many more than half of those qualified to vote, and the turnout of Negro citizens was light."

To get an answer to the question of "Why?" Krock telephoned Hodding Carter, editor of The Delta Democrat-Times ,published at Greenville, Mississippi.

One of the answers given by Carter, Krock said, was "an organized attempt was made to evoke a pitch of high emotion, and it succeeded

Segregation Is Issue In Southern States

Inquirer and 11-3-54
Philadelphia Pa.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—A wide range of special issues—from school segregation to Social Security—faced voters today in 37 States.

In addition to selecting Senators, Representatives and State officers, the voters decided the fate of 232 constitutional amendments, initiative and referendum proposals. Many involved complex bond issues, tax questions and proposed changes in legislative procedures. P. 16

Georgia and Louisiana voters tackled perhaps the most widely watched proposals, designed to avoid mingling of white and Negro children in grade and high schools.

HEARING SCHEDULED

These propositions stemmed from a ruling by the Supreme Court last May in which it was held that public school segregation is unconstitutional. The court has delayed issuing an order until after hearing the views of interested States on how the ruling should be carried out. The hearing has been set for next month.

The Georgia ballot presented a proposed constitutional amendment, authorizing the State government to advance public funds to private individuals for educational purposes. If approved as expected, this would permit State action to eliminate the Georgia public school system and its replacement by state-supported private schools.

STATE POLICE POWER

South Carolina took a similar step two years ago by voting to eliminate a State constitutional clause requiring free public schools.

Louisiana voters were expected to approve a proposed constitutional amendment invoking the "state police power" to continue segregated elementary and secondary schools "to promote and protect public health, better education and the peace and good order in the State, and not because of race."

In a showdown, this might pit the 10th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, which grants police powers to the States, against the 14th Amendment, which guarantees equal rights for all citizens. The Supreme Court based its segregation ruling on the 14th amendment.

MISSISSIPPI VOTE

A third State in the deep South—Mississippi—voted on a proposal to require that potential voters be able to read and understand the Constitution. Legislative debate produced the acknowledgement that this is designed to reduce the number of Negro voters.

Both Louisiana and Michigan decided whether to pay special bonuses to Korean war veterans and their dependents.

Michigan also voted on a hotly debated proposal to legalize bingo, under state control, for nonprofit charitable organizations. New Jersey adopted a similar proposal two years ago.

In California, one of 20 proposals would increase maximum old age pensions from $80 to $100 monthly.

UNION SHOP CONTRACTS

One Nevada proposal called for repealing a law that bans union shop labor union contracts.

Montana voted on a constitutional amendment that would permit the Legislature to establish a Presidential primary.

In South Carolina, one proposition would strike a constitutional clause requiring office holders to foreswear duelling.

And in Illinois, the voters determined whether the State should sell the historic Illinois and Michigan Canal, which has been termed economically valueless.

Race Mixing In History

ARE THERE historical precedents to inform us of what is likely to happen in the South as a result of the court ruling against school segregation? Not precisely, but we find much to suggest various possibilities in the years to come.

Some of the fears aroused by the school segregation ruling are undoubtedly exaggerated. Some believe that there is great danger of racial intermarriage and amalgamation. Actually, there is less mixing of white and Negro blood going on today than there was 50 years ago, and no present indication of a change in this respect.

The general problem posed by the court's decision is sufficiently weighty, however, to warrant a look at other cases where different races have lived together in the same environment.

History shows that where such a state of affairs has existed, there have been several outcomes:

1. The strong race exterminates the weak one.

2. The two races amalgamate, forming a new race.

3. The two races co-exist, in the relationship of a master race and a subject race, often with a degree of admixture, but not amalgamation.

4. The two races exist side by side on a separate-but-equal basis, without any tyranny or domination. There are some notable examples of this in the world today.

In England

THE fate of the American Indian north of the Rio Grande furnishes an example of the extermination of the weak by the strong. While there are still Indians in parts of the United States, they have been wiped out or ousted from most of the land of their fathers.

Most historians hold that when the Anglo-Saxons conquered Britain they exterminated the Romanized Celts they found there, except for those able to hold out in fastnesses such as Wales or the Highlands of Scotland. This view is disputed by some, but is so widely held that it may be accepted as the prevailing opinion.

There have been numerous examples of successful amalgamation — two or more races blending together to form a new one. A highly important lesson of history here, however, is that cases of successful amalgamation have commonly taken place where the races involved were close kin to begin with. Amalgamation of widely different races has produced less satisfactory results.

Probably the outstanding example of successful amalgamation took place centuries ago in England, the land from which the United States has derived its language and much of its racial heritage and culture.

The Anglo-Saxon conquerors of England were followed by the Danes, who conquered the country, temporarily, and settled there in large numbers, particularly on the eastern side facing Scandinavia. Then came the Normans, who won and held the whole country.

Saxons, Danes and Normans spoke different languages and differed in many of their customs. But basically they were very closely related. They all belonged, not only to the white race, but to the same branch of the white race. In time the three breeds blended happily and harmoniously to create the Englishman—certainly not the least of God's chillun in his achievements.

In South America

AN EXAMPLE of widely different races mixing with less satisfactory results is to be found over a great part of Latin America. There the admixture has been Spanish, or Portuguese in Brazil, with Indian or with Negro; in some cases a three-way mixture.

The results to date can hardly be acclaimed a great success. Whether viewed from the standpoint of political stability, economic efficiency, or cultura achievement, the parts of the New Worlc south of the Rio Grande are certainly not, broadly speaking, in a class with the United States.

It is significant that the most stable and advanced areas in Latin America are those where there has been the least admixture—Uruguay, for example, where the percentage of population of European origin is considerably higher than in the United States.

Jews Remain Intact

UNDOUBTEDLY one of the earliest examples of two races living side by side, with at least a measure of segregation, is found in the sojourn of the Children of Israel in Egypt.

Joseph and his brethren were accorded a hospitable welcome. But the Hebrews increased to the point where the Egyptians regarded them as a menace. In the first chapter of Exodus we read:

"Now there arose up a new king [dynasty] over Egypt, which knew not Joseph . . . Therefore they set over them task masters to afflict them with their burdens."

There is evidence that the Hebrews were segregated in the earlier, friendly stage of race relations when the Egyptian monarch decreed "In the land of Goshen let them dwell." Goshen has been identified as a district of Egypt on the frontier of Palestine, with good pasturage, which suited the Israelite herdsmen.

But segregation was certainly not complete. For, when the Lord smote the first-born of Egypt in retribution for the Pharaoh's sins, the Hebrews were instructed to mark the door posts of their homes with blood from a sacrificial lamb, to identify and spare them. This institution of the first Passover indicates that the two races dwelt, at least in part, on a non-segregated basis.

Some scholars say that the Hebrews spent several hundred years in Egypt. But they retained their racial identity and emigrated en masse to the Promised Land.

Jewish 'Pale' In Russia

THE Jews have kept their distinctive identity to this day, even though they have merged into communities of which they are a part in all things except race and religion.

They have been subjected to persecution and discrimination in many lands. They were often compelled to live in a ghetto, a street or quarter of a city enclosed by walls and with gates locked at night. In Russia, Jews were in addition limited to certain parts of the country—in 1912 the Jewish "pale" in Russia, to which they were restricted, embraced 15 districts or "governments."

Jews were victims of pogroms or massacres in Russia in the early years of the present century under the czars. The war of extermination waged against them by Hitler's Germany far surpassed even czaristic barbarity.

Slaves Rule Masters

A NOTABLE example of different races living together for centuries without any great degree of amalgamation is supplied by the Balkan Peninsula.

In the 14th Century the Ottoman Turks, Mongolian in race and Moslem in religion, crossed from Asia into Europe and proceeded to conquer the Balkans. Their rule lasted roughly 500 years—until Turkey weakened and the conquered areas won independence, with outside help, in the 19th Century. The job of liberation was not completed until early in the present century. Turkey was left with a mere toehold in Europe, including Constantinople (Istanbul) and a strip along the Dardanelles.

The Balkan areas conquered by the Turks were peopled by Slavs, Greeks and Rumanians, all Christians. Turkish rule was not restricted to administrators—there was a considerable Turkish colonization.

Yet when Turkish control was broken, nations like Greece, Bulgaria, Serbia (later Yugoslavia) and Rumania emerged with race, religion and customs mostly intact. Turkish inhabitants were in some cases massacred in the wars of liberation, other Turks were expelled, some were allowed to remain.

The little nation of Albania is today dominantly Mohammedan in religion, and there are Moslem minorities in other Balkan lands. But the Turkish imprint was not nearly as marked as might have been expected after 500 years.

An interesting sidelight on Turkish rule in the Balkans is that during part of it the master race actually accepted a segment of a subject race into partnership—so much so that the subject breed in large measure ran the show for a while.

The Turks were a warrior breed rather than administrators. In the 18th Century they took into partnership the Phanariots, Greeks living in a segregated area of Constantinople. Phanariots held positions equivalent to Secretary of State and Secretary of the Navy. This was because the Turks realized the need of skillful diplomats and administrators.

The Phanariots failed to achieve "senior partnership" in the Turkish regime because, around 1820, the Greeks rose in revolt against Turkish rule, thereby discrediting the Turkish practice of relying on Greek brains.

Moors And Spaniards

ANOTHER example of two races living side by side on a master and subject basis is furnished by the Moors in Spain. That lasted even longer than Turkish rule in the Balkans—the Moors conquered Spain in 711 and were not finally expelled from their last foothold, Granada, until 1492.

The extent of admixture of Moor and Spaniard is difficult to blueprint—it was considerable, though one authority frankly states that it is hard to say how far Spanish character was affected. In any rate, the Moorish contribution was an infusion and not an amalgamation creating a new race.

Furthermore, the Moors like the Spaniards, were, and are today—in north Africa—of the Caucasian race. There has been much misunderstanding on this point, as indicated by the portrayal of the Moor in Shakespeare's Othello.

The Encyclodepia Britannica takes note of this popular error about the Moors and corrects it in very explicit language:

"A common mistake is to regard them as a black race, as indicated by the old English phrase, 'Black-a-Moor', black as a Moor. They are a white race, though often sunburnt and bronzed for generations, and both their children and those who have lived in cities might pass anywhere as Europeans."

Russians And Mongols

STILL another example of the master-and-subject relationship is found in that between Russians and Mongols. Russia was conquered in the 13th Century by the Mongol successors of Genghis Khan, and remained under Mongol domination several centuries.

Here we have two distinct races, Caucasian and Mongolian. However, though there was some admixture, it does not seem to have been extensive. The Mongols, or Tartars, were cattle-raising nomads who lived in open steppe country. They did not take to the forested areas that comprised most of the then settled part of Russia.

The Mongols were content to let the Russians remain under their own princes and pay tribute. If it was withheld, or the Mongols were in a bad humor, they might invade and devastate Russian territory, without settling down there.

The Mongol imprint on Russia is indicated by the saying, attributed to Napoleon, "Scratch a Russian and find a Tartar."

This imprint, however, seems to have been psychological rather than from an actual racial admixture. During the centuries of Mongol rule, Russia turned her back on Europe and faced east, toward Asia whence the masters sent their orders and whither Russian missions went to bear tribute and abase themselves before their conquerors.

Greek Slaves, Russian Serfs

BECAUSE of African slavery in the New World, we are likely to think of slavery generally as a matter of one race enslaving another. This has been by no means a universal practice.

In ancient times, Greeks enslaved Greeks. When a great Athenian expedition met miserable failure against the Greek city of Syracuse in Sicily, Athenian prisoners of war were sold into slavery.

Serfdom was customary in Europe in the Middle Ages and was not entirely abolished until less than 100 years ago. Prussia did not end serfdom until 1807, after a humiliating defeat by Napoleon had revealed her weakness.

Russia abolished serfdom by an emancipation act promulgated in 1861. Although the Russian serfs received allotments of land, their economic condition was little improved by freedom—in fact, we read that on the heels of emancipation "in many districts there were signs of positive impoverishment and demoralization."

India's Segregation

VOLUMES have been written about India's caste system. This is especially marked in the distinction between the upper castes and the lowest one, the "Untouchables." The former are descendants of Aryan conquerors, the latter of darker-skinned peoples who preceded the Aryans in the land. The regime of Premier Nehru has legislated against untouchability" but public sentiment and long-established usage obstruct emancipation (or if you will, desegregation).

Something of a parallel to the race problem in the American South is to be found in the Union of South Africa, where the white race is dominant and segregation is practiced. But the comparison is by no means fully in order. For one thing, the whites in the Union of South Africa are intruders, and are outnumbered 4 to 1, while the Negro was brought to America against his will, and is definitely a minority, even in the South except for certain areas and counties.

Negroes Enslave Negroes

IT IS noteworthy that in the African Republic of Liberia, established as a haven for freed American slaves, the descendants of these slaves today constitute a ruling aristocracy. Although only a small fraction of the total population, it is they and not the native tribes that run the country.

Liberia even seems to have presented the spectacle of the descendants of freed slaves practicing slavery. At any rate Lord Winster, a British correspondent of The Baltimore Sun, recently noted that in the late 1920s slaves from the Liberian jungles were caged and shipped out at so much per head to labor on the plantations of a Spanish colony.

In Brazil

BRAZIL was the last major nation to abolish slavery, in 1888. Brazil at that time was ruled by an emperor and it is interesting to note that discontent of big operators with abolition of slavery was an important factor in the overthrow of the empire and establishment of a republic!

The slave trade is still reported to be carried on under cover in Africa. Only a few months ago there were articles in English papers claiming that Negro slaves are still being smuggled across to the Red Sea into Arabia.

In Switzerland

WE NOW come to two happy present-day cases of co-existence on a separate but equal basis.

Switzerland has a population of German, French and Italian origins. All three languages are official "national languages." The Germans are in a large majority, but there is nothing in the nature of domination of one race by another. German is spoken by a majority of the people in 16 cantons, French in five, Italian in one. The Swiss, of different races, have gotten along famously for centuries.

ADVERTISER

Another case in point is Belgium, where part of the people are Flemish in race and language and part French-speaking Walloons. Although the Flemings somewhat outnumber the Walloons, French was the sole official language until after World War I. Then Flemish won recognition as a second "official language."

SUN. 12-26-54

The parallel between Switzerland and Belgium on the one hand, and Alabama, is, it must be conceded, fragile.

There is no legal segregation, of course, in Switzerland or Belgium—it just happens that different racial groups, in large measure, live in different areas.

They adhere to their own languages and customs from choice and not compulsion—on the contrary a Fleming would probably fight any attempt to "amalgamate" him with the Walloons, and the same is true of Swiss racial groups. There is, of course, no such thing as segregation in transportation, theaters, restaurants, etc.

The Conclusions

SUMMING UP, we find:

1. Two races can inhabit the same area for a greater length of time than has elapsed since Columbus discovered America, without amalgamating.

2. While this association has often been on a master-and-subject-race basis, there are examples of co-existence on a basis of unquestioned equality.

3. The South, in spite of parallels, has racial problems peculiarly its own, for which no mutually acceptable solution is yet in sight.

Responsibility Of Schools

By GEORGE S. BENSON

AMERICA is confronted today with a communist-socialist force which has as one of its primary tactical goals the undermining of young America's respect for our basic principles and institutions. For years, as this force has expanded its strength and effectiveness in nation after nation, I have been urging that American citizenship education be made a part of the educational program in every school and college in the nation, as the best defense against the communist-socialist plan to capture the minds of our youth.

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn. Nov. 10-54

During the preceding several weeks this column has discussed a number of splendid and encouraging developments in American citizenship education. Since the column series began, two top officials of one of the major textbook companies have visited with me and some of the faculty members of Harding College in Searcy, seeking suggestions for a series of school readers being prepared for grades four through eight. The readers will help to teach reading, and at the same time they will get across to the children some of the important facts about the great advantages of the American system and how the system works to provide these advantages.

IT IS heartening to see these present activities in a number of textbook companies. Teachers throughout the country long ago noted the absence of adequate textbook materials with which to teach the favorable facts about America and the responsibilities of American citizenship. They will welcome the new materials—if interested citizens will see to it that they are brought to the attention of the teachers and school board members.

This is positive education in Americanism—through textbooks featuring the positive advantages of citizenship under the American system. It is the kind of education we've desperately needed. A generation of youth armed with the true facts about our nation's freedom and its unmatched living standard will not be vulnerable to the subtle persuasions of the communist-socialist propagandists and their conscious or unwitting dupes.

FOR TEN YEARS the people of California have been conducting studies and investigations of various aspects of education in their state, including infiltration by the communist-socialist forces. A committee of the State Senate recently issued its eleventh report on education in California. The committee, composed of members of both political parties, published important warnings and recommendations which might well be brought to the attention of the public in all 48 states.

"In our schools and public governmental activities there must be positive and assertive Americanism and outspoken loyalty to American institutions of freedom," said the report of this California legislative committee. Neutrality is not enough. Communism never respects neutrality. Neutrality is all the communists seek or need on the part of American teachers and officials to enable them to take over this, the last stronghold of freedom.

WE HAVE a right to expect that our youth are being given a thorough understanding of our American institutions. These institutions peculiar to America have provided the highest standard of living ever attained in the world, and at the same time, the widest distribution thereof among the population. This has only been possible because of our political liberties which are the basis and protection of our economic freedom and progress. An undisputed objective of the Government of the State of California, in liberally supporting public education of our youth, is to produce loyal citizens, men and women who are informed on the history and achievement of America."

Another portion of the committee's recommendation said: "This committee recommends for a course of study in our California schools, the selection or preparation of a documented analysis of the comparative living standards available to citizens of our country in contrast with the living standards of countries in which totalitarian rulers hold sway. We should give a plain, understandable and emphatic testimony to our youth on the merits of American institutions, and it is the proper function of the instructors employed by the State to do that clearly and positively."

School segregation doomed, experts say

Afro American P.G. Baltimore Md

Sat. 10-30-54

NEW YORK—The people who know most about school integration in the United States took a look around, Tuesday, and after highly praising what already has been done, painted a bright picture of the work that lies ahead.

The appraisal came Tuesday night at Hunter College auditorium, where school segregation was the topic of discussion of the New York Herald Tribune's annual forum.

Thurgood Marshall, Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, Dr. Kenneth Clark, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, Dr. Herman Long, Harry S. Ashmore, Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett of Washington's Federated Civic Associations, George S. Mitchell, and several students, themselves, were among the many persons speaking on the subject.

— o O o —

MR. MARSHALL, who is probably more responsible for the Supreme Court decision of May 17 than any other living being, hailed the desegregation moves and plotted the course of future action in that field.

He told his audience that briefs will be filed by all lawyers in the school cases on Nov. 15 and that final arguments in the cases will be heard the week of Dec. 6.

"Sometime subsequent thereto," Mr. Marshall said, "the Supreme Court will issue its final judgment."

He then said that in the future, NAACP and other lawyers will continue to file such cases in other areas of public life until "every vestige of race and caste is removed from the laws and regulations of the several states of this union."

— o O o —

DR. KENNETH CLARK, New York City College psychologist, Mr. Marshall's colleague, praised the work done in other areas, but told New Yorkers not to ignore their own school system. He then cited concrete instances of racial segregation in New York public schools.

Dr. Butcher, board of education member and stormy petrel of the D.C. school situation, told why she did not go along entirely with the integration plan in Washington.

She said simply that the only way to integrate was to send a student to the nearest school and she pointed out that this was not done in Washington.

Mrs. Henry A. Bartlett, president of the Federation of Citizens Association in Washington, spoke against integration in the capital.

She complained that community groups had not been given ample time, that pressure groups had forced the issue, and said her federation must now seek legal redress from "compulsory aspects of the present desegregation policies."

— o O o —

DR. JOHNSON, whose subject was "How Soon Will Segregation End in Our Schools?" said "continued school segregation will tend to be, particularly for the elementary schools, more a function of racial segregation in residential areas than of law."

He added that integration of teachers will be accomplished more easily than of pupils.

— o O o —

MRS. PAULINE DYSON of the Claymont Elementary School in Claymont, Del., told of her experiences in integration. She said she was not worried about her job as a teacher because she knew that "a child is a child, regardless of race, creed or color."

Mrs. Ashmore, said to be one of the most widely recognized authorities on race relations, said:

"Integration is not proceeding in all areas without incident, but I don't think anybody expects to see the progress halted with the possible exception of the reincarnated bedsheet salesman who has hired himself out to stir up trouble in Delaware."

Mr. Long called for community self study as one aid to further progress in integration. Mr. Mitchell told of the work the church is doing and can do to help integration.

Ten pupils from four southern high schools participated in the forum. They came from Southern High in Baltimore, and Anacostia, Eastern and McKinley High in Washington. They asked not to be identified.

Texas, Oklahoma Ask High Court to 'Go Slow'

AUSTIN, Texas. — (INS) — Texas urged the U. S. Supreme court this week to move slowly on any program to abolish segregation in the public schools, or face "resentment, individual discrimination and violence" in the South.

Attorney General John Ben Shepperd, in a "friend of the court" brief, further called upon the high court to permit local school boards to carry out any de-segregation program because each has "individual and different problems."

"It would be impossible," Shepperd wrote, "to draft a decree that would apply equally to all school districts in Texas."

The attorney general, releasing the text of his brief to newsmen in Austin, contended that "great strides" have been made in Texas to guarantee every school child an adequate education regardless of race.

"It is the belief of the people of this state that discrimination against the individual can best be eliminated by segregation of the races in the educational system," the brief continued.

"It is the evil of discrimination and not segregation per se that is condemned by the United States Constitution.

"However, if the occasion arises whereby we are compelled to abolish segregation in Texas, it should be by a gradual adjustment in view of the complexities of the problem. Such complexities include the unwillingness of the Texas people immediately to abide by the decision . . ."

Shepperd asserted that "no individual can be forced against his will to accept, associate or cohabit with another not of his own choosing."

He contended that the 14th amendment prohibits only "state action" which is discriminatory. While the court held on May 17 that separate schools are discriminatory, he added, "still this court should consider that such a decision also affects the individual rights, mores and beliefs of the southern people."

Shepperd declared: "from the standpoint of principle, there is no real difference between compulsory segregation and compulsory integration. Compulsion can only arouse resentment, individual discrimination and . . . violence."

Texas is not a party to the segregation case before the high court. The state's brief was described as a "statement of facts" for the court to consider when and if it makes final its May 17 decision that segregation is unconstitutional.

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — Attorney General Mac A. Williamson of Oklahoma Saturday filed a brief in the five school segregation cases before the United States Supreme Court asking a time lag in putting into effect the court's decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

Mr. Williamson took advantage of the invitation extended by the Supreme Court to attorneys general of states affected by its decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools to file briefs as friends of the court and participate in the oral arguments, beginning December 6, on the questions of how and when the court shall put into effect its decision.

The question of how the decision will be carried out apparently did not interest the Oklahoma attorney general. He indicated that his state would comply with the decision, but said it needs time for the legislature to find new ways of financing the public school system.

Mr. Williamson disclosed that white public schools in Oklahoma are supported by a separate tax levy from that levied for support of the colored schools. The tax levy for the white schools, he said, is imposed on a school district-wide basis, while the colored schools are financed by a county-wide levy.

These levies, he added, are supplemented by state taxes and appropriations. All of which are presently geared to the dual school system.

The income and revenues from these sources, he said, are barely sufficient to provide appropriate and desirable educational facilities on a segregated basis for all children.

If the method of financing and allocating revenues for the education of white children must now be used for the education of colored children as well, he said, the entire fiscal program with respect to the "two-pronged" methods of raising and dividing tax monies must be revised by constitutional change and by the next legislature which meets next January 3.

At this time, he says, it would be impossible to "unscramble" the tax monies of Oklahoma's seventy-seven counties for this year.

Another factor to be considered, Mr. Williamson said, is that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being collected by the state for separate school purposes. If integration is ordered immediately, Mr. Williamson said, every dollar so collected would have to remain "locked up" and unavailable for any school purpose until constitutional and statutory remedies could be provided.

Oklahoma Law, he added, forbids the diverting of any tax monies away from the original purposes of the levy.

Mr. Williamson said the state legislative council of Oklahoma, composed of the entire membership of both houses of the Legislature, has been making a study of necessary changes in state school laws and will submit its recommendations when the Oklahoma legislature convenes in January.

The Oklahoma attorney general urged the court to consider the financial problems of his state in determining when and how it shall order its decision carried into effect.

Board crushes boycott

BALTIMORE — An abortive boycott of schools here was among the first communities in the nation to abandon the dual school system after the Supreme Court's May 17 decision.

When some 30-odd parents began to picket School No. 34 at Carey St. and Washington Blvd., last Thursday, the board scotched the move by demanding that all parents continue to send their children to school."

"All our schools are, of course, open and will remain open," the statement set forth, adding:

"The police department and the department of education give their full assurance parents need not have any concern about sending their children to school."

To appeal Ohio case

NEW YORK — NAACP attorneys announced here Thursday that they will appeal the ruling of a federal judge to hold over a school segregation case in Hillsboro, Ohio, until after the Supreme Court hands down its final decrees in the decision banning segregated schools.

On Sept. 29, Federal District Judge John H. Druffel said in Cincinnati that he would withhold his decision in regard to the cases brought by the NAACP.

The association's case sought a preliminary injunction against the Hillsboro board of education to restrain the board from requiring colored students to withdraw from two previously all white elementary schools, pending the final determination of an action brought by five colored mothers in behalf of their children.

—o O o—

JUDGE DRUFFEL ruled that the case be continued until two weeks after the Supreme Court hands down its final decrees.

The children were allowed to enroll in the white schools on registration day, Sept. 7, and were assigned to seats in regular classrooms on Sept. 8.

They attended classes each day until Sept. 15, when the board of education advised their parents that schools zones had been established and the streets on which they lived were in the colored elementary school zone.

No white children under the board's zoning order were assigned to the colored school.

The colored children have been kept home from school by their parents since Sept. 15. Their parents refused to send them back to the colored elementary school.

Mixing in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Commissioner of Education Hubert Wheeler said Wednesday 74 high school and nine elementary school districts in 49 Missouir counties have started some type of integration of white and colored students in the current school year.

The commissioner issued the figures in a preliminary report on a statewide survey to determine the extent of integration.

Wheeler said the integration districts represent every section of the state.

He said the survey showed 160 high schools and 74 counties had colored students registered as of Sept. 17.

Pennsylvanians act

PUHILADELPHIA — As far north as this city and Englewood, N.J., parents of school children are pressing the fight for integration. In the Lower Gwynedd Township, parents of four pupils have initiated a suit in Montgomery County Court to compell the township to allow their children to attend Spring House Grade School.

—o O o—

IN ENGLEWOOD, parents are suing the county school board which recently rezoned school districts in such a way as to make attendance at an all-colored school mandatory on colored pupils and which has restricted colored teachers to the colored school.

Georgia referendum

ATLANTA — An agency set up to find a way for Georgia to evade the United States Supreme Court rule against school segregation has asked the voters to approve a measure that may mean the end of the public-school system.

The agency is the Georgia Education Commission, created by the previous legislature.

Beginning to draft its report, the agency called for ratification in the November general election of a constitutional amendment to enable Georgia to pay educational funds direct to pupils (who would attend private schools) instead of the state supporting public schools.

INTEGRATION IS DOING ALRIGHT, SURVEY SHOWS

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — A recent survey conducted by two members of the Cornell University staff and financed by the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education, disclosed that integration of Negro and white pupils in schools in 24 different communities is taking place with "surprising" smoothness.

The survey also disclosed that in communities where a firm and resolute policy was adopted, integration was affected with a minimum of difficulty.

The check was conducted by Prof Robin M. Williams Jr., and Mrs Margaret W. Ryan, both of Cornel University.

They compiled their findings in a sort of textbook called "Schools in Transition." Their work, which includes studies of communities from New Jersey to Arizona, was published last week and is considered an answer to pro-segregationists who contend that integration is unworkable and will provoke racial strife.

Communities included in the survey are Cincinnati, Ohio; Elkhart, Evansville, Gary, Indianapolis, Jeffersonville, New Albany and South Bend, Ind.; Cario, Ill.; Atlantic City, Burlington, Camden, Mount Holly and Salem, N. J.; Clovis, Las Cruces, Roswell, Alamagordo, Carlsbad and Hobbs, N. M.

Also, Douglas, Nogales, Phoenix and Tuscon, Ariz.

In all the communities, with the exception of Cario, Ill., desegregation is being affected smoothly, the survey shows.

But it states, that even in Cario "...no blood was shed." Threats of riots, boycotts and withdrawals from schools were "seldom carried out," it said.

The brightest spots were areas where a firm policy was adopted. For example, in cities like Tuscon, Ariz., where rapid integration was sought, desegregation took place more smoothly than in places following a go-slowly policy.

Many of the communities covered are said to be border cities with a "Southern exposure."

Survey Shows Desegregation Doing Fine Despite Trouble

NEW YORK—(ANP)— A survey here by the New York Post shows that despite certain trouble spots, integration is proceeding rapidly and with success.

W. W. Haynes, principal, Charleston, Ark., public school, responding to an interview by the Post, said that "we opened the school to Negroes from the first through the 12th grades and everything is working out just swell."

Asked if there were reverberations in the town when the Milford, Baltimore and Washington situations exploded, he replied:

"Of course not. If you get to the root of trouble up there, you'll find a bunch of paid agitators who were only interested in publicity and money. The people down here are interested in the education of our boys and girls as a whole. We pay no attention to what they are doing up there."

A survey of West Virginia revealed complete integration of Negro and white students in 14 major counties, with partial integration in 10 others.

The biggest threat of violence and one which fizzled completely, came from Hobbs, New Mexico. A white Baptist minister named William Thomas Carter organized a segregation committee. He claimed 6,000 signatures on a petition upholding continued segregation and said the town of 15,000 citizens would "erupt into violence" if the 400 Negro pupils there were admitted to the white school.

But nothing happened, according to Charles Mills, superintendent of schools for Lee county, of which Hobbs is the county seat.

"We just went ahead with our program of sending all children to the school in their district. Today Negroes are attending two of our elementary schools, two of our junior high schools and one of our two senior high schools," he said.

Mills also pointed out that as far as he knew, Carter never even kept his own child out of integrated schools. "I know his daughter registered in our integrated senior high school, and she was there the last time I heard of it."

Surveys in other states where integrated schools are being tried for the first time showed the same general results. Except for a few trouble spots, desegregation is picking up momentum.

Edict Arouses Job Insecurity

BY ENOC P. WATERS, JR.

Last week after the Supreme Court had handed down its decision outlawing segregated schools, a teacher in a jim crow school announced to her class in martyred tone that it meant the end of her teaching career.

It was her belief that integration of public schools automatically eliminates Negro teachers since she could not conceive of Negroes teaching whites in the South.

The picture may not be as discouraging as it first appears. However, the teacher accurately reflected the fears and apprehension of thousands of Negro teachers.

INSECURITY OF TEACHERS

The decision heightened the feeling of insecurity under which Negro teachers in the South have had to labor.

In too many instances, including some of the large southern cities, their jobs have depended upon the whims of school officials who regard Negro education as a bad heritage they must endure.

In addition, Negro teachers, as a group, are the lowest paid of a low paying profession.

It is conceded that the best salaried teachers are underpaid. Southern teachers' salaries fall below the national norm. And Negro teachers receive less than that.

So there is justification for these fears.

There are at least three rumors current about the fate of Negro teachers under an integrated system in the South.

1 — If and when integration is achieved in the South, Negro teachers will be eliminated as unnecessary or as a reprisal.

2 — Negro teachers will be eliminated because educational requirements will be raised.

3 — Negro teachers will be eliminated because the South will not tolerate Negro teachers instructing whites.

Regardless of how these might look to others, they have very real meaning to Negro teachers in the South. There is no doubt but that some Negro teachers will lose their jobs for each of these reasons.

There is a definite fear among Negro teachers. Even the officers of state teachers associations would not allow themselves to be quoted.

To be quoted in any paper, especially a northern Negro paper, would be foolhardy. They have seen teachers who cooperated with NAACP efforts to equalize their salaries summarily dismissed. They know teachers who have lost their jobs for taking forthright positions on racial issues.

Most have had to content themselves with making a quiet contribution to the NAACP and then destroying the membership card.

THE FIRST FEAR

The South cannot afford to fire one teacher as being unnecessary, integration or not. To be sure some may be fired by small, mean little school officials. But this will not be the general pattern.

Teaching loads in the South are heavy—heavier than other sections of the country. And the teaching loads of Negro teachers are still heavier.

Here are the figures. The average number of pupils per teacher for whites and Negroes in the South are as follows:

Alabama: 29, white; 33, Negro; Arkansas: 29, white; 37 Negro; Delaware: 23, white; 28 Negro; Florida: 24, white; 27, Negro; Georgia. 27, white; 34, Negro; Kentucky: 29, white; 27, Negro; Louisiana: 26, white; 34, Negro; Maryland: 28 white; 30, Negro; Mississippi: 28, white; 40, Negro: Missouri: 28, white; 31, Negro; North Carolina: 29, white; 34, Negro.

Oklahoma: 24, white; 24, Negro; South Carolina: 27, white; 32, Negro; Tennessee: 29, white; 32, Negro; Texas: 28, white; 27, Negro; Virginia: 27, white; 31, Negro; West Virginia: 27, white; 26, Negro, and District of Columbia: 25, white; 30, Negro.

Assuming that the figures of 1950 quoted above are still accurate, the only inevitable conclusion to be drawn is that should there be complete integration white teachers would have to carry a heavier load.

FEAR NUMBER TWO

The area of job qualification which is the basis of fear number two, is, of course, very real. In some states and localities where school officials have no real concern about the education of Negro children, requirements for Negro teachers have been relaxed.

In some instances this was necessary because the basic training of Negroes is inferior. In others, because of misguided sympathy or a feeling that Negroes are incapable of reaching the standards established for whites, Negro teachers are not expected to qualify on the same level.

In still other instances, lower standards among Negro teachers were deliberately set so as to justify pay differentials. The reverse is also true: lower pay fails to attract qualified personnel.

A barmaid in a Chicago tavern earns more in three months than the average $750 annual pay of a Negro teacher in Mississippi as of 1950.

The truth is that the qualifications of Negro teachers in the South is only slightly below that of white teachers and in some instances higher.

GAP IS NARROWED

Prior to 1940, the gap was embarrassingly wide. Since then Negro teachers have made tremendous strides.

Fifteen years ago in Georgia, white teachers averaged three years of college training and Negro teachers only 1.7 years. Today white teachers average 3.6 years and Negroes 3.7 years.

For 12 southern states today, the average is 3.8 for whites and 3.5 for Negroes.

Big, rich Texas has the highest average for both Negroes and whites. It is 4.2 for whites; 4.1 for Negroes.

Generally, Negro teachers have nothing to fear so far as ligitimate dismissals for failure to qualify.

Because teacher qualification is linked closely to salary, it is believed that in instances where Negro teachers are far below the norm, they will be given time to qualify.

Believe it or not, in three of 12 southern states Negro teachers receive a higher average annual wage than whites. The states are North Carolina, Oklahoma and Tennessee. Here are the 1950 figures:

Alabama: $2,214 whites, $1,901 Negro; Arkansas: $1,900 white, $1,416; Negro, Florida: $2,056 white, $2,643 Negro; Georgia: $2,080 white, $1,680 Negro; Louisiana: $3,222 white, $2,486 Negro; Maryland: $3,600 white, $3,575 Negro; Mississippi: $1,884 white, $760 Negro; North Carolina: $2,675 white, $2,721 Negro; South Carolina: $2,149 white, $1,515 Negro; Texas: $3,154 white, $2,934 Negro, and District of Columbia $3,963 white and $3,863 Negro.

Latest figures for the three states where Negro teachers earn more are North Carolina: $2,895 white, $2,935 Negro; Oklahoma: $2,978 white, $2,985 Negro and Tennessee: $2,141 white and $2,144 Negro.

Presently the lowest is Mississippi with $1,991 white and $1,019 Negro and the highest Texas with $3,204 white and $3,078 Negro.

Integration should bring about, almost automatically, salary equalization providing all other factors are equal.

THE THIRD FEAR

The third fear is the most difficult to dissipate. It can't be done with statistics. The only yardstick for predicting how people will react to new situations is experience.

Is the prejudice of parents who don't want Negro teachers for their white children a factor great enough to decimate the ranks of Negro teachers?

The rank and file of American citizens, whether they be from Mississippi or Massachusettes are law abiding.

Except for baseless fears aroused by politicians, the average citizen finds nothing so odious in the court's decision.

The poor live next door to the Negro. The wealthy have Negro servants.

Were integration to begin in the lower elementary grades what objection could there be to a Negro teacher? Many white children of the South get their pre-school training from Negroes.

Of course school districts will be gerrymandered, as they are in the North, so as to reduce to a minimum the incidence of Negro teachers supervising white children.

THE ADJUSTMENT POSSIBLE

But the supreme court decision in 1947 outlawing restrictive covenants broke patterns of segregation in the school systems of the North.

The reaction of white children to Negro teachers was neither violent nor tragic. Parents, with prejudices born of long-honored custom, finally made adjustments in spite of strikes and demonstrations.

The average southern white is no mortal, uncompromising enemy of the Negro.

Just as southerners adjust themselves when they come North as many of them do, so they can adjust in their native communities so long as there is no deliberate agitation or public sentiment. The conclusion?

There will be mortality among Negro teachers, but not to the extent of creating a problem that should make the qualified Negro teacher feel insecure.

Study supports decision that separate schools are unequal

NEW YORK—Less than 3 per-cent of the graduates of segregated high schools in the South would be likely candidates for non-segregated colleges, deductions from a recently completed survey have indicated.

The study was made in 81 high schools in 45 cities by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for colored students, under part of a $170,000 grant from the Ford Foundation's fund for the advancement of education.

Its result supports the May 17 decision of the Supreme Court that a separate school system was not inherently an equal system.

ANALYZING THE survey, Dr. Eli Ginzberg of Columbia University's Graduate School of Business, estimated that there were 1,200 colored southern high school graduates each year who would be qualified candidates for non-segregated colleges.

While the survey showed half of the top 10 per cent qualified, Dr. Genzberg estimated that figures for all high schools in the states covered would be under 3 per cent.

The financial needs for the 1,200 would be about $900,000 a year, he said.

THE FINDINGS included:

The movement of colored students to non-segregated colleges in the South for the 1953-54 academic year was 180 per cent higher than the record high of the previous year.

Only half of the top 10 per cent of the senior classes in the surveyed schools — considered those of highest rank for colored students in the South—possessed minimum college qualifications.

Of the 737 who qualified out of 1,485 tested, 191 enrolled in interracial colleges; although 197 were accepted.

Of 388 qualifying students who showed no interest in attending an interracial college, 70 per cent applied to colored colleges and 90 per cent of these were accepted.

IT WAS emphasized in the findings, the report held, that the colored segregated high school student is under serious handicap which "students from the lower socio-economic brackets must overcome to acquire elsewhere the cultural background necessary for college, when it is not found at home."

Concerning the limited number completing applications to interracial colleges the report held it was due to:

Reluctance on the part of both parents and students to venture out of a lifelong segregated environment.

Fear of not being able to meet the scholastic standards and the financial cost of an interracial college.

The influence of parents, principals, teachers and counselors in favor of the predominantly colored college near home, frequently their alma mater.

The report added that "the number of qualified candidates might have been much larger had it not been for the many whose learning potentials had been submerged in discouragment.

YEARS GONE BY—FIFTY YEARS AGO

The Negro and the Public Schools

Anent the Public School situation and as promised, we present the following copies from Christian Index the letter which follows:

"To the colored people of the South: The problem of providing proper school facilities for our children are of gravest importance to us as a race. The thinking people of New York and Mass. feel that a ten month session is necessary to fit their children for life, and a generous public school system answers the demands. How much less can we afford to give our children.

The greater majority of our people must depend upon public schools for all the education they will receive. Not more than one per cent of the colored children of school age will enter a private or an endowed school and upon the public school rests burden of educating the remaining ninety-nine per cent, if indeed they receive any education. It is evident that our program in the industries, in business, in college and industrial schools, as in morality and religion, fail here then, to neglect our youths in the most formative period of their lives, is to do them an irremedial harm. To speak more definitely, I find that after careful investigation the Negro children in the ex-slave states are in school at an average of 107 days a year, and that only one-third of the children of school age are in school; that in North Carolina, for example, the average school term is only 68 days and that only 22.5 per cent of the Negro children of school age attend school at all. I find that 13 of the former slave states, 90 per cent of children of school age did not attend any school for as much as six months during the year 1900. Taking that year as an example, it requires no argument then, to prove that if these conditions control, we shall continue to be classed as an ignorant and illiterate people.

With these facts before us, the main question then is, what shall be done? The first answer is that we PAY OUR TAXES (capitalizing is reporters) and thereby aid the state in supporting the public schools. Because of their poverty and perhaps in some cases their indifference, the states are not supporting an effective system is but little better for white children outside the larger cities. More fault finding with public officials will not educate our children. In the present conditions of the public schools, I would urge with all earnestness I can summon, that our ministers, teachers, businessmen, leaders, parents and newspapers insist that our people shall: (1) Go before the public school authorities and ask for better school facilities. (2) See that all TAXES, especially POLL TAXES which go directly in most states, into the school fund, are promptly paid. (3) Cooperate in every way possible with the public school officials and raise money by private taxation or other methods of supplementing the present school funds until the school terms are extended to, at least, eight months. Unless a child is kept in school for at least 7 or 8 months, we cannot expect him to be educated, a 5-months school practically means no school. (4) In connection with the school term of proper length, erect a good, comfortable school house and properly furnish it. Some of the school, to be found in rural districts are not fit for any child to spend a day in. In conclusion I would repeat in the present important period in our growth as a people, immediate attention to the public schools is fundamental. If each community will do its full duty, the whole race will be lifted and strengthened and a general quickening will be evident everywhere.

Lower courts may be given integration task

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25—(AP)—The Justice Department says the controversial task of sending white and Negro children to the same public schools should be carried out under local Federal Court direction—not by a general Supreme Court order.

Atty. Gen. Brownell proposed this to the Supreme Court yesterday. And in so doing, he seemed in agreement with President Eisenhower and with the parties directly involved in the historic case on public school segregation.

Brownell's brief was filed as part of the proceedings stemming from the high tribunal's decision on May 17 that public school segregation is unconstitutional. The court withheld a final order at the time, asking instead for further argument on how school desegregation should be carried out. The date for hearing these arguments has been put off at least until next year.

EISENHOWER TOLD a news conference Tuesday that he understands the high court is trying to find some sort of decentralized process, and that he believes weight will be given to the emotional and practical problems involved.

Suggestions that federal district courts handle the job were offered in briefs filed Nov. 15 by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon County, S. C., and attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the original cases.

Brownell emphasized the local control idea in asking that the district courts be assigned the task, although his recommendations on other matters differed in some respects from the other briefs.

Directly involved in the case are South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia. Kansas and the District of Columbia already have told the court their public school integration programs are well under way, so a future order on how to carry out integration is expected to apply specifically only to the other three states.

However, the May 17 decision outlawed school segregation throughout the nation—thus paving the way for possible suits in any other state to bring about action in line with the Supreme Court order.

A NUMBER of Southern states have made arrangements avowedly aimed at getting around the May 17 decision. In one of these, Georgia, State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook commented after hearing of Brownell's proposal:

"It is immaterial to the people of Georgia what method they use to enforce the decision because the people of Georgia are still determined to circumvent the decision at all hazards."

Brownell said school authorities and lower courts are in the best position to carry out integration because "it is clear that no single formula or blueprint is readily susceptible of application to all localities."

He emphasized, however, that he believes the Supreme Court should keep jurisdiction in the matter "for the purpose of making such further orders, if any, as may become necessary."

The attorney general proposed these steps among others:

A Supreme Court decree declaring racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional and that all laws requiring or permitting such segregation are invalid.

A RETURN of the cases involving the four states and the District of Columbia to the lower courts whence they came, for further action in line with the Supreme Court's decision.

Entry of orders in the lower courts directing the defendant school boards to submit, within 90 days, plans forending segregation in their districts "as soon as feasible."

If a satisfactory desegregation program is not submitted to and approved by the lower court, the entry of an order by that court directing that nonsegregated public schools beoperated at the beginning of the next school term.

Brownell said the responsibility for seeing that the court's order is carried out does not rest on the judiciary alone, but also on every officer of government—federal, state and local—because all have the duty of enforcing the constitution.

"Ultimately," he added, "it is the obligation of every citizen to respect and abide by the law, once it is authoritatively declared.

"We have no doubt that the American people and the officials through whom they act will meet these responsibilities in the spirit, to quote the words of the president, of 'patience without compromise of principle.'"

IT IS NOT KNOWN when the Supreme Court will get around to a final ruling. Arguments on how to carry out the May 17 order were originally scheduled to start Dec. 6, but were put off indefinitely pending the seating of another justice on the high bench.

The court now has one vacancy and Senate action on Eisenhower's nominee for the post, John Marshall Harlan, has been put over until the next session of Congress at the request of Sen. Eastland (D., Miss.) and others.

U. S. passing buck on desegregation, federal judge says

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 25—(AP)—A U. S. district judge charged here a suggestion to desegregate public schools on a local level is another case of authorities in Washington "passing the buck."

U. S. District Judge C. B. Kennamer made that comment after a brief filed by Atty. Gen. Brownell yesterday before the U. S. Supreme Court had suggested that racial desegregation be carried out under direction of the federal district courts in the areas involved.

Judge Kennamer said "it just looks like the Supreme Court and the attorney general have found the issue a potato too hot to handle. I'm not surprised at Brownell's suggestion . . ."

"Of course, we will be bound to follow the law as laid down by the Supreme Court and the U. S. Constitution," the Montgomery judge added.

2 STATES PUT DESEGREGATION UP TO VOTERS

Washington, Oct. 25 (AP)—Two states in the deep south—Louisiana and Georgia—carry their fight for continued school segregation to the voters Nov. 2.

They have put up for expected approval proposed state constitutional amendments designed to lay the groundwork for resisting any Supreme court order for mixing white and Negro children in public schools.

The segregation amendments are part of a total 232 propositions which different voters in 37 states will decide on this fall, at the same time that they elect their representatives for state jobs and for Congress.

Would Legalize Bingo

Other questions, to be decided thru amendments, referendum and initiative proposals, range from Michigan's plan to legalize bingo to California's proposition for paying out an estimated 74 million extra dollars in old age pension boosts.

Michigan's bingo proposal would legalize the game for nonprofit charitable organizations, under control of the legislature, as New Jersey did two years ago.

California, with a current 210 million dollar annual old age pension program, decides whether to boost maximum payments from $80 to $100 monthly and to deny the legislature power to cut them. The proposition makes no provision for raising the added money.

Vote on Korea Bonus

Two states—Michigan and Louisiana—vote on special bonus payments for Korean war veterans. The Michigan proposal calls for an 80 million dollar fund to pay 250,000 persons an average of $270. Louisiana would pay Korean veterans between $50 and $250, with $1,000 death benefits to survivors, from a 10 million dollar fund.

Other propositions include:

Special bond issues for mental institutions, schools and other public projects in five states totaling nearly 700 million dollars.

A proposal in Washington to ban television liquor advertising between 8 a. m. and 10 p. m.

Attack Dueling Clause

South Carolina's proposition to eliminate from its constitution an ancient clause requiring officeholders to swear they have not engaged in dueling since 1881.

A proposed Montana constitutional amendment permitting a presidential primary there.

Nevada's proposal to repeal a law prohibiting the closed shop for labor unions.

The Louisiana and Georgia amendments are aimed at offsetting a desegregation order expected from the United States Supreme court.

The court declared public school segregation unconstitutional, under the 14th amendment, last May 17.

The Louisiana amendment would provide for separate white and Negro elementary and secondary public schools "in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, better education and the peace and order in the state, and not because of race."

The Georgia proposition would authorize the state legislature to grant public funds to private citizens for educational purposes, removing any further direct state obligation.

This is designed to allow elimination of the public school system in favor of private and separate schools.

W. Virginia Brings Segregation Back; Mississippi Plans Revolt

14 d (1) general

Three weeks after U. S. schools opened, for the first time since the historic Supreme Court decision of May 17 wiped out public school segregation, a number of changes have taken place; but most of these "changes" were made during the first two weeks of new school year.

Some states, as expected, complied with the ruling and began integrating Negro and white students without waiting on further instruction from the Supreme Court. But other states, mostly in the deep South, gave immediate notice that Negroes would never attend classes with whites.

Five states replied to the court order by declaring they would never integrate its public schools under "any circumstances." And only last week the same group of states, with Alabama the last to consent, said they would even shun the opportunity to file new briefs before the United States Supreme Court. The other four were Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Seventeen states in the South were affected by the ruling, and state by state, the changes during the last week, if any were these:

Alabama

Still awaiting further instruction from the Supreme Court, few changes have taken place in Alabama during the last 10 days. This state, deep in Dixie and full of tradition, has vowed to maintain segregation even if it becomes necessary to abolish public schools.

Arkansas

Across the fringes of the South — Delaware, Maryland, Missouri and the District of Columbia — color bars are being dropped.

And on Sept. 10, in Fayetteville, Ark., racial segregation was dropped at an all-white high school when five young Negro girls enrolled for the fall term.

There wasn't a sign of disapproval from white students present.

Delaware

Delaware, a border state directly involved in the segregation cases has already expressed a willingness to comply with the Supreme Court mandate, regardless of what rank and file residents of school districts may say in their respective areas.

District Of Columbia

Partly because of local pressures, including President Eisenhower's expressed concern, some Negro and white pupils sat side by side for the first time in Washington Monday, Sept. 13, as 98,000 youngsters registered for the fall term.

Racial integration, ordered by the board of education, didn't become complete, but officials say it will be within a year.

Florida

Florida is one of the few states taking the "wait and see" attitude, waiting on further Supreme Court action before desegregating its public schools. In contrast to other states, bitter and resentful over court's ruling against race bias, Florida did no attempt, nor did it, make a political issue out of the decision.

Georgia

Probably no other state — excluding Mississippi and South Carolina — has caused as much concern and stirred as much ill wind as has Georgia, the state of Gov. Herman Talmadge. Georgia strongly opposes integration, has vowed to defy court mandate and, if necessary, to abolish public schools to maintain segregation. Said Talmadge in Washington last week: "No amount of force whatever can compel desegregation of white and Negro schools in this state."

Louisiana

Strongly opposing integration, no change took place in this state, after however, Baton Rouge two weeks ago flatly refused to admit 30 Negro children to an all-white school located only a block from Negro homes.

Maryland

One of five states with plans to integrate its public schools, Maryland has actually done nothing to fulfill these plans. Baltimore, however, is the exception and two weeks ago opened its public schools to both races for the first time in history.

Mississippi

Like Georgia, Mississippi is one of the most stubborn of the Dixie states. It has refused, openly, to comply to the U. S. Supreme Court decision. Mississippians will soon be voting on a constitutional amendment which could lead to abolition of the public school system.

Missouri

Missouri seems to be the progressive state. It left desegregation up to various local authorities. St. Louis, leading the way, somewhat brashly but effectively, integrated one of its teachers' colleges, turned the other one into an elementary school and transferred 23 Negro teachers to the integrated school.

High school segreation will end by 1955 and elementary schools will be integrated next fall.

North Carolina

Although North Carolina was not a direct party to any of the school seregation suits, this state will file a brief with the U. S. Supreme Court next month.

The May 17 decision was somewhat "disappointing" to North Carolina and on the following day the state board of education voted to keep segregated schools for the 1953 to 1954 school year and to study ways and means to comply with the decision.

Oklahoma

There were no other changes in Oklahoma last week. Public schools still have taken no action to integrate students but Roman Catholic parochial schools began mixing 1,000 Negro pupils two weeks ago.

The Supreme Court decision, however, handed Oklahoma Negro and white leaders a problem both groups consider more financial than social. With no overt opposition expressed, the question is not whether to merge state schools, but how to get it done.

South Carolina

While no changes have taken place here in the past week, South Carolina, led by Gov. James F. Byrnes, has become one of the five states planning to refuse to file new briefs before the Supreme at all levels, and presently is seeking ways to circumvent the May 17 ruling abolishing discrimination.

Texas

Texas, throughout the past several weeks, has maintained a "wait and see" attitude. It plans to do nothing about integrating its schools until further orders from the Supreme Court on how and when schools must be mixed.

Texas, along with North Carolina and Oklahoma, filed notice that it wanted to take part in the legal debate when new arguments are heard sometime in the fall.

Tennessee

Schools in Tennessee are still segregated, just as they were last week, last month and last year. Hoping to maintain its present system of segregated schools, Tennessee, along with Texas, Arkansas and Maryland notified Harold B. Wiley, Supreme Court clerk, that they wished to file "friend of the court" briefs later.

But last week the South's usual segregation problem went into reverse when three white students were refused admission to a school for Negroes.

The students were Alice Lorch and Jean and Richard Remper, children of white professors at Fisk university.

West Virginia

Integration backfired in this state last week when, after five days of integration in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Greenbrier County schools returned to its old pattern of segregation.

The action was taken after about 300 high school pupils quit classes and marched through the streets with placards reading "no Negroes wanted on our schools."

The end of integration was ordered following a daylong meeting of the school board.

Virginia

In Richmond last week Gov. Thomas B. Stanley told a 32-member legislative commission on public education that he still planned to use every legal means at his command to preserve segregation in the schools.

THESE SCRUBBED AND SHINING youngsters are Harry Kerill, Frances Brown and Lameron Peterson, of Washington, D. C. They are first graders and are attending Petworth school together under the D. C. school integration plans. Harry and Frances, who live next door to Lemeron, were brought to school with Lemeron by his father in their car.

"Integrate Now! Experts Warn U. S.

NEW YORK — (ANP) A committee of 19 race relations experts, after huddling in a special conference held in conjunction with the American Psychological association's 62nd annual meeting in the Statler hotel here last week, issued a report urging the U. S. to integrate its public schools as rapidly as possible.

If this is done, the report said, there will be less chances of any evasion of the high court edict.

Among those attending the meeting was Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel, who when asked to comment on the committee's report, said he needed time to study it. However, he gave the following view.

White and Negro children traditionally played together in the South, "The only time they were segregated is in school and in church. From the earliest days of slavery, Negroes have been teachers of white children, spanking them, wet-nursing them and teaching them manners."

The report was based on 81 studies in the field of race relations. The group included a number of southern members.

The report also cited as delaying techniques, such devices as violence, "voluntary" desegregation policies, gerrymandering or other manipulation of school district lines to insure that schools in effect would remain segregated. 'Prolonged periods of public education,'' and token admission of Negroes to 'desegregated' schools.

It recommended the following: 1) all children should be assigned to the available school facilities without regard to race; 2) the only delay permitted should be that time required by specified and necessary administrative adjustments. There is no available evidence to suggest that this time need be any longer than a school year.

WITH POPULATION UP—

School Facilities Not Keeping Pace

Educational facilities in our country are not keeping pace with our growth in population or the rise in national income. Serious shortages of teachers and classrooms exist, and the situation "is getting worse," according to a study of our public schools made by the National Association of Manufacturers, just released.

The number of children entering our public schools is continuing to rise at a rapid rate. Too few teachers are being trained; school construction is lagging behind needs, and tax support is not increasing sufficiently, the NAM emphasizes, adding:

"Our schools need more money—what they get isn't enough. We are spending proportionately less of our income on schools today than we did in 1930, and even then the schools were inadequately supported."

The study, made by a committee of educators and industrialists who worked with the NAM's Education Department shows that the public schools face even greater influxes of new pupils in the years ahead than in the years since the war.

Enrollment in public elementary schools rose by less than 4 1/2 million in the past eight years, the report notes. But in the next two years, it points out, a 2,400,000 increase is expected and by 1958 the total may reach 26 million, or 4 million above the number now in school.

"The school problem is a state-local one—it cannot be solved in Washington," says the report, which is being distributed to the NAM's 20,000 members. "So, while the nation-wide picture is important, the best statistics are those for your own school district."

U. S. Schools Called Best

DURHAM, N. C. — "The free compulsory schools of the United States are the best schools in the world in terms of their effectiveness in developing freedom-loving people and citizens devoted to the cause of democracy."

That was a view expressed here at North Carolina college today in an American Education Week address by Dean Arnold Perry of the School of Education at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Speaking in NCC's fall forum series in Duke Auditorium last week, Dean Perry emphasized the responsibilities of educated citizens in world affairs:

"As an educated citizen you can not shirk your share of this responsibility," Perry said. "It is essential that your college education widen your horizons and prepare you for world-wide responsibilities.

"How can we claim citizenship in a world community or even begin to discharge our international obligations when we ignore the two-thirds of mankind who live in ignorance in underdeveloped countries?"

South spends least on education, survey shows

The United States Office of Education has a survey of per pupil costs of education in 413 cities.

Cities which spend least for the education of their children are in the South.

The city which spends least on education of children is Bates ville, Ark., $97 per year. Top is Bronxville, N.Y. $675 per year.

IN THE LARGER cities, the costs decline but the South is still at the bottom.

Costs per pupil in Newark, N.J., $395 per year; Memphis, $133 per year.

It is in the South, they are most violently opposed to mixed schools, which are less costly than segregated schools.

GENERAL

S.C. and Other Dixie States Exchange Segregation Ideas

Discussions Shrouded in Silence As Leaders Strive for 'Solution'

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C., July 3—If cooperative action among certain Southern states in meeting the problems brought about by the segregation decision is not planned at least there appears to be a desire to know what others have in mind.

This is deduced from the visits certain officials making to other states and the interchange of correspondence among leaders.

After a delegation from the Alabama Legislature came to Columbia to talk with Gov. Byrnes, who hopes to find a way to maintain segregation within the framework of the Supreme Court's decree, it was decided that the Gressette Committee, which is studying South Carolina's courses, should send a subcommittee to visit Louisiana and Mississippi and report back its findings to the full group at a meeting called for next Wednesday. The South Carolina group was in Louisiana and Mississippi this week. Perhaps other trips will be made later.

The Gressette Committee, so called because its chairman is Sen. Gressette of Calhoun, was named three years ago by legislative resolution to make recommendations in case the Supreme Court ruled adversely on the question of segregation in the public schools. It has been holding executive hearings in Columbia. There are five senators, five representatives and five appointees at large chosen by the Governor.

S. C. to Mark Time

While it is difficult, if not impossible, to chart a course until the terms of the court's decree are known, and it will be months before the final order is issued, there is some demand that a positive approach be evidenced earlier. For this reason there may be an interim report from the Gressette group.

It has been decided by the governor, after conferring with legislative leaders, that a special session of the South Carolina General Assembly at this time would be fruitless. As Mr. Byrnes said in announcing his decision, the court has stated its opinion that segregation in the schools is unconstitutional, but has not taken any steps toward implementation. Until the Court is specific, the problem faced is not fully known.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The delegation for Alabama that came to Columbia to confer with Gov. Byrnes met with him in his office at the State House. There was a free discussion, but no formal action was taken, and details of the conference were not revealed.

Groundwork Is Laid

When the South Carolina group reports on its trip to Mississippi and Louisiana (which has already entered the lawmaking stage in its preparation to continue segregation), it is presumed it will do so in executive session, since this is the announced policy for the time being of the study group, though interest is so keen in what the committee is doing that some public statement might be made. The committee in its sittings in Columbia has heard representatives of various groups, and certain public officials, all behind closed doors.

The only legislative step South Carolina has taken is to pass a constitutional amendment which removed a section making it mandatory upon the General Assembly to maintain a public school system. This action was taken prior to the Supreme Court ruling, but after the school case arose in Clarendon County, this state. The people approved the amendment at the 1952 general election and it was ratified by the last legislature. The amendment did not abolish the public schools, as some interpreted, but left their continuance in the hands of the General Assembly. The schools are operating under this revision this year and there is no difference whatever in the program.

Exchange of Ideas

As further evidence of exchange of ideas the governor of Virginia has suggested that the Constitution of his state likewise be amended to eliminate a mandatory provision to maintain a public school system.

Also the director of Alabama's legislative reference service, who visited Georgia to find out about the private school plan, announced that he would confer also with certain leaders in this state about the three-school system proposed by governor-nominate George Bell Timmerman Jr., who would continue the present system of segregated schools, but provide also schools where parents who insist on non-segregation could send their children.

Virginia, North Carolina Act To Maintain Segregation

14 d(1) Brown

BY CARTER JEWEL

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — Several Virginia and North Carolina communities are seeking ways to circumvent the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court banning segregated public schools. Communities are asking the state legislature of the two states to take the necessary steps to keep segregated schools.

A group of Sussex County, Va., citizens has sent Gov. Thomas B. Stanley a resolution urging him to appoint a public school study commission of General Assembly members to look into the school situation.

The resolution said it was "imperative" that changes be made in the Virginia school law in view of the ruling of the Supreme Court against segregated public schools. It also said the General Assembly will have to decide ultimately on what changes are to be made as a result of the court ruling.

Meanwhile, the Pittsylvania county board of supervisors met to decide on the county's position with regard to segregation. The Board declined recently by a 4-3 vote to pass a resolution calling for state authorities to perpetuate segregation in the public schools. Instead, the supervisors passed a substitute for further study of the issue by a special committee.

The supervisors were expected to consider a revised resolution on the issue of school segregation, but the wording of the text or the action taken by the supervisors were not immediately made available to the public.

Gov. Stanley had not named his commission on school segregation ist work. For several weeks he ha aid he was undecided on what step to take. Some of the white daily newspapers have criticized the governor for failure to act on this issue. The Virginian-Pilot has been very critical of the governor in several editorials.

Petitions urging Gov. Stanley to abolish the free schools if necessary in order to preserve racial segregation are being circulated in Halifax county, Va. The citizens signing the petitions said they felt that "a public school system here consisting of an admixture of colored and white children will bring unending violence and strife to the detriment of both races . . ."

North Carolina whites in several communities have organized to find a way to preserve segregated public schools. The Pender county association for the Continuation of Segregation was organized at a mass meeting at Burgaw last week. Summing up the view of supporters of the move Sen. J. V. Whitfield said, "In my opinion the welfare of the Negro race is at stake as much as that of the white race" as a result of the Supreme Court's decision banning segregated schools.

In Courier Poll

Teachers Favoring School Integration

An overwhelming percentage of teachers participating in the Courier's current poll on integration in the nation's public schools are in favor of ending jim crow, first returns indicated this week.

The poll, in which all teachers are urged to participate by filling out the attached coupon, mirrors reaction from such widely separated points as Donaldsonville, Ga.; Jasper, Tex.; Washington, D. C.; Newark, N. J.; Tampa, Fla., and Montgomery, Ala.

To the first question of "Do You Favor Integration?" 87.5 per cent of those answering thus far voted yes and only 12.5 per cent voted no.

THE TEACHERS are, so far, of widely divergent opinions on whether or not the Supreme Court decision jeopardized the Negro teacher's job. To the second query, 50 per cent of the teachers have voted "yes" and 50 per cent "no."

An impressive 62.5 per cent of the teachers do not feel that Negro children will feel unhappy in schools with white children, but 25 per cent of the answers felt the opposite.

The teachers also indicated in their replies that the elementary school student would have a better chance of adjustment with 62.5 per cent voting "no" to this part of question number three, but only 37.5 per cent voted "no" with regards to high school students on this adjustment problem.

THE COURIER is hoping that this poll will accurately mirror the feelings of teachers on this all-important issue.

Therefore, it is urging that all teachers fill out the attached coupon and send it post-haste to the Courier Poll editor, Post Office Box 1828, Pittsburgh 30, Pa.

Segregation views over U. S. follow education level scale

BY GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N. J., July 14—One interesting aspect of public opinion on the Supreme Court's ruling on anti-segregation is the widely divergent views held by the best educated and by the least well educated citizens, particularly outside the South.

For the country as a whole, the survey finds that nearly three out of every four adults (73 per cent) who have attended college say they approve of the court's decision.

On the other hand, a majority (51 per cent) of those who have attended only grade school say they disapprove today.

Another aspect of opinion on the issue that is of interest is that older people are less inclined to go along with the ruling than are young people.

Whereas 61 per cent of the younger group, ages 21 to 29, approve of the segregation ban, the survey finds that only 49 per cent of those persons 50 years of age and over approve today.

ANOTHER INTERESTING result that turns up is that people in the nation's largest cities are much more sympathetic toward the decision than are residents of smaller cities and towns and rural areas.

Institute reporters talked to approximately 3000 typical citizens across the country. Each person was asked:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

Here are the results nationwide and by education levels, age groups and city size:

ONE SURVEY finding, which may come as a surprise to many observers, is that the issue is not a partisan one—either above or below the Mason and Dixon line.

In the North, Republicans, Democrats and Independents all approve of the court's decision by roughly 2-to-1.

In the South, Republicans, Democrats and Independents all disapprove by better than 3-to-1.

In the first article in the series, reported Sunday (Monday), the Gallup Poll found Easterners most in favor of the court's verdict, followed by residents of the Far West and the Middlewest.

Today's survey finds virtually no difference of opinion on the issue by men and women, no matter which section of the country they live in.

'Must keep our feet on ground,' educator

By DR. J. RUPERT PICOTT

RICHMOND

Almost three months have now past since the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court outlawing segregation in public schools.

Each day of sober reflection marks this as a historic opinion comparable to the Magna Charta, Declaration of Independence, Constitution of the United States, and the Emancipation Proclamation. Indeed it is high'y probable that people the world over will in time come to celebrate May 17 as the day of the real implementation of American democracy.

It is no wonder then, that a decision with such an extensive meaning would be applauded in many quarters and just as vigorously denounced in others.

—o O o—

THIS LEADS us to the heart of the action that is needed today. It is necessary that we keep our feet on the ground, that we understand this tremendous demonstration in human relations and that we apply always a sense of balance.

Moreover, if there is any one requirement that all of us should have now it is the realization that growth even in human relations may be highly accelerated but still remain an educative process.

Those who oppose often make the most noise. We should expect the newspapers and other periodicals to carry many comments from those who oppose any change in our way of life and especially if it involves desegregation in our public schools.

Those who are in favor by their mere acceptance cease to make the problem as a major factor in their personal lives. The persons who evaluate this proposed change in our thinking about the public schools must understand these factors and not be too disturbed about the outcries against this shifting of the status quo.

—o O o—

OUR CITIZENS who would think clearly must realize that following a major pronouncement the pendulum of public opinion is apt to swing far and wide to both sides of the arc of acceptance and non-acceptance. In due time the vast majority of the people who are always reasonable in their thinking will be heard and then we will move forward because the mass of people has spoken.

Full credit should be given to the NAACP for charting a whole new legal concept. The Virginia State Conference of the NAACP has had a big hand in this noble development. It must not be overlooked that the securing of freedom for one group helps all people.

You just wait. The legal procedures established by the NAACP will undoubtedly be used by other groups to broaden the base for human understanding throughout our country.

There is an old proverb which says, "No man can stand in a moving stream and have the same water touch him twice." The NAACP has provided the legal basis. It is up to all of us to participate actively in the implementation.

—o O o—

LIVING IN America is more than a matter of the public school and requires the active sharing of more than any one group. I hope that groups of every type including the State bar associations, State medical associations and State real estate boards are now working to integrate their respective groups.

Each group can help in this process of integration through insisting that its own organization lead the way in racial acceptance.

All questions or problems must sooner or later — and in fact from the first instance—revert to the root question of wisdom: "what does the individual do." For are not all matters in the social structure but a projection of individual character?

Here and now the position of the individual is clear.

—o O o—

COLORED AMERICANS have been given the opportunity for a positive program. No longer are we wedded to the negative obstruction of trying to halt the positive programs which oppressed us and in which we sought to salvage whatever crumbs we could to survive.

The present is our greatest opportunity for freedom. Our policy in this matter of desegregation and integration must be "no help for evasion but wholehearted support for honest cooperation in this public program for the benefit of all."

And finally in talking about another matter Toynbee, the eminent British historian, seems also to have succinctly pointed to our problem of human relations today. Said he, what is needed is:

First, an ideal which takes the imagination by storm, and

Secondly, a definite intelligible plan for carrying that ideal into practice.

—o O o—

THE HIGHEST COURT of our land has given a rebirth to the ideal. It is up to us to establish the practice.

Strong Preference for Mixed Schools

Pro-Integration Trend Marks Poll

Teachers participating in the Courier's poll, designed to show their thinking on the school segregation issue, continued to show a strong preference for integration this week.

Answers to the queries continued to pour into the Courier poll editor from such widely separated points as Folkston, Ga.; San Francisco, Calif.; Meridian, Miss.; Bluefield, W. Va.; Centerville, Tex., and Charleston, S. C.

Current percentages are as follows:

Do you favor integration? Yes, 80.9 per cent. No, 14.2 per cent. Undecided 4.9 per cent.

Do you feel that the U. S. Supreme Court's decision jeopardizes the Negro teacher's job? Yes, [illegible] per cent. No, 71.5 per cent.

Do you feel that Negro children will feel unhappy in schools with white children? Yes, 19 per cent. No, 76.1 per cent. Undecided, 4.9 per cent.

Elementary? Yes, 23.8 per cent. No, 71.5 per cent. Undecided, 4.9 per cent.

High School? Yes, 19 per cent. No, 62 per cent. Undecided 19 per cent.

Teachers desiring to participate in the poll may do so by clipping the attached blank, filling it out and sending it to the poll editor. No names are required.

Senate expected to pass bill providing U.S. aid to schools

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Sen. John S. Cooper (Rep., Ky.) expects the Senate to pass before adjournment his revised bill to provide federal aid to the state and territories for construction of public elementary and high school facilities.

In view of the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools, the bill is regarded as extremely important.

The cost of eliminating substandard schools in the South—white as well as colored—and to accommodate net additions to its school population is estimated to be 3 billion dollars.

IN ADDITION to equalizing physical facilities to provide a minimum standard of education for every child in an integrated school system, other items which must be taken into account are the increasing school population, urban-rural equalization, and a modest degree of general improement.

About 1.8 million dollars in current operating expenditures would be required to accommodate an average daily attendance of 9,100,000 white and colored pupils.

Testifying on the Cooper bill, Sen. Earl C. Clements (Dem., Ky.) said he could not possibly see how the Supreme Court decision could in any way minimize the need for school construction.

"I can certainly conceive of sion would make the need for action in this field even more imperative, particularly in those areas where the colored school facilities have lagged behind the facilities for other students," he added.

SENATOR COOPER introduced his bill before the Supreme Court handed down its ruling on May 17.

As originally drafted, the bill provided that states which wished to get federal aid had to submit a state plan giving certain information and providing that in any state having segregated schools:

"There shall be equitable priorities and an opportionment of Federal funds for school facilities for any group not less than the artio of the school-age population of such group in the State to the total school-afe population of the State."

AFTER THE DECISION, Senator Cooper struck out this provision and substituting a provision which would require the amounts of state funds which will be aailable for assistance to local schools agencies in providing school facilities and the principles which will govern the distribution of such funds.

Based on a recent survey by the U. S. Office of Education, a shortage of about 312,000 elementary and secondary school instructional rooms was indicated as of 1952. The present shortage has been estimated at 340,000.

The Negro Teacher

One individual who has a special and critical position in the whole problem of ending segregation in the schools is the Southern Negro schoolteacher. His problem has a special interest to North Carolina, which employs more Negro schoolteachers than any state in the Union. In a recent issue, The U. S. News and World Report presented significant questions and facts about this matter. It said:

With an end to school segregation decreed for the South, Negro teachers there are coming up against a real question. It is this: Can they look to the Northern states for teaching jobs if these are wiped out by an integration of Negro and white schools in the South?

The answer, on the basis of the present use of Negro teachers in the non-segregated schools of Northern states, appears to be: No.

Negro leaders themselves are convinced that thousands of Negro teachers will go out of Southern schools with the end of segregation. They have seen this happen in many Northern communities with the integration of schools. They expect to see it happen again in the South.

As it stands now, the South is the land of opportunity for the Negro teacher. Seven Negro teachers are employed in the segregated schools of the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia for each one employed in the 31 non-segregated states outside the South.

A few illustrations tend to point up the difference in the use of Negro teachers in the segregated and the non-segregated states.

Mississippi alone has as many Negro teachers in its schools as do the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Kansas put together. North Carolina employs as many Negro teachers as do the seven states of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, California and Indiana, all put together.

These figures cover all teacher employment in the states below college level, in both public and private schools.

Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and New York have about one million Negro residents each—some of them a few more, some a few less. The four Southern states have segregated school systems. New York's system, legally, is non-segregated.

Mississippi has more than three Negro teachers for each one in New York. Alabama and Georgia employ almost five for each one in New York. North Carolina has more than five for each one in New York.

Further consideration of the figures show that North Carolina employs one Negro teacher for every 123 Negroes in its population. New York employs one for every 542 Negroes in its population. Obviously, employment in the schools is a significant part of the base of the economic life of the Negro in the South.

This is a matter which deserves the careful thought of both races in shaping any plans for our schools in the future. The loss of jobs in this one field where the Southern Negro has an equal economic chance today would be a serious matter not merely for the Negro teachers, but the South itself.

Comes Autumn And...

Jim Crow Is Out In Many Dixie Schools

NEW YORK,—When the school bell rings next Monday Negro and white children will be sharing classrooms in a number of Southern localities where strict school segregation formerly was maintained by state law, according to a survey of the Southern school situation being made by the NAACP.

Without waiting for the Supreme Court to begin implementing its decision which held public school segregation to be unconstitutional, some Southern localities simply are integrating their public schools at the beginning of of the fall term, the Association's survey shows.

Communities and cities located in five Southern states have announced public integration for next month. These states are West Virginia, Missouri, Arkansas, Maryland and Delaware.

In addition, public schools in the District of Columbia will be integrated for the first time in September.

In the five Southern states where school integration already is scheduled on the local level, a total of at least 23 towns or cities and one county have set the action for next month.

In some cases, integration has been acomplished during the summer term. In Kansas City and Columbia, Mo., and in Wilmington, Del., Negro students were enrolled this summer in what has been all-white public schools.

Missouri Ahead

Of the five Southern states in which public school integration plans are proceeding on the local level, Missouri is out front in desegregating her schools, judging by preliminary results compiled by the NAACP.

In addition to the Kansas City Teachers' College will follow suit next month. The Kansas City board of education adopted a plan to end segregation in public summer schools, integrate vocational and junior colleges this fall, and complete integration in all public schools in September, 1955.

In St. Louis, Mo., a carefully drawn-up desegregation plan has been made public which specifies integration of the two teachers' colleges and the handicapped childrens' schools this September, and of the high schools February 1 of next year. St. Louis elementary schools will stop segregating in September, 1955.

In Columbia, Mo., home of the state university, public school integration started this summer. Race barriers will be dropped this fall at the University of Missouri and its School of Mines in Rolla, as well as in kindergarten, primary and high schools operated by the University's School of Education in Columbia.

Other Missouri towns which will integrate all public schools next month are Springfield, New Haven, Fredericktown, Kirksville, Clayton and St. Joseph. High schools only will be desegregated next month in Kennett, LaBelle, Macon, Butler, Woodcrest, West Plains, Shelbina, Fulton, Jefferson City, Mexico and Carthage. Similar action for elementary schools only will be carried out in September in Kirgwood and St. Charles.

Action In Other States

Segregated public schools will end next month in Baltimore, Md., and Monongalia County, W. Va., while at Fayetteville, Ark., high school will enroll students of both races for the first time in September.

In the field of higher education, the fall term will find both white and Negro students welcomed at previously segregated Middle Tennessee State College, Murfreeboro, Tenn.; University of Arkansas, Little Rock, Ark.; Hardin-Junior College of Midwest University, Wichita Falls, Tex.; the two teachers colleges in Washington, D. C..; the nine state colleges in West Virginia; Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo.; Southwest Missouri State College, Springfield, Mo.; Joplin (Mo.) Junior College; and Central Missouri State College, Fayette, Mo.

In several communities outside the 17 Southern and border states which enforced segregation by state law, the segregation of public school children on a municipal basis will be ended next month. These towns include Hobbs, N. M.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Pasadena, Calif.; and Chester, Pa.

Later Date Set

Integration has been set for 1953 in a number of Southern communities where plans to desegregate the schools have been made public. In January, 1955, the junior and senior high schools of Kirkwood, Mo., will begin operation on an integrated basis. In September, 1955, the high schools in St. Charles, Mo., and all the public schools in Charleston, Hannock County and Kanawha County, W. Va., and in Warrensburg, Mo., will integrate.

Since the Supreme Court declared public school segregation unconstitutional, a number of private Southern schools have voluntarily given up segregation. This past summer, a vacation Bible school conducted by the Parkersburg, W. Va., First Baptist Church for the first time welcomed and enrolled children of both races. In Virginia, the Catholic schools in Roanoke, Arlington, Fairfax and Falls Church will be integrated this fall, as will the four Catholic high schools in Richmond.

It has been announced that the Catholic school system of Baltimore, Md., will be desegregated at an unspecified later date.

Little Trouble

Scattered instances of complaints from white parents following school board desegregation plans have occurred, according to NAACP information. No trouble from children or college students has been reported during the newly- integrated summer sessions in various localities.

In Clarkton, Mo., and in Sheridan, Ark., the school board reversed its decision to integrate the schools this Septmeber following protests from white parents.

14 States Won't Do Anything About Segregation This Year

EDITOR'S NOTE — How will the South as a whole go about carrying out the Supreme Court's ruling banning segregation in public schools? There are guideposts—emotional and statistical—that point to an answer. Here's the story of the developing situation, by a reporter who toured the South for weeks to find it.

By BEM PRICE

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 13 (AP)—This may be the last year for a way of life in which racial discrimination is legal.

Across the fringes of the South—Delaware, Maryland, Missouri and the District of Columbia—the color bars already are being dropped here and there in the public schools.

Every major religious denomination in the region has taken a stand in support of the Supreme Court decision of last May 17 holding that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

But while the fringe states are acting, 14 of the 17 states affected by the court ruling plan to do nothing about the problem in the coming school year. Several do expect to act, however, in 1955 or 1956.

Public Schol Question

In ruling against public school segregation, the court refrained from issuing an order specifying how its decision should be put into effect. It asked interested states to submit advice which could be used to formulate a plan of action.

Until the Supreme Court does spell out a plan in detail, none of the 'Old South' states plans to do anything. In fact, until the order is given, the states are proceeding on the assumption that segregation laws still are on the books.

The South's segregation problem is incredibly complex. "The South" as an entity in which whites are uniformly prosegregation just doesn't exist.

Large sections have essentially "Yankee traditions" — sections which opposed slavery from the beginning and whose citizens fought on the Union side in the Civil War.

Vast Situation

The school situation is a vast hodge-podge of prejudice and politics, budgets and buildings, population and poverty.

The Civil War left the South without an economic base on which to build public schools. Even by 1900 only one state, Kentucky, had a compulsory school attendance law. Public schools, in brief, were late arriving in the South.

When the states did acquire public school systems, the white Southerners—the taxpayers—were primarily concerned with taking care of their own children first. Whatever was left over went to the Negroes.

Just as the South began pulling itself up by its economic bootstraps, the Great Depression of 1929-1935 nearly wrecked the public school system. Building lagged, especially building for Negroes.

As Area Recovered

As the area recovered from its economic setbacks, it embarked on a school building program which was halted by World War I and only resumed in 1946.

With the end of World War I, the South once again set out to catch up with the rest of the nation.

War's end brought demands from Negroes that the South practice its "separate but equal" doctrine in the schools. More and more public money was put aside for Negro education.

By the time the Supreme Court handed down its ruling, the Southern states were spending a higher percentage of income on public schools than any other section.

Space Woud Be Acute

But if a program of integration were begun immediately, the simple problem of space would be acute, especially in rural areas.

Rural white children in the South as a rule go by bus to schools in town. Negro children go to country schools, many of them one-room affairs, near home.

If the white children were suddenly dumped on these country schools, many of which already are overcrowded, there would be children hanging from the rafters.

When And How?

In the face of these general facts, the question for most Southerners is: "When and How?"

Two of the region's most widely recognized authorities on race relations, while cautioning against the specific application of a generality, believe that the white-Negro population ratio is the best index.

They are Harry S. Ashmore of Little Rock, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, and George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta.

They hold that desegregation probably will end first where the Negro population is lightest and last where it is heaviest.

Negro Population

Almost half the 1,328 counties in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Virginia have 10 per cent or less Negro population.

One fifth of these counties contain 40 per cent of the entire Negro population in the region. Most of the counties with the Smallest Negro populations are in mountain areas—the Ozarks and Appalachians.

In the decade from 1940 to 1950 more than a million Negroes left these 13 states and went north. The increase in white population was 33 times as great as the Negro gain.

The negro farm population declined by 1,300,000.

South Growing Whiter

These statistics mean the South is growing whiter and the Negro is being urbanized.

Ashmore and Mitchell believe that if the Supreme Court permits a local option system of ending segregation, with a time limit for compliance, many of the hill counties will integrate swiftly.

Moreover, under their theory, about half of Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee, a third of Kentucky, about a fifth of Virginia and spots in Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina also will integrate quickly and with a minimum of trouble.

While the idea of racial integration on the grade school level came as a shock to many white Southerners, it has been taking place without friction on the college level in most of the South since 1935. Approximately 2,000 Negroes attended previously all-white colleges or universities last year.

Negroes Admitted

Even prior to the Supreme Court decision, 24 state colleges or Universities admitted Negroes—usually as the result of Supreme Court action—on the graduate or professional level.

Thirteen state and municipal colleges admitted Negroes on the undergraduate level, as did 46 private denominational colleges.

The only states which have not admitted Negroes to white colleges on any level are South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi.

Thee states, with the exception of Florida, have the heaviest concentrations of Negro population, ranging up to 71 per cent in some counties.

South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, along with Louisiana, which also has a heavy Negro population, have been the most outspoken in announcing intentions to evade the Supreme Court mandate.

Council Says

While a court order actually ending segregation still is some time away, the question arises as to what kind of mandate it may be considering.

The substance of the questions asked by the court in delaying an order were:

1. Must the court order admission of Negroes to schools nearest their homes immediately, or may the court permit "an effective gradual adjustment?"

2. If the court orders a gradual adjustment, should it appoint a special master to study and recommend methods?

Question Arises

The Southern Regional Council, a nonprofit, nonpolitical organization of Southerners devoted to "equal opportunity for all," has concluded:

"It would seem from these questions that the court is considering ways to fit remedies to local situations and to allow a reasonable time for readjustment in each case."

'Challenge To Christians'

President Of Negro College Declares Segregation Great Scandal Of Church

Editor's Note—The question of whether a practicing Christian can believe in white supremacy was pointed up by the recent Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling. What do white churchgoers in the South think? What do their ministers say? Will Negroes be welcomed into white churches? Here's a story with some answers an AP reporter traveled weeks to find.

By BEM PRICE

ATLANTA, Sept. 18 (AP) — There is agony in the South today: the agony of white Christians wrestling with their souls.

The white Christian has been challenged to practice what he preaches—universal brotherhood.

He has been challenged to surrender the racial prejudices ingrained in him from childhood and in the region for 300 years. He has been challenged to give up his cherished doctrine of white supremacy.

From these challenges there is no escape.

The Rev. Robert B. Giffen of Atlanta, a Presbyterian, said simply: "There will be considerable anguish when the time comes for decision. Many will seek a solution on their knees."

Great Soul Searching

The great soul searching, especially among the Protestants, was precipitated by the U.S. Supreme Court decision May 17 holding that racial discrimination in the public schools was unconstitutional.

Every major religious group in the region urged calm acceptance of the ruling. Some Protestant church conferences applauded it as the only Christian solution.

By their stand, however, the churches raised a major question: if segregation is to be ended in the public schools, can the churches do less? Is segregation in itself un-Christian

For many thousands of Southerners who honestly believe in white supremacy and who honestly believe themselves Christians, these questions have produced the moral crisis of a lifetime.

Many A Churchman

Many a churchman has spoken out as an individual, or as a representative of an administrative body, against discrimination, but generally speaking the Protestants have moved cautiously in meeting the issue.

As for the Jews, a small minority in the region, they have consistently opposed public school segregation long before the Supreme Court decision.

The position of the Catholic Church is simple: There is no segregation before God. There shall be none in the church.

Catholics, for example, acted on the congregational level in the New Orleans archdiocese, largest Catholic community in the South, to carry out this precept a year before the Supreme Court decision on public schools.

Protestants Urging

Further, while Protestant denominations simply were urging calm acceptance of the court's ruling, the Catholics were actively fighting the Louisiana Legislature's attempt to evade it.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, Negro president of predominately Negro Morehouse College here, told the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Ill., in August that segregation was "the great scandal of the church."

"It will be a sad commentary on our life and times," he said, "if future historians can write that the last bulwark of segregation based on color . . . was God's church."

Tremendous Paradox

The South against which these challenges have been presented is one tremendous paradox.

There is a deep personal affection between many individual white men and individual Negroes. Many Southern proponents of segregation were reared by Negro nurses and played with Negro children until they reached school age.

In the South the white lives much closer to the Negro than anywhere in the North. In the rural areas Negro and white families often live as farm neighbors. In the cities, Negroes live in the alleys back of white homes.

There are, of course, large exclusively Negro residential areas in Southern cities, but on the fringes of these areas the white-Negro line of demarcation is not nearly so sharp as, for example, in Chicago.

Southern Tradition

While the white man's relations with individual Negroes often is one of affection, a majority wants the Negro race "to keep its place." In Southern tradition that place is one of subservience.

Among the Negroes there is a saying: "Up North they don't care how high you get, just so you don't get too close. Down South they don't care how close you get as long as you don't get too high."

There is a wide fear among Southern whites that if the bars of segregation are dropped, there will be a tremendous influx of Negroes into white institutions.

How real this fear is has been widely debated. Many observers believe that because the Negroes have their own churches, in their own neighborhoods, with their own social activities, few would be interested in joining white churches. But no one knows the answer for sure.

Southern Protestants

Southern Protestant ministers also have the matter of judging the temper of congregations.

At least two Baptist pastors apparently moved too rapidly.

The Rev. Robert Trotman of Lumpkin, Ga., praised the court decision as a "just and Christian opinion." His rural congregation asked his resignation.

The Rev. Henry A. Buchanan also spoke out in favor of the decision and was asked to resign from his rural pastorates in southwest Georgia, near Shellman.

In Hobbs, N. M., a fringe area, a third Baptist minister, the Rev. William Carter, met a different response. Carter preached against segregation and predicted that when segregation ended among the city's 6,000 school children, 400 of them Negroes, there would be bloodshed.

No Bloodshed

The children returned to school on an integrated basis. There was no bloodshed.

Atlanta is widely considered the capital of the "Bible Belt." But it isn't easy, despite that, to get Protestant ministers to tal on the subject of segregation. Most of those to whom I talked in the windup of a 27-day tour of the South, referred me to someone else. In most cases that someone was the Rev. Mr. Giffen, who serves as secretary of the 17-denomination Christian Council of Atlanta.

It isn't hypocrisy that makes them evade the issue," he said, "though it may appear so to you. I would say there is more personal courage among ministers here than anywhere else in the South.

When Time Comes

"When the time comes to be counted, there are many who will stand. But out of loyalty to their congregations they can't speak out on the subject and appear in print before they tell their congregations they are going to do so.

"I have a strong felling that 80 per cent of the congregations, with their silent social attitudes, will say nothing and go along. They are hoping, though, something will happen which will make it unnecessary for them to become special kinds of heroes."

He said five large Protestant churches in Atlanta had agreed quietly to accept Negro applicants.

"Even the diehards down here," he continued, "recognize that it is only a matter of time; that segregation is not God's idea, but man's, and they are trying to find ways of accomplishing God's will without splitting the churches."

Splitting Churches

Splitting the churches is a possibility causing some concern. I was told privately, for example, that the Methodists of Clarendon County, S. C., planned to pull out if their church conference approved the supreme court decision. There probably are others.

One of the suits attacking school segregation originated in Clarendon County. It probably was the most famous of those on which the Supreme Court ruled.

If white Protestant ministers sometimes are reluctant to speak for publication, a Negro minister in Spartanburg, S. C., had no such hesitation.

The Rev. William L. Wilson is pastor of the Macedonia Baptist Church, with a membership of 1,700.

Ashamed Of Colleagues

"I am sometimes ashamed of my white colleagues," he said. "They tell me privately that segregation is wrong, but they will say nothing publicly. It is too bad the Negro has had to fight for everything he has received. The white Southerners have given up nothing until they had to."

But there are those who have stood up to be counted. Seven Atlanta ministers did it after the Supreme Court decision, saying segregation could not be defended on the basis of Christian doctrine. Five of them said their churches had acted to end segregation.

Through the South, 46 denominational colleges and theological seminaries are open to Negroes, 31 of them Protestant, many Protestant churches have supported the Southern Regional Council, an interracial organization devoted to equal opportunity for all.

Before Decision

A full year before the Supreme Court decision, the Most Rev. Joseph Francis Rummel, archbishop of the New Orleans Catholic diocese, directed an end to segregated congregations.

For four years before that, the Holy Name Society of Catholic men in the New Orleans archdiocese (which includes a little more than 21 parishes, or counties) had been interracial.

Immediately after the court opinion, the Louisiana Legislature met with the avowed purpose of maintaining racial segregation in the schools through legal evasions. It hit upon a plan of invoking the state's police powers to maintain "the good morals and welfare" of its citizens — that is, by continuing segregated schools.

Measures Proopsed

These measures were proposed, and originally private as well as public schools were covered. The church mustered its power and the parochial school restriction was dropped. Archbishop Rummel led the fight.

However, the Catholic Church won't carry out integration in its elementary and high schools this year.

The Rt. Rev. Henry C. Bezou, superintendent of Catholic schools, said it would be imossible because of the lack of facilities.

Archbishop Rummel was not the first head of a Catholic diocese to act. In 1947 Archbishop Joseph E. Ritter of St. Louis approved the opening of parochial schools to Negroes to relieve classroom congestion.

Bishop Of Raleigh

Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh, N.C., said in June of last year that no racial segregation would be tolerated in the churches and merged the white and Negro dioceses.

Bishop Peter L. Ireton of Richmond, Va., said in the wake of the court decision that where no separate school facilities existed for Negro parishioners, they could enter white schools. Bishop Albert L. Fletcher of Little Rock followed suit.

Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio urged "clergy and laity . . . to stop the sin of segregation."

In the heart of the pro-segregation country, at Grosse Tete, La., not far from Baton Rouge, a Negro, the Rev. Aubrey Osborne, serves as an assistant parish priest.

Parochial Schools

Parochial schools in the archdiocese of Washington began integration this fall. Among Protestant churches, probably the strongest stand after the Sureme Court decision was taken by the 94th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S. (Southern), a governing body of church laymen.

The assembly held that "enforced segregation . . . is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics." It recommended local Presbyterian churches admit persons to membership without reference to race.

And the Southern Baptists, largest single denomination in the region with 7,883,708 members, approved the Supreme Court decision as being in harmony with "Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men."

Autonomous

Neither stand however, is binding on the churches. Each Presbyterian and Baptist church is autonomous.

The Methodist Church, second largest denomination in the South, has long argued its basic church doctrine forbids racial discrimination. Paradoxically, however, it maintains a "Central Jurisdiction" which is exclusively Negro.

At Lake Junaluska, the Methodist retreat near Asbeville, N.C., I talked wit hthe Rev. J. W. Wowle, pastor of the retreat. He said he had been preparing his congregations to an acceptance of the brotherhood of man" for about five years.

Other Ministers

"I know many other ministers who have been doing the same," he said. "Segregation is a matter of Christian principle on which the church ought to act posittively.

"I have a great sympathy for the prejudiced. It is a matter of time. It will work out."

U. S. Urged By Psychologists To Integrate Schools Fast

NEW YORK — (ANP) — A committee of 19 race relations experts, after huddling in a special conference held in conjunction with the American Psychological association's 62nd annual meeting in the Statler Hotel here last week, issued a report urging the U. S. to integrate its public schools as rapidly as possible.

If this is done, the report said, there will be less chances of any evasion of the high court edict.

Among those attending the meeting was Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel who when asked to comment on the committee's report, said he needed time to study it. However, he gave the folowing view.

White and Negro children traditionally played together in the South. "The only time they were segregated is in school and in church. From the earliest days of slavery, Negroes have been teachers of white children, spanking them, wet-nursing them and teaching them manners."

Atty. Marshall argued for and won a ban on segregation in arguments before the May 17 Supreme Court ruling. The court is scheduled to hear arguments this fall on how to bring about integration.

Three members of the committee, present at the meeting, said the report was based on 81 studies in the field of race relations. They said their group included a number of Southern members.

Those present were Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, assistant professor of psychology, City College, New York; Dr. John P. Dean, associate professor, sociology, Cornell University; and Dr. Isador Chief, professor, psychology, New York University.

The report also cited as delaying techniques, such devices as violence, "voluntary" desegregation policies, gerrymandering or other manipulation of school district lines to insure that schools in effect would remain segregated. "Prolonged periods of public education," and token admission of Negroes to "desegregated" schools.

It recommended the following: 1) all children should be assigned to the available school facilities without regard to race; 2) the only delay permitted should be that time required by specified and necassary administrative adjustments. There is no available evidence to suggest that this time need be any longer than a school year.

Urges 'Go Slow' Integration Policy

ATLANTA — "Gradual transition" was declared the key to racial integration in public schools of the South by Harry Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, main speaker at a closed study session of school superintendents and board of education members from 11 southern states here last week.

Ashmore pointed out the importance of Southern states filing briefs with the Supreme Court this fall so their "complete local conditions can be understood."

The editor said he was hopeful the high court will eventually remand the five specific cases it will be considering back to federal courts within the states.

Ashmore asserted that federal district court judges are completely familiar with local situations and could stave off "intolerable social situations." Integration will take longer in certain Southern states, Ashmore said.

The meeting was called by the Southern States Cooperative Program in Educational Administration, with headquarters in Nashville, Tenn.

3 STATES ASK ROLE IN DEBATE ON BIAS

Inform Supreme Court They Want to Take Part in Fall Implementation Arguments

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)— The first step toward resumption of Supreme Court arguments on school segregation was taken today when attorneys for three Southern states filed notice they wanted to take part in the legal debate.

Attorneys General for Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma informed Supreme Court Clerk Harold B. Willey they wished to present their states' views when new arguments were heard in the fall.

The question for debate then is how and when the tribunal should issue final orders for desegregation of white and Negro pupils.

Arkansts, Tennessee, Maryland and Texas also notified Mr. Willey they wished to file "friend of the court" briefs later. The court said it was not clear whether these four also wished to take part in the oral arguments and he planned to ask them to clarify the point. If they wish to take part they will be permitted to do so on the basis of the notices received.

A spokesman for the Tennessee state administration said at Nashville today Tennessee filed its notice merely to protect the state's right to intervene if it finally recided to do so.

The Supreme Court decision last May 17 that segregation of public school pupils violated the Constitution was given in cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The court left these five cases on its docket in calling for new arguments on how to put integration into effect. Thus attorneys in these decided cases may appear in the renewed debate without filing notices today.

Court observers were interested in the fact that apparently only three state not directly involved in the May decision had responded to Chief Justice Earl Warren's invitation to all states that require or permit segregation.

This invitation was that their Attorneys General join orally in offering the Supreme Court advice on working out the mechanics and time tables for final integration. Apparently fourteen states decided to ignore the invitation. This was the last day for acceptance.

5 States to Boycott Debate

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (UP) —Five Southern states announced they would boycott the next round of arguments scheduled by the Supreme Court. Georgia's Attorney General, Eugene Cook, announced that he had been authorized by Gov. James T. Byrnes of South Carolina, Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi and Gov. Robert T. Kennon of Louisiana to report that those states would not be represented.

Acting Alabama Attorney General Bernard F. Sykes announced his state would not take part. He said that to file such briefs would bind the state either legally or morally to accept any decision handed down by the Supreme Court.

Mississippi Spurs Amendment

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 (UP) —The Mississippi Senate cleared the way today to give final legislative approval tomorrow to a constitutional amendment permitting the state to abolish its public school system.

The House-approved measure, described by proponents as a tool of last resort to keep segregation, passed its second reading without amendments today, 41-2. A third required reading for constitutional amendments is scheduled tomorrow.

The proposal will go to the public for ratification in a special election Dec. 21.

'Hardship Cases Cited

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 — Large number of what the Federation of Citizens Association here called "hardship cases" were shown in the first public school integration statistics issued here today.

These are cases where, because of the working of this city's complex desegregation plan, a very small number of white pupils are enrolled in a formerly all-Negro school, or the other way around.

The federation, which last week failed to obtain an injunction to halt integration, has since been seeking transfers for "hardship" cases. Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning has mae clear that "hardship" transfers, now under consideration by a committee of four Negro, and four white school officials, must be on grounds other than race.

Today's tally, issued under the title, "Enrollment by Race," showed that of eleven senior high schools, all but three had pupils of both races. Of twenty-one junior high schools, fourteen listed both Negro and white enrollments. Of 165 elementary schools, only sixteen remained all Negro, and eleven all white.

However because complete integration was not immediately effective under the plan, and only newcomers to the various school districts were affected by the new boundaries, many formerly Negro schools had a very few white pupils, and many formerly all white had few Negroes.

For example, seven elementary schools had only one white pupil each, and four had one Negro each. White pupils numbered less than twenty in forty of the formerly all-Negro schools. Negro pupils numbered less than twenty in twenty-three of the formerly all white schools.

Southern States Seem Bent On Preserving Segregation

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 19 (AP)—The placards were crude. They had been made in a hurry, obviously.

"No Negroes wanted in our schools," they said.

So the Greenbrier County Board of Education called off this week its attempt to comply ahead of time with the Supreme Court ruling and bring white and Negro pupils together in the same classrooms.

It was balked by a strike at White Sulphur Springs High School, several other incidents, and a fear of race riots.

After a tense five days, things are quiet again in this mountain resort town only six miles from the Virginia line.

Local Option

Greenbrer had been the first county in the southern part of the state — at least the first county with a considerable Negro population — to try integration under a "local option" policy adopted by West Virginia school authorities. There are about 600 Negroes among the county's 10,000 school-age chldren.

"Perhaps it could have been done a little differently," says D. D. Harrah, county superintendent of schools.

"Antagonism broke out in two areas where we least expected it."

About 300 of the 440 pupils at White Sulphur Springs High School went on strike last Monday, parading with the "No Negroes wanted" signs.

Negro Pupils Ordered

Monday night, the Board of Education sweated 12 hours over the problem. It ordered Negro pupils back to Negro schools.

The striking youngsters, with townspeople they had rallied, met at the high school football field at the same time. They vowed to remove bodily any Negro who appeared at a white school the next day.

Two state policemen stood by Tuesday morning as some of the 25 who had enrolled at White Sulphur High recovered their books and belongings.

"I definitely think there would have been violence and bloodshed if the board had not rescinded its order," said Dr. H. H. Crickenberger, a member of the school board.

"Shooting doesn't seem reasonable, but there was quite a bit of tension in town," said Howard Long, White Sulphur policeman.

Meeting Held

The town's Negro residents, about 600 of the 2,643 inhabitants, held two meetings amid the turmoil. A representative of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People suggested they take it easy until the Supreme Court amplifies its decision with specific mandates. The Negroes voted to return to ther own schools.

The other incidents began on the previous Friday.

At Rupert, a smaller town on the western edge of the county, about 100 parents picketed the combined 12-grade school where 12 Negroes had enrolled. The pupils stayed in their classes.

The same night, two of the Negroes at White Sulphur High suited up for a football game although they had been declared ineligible because they just had transferred from another school.

Sat Out Game

They sat out the game on the bench. After they had taken their showers at the end of the game they were chased by about nine white pupils.

"Jingles" Logwood and Longston Rose, the two 17-year-olds, took refuge in a house. They asked for a police escort home. They said it was refused.

A Negro mother said she was warned Sunday morning not to send her children to school the next day. But she did.

Until these incidents, there had been no trouble in the week of integrated classes.

One freckled girl at White Sulphur High said the 25 Negroes there were hardly noticed, no trouble, and stayed to themselves.

Principal Said

Principal Robert J. Nickel said "it was noticeable that the colored children grouped to themselves, but that is a normal tendency for any new students."

G. William Dunn, a leader at one of the meetings held by the Negroes, said Negro-white relationships had been "very healthy" in the community.

Who started the resistance movement, then? Youngsters or their parents?

"Me and Allen handled the meeting," said 16-year-old Kenny Baker in telling about Monday night's mass session.

"No sir, no adults," said 17-year-old Edward Allen.

Youngster Said

"A group of boys were all who knew about it," young Barker said.

"Nobody knew but the boys — maybe a few parents. I know nobody else was behind it. We told all the kids on strike at school to tell their parents and anyone who lived around them about it.

The two boys asked those at the meeting to express their opinions.

"Those people were there for a purpose," young Allen said. "I don't know how many parents spoke, but they were all in favor. Everybody was with us."

Supt. Harrah said he couldn't understand why the protest developed at Rupert. Many of the parents who participated regularly work in the mines with Negroes, he said. Some of them even have a Negro for a union leader.

'We Were Surprised'

"Resistance came among, by and toward people who work together," Harrah said. "You can see why we were surprised, we were confused."

The Supreme Court decision was not the only reason for trying to integrate the Greenbrier County schools as soon as possible, Harrah said.

Some pupils must travel 84 miles a day to reach Bolling High School, the only one for Negroes. It is expensive to transport them.

Harrah said he feels it was no mistake at least to try integration.

The board had planned for it to take place slowly and with careful understanding, he said.

In the other states affected by the Supreme Court's decision of May 17, most of the approaches toward a solution taken this week seemed bent on preserving segregation.

Mississippi Adopts

Mississippi' Legislature adopted an amendment to the state constitution which would give it standby authority to abolish public schools.

Gov. Hugh White predicted the voters will ratify it in December.

The legislature could sell, rent or lease schools to private individuals or corporations, who would have the right to keep whites and Negroes separate.

"Citizens councils" popped up all over Mississippi. They announced an intention to preserve segregation in all its aspects, not just in the schools. There was talk of using "every legal means" to limit the Negro vote. Some council people spoke of using violence to preserve segregation. Others said the councils will not condone violence.

Alabama Committee

An Alabama legislative committee studying school segregation recommended Gov. Gordon Persons call a special session to enact something similar to the constitutional amendment in Mississippi.

The NAACP petitioned the Anniston, Ala., Board of Educatio to end segregation. No action was taken.

A group of 23 Negro children and their parents showed up on opening day at a new elementary school in Montgomery and were denied admission.

The Montgomery Board of Education was petitioned by 22 members of the NAACP to take "immediate steps to reorganize" the school system to conform with the Supreme Court ruling. The letter offered the "services" of the NAACP in developing a "plan of de-segregation."

C. M. Dannelly

C. M. Dannelly, city-county school superintendent, said the letter was mimeographed form and he called an "obvious" pattern being followed by the NAACP. He added no action is planned before the next scheduled board meeting.

Louisiana will vote Nov. 2 on a constitutional amendment defining education as part of the state's inherent police powers. This is designed to continue segregation on the ground it is necessary for preservation of health and morals.

NCAAP representatives led a group of 39 Negro children in an attempt to enroll at a small elementary school for whites in Baton Rouge. They weren't successful. So far there has been no attempt to gain admission through legal action.

NCAAP Files

The NCAAP did file suits seeking admission for Negroes at two state colleges in southern Louisiana. The pleas were based on a recent Federal Court decision requiring Southwestern Louisiana Institute to admit four Negroes. About 40 actually registered.

Virginia's new Commission on Public Education held its first meeting on what course that state should take. Gov. Thomas B. Stanley reiterated a statement that "I shall use every legal means at my command to preserve segregated public schools in Virginia."

The State Democratic Convention in Texas adopted a platform plank urging "every legal means to continue our public schools as they are, on a separate but equal basis."

Convention Endorses

The convention endorsed the stand taken for segregation by Gov. Allan Shivers and recommended the legislature meeting in January follow his recommendations.

Eleven Negroes began attending classes with 600 whites at a consoliated school at Charleston, Ark., and seven Negroes were integrated into classes at Fayetteville, Ark., High School.

Both places are in northwest Arkansas, where the Negro population is sparse.

School boards in the eastern part of Arkansas, where the Negro population is heavy, requested the state to file a brief with the Supreme Court asking a delay in integration. Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry said he would.

Catholic School

There were no efforts to integrate the public schools in Tennessee, but a small Roman Catholic school for Negroes in Nashville was merged with a white school. There were no repercussions.

About 30 parent-teacher associations in counties in southern Maryland sent delegates to a meeting which decided to launch an organization to campaign for the retention of segregation.

An assistant attorney general told them the state government is committed to carrying out the spirit of the Supreme Court decision. He suggested a "local option" plan under which county school boards would determine when and how schools are to be integrated.

55 Counties

Only one of West Virginia's 55 counties had accomplished complete integration under its "local option" plan. There had been at least some integration in eight other counties. A few Negroes were admitted to state colleges and 30 whites registered at West Virginia State, formerly an all-Negro school.

$10 Billion For Schools Needed, Sparkman Says

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP)—Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.) today told a Senate Labor and Welfare Committee that it would require $10,000,000,000 to raise the nation's schools systems "to minimum standards."

The subcommittee has before it three bills which would provide up to $100,000,000 of federal funds yearly for school construction. Sparkman is co-sponsor of one of the measures.

In a statement to the subcommittee, he said "it is important that the committee recommend some program that will begin immediate steps to provide the necessary buildings and teachers for more adequate instructions of our youth.

"We need at least 70,000 new public school teachers. The nation needs 350,000 more classrooms. It will require $10,000,000,000 to bring the nation's school facilities up to minimum standards. In Alabama alone, this job will require $300,000,000."

Sparkman said that to neglect school needs now would be to "sabotage our future as a great and free country."

160,000 Go To School in Area Today

Public, Parochial Classes to Begin In Virginia and In Maryland

The annual march to the classroom begins today for some 130,000 public and parochial school students in nearby Virginia and Maryland.

Schools open in Arlington, Alexandria and Falls Church in Virginia and in Prince Georges and Montgomery Counties in Maryland. Except for Falls Church, public school students will have half day sessions on the first day back.

Two Prince Georges County public schools, Parkway and Woodridge, will open a week late on September 13 because of construction work.

Catholic parochial schools in the Archdiocese of Virginia and most other church affiliated schools open along with the public institutions.

Catholic parochial schools in the Archdiocese of Washington, which includes the District and nearby Maryland, resume classes on Thursday. Students will attend a half day on Thursday and Friday and begin full day sessions next Monday.

Freshmen are scheduled to report to Gonzaga High School today. All other students will begin classes on Friday. At St. Johns, freshmen are to report Thursday and other students Friday.

Some Late Openings

Catholic schools classified as private open later. St. Mary's Academy in Alexandria resumes elementary classes on Thursday and high school on Friday.

Montgomery Junior College in Takoma Park begins orientation classes on September 13 and registration is on Friday. District of Columbia pupils return September 13. Fairfax County in Virginia opened its public schools last Wednesday.

Opening of school in Prince Georges County will mark the first day on the job for the county's 15 new women school crossing guards. The guards, the first in county history, recently completed an instruction course under county police in traffic direction. They will be paid at the rate of $1.25 an hour.

Public schools throughout Virginia and Maryland will continue to operate on a segregated basis.

The only exceptions to the all segregated policy in Virginia will be at three Catholic schools and at two Government-operated schools on military posts. Forts Myer and Belvoir will operate their own grade schools on an integrated basis for their first time to conform with a Department of Defense order banning school segregation. High school students will continue to attend segregated public schools in Fairfax for Fort Belvoir and Arlington for Fort Myer.

Catholic schools in Virginia to adopt the integrated policy for the first time are St. Thomas More and St. Charles in Arlington and the new St. Michael's in Annandale, Maryland and District Catholic schools have been accepting Negro applicants previously.

High Enrollments

Everywhere school officials are predicting record enrollments. All nearby Virginia and Maryland schools, except Alexandria, will have double shifts. The jurisdictions hope to relieve the overcrowded conditions somewhat during the year by completion of buildings under construction or by renting classroom space.

The Archdiocese of Washington is opening four new parochial schools this month. The new buildings are Annunciation Parochial School at 39th st. and Massachusetts ave. nw. St. Camillus in Takoma Park St. Mary's Parochial School in Landover and the Father White Consolidated School in Leonardtown. St. John Baptist de la Salle School at Chillum is opening a new 12-room addition to make it the largest parochial school in the diocese.

A solemn high mass will be celebrated at 10:30 a. m. Wednesday at St. Matthew's Cathedral to invoke God's blessing on teachers and students in Catholic schools in the diocese of Washington.

Md. School Open

BALTIMORE, Sept. 6 (AP).—Maryland students head back to school Tuesday and in Baltimore schools for the first time will have white and Negro pupils in the same class.

Baltimore's Board of Education announced the end of segregation in city schools last June. In Maryland's counties segregation will still be in effect when schools open tomorrow. Maryland's Board of Education, which oversees the county schools, has delayed integration until the Supreme Court's decision is "implemented" by a ruling on an effective date and on a method for integration.

May Seek Probe

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 5 (AP).—Rep. J. Vaughan Gary (D-Va.) said yesterday he would call for a Congressional investigation of McGuire veterans administration hospital here unless he soon receives a "full report" on the VA's own inquiry.

A VA investigation team recently spent four days checking into the hospital administration's complaints that nursing services were "substandard" because of unrest and dissension among the nurses, and the nurses' own counter-charges about the administration. The investigators issued a brief statement saying the controversy "was rooted in relatively minor administrative difficulties which had become magnified out of proportion owing to misunderstandings and misconceptions."

School Segregation Vote Set in 2 States: 232 Issues at Stake

By the Associated Press

Two States in the deep South—Louisiana and Georgia—carry their fight for continued school segregation to the voters November 2.

The segregation amendments to the two State constitutions are part of a total 232 propositions which different voters in 37 states will decide on this fall.

Other questions, to be decided through amendments, referendum and initiative proposals, range from Michigan's plan to legalize bingo to California's proposition for paying out $74 million extra in old age pension boosts.

Vote on Korea Bonus.

California, with a current $210 million annual old age pension program, decides whether to boost maximum payments from $80 to $100 monthly. The proposition makes no provision for raising the added money.

Two States—Michigan and Louisiana—vote on special bonus payments for Korean war veterans. The Michigan proposal calls for an $80 million fund to pay some 250,000 persons an average of $270. Louisiana would pay Korean veterans between $50 and $250, with $1,000 death benefits to survivors, from a $10 million fund.

Other propositions include:

Special bond isues for mental institutions, schools and other public projects in five States totaling nearly $700 million dollars.

A proposal in Washington State to ban television liquor advertising between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m.

South Carolina's proposition to eliminate from its constitution an ancient clause requiring office holders to swear they have not engaged in duelling since 1881.

Seek Separate Schools.

The Louisiana school amendment would provide for separate white and Negro elementary and secondary public schools "in the exercise of the State police power to promote and protect public health, better education and the peace and good order in the State, and not because of race."

The Georgia proposition would authorize the State legislature to grant public funds to private citizens for educational purposes, removing any further direct State obligation.

This is designed to allow elimination of the public school system in favor of private and separate schools.

Says Housing Bias Will Keep Southern Schools Segregated

Residential Pattern Seen As Big Factor

By CARTER JEWEL

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — The vast majority of Negro children in the grades will attend public schools in the South for years where only a few white children will be enrolled, because of the patterns of residential segregation which has been in vogue since the days of slavery.

This viewpoint is a summary of the feeling of both Negro and white leaders with whom I have talked since the Supreme Court's May 17 ruling outlawing segregation in public schools.

Two factors are seen as the basic reasons why Negro pupils will for years attend "colored" schools. The first is the pattern of racial segregation in our cities in the South. The other, which is only an extension of the first, is the further segregation of the races in well defined areas in city housing projects where new elementary schools are being built specifically for the children of families in these projects.

In cities like Richmond, Norfolk and Newport News, Va., where slum clearance for new homes for low income familities has covered many sections of the cities, a large percentage of Negro children will attend project schools where all the pupils will be Negroes since no white families live in projects built in areas of Negro slums.

White families in all sections of the South have moved out of many areas of cities when Negro families begin to move in. This custom of white families to sell to Negroes after a few Negroes invade the white area has served to maintain segregated areas for the races throughout the South, despite the fact that some white families have refused to sell out.

Negro families have had white families on the run for years in Richmond. Early in the spreading of Negro families from the old traditional Jackson ward, whites were pushed off Clay street and later Marshall street.

The latest shift of white families to the invasion of Negro families is the current sale of modern and palatial residences in fashionable Byrd Park to Negro families. Many old Richmond residents never expected to see Negro families move into Byrd Park. This is one of the best residential sections of Richmond. The white school in the park will be turned over to Negro children in the fall, it is reported by some school officials.

This constant shifting of the white population in Richmond and other southern cities is widely regarded here as one of the policies of white people to maintain separate areas in southern cities for families of the two races. This is considered one of the best means of preserving segregated public schools.

SOUTHERNERS PLAN WAYS TO SPEED UP SCHOOL INTEGRATION.—The board of directors of the Southern Conference Educational Fund met recently in Atlanta and planned a southwide assembly next fall to map out plans to speed up integration in public schools in the South. The more he unwinds it, the more he winds it up

Chief Justice Warren of the U. S. Supreme Court used only eleven pages to end segregation in all public schools of the United States. Judge Roszel C. Thomsen, U. S. District Court of Maryland required 31 pages to explain that segregation in recreation is different from segregation in public schools.

Disappointing decision

An Editorial

Chief Justice Earl Warren, using language an eighth grade child could understand, took only 11½ pages to write the decision abolishing segregation in public education.

Newly appointed Judge Roszel C. Thomsen, in an effort to narrow that historic May 17 decision, takes 31 pages of tortured, legalistic verbiage to conclude that the doctrine of "separate but equal" still applies to public recreation.

But the more he unwinds it, the more he winds it up.

Judge Thomsen's argument boils down to three points.

1. The May 17 ruling applied only to schools and the subsequent May 24 rulings were on cases which originated before May 17

2. Unlike schools, recreation is not compulsory but voluntary.

3. Intimate contact between swimmers is greater than it is between pupils in a classroom.

His strongest assertion is that it was not the intention of the United States Supreme Court to destroy the whole pattern of segregation in the May 17 decision.

We are just as firmly convinced that it was.

The Court years ago held that the object of the 14th Amendment was to enforce absolute equality of the two races before the law.

And the Supreme Court has repeatedly held in crystal clear language that no such absolute equality can exist when one class or group of citizens is denied privileges, benefits and rights freely granted to another.

On May 17, it went further, ruling that "to separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be done."

Judge Thomsen in ruling as he did in the swimming pool cases apparently has overlooked the Supreme Court's unequivocal language when it said:

"The impact is greater when it has the sanction of law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group."

While it is true as Judge Thomsen holds, the May 17 decision dealt specifically with public education, surely he must realize that the same conclusions are applicable to public recreation.

It is just as clear that the Supreme Court has decided the time has come to abandon the moldy Plessy vs. Ferguson "separate but equal" doctrine. And it said, so, despite the narrow interpretation Judge Thomsen chooses to place upon its decision.

"Separate facilities," held the Supreme Court "are inherently unequal."

Being unequal, they are in violation of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

In reaching its momentous May 17 decision, the Supreme Court pointedly declared:

"In approaching this problem, we cannot turn the clock back to 1896 when Plessy vs. Ferguson was written."

It's unfortunate that Judge Thomsen could not bring himself to think beyond the 1942 Durkee vs. Murphy golf course case upon which his disappointing decision was pegged.

RAMBONE'S MEDITATIONS

By Alley

14d(1) 1954 GENERAL

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA DEAN SAYS:

Segregation's end a matter of time

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Outlawing segregation is only a matter of time; maybe this year, maybe later, says the dean of the University of Virginia Law School.

In the meantime, the U. S. Supreme Court may declare the question of school segregation one for legislative action and dump the five school cases now before it into the lap of Congress.

Those assertions were made here last week by Dean Frederick D. G. Ribble as he addressed a meeting of ODK, honorary student leadership fraternity.

One of 3 Possibilities

Dean Ribble cited the Supreme Court's referral of the school cases to Congress as one of three courses that he feels the court may follow in disposing of suits brought by parents of pupils in four states and the District of Columbia challenging racial segregation in public schools.

The other two possibilities, he said, are decisions that the segregation issue has already been settled by precedent (its decisions in earlier cases) or by outlawing segregation directly.

Cites District Schools

The speaker asserted that the same Congress that enacted the 14th Amendment, outlawing abridgement of citizenship and guaranteeing equal protection under the law by the states, also provided for segregated schools in the District of Columbia.

The question, he said, boils down to whether the Supreme Court will find that the amendment should be construed as meaning what it meant to those who framed it or what it seems to mean today.

The amendment, he pointed out, empowers Congress to enforce its provisions.

The Supreme Court may decide, Mr. Ribble said, that Congress has better legal machinery to deal with the question of ending, continuing or modifying segregation in public schools.

Should the Court leave the matter to Congress, he added, that would bring about extensive filibustering.

Quoting Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, as saying that geopraphical distribution of colored people might serve to minimize transitional problems arising from outlawing segregation, Mr. Ribble said that was true in some cases.

Rural Areas Different

The dean pointed out, however, that while that might be true of cities like Richmond, Roanoke and Norfolk, it would be entirely impractical in rural areas.

If the court outlaws segregation directly, Mr. Ribble opined, it would probably allow a specified time by which transitional problems could be worked out.

Mr. Marshall might argue that segregation is an immediate matter, the dean said, and admitted that "there is some force to this argument," but he added:

Only A Matter Of Time

"You have had segregation for about 100 years. People have grown into it. This would be difficult to change overnight. I am sure the court would specify a time for working out transitional details.

"If the Court finds the question already settled by earlier cases, the matter will be brought up until segregation is outlawed.

"Outlawing segregation is only a matter of time. Maybe this year, maybe later."

Two States Report Spending More Money on Negro Schools

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In a recent study of states with segregated school systems, two states—Oklahoma and Maryland—were reported spending more on Negro schools than on white ones. Oklahoma spent $3,728 on Negro classroom units to $3,722 on white ones, and Maryland spent $5,305 per Negro units to $4,260 for whites.

According to the study, released by the U. S. Office of Education, 10 states spent considerably less four years ago on Negro school than on white ones.

The study reported, however, a sharp improvement even before that time, and pointed out that since the figures were gathered the states have still further narrowed the gap.

Two of the ten with lower Negro expenditures, South Carolina and Virginia, are among those involved in the current Supreme court segregation cases. Both have urged the court to uphold the "separate but equal doctrine," which it first pronounced in 1896. That rule stated that segregation was permissible if equal facilities were provided for both races.

The median expenditure for a Negro classroom in Louisiana was $3,283; for a white classroom it was $5,222. In Georgia the median ranged from $3,146 for a white classroom to $1,518 for Negro. In South Carolina the figures were $2,805 for whites and $1,418 for Negroes. The range in Mississippi was $1,979 for whites and $562 for Negroes.

Comparable figures for other states were: Texas, $4,478 and $4,025; Florida, $4,367 and $3,051; North Carolina $3,437 and $2,751; Virginia, $2,912 and $2,350; Alabama, $2,328 and $1,675; and Arkansas, $2,240 and $1,334.

On the other hand, Maryland spent $5,305 per Negro classroom unit to $4,260 for whites and Oklahoma showed $3,728 Negro and $3,722 white.

On Jury-Exclusion Bias

Speculate on 14th Amendment Ruling

(Special to the Courier)

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The use by Chief Justice Earl Warren of a new word, with reference to the guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment, had legal experts and correspondents plunging into seas of speculation and apprehension about the pending school bias determination by the U. S. Supreme Court here last week.

In the court's unanimous finding, with reference to the practice of a jury-exclusion bias against Mexican-Americans Chief Justice Warren's crucial reference was to a "different" rather than "unequal" treatment.

As a matter of fact, the Chief Justice made reference to " . . . different treatment not based on any reasonable classification."

In view of the fact that the Chief Justice's word's keyed the court's finding in favor of three million Mexican-Americans, in a 9 to 0 unanimity, new postulation is being made on the school cases.

IN AN INS release this week, correspondent Darrell Garwood asserted that the unanimous handling of a matter, based on violations of the Fourteenth Amendment, as prevalent in the Mexican-American case, tended to encourage a belief that such a decision might be expected in the school segregation cases.

For the past two decades, the bi-school system states have spent millions of dollars in an attempt to legally comply with the "separate but equal" determination of the old Plessy v Ferguson case, as returned by the U. S. Supreme Court in 1896.

Chief Justice Warren appears to be ready to start exploring in a different direction, with a crux based on the well-nigh unchallenged illegality of "different" treatment.

Needless to say, the latest speculation has merely increased the pressure, although there is currently a season of some respite due to the fact that the highest tribunal will be in recess until May 17.

The declaration by a veteran Congressman, last week, to the effect that the United States Supreme Court would find in favor of anti-bias complainants in school cases involving the District of Columbia and four states, seemed ready to collapse like a deck of cards this week when the court coined new and stronger legal expletives relative to the Fourteenth Amendment.

THAT MOST certain of all uncertainties, to wit: " . . . you can never tell what a jury will do," still holds. Postulations on pending court findings of any kind, as Rep. Adam Clayton Powell must realize to the full by this time, are at best, worthless.

An anxious nation waits with baited breath for the announcement of the promised findings and, to that end, the Congressman's encouraging declaration that a 5-4 weighing, " . . . to be delivered on May 4," fades away into the limbo of things best forgotten.

Difference May Force States To Accept Mix Schools

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Differences in the educational opportunities offered by the states tend to make southern states ready to accept mixed schools if the United States Supreme Court decrees an end to racial segregation in public schools when it decides the five school segregation cases it has under consideration.

A survey of educational differences among the states, made by the National Education Association, shows that the states with dual education systems offer the least educational opportunity to the white as well as the colored child.

DUAL SYSTEMS

The gap in the educational opportunities offered by the states with a single public school system and those afforded by states with dual systems can be closed if the extra costs of maintaining segregated schools are eliminated.

The survey, prepared by the Research Division of the NEA, shows:

The states with dual school systems have less than the average financial ability to support their public schools and have to tax themselves much more heavily than do the states which have single school systems for all children, regardless of race.

ONE SYSTEM STATES

The educational level of the people in the dual-system states is lower than that of the people in the one-sistem states.

For example, there is a range of 4.4 years in the medial years of schooling completed by persons 25 years of age and older — from twelve years in Utah to 7.6 years in South Carolina.

There also is a range of 24.8 per cent in the proportion of the adult population with less than five years of formal schooling — from 3.9 per cent in Iowa to 28.7 per cent in Louisiana — and a range of 5 per cent in the proportion of the adult population that has had four or more years of college education — from 8.1 per cent in California to 3.1 per cent in Arkansas.

"These differences in educational opportunity also show up dramatically in the percents of rejections among draftees for failing the Armed Forces Qualification Test," the report of the survey states. The survey points out that the range in percent rejected was from 1.3 per cent in Minnesota to 56 per cent in South Carolina.

The average salaries paid classroom teachers determine, in part the kinds of teachers a community can hire for its teachers, the report states. While the average annual salary of all public-school classroom teachers in the country is $3,605, the report points out, the range among the states is from $4,800 in California to $1,741 in Mississippi.

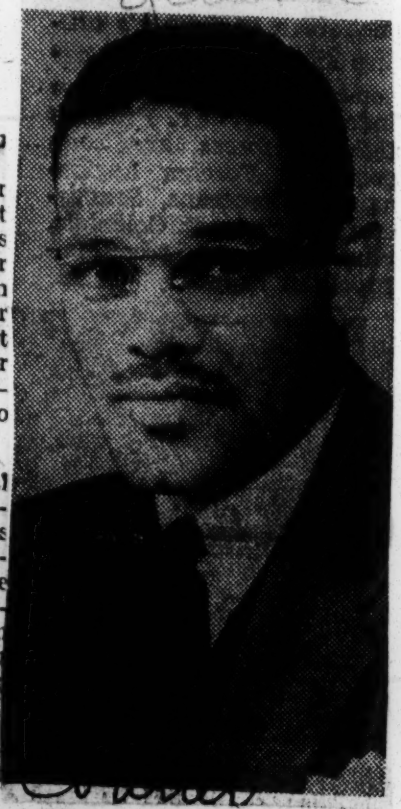
The report also notes that teaching load also helps to determine the pupils' educational opportunity. While on the average the instructional staff — all who teach more than half time — had 24.1 pupils each, the survey points out, the range among the states was from 14.6 pupils per teacher in North Dakota to 30.6 pupils per teacher in Alabama.

LARGEST NUMBERS

Teachers in some states, for example, Alabama and Mississippi, although the poorest paid, must care for the largest numbers of children, according to the survey.

Dr. Clement

Warns South On Bias



DR. RUFUS CLEMENT

"... the world has not yet come to an end"

ATLANTA, Ga. — Separate but equal schools are an impossibility in the South, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, Atlanta's first Negro School Board member, told the Junior Chamber of Commerce last week.

In addition, the nationally known educator declared that a "sober second thought" may change the attitude of white Southerners who fear that public school segregation will be outlawed by the Supreme Court. Dr. Clement pointed out that ". . . In spite of the law and decisions of the Supreme Court, you and I know that schools for Negroes and whites are not equal by almost any yardstick you might want to use . . . If the South should attempt to provide two equal school systems for white and Negroes it would become bankrupt. It simply would not be able to finance them."

THE RAPID growth in pupil-population, the fact the South is backwards economically and yet tries to support two school systems, constitute plaguing factors in the South's education, Dr. Clement declared.

"We have more children. We have a smaller income per individual. But it must be said that the South now puts a larger part of its income into education than any other section . . . These three factors have presented the South almost insuperable obstacles in spite of the will the South has to educate its children well."

Since the South can neither stop population growth nor immediately improve its economy, the only answer is to abandon the doctrine of separate but equal schools, Dr. Clement implied.

THEN THE educator pointed out that many Southerners are freely admitting that it will be impossible to equalize dual facilities for Negroes and whites.

In addition, Dr. Clement cited the many signs that Negroes and whites can attend schools together in the South despite the clamors that "blood will flow in the streets."

"In twelve of the seventeen Southern states," Dr. Clement said, Negroes are now admitted to state universities or private colleges.

"There are more than a single incident . . . I put that on record for those who say that blood will flow in the streets . . . The world has not yet come to an end because of these things."

ACCORDING TO the Jaycee speaker, the final answer to the problem of segregation in schools revolves around two important questions:

"Are we a law-abiding people? Are we willing to give a sober second thought to the problem, or are we willing to be pushed pell-mell into making decisions before we know all the facts?

"And do we have the wise leadership in the South that will help people make that sober second thought? I am sure we do. I would rest my case on the leadership of thoughtful Southern citizens."

ATLANTA—No matter what the Supreme Court rules, there will be a very gradual mixing of the races in the South's school's Dr. Guy B. Johnson, president of the Southern Sociological Society, declared here last week.

Expressing the belief that the U. S. Supreme Court will "hold against compulsory segregation," Dr. Johnson made the keynote address at the sociological society's seventeenth annual convention.

Ask Ike For Federal School Aid

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — More than 20 national educational organizations last week petitioned President Eisenhower to ask Congress to pass legislation underwriting emergency public school construction.

The telegram received by the White House asked for the "safeguarding our most precious national resource, our children." It pointed out the dire needs of some states and localities whose resources cannot meet their educational needs.

Congress has before it bills totalling 250 million dollars for school construction, but the House has turned down the proposals,

It has approved setting up a series of state conferences to be followed by a White House Conference on Education. This is the method supported by Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

President Eisenhower has not given any specific support to school construction needs. The group of signers said they would seek a personal audience with the President to press the matter.

THE CRISES IN EDUCATION

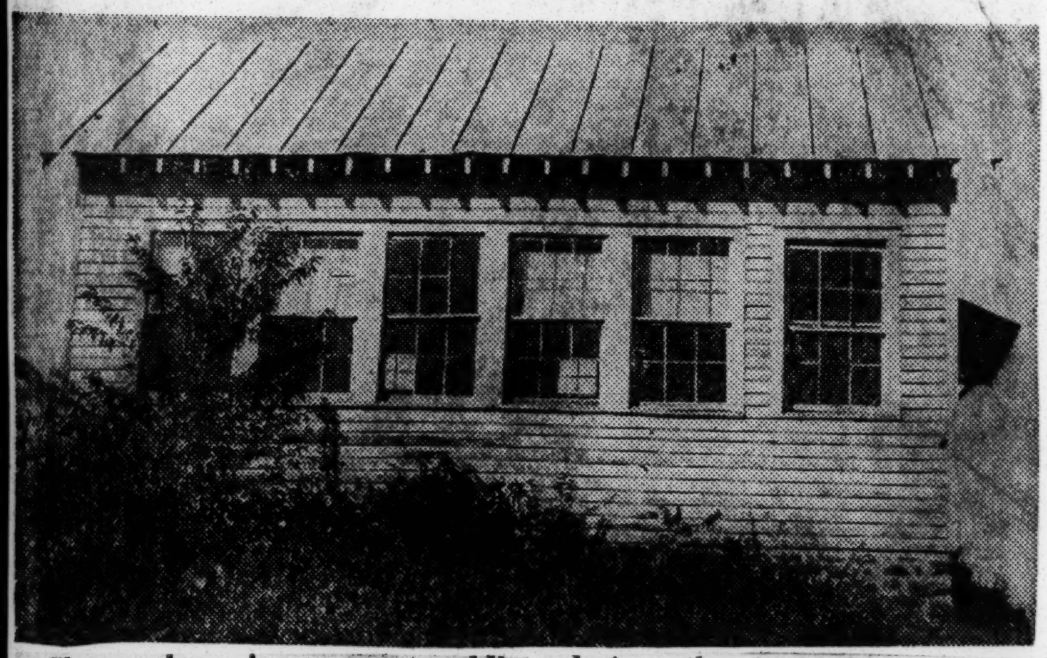
You may have heard this statement regarding school funds: 'Funds allotted for teacher's salaries are spent for other purposes.' This allegation may be answered as follows:

Under the regulations all funds allotted for teacher's salaries must be used for that purpose. Any unused part of this appropriation cannot be retained by the boards of education and used for other purposes, but must be returned. for other purposes may be used On the other hand funds allotted for teacher's salaries and school boards are spending about $12,000,000 of the money allotted for teachers' salaries this year.

It is by comparison that the picture is made clearer, so here are some figures showing the per cent of total expenditures for schools that is paid to teachers in eight southern states:

Alabama	71.1%
Misssissippi	66.6%
Oklahoma	63.2%
Texas	57.1%
Florida	56.6%
South Carolina	52.8%
Arkansas	49.3%
Virginia	46.1%

A Look-Back On The Eve Of Some Momentous Decisions For Us All



Shown above is one-room public school known as the Mount Lebanon School, located on highway 116, 14 miles from Booker T. Washington's Birthplace, in Franklin County, Virginia. This school house was in use during the 1953-54 session. Its pupils now attend the new consolidated elementary school provided by the county, to take care of the enrollment in seven similar school houses in that county. .

IN LESS THAN one month, on December 6th, the U. S. Supreme Court will hold a hearing on the manner in which its celebrated May 17th school desegregation decision is to be implemented. Next week, on November 15, the Virginia governor's commission on education, composed entirely of white members of the Legislature, will hold its first public hearing. It is timely, therefore, to review some pertinent factual aspects of the question.

Roughly, 25 years ago there began a series of court tests, following fruitless efforts to obtain relief through petition and prayer, challenging the differentials in teachers salaries, the inequality of public school facilities, and the banning of non-whites from state-supported universities. The officials of the southern states in which these court tests occurred, including Virginia, stubbornly opposed the efforts of the adversely affected minority group to be paid equally for similar work, to be schooled in equal facilities, and to study in its home-state universities, supported by the taxes of all the people.

Invariably, after a few adverse decisions, the courts began ruling for the minority plaintiffs, but it became clear that decades would be required to achieve educational equality in this piece-meal fashion, potentially requiring the institution of suits in every state, in every county, and every school district. The South itself, by its stiff resistance to honest compliance with the reinforced doctrine of equality in separate school systems, hastened the day when leaders and lawyers decided that the basic problem was segregation itself.

The target then became the dual school system. The suits attacked the roots of Jim-Crowism, holding that segregation itself, per se, was discriminatory and unconstitutional. From the far-away day when the Supreme Court, in the DRED SCOTT decision, held that the Negro had no rights which the white man had to respect, to the day (1896) when it held that the Negro could be segregated, provided he had equality in accommodations, travel, school facilities, etc., to the day this year when CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN read the high court's unanimous and historic decision, was a long and bitter way for a people underprivileged and subjected to second-class citizenship.

WHEN THE FIVE cases, originating in Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas, and the District of Columbia, came before the highest tribunal of this land the court realized that a tremendous obligation was upon it. It heard the arguments, after long delay, and could not make up its mind. It called upon both sides to come back and submit arguments on five specific points, the resolution of which apparently would determine the court's finding.

Then its nine justices, three from the South, searched their minds, their souls, and the land's laws and Constitution, and its chief on May 17th intoned these momentous words:

We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of "separate but equal" has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. . . . Such segregation is a denial of the equal protection of the laws.

That finding came in the four cases originating in the four mentioned states. They challenged segregation under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution, guaranteeing all citizens equal protection of the laws.

The fifth case, originating in the District of Columbia, asserted the unconstitutionality of segregation under the Fifth Amendment as a denial of the due process of the law. On this case the court ruled:

In view of our decision that the Constitution prohibits the states from maintaining racially segregated public schools, it would be unthinkable that the same Constitution would impose a lesser duty on the federal government. We hold that racial segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia is a denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

THESE DECISIONS directly affected 21 states of the Union, 17 of which had mandatory requirements for segregated schools and four of which had laws permitting segregation in varying degrees, and the District of Columbia.

The mandatory segregation states are: Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maryland, Georgia, Florida, West Virginia, Delaware, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas, plus D. C.

The permissive-segregation states are: Wyoming, Kansas, New Mexico, and Arkansas.

How are these states reacting to segregation?

Strongly resisting integration are South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana (and, it ought to be added, Virginia, where the governor, after an initially sensible attitude, backtracked and now is pledged to retain segregation by any "legal means possible," and has instructed his hand-picked commission to find the means of evading the decision).

Awaiting court action on the decrees spelling out the manner of desegregation are these states: North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama (though opposition to integration there will be strong), Florida, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas.

Moving toward integration without waiting for the court decrees are: Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Missouri, Kansas, New Mexico, Arizona, and the District of Columbia.

This is a necessarily general and imperfect bracketing of the states. As generals sometimes say of battle conditions, the situation is very fluid and subject to drastic changes from day to day. A great deal of certainty of trends will come as the months after the court issues its implementing decrees.

AVERELL HARRIMAN CHARGES REPUBLICANS WITH LAGGING DRAGGING POLICIES IN MEETING PUBLIC SCHOOL CRISIS

Say Nation Falling Further Behind Each Year In School Construction

See Need Essential For More State And Federal Aid To Education

NEW YORK, N. Y., Sept. 21—(DSN)—Averell Harriman, a former high official in the administration of Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman, now seeking the democratic nomination for the Governorship of the State of New York, in a speech at Warsaw last week accused both the Republican State and National Administrations of pursuing "lagging, dragging" policies in meeting the public school crisis.

The present neglect of education in both Washington and Albany is due to a failure of leadership, of understanding, and a lack of courage, Mr. Harriman said. He said some 36,000,000 children would go to school in this country this year and every five will be attending school in a building officially designated as a fire hazard.

"Millions of children will be in schools operated on double or triple shifts because of a shortage of 370,000 classrooms or will go to school in barracks buildings, rented quarters such as garages, basements, and the like. Overcrowding in classrooms will deprive many of proper instruction, supervision and attention."

Speaking at dedication ceremonies at a new school, Mr. Harriman said "nationally, we are actually falling further and further behind each year in construction—by about 67,000 classrooms a year. Clearly more state and Federal aid are essential."

Three years ago, he said, in a movement with which the State of New York refused to cooperate, the Congress authorized the Federal Government to survey educational facilities jointly with the states. This study, he said, documented the school crisis in detail for almost every state.

Accuses State Aides In Desegregation Row

NEW YORK — "Weak and indecisive state officials, unprepared and unwilling to meet their obligations, gave a present-day type of Ku Kluxism a test tube in which to dramatize a plan to disrupt school integration in Milford, Dela." Dr. Alfred McClung Lee, Brooklyn college professor charges in the November issue of the Crisis, official organ of the NAACP.

Dr. Lee, in a report of a first-hand survey of the Milford situation made by him and Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at New York City college, gives a day-by-day account of the crisis as it developed there from Sept. 3 to Oct. 15.

He analyzes the forces of bigotry, headed by Bryant Bowles, self-styled leader of an anti-integration movement and emphasizes the importance of strong civic leadership in the transition from segregation to integration.

Another study, "Foes of Integration in Baltimore and Washington," written by Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau of NAACP, traces the growth of the movement in those areas, reporting the anti-integration case prepared by Bryant Bowles and argued before Judge Cullen of Baltimore whose opinion declared that the Baltimore City School Board had acted legally in abolishing segregation.

Mitchell declares that "events in Baltimore and Washington show that. . .firm law enforcement at the first sign of trouble can prevent its spread."

Court Ruling Will Not Bring Integration, Educator Says

If the Supreme Court outlaws segregation in public schools, the decision will not likely bring integration, Dr. S. M. Nabrit, dean of the graduate school of Atlanta University, said Wednesday night at the public forum sponsored by the sociology department of Morehouse College.

Desegregation would result, but not integration, Nabrit said. Negro and white children still would attend schools in their respective communities, especially in cities.

"The same situation will exist as it does, say, in Chicago or New York," Nabrit declared.

MIXED STUDENT BODY

On the edge of the Negro or white community in the South, there would be a mixed student body, but with the vast majority of the students coming from one group, he explained. Zoning laws could not compel a child to go across town to another school.

"In the rural community, I suspect you will have integration," Nabrit added. Counties will not be able to support separate-but-equal schools. In instances new schools have been built for colored in rural areas and Negro migration has left them with only a handful of students, he stated.

GOODWILL

If the court rules against segregation, "Georgia and South Carolina will be in need of much goodwill, more so than Mississippi, because segregation has been played up in politics in these states," Nabrit said.

PUBLIC PROPERTY

He does not believe public schools will be turned over to private interests if the court moves against segregation. Such action would endanger teachers' pension plans and would make students in private school entitled to state scholarships. He further doubts that a way can be found to transfer public property to private institutions.

Nabrit said many white Southerners are prepared for integration. For example, a recent editorial in the student paper at Tulane University, New Orleans, like another in the student paper at the University of Georgia, advocated the admission of Negroes.

"The picture is no as dark as it appears to be," Nabrit said. "We are not likely to have anarchy as a result of a decision by the court. In the long run common sense will prevail."

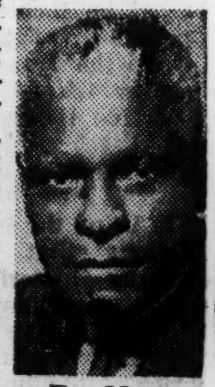
Dr. Mays

Abolition of Segregation in the South Means Georgia Will Be Like New York

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE MORE I talk with people about the possibility of the United States Supreme Court striking out segregation in the public schools, the more fear I find. What are the bases of these fears? Negroes and white people in the South have been segregated so long that they really don't know each other. Though living side by side or decades, there have been two parallel roads which meet mainly in servitude. In a way, we fear the unknown because Negroes and white people do not quite know what the other group is like. We have assumed a basic difference and that has engendered fear.



Dr. Mays

Many Negroes are afraid because they fear economic competition in the open market. They have been competing intra-racially rather than inter-racially. They know that by and large, Boards of Education have not been requiring the same standard for Negro and white teachers and that for decades, Negroes have been given inferior schools. There is a feeling of insecurity. In a non-segregated society, they fear they will lose their jobs.

* * *

THERE IS another fear and it is based on the belief that even in a non-segregated society there will be gross discrimination; that a Negro of real ability will not have the same chance to rise as a white person.

White people are afraid too. They don't know what this Negro may become once he is given an equal chance. Although they have had every advantage, they too, fear competition with this unknown Negro. Then some of them are afraid that there may be a considerable increase in the mingling of the races to the extent that there will be inter-marriage. All these fears and others lurk in the minds of people. But let us face reality.

In a strictly non-segregated society, some Negroes will lose their jobs. Some will lose their jobs because other people available will be better qualified and some will lose their jobs because of discrimination within the non-segregated system. These are not only possibilities, but they are probabilities. But even so, in the long run the net gain will be good. Some Negroes of real competence and worth in a non-segregated society, will get better jobs. In a segregated economy, I have seen many Negroes working under inferior white people. And there is no doubt in my mind that the exceptionally competent Negro will rise higher in a non-segregated society than he could possibly rise in a segregated one. Many Negroes who will lose their jobs will find better jobs doing something else. Some of them will find jobs that pay better than teaching.

AS FOR the future of the social status of the races, that is in the laps of the gods. It cannot be handled by law in a segregated society and it cannot be handled by law in a non-segregated society. Nobody is wise enough to know what the social situation will be twenty-five or fifty years from now on if segregation goes. We aren't omniscent and we aren't omnipotent. The abolition of segregation in the South will simply mean that Georgia will be like New York and Mississippi like Massachusetts. A non-segregated society is nothing new in America. There are thirty-one states in the country that have no segregation by law.

The basic problem confronting the United States isn't what will happen in the future if segregation is abolished. The basic issue confronting this country is what will happen to our democracy and to our religion if segregation is not abolished. Either we believe in the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and the Christian religion or we do not. If we believe in these, we move on the conviction that the abolition of segregation is right and if it is, the future will reveal to us blessings and rewards which we cannot now see. We walk by faith and leave the consequences to God.

Dixie Slowing Down To 'Wait-See' Attitude On School Bias Cases

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—A "wait-see" attitude on school bias is settling over Dixie as the nation awaits the U. S. Supreme Court ruling on segregation in public schools.

Gov. Gordon Pearson of Alabama warned against any hasty legislative action and added that members of two legislative groups will push studies on how to meet such a court edict.

In Georgia, Gov. Herman Talmadge last week appointed an all-white commission to study any decision the U. S. Supreme court will render on the subject. The commission will not meet unless the court outlaws school segregation.

And in Mississippi, Rep. Joel Blass said he was preparing a bill to make it illegal for mingling of the races in state's schools. The measure supports the separate but equal educational theory.

A Birminaham school teacher and a Samson weekly newspaper editor are among several Alabamans who have urged Gov. Persons that segregation be abolished.

The teacher, James O. Ogle, jr., told the governor "There seem to be many alchemists participating in this weird business of pushing aside the inevitable solution of the Supreme Court."

The governor said Eddie George, editor of the Geneva County News, published at Samson, wrote him that "this newspaper is unalterably opposed to segregation of any form.

Meanwhile, a Kentucky legislator last week asked for the end of segregation in the state's public schools.

Sen. C. W. A. McCann of Louisville introduced a bill in the Kentucky legislature to ban segregation in the state's schools. If the Democratic senator's bill is approved a constitutional amendment will be required, with the approval of voters, to repeal Section 187 which calls for separate but equal schools for Negro and white pupils.

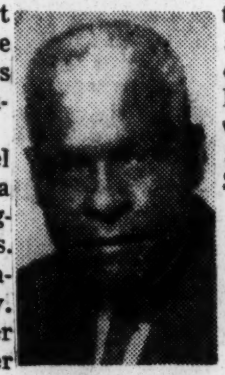
OUR NEGRO COMMUNITY

Segregation Ban Won't Bring Revolt, Mays Says

By CLAUDE GEORGE SR.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, says that talk of revolution in the Deep South in event of a school segregation ban is "nothing but poppycock."

"The good people of the South would not stand for it," the Negro educator told a large audience at the Hungry Club, an organization of Atlanta Negro leaders who hold weekly forums at the Butler Street YMCA.



Dr. B. E. Mays

Dr. Mays reminded his audience that there were no revolutions when the Negro got the ballot and when segregation was outlawed in interstate rail and bus travel.

He admitted that desegregation will be a slow progress in the South, but he added, "I don't believe teachers who are academically qualified will suffer any disadvantages in a desegregated school system.

"It may force some to seek better paid jobs."

After the forum was adjourned, an independent Citizens Committee was organized to study problems which would arise from any decision of the U.S. Supreme Court on school segregation.

The committee is composed of Jacob Henderson, Mrs. W. A. Scott, the Rev. R. B. Shorts, T. M. Alexander and Dr. Mozell Hill.

Morris Brown College has appointed Mrs. Cecelia Mercer as dean of women and Mrs. Margaret Y. Jackson as associate professor of English. Both will begin their work in the second semester.

EDUCATORS SAY:

End of segregation is certain to come

ATLANTA—(ANP) — Educators, speaking in widely - scattered areas of the country, last week, rapped the evils of segregation.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, Morehouse college president, scoffed at reports that Georgia and other states in the deep South would stage a revolution if school segregation was banned.

"There were no revolutions in the deep South when the Negro got the ballot. Neither . . . when segregation was outlawed in rail and bus travel," he reminded his Atlanta audience.

Integration Inevitable

Dr. A. J. Davis, dean of education at Tuskegee institute, told a meeting of the Alabama division of the Southern Regional council that "integration in the public schools is inevitable."

Dean Davis proposed the election of colored school board members for "further understanding" of the problems in desegregation.

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, Howard university president, continued his outspoken role before the annual Christian Action conference at Washington's Mayflower hotel.

"Segregated Christianity"

"Segregated Christianity in the United States and in South Africa is conforming to the pattern set by economic leaders in colonial countries," Dr. Johnson declared.

"We here think it is something evolved from the slave system," he said.

"We have lost China to the Communists and we are sure to lose Africa with a Christianity based on segregation," Dr. Johnson warned.

Southern Dual School System Will Die If High Court So Rules, Writer Says

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — If the United States Supreme Court outlaws racial segregation in public schools, the seventeen states and the District of Columbia, which have dual school systerms, appear ready for integration, despite the clamor of demagogs.

The court has had under consideration since last December five cases in which racial segregation in public schools is attacked as unconstitutional.

In four of these cases state statutory and constitutional provisions requiring such segregation is challenged as violative of the Fourteenth Amendment.

FIVE CASES

These cases are those which arose in Kansas, Delaware, Virginia and South Carolina.

In the fifth case it is contended that the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution prohibits school segregation in the District of Columbia.

The District has no law specifically requiring racial segregation. But the local school board has interpreted various Acts of Congress relating to Washington schools as doing so.

If these acts require segregation, they are unconstitutional, or if the local school board has wrongfully interpreted them as requiring segregation, then the school board has acted in an unconstitutional way, it is contended.

SEVENTEEN STATES

The decision will affect approximately 10,879,021 pupils in the seventeen southern states and the District of Columbia.

to the National Education Association, the estimated enrollment in the public of those states in the current school year is as follows:

Alabama, 694,000; Arkansas, 470,-000; Delaware, 54,153; District of Columbia, 102,694; Florida, 641,000; Georgia, 862,730; Kentucky, 565,-000; Louisiana, 548,527; Mississippi, 548,000; Missouri, 710,000; North Carolina, 950,000; Oklahoma, 520,-000; South Carolina, 536,000; Tennessee, 710,000; Virginia, 690,000, and West Virginia, 441,083.

(As of March 4, actual enrollment in the public schools of the District of Columbia totaled 101,-971, of hich 43,582 were white pupils and 58,388 were colored pupils.)

The seventeen southern states and the District of Columbia have 10,673 schools (8,336 for white pupils and 2,337 for colored pupils), which would have to be integrated.

In its brief on reargument of the five school segregation cases which are pending in the Supreme Court, the Department of Justice discussed the obstacles to integration in a changeover from existing segregated school systems to new ones not based on color distinctins.

TWO OBSTACLES

It placed the difficulties to be encountered into two groups—those of an administrative nature, and those due to the fact that racial segregation in public schools has been in existence for many years.

A decision that segregated public school systems are unconstitutional, the brief asserts, will necessarily result in invalidating provisions of state constitutions, statutes, and administrative regulations in many states.

The Justice Department points out that in many areas existing boundaries of school districts may require extensive revision.

GERRYMANDERING

This may lead to gerrymandering—the cutting up of school districts in such an unnatural and unfair way that nearly all of the white children will continue to go to "white" schools and nearly all the Negro children will continue to go to "colored schools."

As a matter of fact, because of racial ghettos which have grown up in most cities, it will not be difficult to gerrymander school districts so as to maintain racial segregation.

QUESTION ENFORCEMENT

The 1948 decision of the Supreme Court holding that racial restrictive covenants cannot be enforced in the courts, however, is giving colored families an opportunity to buy homes outside of the ghettos. As these families spread out into residential areas which have hitherto been closed to them, it will be increasingly difficult to maintain racial segregation in public schools through the gerrymandering of school districts.

Editor Daniels Says His "Piece"

Jonathan Daniels, a southern newspaper editor and an authority on southern conditions made a speech a few days ago before the Urban League in New York. In this speech he said—the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in the public schools "will be met in the South with the good will of the people of both races."

Here Editor Daniels ventures a prophesy, and while in his own country, he may be without honor, he is most certainly not without that rational reasoning fortified by volumes of records that there always have been tolerant and sane minds to accord to the court the final status of a referee.

Editor Daniels further said—"Governor Talmadge of Georgia will not get out his militia to resist the declared law of the land—Governor Byrnes of South Carolina will not end public education in the South where it is needed more than anywhere else in America".

These ringing words of a worthy son of a worthy sire are having their reactions all over the country. While there are no apprehension over a possible secession of the states over the school issue, it is well that there are those viewing such a transition if it should come, in the light of sane reasoning.

We are one country now, working in harmony for the best interest of the state; we are for the welfare of all the people, struggling under a dual system of taxation and industry which has made our schools the step-children on the back-door-step, with the colored children the most neglected.

In his conclusion, the Editor of the Raleigh News and Observer left upon the forum of public thinking these words: "The great mass of the good people, white and Negro, in the South show themselves capable of living and working, growing and gaining together."

Daniel's is editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, a son of the late Josephus Daniels, who preceded him as editor and was Secretary of the Navy in the cabinet of Woodrow Wilson.

TALMADGE DEFENDS SCHOOL SEGREGATION

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., March 26 (UP)—Georgia's Gov. Herman Talmadge said today that ending segregation in southern schools would "create chaos not seen since Reconstruction days."

His statement, made in a speech to the Florida State Association of County Commissioners, followed the prediction by Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina last night that an end to school segregation "would mark the beginning of the end of civilization in the South as we have known it."

The President of the Southern Sociological Society, Dr. Guy B. Johnson of the University of North Carolina, said in Atlanta today there would be a "gradual mixing of the races" in the South's schools regardless of any Supreme Court ruling.

Governor Talmadge reaffirmed his intention of turning Georgia's public school system over to private individuals should the Supreme Court outlaw school segregation in its decision on five pending school segregation cases.

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, Negro member of Atlanta's Board of Education, told the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce today that "if the South should attempt to provide two equal school systems for whites and Negroes, it would become bankrupt."

No Radical Changes Seen if Segregation Ends

By MILT FREUDENHEIM
Of Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — There will be no immediate revolutionary change, if the Supreme court knocks out school segregation in the South.

That's the view of Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, a distinguished Negro scholar and lifelong southerner.

"We here in the deep South are unnecessarily excited," says Dr. Mays. "Whether we like it or not the process of desegregation will be much slower than we think, and it will be easier than we think."

He lists four major reasons, writing in a publication of Southern Regional Council, a private research group financed principally by the Ford Foundation, churches and labor unions.

First, the Supreme court ruling, if it comes, will apply only to five locations. Some other places may be expected to delay until ordered by the courts.

Second, he says many Negro parents will move slowly. "They will not risk their children being embarrased."

As "proof" he cites the court ban on segregated interstate buses and trains. "The vast majority of Negroes still ride segregated across state lines," he says.

Third, if the court rules in their favor, Dr. Mays believes, "there will be a tendency for Negroes to relax. Human nature is like that."

In many northern areas, he points out, Negroes are free to worship in White churches but prefer the Negro church their families always attended.

Fourth, residential segregation both North and South means that the most conveniently located school is likely to remain all-White or all-Negro.

"Desegregation will be easier than we think," Dr. May adds, 'because it has been in process 15 years or more and no calamity has fallen upon the South."

There was "no revolution," he remarks, when the courts did away with White primaries, segregated dining cars, legal restrictions on selling homes to Negroes, or when southern universities and the Armed Forces were opened to Negroes.

"I suppose I have more faith in my native South than most southerners," says Dr. Mays, who was chosen 1949 alumnus of the year by University of Chicago divinity school

"If the United States supreme court rules against segregation in the public schools, I believe the southern people will meet the challenge with dignity, poise and calm," he concludes.

IN SCHOOL POLITICS 1 YEAR:

Byrnes says integrated schools endanger South

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina said last week that integration of public schools in would be a death knell to the civilization of the South as it has been known.

In a severe criticism of integration, the governor said that although "our present school system of public schools is dear to us, the preservation of racial integrity is even dearer."

Governor Byrnes made his statements to several thousand school teachers attending the annual South Carolina Education association convention here. He declared:

Serious Problem

An "adverse" Supreme Court decision in the school cases "would present the most serious problem that has confronted this generation."

He stated that unless legal means are found to prevent mixing of races in schools, the civilization of the South will be threatened.

"To protect that civilization, we must depend upon ourselves, and also "ask for divine guidance to give to those who lead us the wisdom and courage to know what is right and to do right."

Does Not Concede

As is his custom, the South Carolina governor said he is not willing to concede defeat, "but no man can tell what the (Supreme) court will do."

He blasted NAACP leaders for "deliberately misrepresenting" a statement he made to the education association in 1951.

At that time he said, " ... we will if it is possible live within the law," if the Supreme Court changes what is now the law of the land.

Restates Quotation

"If that is not possible, reluctantly we will abandon the public school system."

"These critics quoted me as saying that I personally would close the public schools. That is false. It is also silly."

"School children know that only the legislature could close the public schools." He said many enemies of the South have accepted the "misrepresentations as true."

Clarendon County

Speaking on Clarendon County, where the school cases originated, he said there are 2,557 colored pupils and only 294 white pupils.

"That is 9 to 1." "We know that if ... three white children are forced into a class with 27 (colored pupils), it would not improve the education of either."

He said that instead of thinking about mathematics, the pupils would be thinking of race relations. He added that racial conflicts would result.

Says People Confused

The governor said that people, both white and colored, do not understand that the backers of the segregation suits are interested primarily in the social problem and not concerned with the education of colored children.

"I fear that hatred and discord would supplant the peaceful relations now existing."

Cites Litigations

In his concluding remarks, the speaker said the next legislatures and next governor may have to solve the problems. He also stated:

"Regardless of which way the court decides the case, it is entirely possible that there will be litigations for some time."

In School Cases

Dabney Sees Grave Racial Problems

SPARTANBURG, S. C., March 26 (AP). — Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, warned tonight that the South will have grave racial problems no matter which way the Supreme Court rules in school segregation suits now under advisement.

"It is incredible that (the court) will abolish overnight" the system Southerners have lived under for generations, the Pulitzer Prize-winning editor said.

The only alternative is to provide for segregation with equal school facilities, he added, and this would create problems almost as grave as would the outlawing of segregation.

Most communities with small Negro populations would find it financially impossible to provide equal facilities, he declared. The only answer then would be to admit Negroes to white schools, Dabney told his audience at Wofford College, which is observing its 100th anniversary.

"Whatever happens, we must not lose our heads and precipitate a situation which will aggravate the difficulties instead of alleviating them," Dabney continued.

Dabney said there is a growing sentiment against segregation in the youth of the South. He said he believes a poll of students in Southern Colleges would reveal that they favor abolishing segregation.

"Negro-flailing politicians are practically extinct" and no longer are the South's political contests filled with denunciations of the Negro, he said.

Dabney said he doubts the Supreme Court would allow any State to turn over public schools to private hands and then support them with public money. This apparently was in reference to Gov. James F. Byrnes' intimation that South Carolina would consider abolisheding its public school system if segregation is outlawed.

The South's problems "will be complex but they will not overwhelm us," the editor concluded.

Negroes Had Part In Building South

Atlanta—We don't need a man for governor who says nothing about talking things over with our Negroes about school segregation and other matters of concern to them.

They have had a large part in the development of the South and should not be ignored. Anyone who talks about the superiority of our race over another forgets that there are different ways of being superior. Hitler proclaimed it by law.

A man who claims to have a high regard for the church ought to hunt up and read that Bible passage that admonishes those who would be great to be humble and the servant of all.

Education Meet Here to Discuss Racial Ruling

The conference of the Southern States Cooperative Program in Education Administration will get under way here Sunday with the theme "the bi-racial picture in education."

Members of the state boards of education and superintendents of state school systems from 11 Southeastern states will attend. Sessions will begin at 8 p.m. at the Dinkler Plaza. The conference will end on Tuesday.

Among the speakers will be Harry Ashmore, Arkansas Newspaperman, who has been urging the Southern states to file briefs with the Supreme Court advising how and when they think the public school segregation ruling should be put into effect. Mr. Ashmore is executive director of the Arkansas Gazette.

GEORGIA Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook already has announced that Georgia will not file a brief in the segregation suit. Hearings before the Supreme Court on implementing the decision abolishing public school segregation have been scheduled for the first week in October in Washington.

Though Georgia is not a party to the suit, this state and others affected by the high court's May ruling, were invited to file briefs as friends of the court.

George P. Whitman Jr., chairman of the Georgia State Board of Education, was elected to represent the board. Members at an August meeting had first considered boycotting the conference.

MR. WHITMAN was directed to set forth the position of the state—to preserve segregation in Georgia's schools—"very firmly."

Thurgood Marshall, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, earlier had been listed as a tentative speaker here. Following the objections of Dr. M. D. Collins, Georgia superintendent of schools and James S. Peters, school board vice chairman, Mr. Marshall was dropped from the program.

Main purpose of the three-day conference, as set forth in the advance program is "to provide an opportunity to consider the biracial picture in education and related problems."

Segregation in Georgia's Schools Can Be Entrusted Only to a Man of Strong Character

SEGREGATION IS IN the minds of all Georgians as we talk about the candidates for governor. Which of these men will protect our schools? To which man can we trust our children?

In the mind of every man and woman in Georgia are questions about segregation. How will it be maintained? Mothers and fathers throughout this state are troubled as the issue becomes personal. Today they see their boys and girls in segregated schools, playing and studying with their friends in the Southern way. But what of tomorrow? What happens to our children tomorrow?

Courts can make laws but people live them. And the South is not ready to live this decree that the Supreme Court has spoken. A heritage and a living tradition cannot be ended abruptly by decree. There are forces stronger than the judgment of nine men, regardless of how right in ethics that judgment may be.

These truths are known to us. They were bred in our fathers and born in ourselves, and we seek a way to prevent their legal contradiction until the time, if that time ever comes, that the South itself, in its own way and by its own decisions, shall alter its manner of living.

Each of the major candidates for governor in Georgia has spoken for these truths, declaring for segregation. The declaration was inevitable. Without it, no man would dare face the voters of this state.

In agreement on the basic issue, the candidates have differed on method, on how segregation could be maintained in our schools. Each candidate has offered his plan.

Each plan, however, is no better than the man who offers it. The public's faith must be in the man himself.

Thousands of men and women over the state have put their faith in a man they know they can trust. Fred Hand has given his word and his word is binding. He has pledged to maintain segregation in the schools of Georgia.

He has pledged, too, to maintain the segregated school system "in a peaceful manner, without bloodshed and riots."

Hand Pledges Schools 'Public and Segregated'

By KEN TURNER
Journal-Constitution Staff Writer

SWAINSBORO, Sept. 4—Gubernatorial candidate Fred Hand, speaker of the Georgia House and Pelham businessman, made a solemn pledge to Georgians here Saturday to maintain the state's schools "public and segregated" during the next four years.

He also promised to build more roads during the next four years than have been built in any five-year period in history, and to continue Georgia's industrial progress and prosperity.

SPEAKING FROM the east steps of the Emanuel County courthouse to a good-sized crowd, Mr. Hand ripped into the segregation plan of his opponents—Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin and M. E. Thompson, former acting governor.

He called Mr. Griffin's plan "foolish and asinine." He said it would not maintain segregation but would only create confusion and halt the flow of industries into Georgia.

Mr. Hand linked Mr. Thompson to the NAACP, which he said is sworn to destroy every vestige of segregation in the South.

THIS, he said, would prevent Mr. Thompson from maintaining school segregation in Georgia.

Mr. Hand, who usually does a lot of talking about the records of Mr. Griffin and Mr. Thompson, left that job here Saturday to Roy V. Harris, his campaign manager, and a former speaker of the Georgia House.

Mr. Hand vigorously defended a long-time friend, Speaker Pro-tem George Smith of Swainsboro who two weeks ago was verbally attacked here by the lieutenant governor. Mr. Griffin charged that Mr. Smith, while supporting Mr. Hand in the day time had made a trade with M. E. Thompson to become speaker of the House next year.

Mr. Hand called the charge an "infamous statement," and urged the people of Emanuel County to "reprimand" Mr. Griffin at the polls on Sept. 8.

* * *

"I HAVE complete confidence in George Smith," Mr. Hand said. "I just wish I had more friends like him."

Taking note of claims by some Griffin supporters that Gov. Talmadge has endorsed the lieutenant governor, Mr. Hand said:

"Gov. Talmadge has told me repeatedly he is not supporting any candidate. He has told the press I would make a good governor. He has told some of my friends that if he could appoint the governor he would appoint me."

"I don't believe the governor is a liar. I don't believe he would stab a friend in the back and I don't think he would be satisfied with a second-rate governor."

Mr. Hand called Mr. Griffin's plan for a rural roads authority "a nice political plum."

In hitting Mr. Thompson for negotiating hundreds of road contracts while serving as acting governor, Mr. Hand added, "This cost the taxpayers of Georgia more than seven million dollars."

Mr. Harris ripped into the "records" of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Griffin.

IN LINKING Mr. Griffin to the pardon scandal of the Rivers administration he read from a Fulton County Grand Jury presentment which found that the governor's executive secretary (Mr. Griffin) not only had the authority, but actually handed out pardons without the knowledge of the governor.

In discussing Mr. Thompson's records, Mr. Harris quoted from what he said were official state documents which showed that a huge dry-county liquor racket flourished during the administration of the former acting governor.

Speaker Pro-tem Smith served as master of ceremonies and Mayor Ralph Smith Sr. of Swainsboro introduced the gubernatorial candidate with a strong endorsement.

At least one other candidate, Marvin Griffin, has talked of using force, calling out the militia and the state patrol. This shadowing of our children with the threat of bloodshed warns the parents of Georgia against trusting their children to Marvin Griffin's care.

Fred Hand has proven his interest in the children of this state, and in the schools of Georgia. He advocated the creation of the State School Building Authority and has served, without pay, as chairman of this authority.

He, himself, is the father of five children. Is it likely that he would permit any end of segregation in Georgia's schools?

This is a time of particular trial in Georgia. Our schools are at stake. Our children are at stake. Their future can be decided by ourselves as we debate the candidates for governor, and choose the man to whom our children can be fully trusted.

Now, above all other times, is a time to select a man of character, of good judgment, of determination. Such a man is Fred Hand. He will guard our schools and protect our children. He will make us a good governor and give our children a good future.

Columbus May Be Center Of Georgia Integration

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

COLUMBUS, Ga.—There is a difference of opinion in this state as to whether or not integration will precede Hell's freezing. Most natives will tell you that the answer is in the hands of the "wool-hat counties," the state's unreasoned and unreasonable rural population.

It appears rather certain that if integration is the first of these events to occur in Georgia, it will have its genesis in this city of slightly over a hundred thousand residents.

Separated from Alabama by only a stream of water, it seems contradictory that the state's center of progressivism would be nestled here.

TO THE thousands of Negro soldiers who were stationed at Fort Benning during the last war this will sound like so much Chamber of Commerce tripe. It will be hard for them to believe that the vicious police brutality, for which the town was once notorious, is virtually no more.

The town's people no longer regard the fort as a danger to their way of life. With a $9 million payroll staring $9 million a month payroll staring them in the face, they have come to appreciate the Army installation as life itself.

Mississippi-born Robert W. Brown, editor of the Columbus Ledger, put it this way, "It's hard for a man to hate when he's got a pocket full of money. We just can't deny the close relationship between economics and the social outlook," he said.

FORTY-ISH looking Editor Brown attributed much of the forward-looking attitude of Columbians to the fact that Fort Benning has not only improved the condition of the pocketbook of the city, but that it has practically made Columbus the only truly cosmopolitan city in the deep South.

People with world backgrounds, different cultures and complexions that run the gamut from off-black to washed-out white have descended upon the city and made separation by color impossible and impractical.

Mr. Brown praised the Negro leadership of the city and asserted that "the depth of leadership here among Negroes is a highly significant factor in the improved race relations we enjoy here."

"The Negro is politically aware here," the editor said, "and he votes intelligently." From his point of view the fact that some Negroes voted for Talmadge's candidate for Governor, Marvin Griffin, is proof enough that the Negro voter is making up his own mind.

"Negroes have been accused of block voting here," Mr. Brown stated, "and I can't understand the logic of the objection since every two years we (the whites) are asked to vote in block (Democratic) or run the risk of being accused of being against pure white womanhood, hush puppies and magnolias."

IN 1928 the Enquirer, companion paper of the Ledger, won the Pulitzer Award for its anti-Klan stand and in 1948 the papers led a fight against the resurgence of the KKK which resulted in the passage of an ordinance banning mask wearing and the display of signs or symbols for the purpose of intimidation.

Mr. Brown mentioned with no small degree of pride the fact that white and Negro student nurses at the Columbus City Hospital have been trained together in the same classes for over twenty years.

Though the hospital has separate wards for the races, Negro doctors have full hospital privileges.

All of the citizens, including a sizeable group of responsible old line residents, are not happy over the transformation that is taking place here. Superior Court Judge T. Hicks, for exprejudice toward Negroes recently when he registered opposition to the erection of a $1.5 million dollar auditorium and civic center here. He said it would cost too much and it would emphasize play instead of work.

THE MEAT of his objection is believed to be encouched in his statement which follows: "If the auditorium is built, Negroes will have as much right to use it as whites. If we build it and a Negro comes and sits down beside you, you'll just have to take it, smell . . . ll," Judg. Fort said.

The unknown quantity in the equation are the young whites, especially those who are getting an education. This is the belief of the editor and regarded by many as the untapped reservoir of support that might tip the scales for the right and just.

Mr. Brown pointed out that University of Georgia students approved integration editorially in their school paper and snubbed their noses at a threat by school board member Roy Harris to cut the school's appropriation by restating their approval of integration.

Students at Emory University have officially accepted the court's mandate and have also asked that Negro students be admitted.

Pulse of the Public

Most Georgia Citizens Neglected to Exercise Their Right to Vote on Private School Plan

Atlanta—On the state-wide election 9 per cent of Georgia's registered citizens voted for amendment number four. Eight per cent voted against it. And that leaves 83 per cent who were not enough interested to vote. Think of it! Eighty-three registered citizens out of every one hundred who in disfranchising themselves are deprived of any right to criticize how the Georgia Legislature implements that amendment!

Our Federal Constitution, under a recent revised ruling, now forbids racial segregation in our public schools. Our State Constitution requires segregation. We cannot readily change the Federal Constitution, but Tuesday's election quickly and easily provided for a change in Georgia's Constitution.

Now our Legislature can permit mixed-race schools to provide for grade pupils whose application cards ask for such assignment.

Three Proposals Offered to Legislature to Preserve Segregation of Pupils

Thur. 12-9-54

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Dec. 8—The Georgia Education Commission proposed today that the state's Legislature meeting in January pass three laws designed to preserve separate schools for Negroes and whites.

The twenty-one-member commission was set up to study means or dealing with the Federal Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

One of the proposed laws would provide for assignment of pupils by school superintendents and empower the State Board of Education to offer "educational grants" to any pupil dissatisfied with his assignment pending appeal actions. Such grants would be "in lieu of attendance in the public school."

The proposal further says that the board may offer the grants if it considers such action "necessary for the better education of such pupil or necessary in the interest of public education in the school district * * * or necessary for public health, morals and good order within the district."

Another proposal would prohibit the use of state or local funds for any mixed school or to pay any teacher instructing in a mixed classroom. It would be a felony, punishable by two years in prison, for any state, county, city or school official to allow funds to be used for a mixed school.

The third proposal would authorize local boards of education to create attendance districts and require students to attend the schools within the district in which they live.

The grant provision in the pupil assignment proposal would create a "grand register" in the State Education Department. The names of students receiving tuition grants would be entered on the register. The grants could be used for education only.

Commission members noted that their proposals would amount to at least partial use of the so-called private school amendment, which was approved by Georgia voters in the November election. This constitutional amendment empowers the Legislature to withhold funds from public schools and to convert the schools into private institutions.

Durwood Pye, secretary of the commission, said that the appeal action provided in the first proposal could be initiated by the parents of a dissatisfied child or parents of other children.

As an example, he said that if a Negro pupil were issigned to a white school, parents of the white children might want to appeal that assignment.

However, the grant provision would be limited to the individual pupil whose assignment was in dispute.

Georgia Vote Advertiser Puts Approval On School Bill

Montgomery Ala.

Thur. 11-4-54

ATLANTA, Nov. 3 (AP)—Georgias smaller, two-unit counties, strongholds of Gov. Herman Talmadge and Gov.-elect Marvin Griffin, today furnishes the push to put across their private school amendment.

The proposal, which supporters had said was a "last ditch" effort to preserve segregation in Georgia's schools, had trailed after huge returns from populous Fulton and DeKalb counties were recorded.

But early today, as the rural boxes began reporting in greater number, the amendment moved ahead with a steadily increasing margin.

Lead Of 21,000

With 1,546 of the state's 1,810 boxes and every county represented, amendment No. 4 had taken a 21,157-vote lad. The count stood at 190,645 for and 169,488 against.

Talmadge hailed the passage of the private school amendment, saying it was done 'despite efforts of the opposition to create a different issue."

"This should put the Supreme Court of the United States and the people of this nation on notice that the people of Georgia are determined to preserve segregation."

Griffin also expressed satisfaction the amendment was approved and said, 'Let those who were sincerely concerned relative to some of the fancied objections raised to the school segregation amendment put their minds at ease. It has one purpose and one purpose only. That is to protect the children of Georgia and preserve our institutions of free, segregated schools."

Griffin Hopeful

'It is my hope and prayer," Griffin added, "that the Supreme Court . . . will not force Georgia and Georgians to invoke our sovereign powers to prevent the establishment of mixed schools in this state."

As opponents to the private school amendment conceded defeat they warned that they were not dropping the battle. Dr. M. D. Collins, state school superintendent, said "we're going to continue to fight for an expanded educational opportunity for the children and teachers of Georgia."

The amendment authorizes the legislature to make grants of tax money available to children in discharge of all the state's obligations to provide an adequate education.

WALDEN SAYS NEW AMENDMENT VAGUE

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

Pued. 11-10-54

Atty. A. T. Walden said at Tuesday night's meeting of the NAACP that the private school amendment probably would have been defeated if there had not been some "shenanigans" by tabulators in smal counties.

He also said he did not believe the Talmadge factions would try to use the amendment, for fear of reaction by the citizens as a result of the disaccrediting of the schools.

The Attorney expressed the belief that "the Supreme Court cannot be buffalooed by subterfuge." He said a Philadelphia lawyer could not tell what the private school amendment means.

HEAR MOSLEY CASE

Previous to the Walden address, the branch discussed the Frederick Mosley case and decided to retain legal counsel on his behalf. Mosley, a gospel singer, was convicted of rape and condemned to die in the electric chair on the testimony of a woman who allegedly could not identify him without doubt.

Dean E. C. Mitchell presided over the meeting and Mrs. Eunice Cooper kept the secretarial record. Mr. C. L. Harper, president, made remarks and urged more financial support for the organization.

The branch meeting also heard a report of the nominating committee which was read by Mrs. Peggie Church. All of the present officers were recommended for re-election. However, a nomination of the Rev. L. M. Terrill for vice president was made from the floor. J. H. Calhoun is the present vice president. Other officers nominated will be published in a later issue.

Under the constitution officers and executive committeemen are nominated in November but are elected at the December meeting.

Ga. okays private school scheme

ATLANTA—Two southern states voted Tuesday to keep colored children out of white schools and a third to curb voting of this minority group.

Georgians approved a constitutional amendment to abolish the public school system rather than to end segregation.

Louisiana voters, on the other hand, accepted a proposed constitutional amendment which would continue public school segregation under the state's "police powers."

Most legal experts believe the Supreme Court would knock out the scheme the first time it is tested.

Georgia OKs Segregated School Plan

Measure Backed In Rural Areas

ATLANTA —(AP)— With mostly rural boxes yet to report, the hotly contested constitutional amendment which would allow Georgia to maintain segregation in her schools by making them private institutions apparently had won adoption Wednesday.

The count from 839 precincts showed the amendment ahead 135,767 to 135,166—a margin of 601 votes. However, the remainder of the 900-odd boxes are predominantly rural and are expected to increase the margin.

Early returns from the big city boxes had led opponents of the measure to believe it would be defeated. But when the returns began to come in from the smaller, rural areas the lead was steadily cut.

Gov. Herman Talmadge, sponsor of the amendment and leading advocate of a private school system to evade the Supreme court decision against public school segregaton, said "the amendment should pass by a good majority."

Gov. Talmadge and Gov.-elect Marvin Griffin had campaigned vigorously for passage of the measure, the keystone to their proposal to abolish the public school systems as a last-ditch segregation stand.

Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin reportedly has definitely decided on T. V. (Red) Williams of Douglas for the important post of revenue commissioner. It may be announced shortly.

SEGREGATION: The pending federal suit against Atlanta Public Schools notwithstanding, Georgia's first real trouble spot on the segregation problem likely will come in the University System. The law school of the University of Georgia, for example, has been the target of one Negro student applicant for the last four years.

That particular case is moot right now — applicant Horace Ward was drafted into the Army in September—but state officials are standing by for other attempts which they feel are sure to come.

With them may be court tests of the regents' new administration measure requiring applicants to furnish "certification" of his good character by two alumni of the school. The state of Mississippi is considering a similar admission requirement; only, Mississippi would require five such certifications.

SO FAR, according to University System Secretary L. E. Siebert, the measure has worked very well — excepting scattered complaints from white students who gripe about the red tape of it. Actually, when the regents made the "certification" requirement in April, 1953, they made no mention of segregation.

In addition to the two recommendations from alumni, new students must get an attestation of bona fide residence and good moral character from the ordinary or clerk of superior court in his county. If he lives in a small community which has no alumni, the judge of superior court can vouch for him.

Out-of-state applicants must furnish similar recommendations and information.

EACH SCHOOL of the University System also reserves the right to give applicants aptitude and intelligence tests to determine his suitability.

Ward's attorneys have already contended this latter requirement was slipped in as a stumbling block to keep their client out of the law school.

But the program which has really kept down applications is the "grants" system whereby Georgia Negro students may attend out-of-state colleges, the state footing much of the bill. The state has no law, engineering or medical schools for Negroes.

So the University System gives them the differential in fees such course would cost in Georgia and the out-of-state institution, plus rail transportation and a living cost supplement, and away they go.

Many Negroes thus are able to attend such fine national institutions as Columbia and Harvard. The program functions so smoothly that the University System offices here have become a sort of "branch" registrar office for Columbia, popular with teachers seeking summer school work.

THE UNIVERSITY System this school year will spend about $200,000 on grants — incidentally considering that sum quite a savings. Otherwise, under the "equal" facilities doctrine, costly graduate schools would have to be set up for Negroes.

Some 2,700 grants will go this year to about 2,000 individuals. Not all recipients use them to attend out-of-state colleges. Under the grant program, some 800 to 1,000 students currently are enrolled at Atlanta University here.

Mr. Siebert is proud of the program, and says Negro students like it. "We get a number of letters from students highly praising it," he said.

Southern Educators Hear Plans For Desegregation Of Schools

By International News Service

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) — Two Southerners, appearing at a meeting of Dixie schoolmen, declared Tuesday that de-segregation of schools must come gradually, and at the local level.

Cecil Sims, constitutional expert from Nashville, Tenn., said local school boards must solve segregation problems, and added:

"The court didn't mean to do these things overnight. They realized it would take time and patience since it involved the whole structure of the South."

Florida Attorney General Richard Ervin said his state is not ready for immediate integration, and also declared:

"Integration of the schools must not be done on a statewide level, but be done locally."

Ervin plans to appear as a friend of the court next month when the U. S. Supreme Court considers ways to implement its school segregation ruling of last May. The attorney general said he will present information gathered in Florida in a community survey.

GENERAL CONCLUSION

Ervin cited these general conclusions from the Florida survey:

1. "Florida is not ready for de segregation, but the majority agree with the court's ruling. He put those who are violently opposed to the decision at 30 per cent.

2. "Whites expressed a preference for a gradual transition in integrated schools, while most Negroes favored a quick change.

3. "Inter-racial meetings are promoting harmony.

4. "Highest percentage of opposition to integration comes from elected officials."

Sims told newsmen he does not like those who would kill our public school system for the sake of preserving white supremacy," and continued:

"I have no patience with those who would force integration on the South. It will take time."

Both men spoke at a closed conference of the Southern States Cooperative Program in Educational Administration.

Dr. Clement Asks School Board To Investigate Bus Fare Problem

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, chairman of the Atlanta Board of Education's purchasing committee, asked the board yesterday to investigate the complaint of a mother of five children who stated that it cost her $2 a day to keep her children in school.

The un-identified mother, whose five children attended the William Scott School located at Scott's Crossing on Hollywood Rd. N. W., was quoted by Dr. Clement as saying the children in her community pay ten cents each way for bus service to and from school.

Mrs. Clifford N. Ragsdale explained that this difference was not caused by policy of the school board The service of special buses traveling into areas where a regular line does not run cost each student twice as much as buses which traverse established routes, it was pointed out. This policy was attributed to the transit company.

It was further stated that the families in his area asked to have the special bus scheduled for the area in question. However, since the bus is loaded each day and the operating cost is not prohibitive they probably feel that an adjustment of the fare should be made, Dr. Clement said.

Without voting, the board agreed to see what could be done to alleviate the economic strain on the families.

In other action. the board adopted the progress report of the committee on building and grounds, a $35,394.84 expenditure of the purchasing committee, and named two schools. One of the schools was named after the father of Doyle-aux F. McClatchey, the president of the board (P. F. McClatchey School) and the other was named after the mother of board member, Mrs. Clifford N. Ragsdale (Emma Hatchinson School).

Education Board Sees Hearing In "Reasonable Time" After Jan. 1

MACON, Ga. — A petition calling for a conference to discuss immediate integration of the white and colored races in public schools was received by the Bibb County Board of Education from the Macon branch of the NAACP.

The petition listed 42 signatures which it claimed were those of parents of children of school age entitled to attend and attending the public elementary and secondary high schools under the board's jurisdiction.

Board Chairman, J. D. Crump, directed Dr. Mark A. Smith, school superintendent, to write a letter of acknowledgement to Dr. J. S. Williams, president of the local chapter of the NAACP.

In the letter of acknowledgement, appreciation was to be expressed for the continued of the colored people in the public school system of Bibb County. Crump then stated that a hearing would be held "at such time the board feels the conference will be constructive and proper."

"REASONABLE TIME"

When questioned by reporters Crump said the conference would be held within a reasonable time after the first of the year. He stated also that he "may or may not" refer the petition to a special committee of the board for study, but he said the board has no intention of putting off indefinitely or stalling the hearing.

The petition asks that the board take immediate steps to "reorganize the public schools under your jurisdiction in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court on May 17."

Those principles, the petition continued, state that children of public school age cannot be denied admission to any school solely because of race and color. "We request a hearing before the board for the purpose of discussing this petition," the request said. "We further wish to point out our availability as parents and citizens of this community to be of whatever assistance we can to you in devising and implementing a program of desegregation in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision."

Besides the 42 signatures, Dr Williams and two Atlanta attorneys D. L. Hollowell and A. T. Walden, also signed the petition, which is similar to those the NAACP said it would file with boards of education in the South as the first move toward integration of the races.

A member of he board in commenting said it appears that the board of education would have federal cut off if schools are not integrated while state funds will be stopped if the races are mixed.

School Board Shelves Bibb Integration Plea

MACON, Dec. 9 (AP)—The Bibb Board of Education Thursday shelved until "a constructive and proper" time a request of 42 persons and the local unit of the NAACP for a conference to discuss immediate integration of the white and colored races in Bibb County's schools.

The petition, which arrived at 2:20 p.m. Thursday before the meeting began at 4:30 p.m., listed 42 signatures which it claimed belong to parents of children of school age entitled to attend and attending the public elementary and secondary high schools under the board's jurisdiction.

Board Chairman J. D. Crump directed Dr. Mark A. Smith, superintendent of schools, to write a letter of acknowledgement to Dr. J. S. Williams, president of the local chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Crump said the conference would be held within a reasonable time after the first of the year. He said the board has no intention of stalling the hearing.

The petition asks that the board take immediate steps to "reorganize the public schools under your jurisdiction in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court May 17."

The board did not discuss the petition or its implications during the meeting. However, after the meeting had been adjourned a member of the board said the colored people had to realize the position of the board.

It appears, he said, that the board of education here would have federal funds cut off if schools are not integrated, while state funds will be stopped if the races are mixed.

Rural Voters Buck School Desegregation

D. Defender Chicago, Ill. p. 3

ATLANTA — A constitutional amendment that paves the way for Georgia to abolish the public school system to forestall desegregation was passed by a comfortable margin, but faces still another hurdle in the state legislature.

Thursday with practically all returns in the vote was 208,399 for versus 181,850 against. The victory was attributed to the wool hats in the rural areas who ran up large enough majorities to cancel out the big negative votes of the urban centers like Atlanta and Augusta.

The surprisingly large anti-vote, however, could not be interpreted as favoring integration of schools. Part of it was a political fight between Rep. Hamilton Lokey of Fulton county and Gov. Herman Talmadge and his hand picked successor Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin.

In addition many white adherents to segregated schools were opposed to tampering with either the constitution or the public school system.

The Negro vote was definitely a factor. On Sapelo island in McIntosh county where there are only 30 eligible voters, five cast ballots, four Negroes and one white. The vote four against and one for the amendment.

Atlanta's Negro precincts voted almost enmasse against the amendment.

In the fifth district congressional race, incumbent Democratic representative, James C. Davis, a state's righter with an almost two to one vote over GOP opponent Charles A. Moye, jr.

But of interest in the race was the large Negro Republican vote. For example, at Anderson park school the vote was 109 to 40 for Moye. At University homes it was 822 to 62 for the Republican and at Davis street school Moye runs up 529 to 12 for David.

The re-election of Senator Sparkman in Alabama was helped by a heavy Negro vote. Sparkman, Democratic running mate of Adlai Stevenson in the last presidential race, spoke forthrightly for civil rights in 1952 and opponents tried to wash his face with it, appealing to the prejudices of whites during the recent heated campaign.

The return of Big Jim Fulsom to the governor's seat in Alabama was also regarded as a happy circumstance by Negro voters.

Macon Parents File Petition For Immediate Integration Conference

Georgia Private School Plan Is Attacked By NAACP Delegates

World Birmingham, Ala. P. 1 Issues. 12-1-54

Group Also Urges Probe Of Teacher Intimidations

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) —

Georgia officials, who fought for and won passage of the so-called Private School Amendment were denounced yesterday by the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who strongly urged investigation of all cases intimidation of teachers, citizens and public school officials.

The resolutions, drawn up at the 13th Annual Session of the Georgia State Conference of NAACP Branches, did not name former Governor Herman Talmadge or Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin by name, but denounced:

"The actions of all individuals and organizations who devise strategies to incite violence, advocate the abolition of public education, and subvert the law as enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States."

CONDEMN POLITICIANS

The resolution continued, "We condemn the acts of politicians, in the forefront or hidden secretly in the background, who advocate the enactment of laws designed to defy our highest Federal Judiciary, and the injection of this insidious propaganda, by distribution, into the schools of our state, which tends to pollute the minds of innocent children.

"We call upon state and Federal governments to investigate these acts for possible violation of our laws and to take appropriate action."

In connection with this, the N. A. A. C. P. urged that "The N. A. A. C. P. investigate any and all alleged cases of intimidation of teacher-personnel, patrons and citizens by school officials, public officials and individuals in every area of activity and that proper action be taken to protect the rights and interests of those involved."

NEWSPAPERS

Georgia newspapers came in for a share of criticism. The resolutions declared. "We deplore the practice of certain daily newspapers which distort the true picture of the magnificent progress made in desegregation by exaggerating the isolated incidents of resistance and playing down the many wholesome and successful processes of integration."

THURGOOD MARSHALL

Georgia radio and television stations were also mentioned.

"We regret," the resolution said, "the action of radio and television stations who blacked out the program: 'Youth Wants to Know' on Sunday, November 28, 1954 when Thurgood Marshall, Special Counsel of the NAACP gave the other side of the desegregation picture.

"These same stations carried the program when the Governor of Georgia gave his views. Such acts appear to be in violation of Federal Communications Commission regulations and indicate prejudice and bias."

Declaring that housing segregation is tied to segregation in education, branches were called upon to investigate all slum clearance.

Assistance in support and protection for "those groups and individuals who wish assistance" in combatting segregation where no NAACP branches exist was urged.

Branches were also called upon to encourage participation in all elections, while the resolution deplored "the action of certain law-enforcement officers, acting individually and collectively with others, who viciously, brutally and unlawfully, beat, abuse, intimidate, kill and force confessions from a number of our citizens with immunity."

Officials were called upon to "seek out these perpetrators and to prosecute them to the fullest extent of the law.

The resolution praised the Atlanta branch and Wheat Street Baptist Church for preparing the session, and commended efforts of educational officials and the U. S. Supreme Court for the decision ending school segregation.

Dr. Clement Hits School Plan; Also Asks For Chest Support

Atlanta Daily World P. 1

BY WILLIAM GORDON
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University and a member of the Atlanta Board of Education took the mike and told a Hungry Club and Radio audience at the Butler Street YMCA yesterday "Some Responsibilities of Citizenship."

NOVEMBER ELECTION

Dr. Clement's first effort was to analyze some of the features of the so-called private school amendment, to be voted upon the General Election November 2.

The Private School Amendment seeks to circumvent the United States Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools. Since the Court's ruling, the present administration in Georgia has been trying to find ways and means to defeat or get around this ruling.

In his talk, Dr. Clement asked what would happen to the billions of dollars now invested in school property if such an amendment is passed.

PUBLIC CONTROL

Dr. Clement said the abolition of public schools in Georgia would also mean the abolition of public control. He raised the question as to what would happen to the child and what would happen to the quality of education in the state if the plan is approved. He asked who will own the chools and to whom would the money for edacuation go, the child or the individual? The president of Atlanta University cited the complexities of the plan if approved and also questioned the validity of the plan in regard to law. He also pointed out that the state would lose the $15,000,000 in federal funds it now receive for assistance.

THE CHEST DRIVE

"If people are awake," Dr. Clement said, "they will go to the polls on November 2 and vote against this amendment."

Dr. Clement touched on another area in his talk on "Some Responsibilities of Citizenship."

As the General Chairman of the Negro Division of the Atlanta Community Chest, Dr. Clement appealed for public support during the present drive.

ON $62,000

"This is not to be a selfish proposition," he said. But for the person who is not aware of what Negroes get from the Community Chest, Dr. Clement spoke of the eight agencies which benefit directly from the Chest. These agencies he said, get more than $300,000 annually from the Chest to assist with their budgets. The Negro Division is being asked to raise only $62,000 of this amounts.

"We have a Community Chest which operates for the less fortunate people among us," Dr. Clement said. He urged that the whole campaign could be successful, not by looking at the total quota, which is more than a million dollars, but to the amount designated to each group and individual. Only through such a plan, he said, could the total program be a success.

The next report meeting for the Chest is set for tonight at the Butler Street YMCA.

Measures Would Give State Board Discretionary Power

BY JAMES HOLLAND
For International News Service

A closely-knit program, utilizing a recently-ratified "Private School" amendment to the state constitution, was recommended to the Georgia Legislature Wednesday as a means of preserving school segregation.

The State Education Commission gave approval to three proposed bills that will be submitted to the legislature in January.

The bill strengthen school district demarcation laws, give local school superintendents board power to assign pupils to schools on the basis of factors other than race and provide for the automatic cut-off of local funds to schools where segregation is ended. Present law already provides such an automatic cut-off of state funds.

STATE BOARDS DISCRETION

The proposed legislation also gives the State Board of Education wide discretion in granting school money directly to an individual student, in fulfillment of the state's obligation to provide education.

That is the basis of the private school plan and the core of the constitutional amendment that was ratified last month.

One commission spokesman illustrated the workings of the program this way:

Should a Negro apply for admission to a white school, local officials, aware of the funds cut-off law, would assign him to a Negro school "for the welfare of the entire school system," a legal basis under the pupil-assignment law. The student then could appeal to the state board.

FURTHER DISCRETION

That board, at its discretion, might decide to grant directly to the individual student his pro-rated share of school funds. This amounted to $157.18 per student this year.

This payment to the individual would fulfill the state's obligation to educate him, and would bar him from then entering a public school of any kind.

The State Board would retain supervision to see that the money actually was used for educational purposes, such as by attending a private school.

The same legislation, on the other hand, gives the State Board such discretion that a case might arise wherein the board would decide to make the individual grants directly to the white students in cases where an end to segregation cut off funds to the local school system.

Dr. William Boyd, Atlanta president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said last night when questioned about the commission's recommendations to the legislature, "we'll withhold comment until we have had a chance to study the proposals."

GEORGIA PARTY AIL SET IN BIAS FIGHT

Democrats' Machinery to Back School Segregation Drive, Talmadge, Chairman Say

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Sept. 13—The full force of the Georgia Democratic party machinery will be employed in a campaign for approval of a constitutional amendment designed to maintain segregation in the public schools.

This was announced today by Gov. Herman Talmadge and James A. Peters, chairman of the Democratic State Committee.

The amendment, to be voted upon in the November general election, would give the Georgia Legislature authority to turn public schools over to private individuals and groups for operation.

Governor Talmadge, who advanced the amendment proposal some months ago, asserted that plans and strategy to keep the schools segregated would have to come from Marvin Griffin, who was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Governor last week. In this state, that means election.

Mr. Griffin campaigned on a platform endorsing the Talmadge "private school" plan.

Mr. Peters, after pledging the party's support of the private school measure, said he was "sure" that the state Democratic convention would vote its approval of the state constitutional amendment when it convened in Macon Sept. 29.

"Unquestionably," the Democratic chairman stated, "the people who voted for Marvin Griffin were in favor of the school amendment, and no doubt many of the others were, too."

Actual plans to put the party machinery in motion to campaign for the amendment will be set up during the convention. Mr. Griffin will be in charge of the reorganization of the party at that time.

In a statement today, giving his own "analysis" of the election, Governor Talmadge described the next four years as "probably the most crucial period in the history of our state.

"Maintaining segregation will be Georgia's greatest and most serious problem," he said.

"The people of Georgia were looking for two things in the next Governor," Mr. Talmadge emphasized, "a man they thought would under all hazards preserve segregation and a man they thought would under all hazards preserve segregation and a man they thought would continue the constructive policies of this administration substantially along the present lines."

The Governor denied that he was a "combination of Machiavelli, Crump and Huey Long" and had manipulated the primary last week and pledged his support "in all things" to the newly nominated slate of state officers.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 13—Virginia took the first formal step today to find what Gov. Thomas B. Stanley called "a legal means to preserve segregated schools in Virginia."

A thirty-two-member Commission on Public Education, appointed by the Governor, held its organizational meeting and elected as chairman State Senator Garland Gray of Waverley, who has been mentioned as a possible Democratic candidate for Governor in 1957. He was authorized during the three-hour closed session to appoint an executive committee to plan public hearings on the state's school segregation problems.

At the outset Governor Stanley, in remarks released to the press, reiterated his position on segregated schools by declaring: "I shall use every legal means at my command to preserve segregated schools in Virginia."

The Governor said letters, telegrams and telephone calls had convinced him that "the overwhelming majority of the white people in Virginia wish to continue segregation of the races in the public schools" and "it would appear that numerous Negro citizens desire an integration of the races."

He continued: "Whatever program or legislation is proposed and adopted can succeed only if it is in accord with the will of the people. I firmly believe that both public sentiment and the best interests of both races demand segregation. I hope we have the cooperation of both races to maintain segregation and thereby minimize the harmful effect of the decision of the court."

The reference was to the Supreme Court's decision in May outlawing school segregation.

The Governor reiterated that he had appointed a legislative rather than a citizen's commission that might have represented both races because any program would have to be acted upon by the General Assembly.

Georgia Unit Proposes 3 School Laws

Postponed

ATLANTA, Dec. 8 (AP.)— The Georgia Commission on Education today unanimously adopted three bills to be recommended to the Governor-elect and the General Assembly to circumvent racial integration in the public schools.

The first would make it illegal to appropriate or expand State or local funds in any school district which does not provide separate schools for white and Negro children.

The proposed measure would make it a felony for any State or local school official to pay out funds for mixed schools. Under terms of the measure a person so convicted would be liable to a prison term of two years.

The bill also provides that any official who shall be in anywise concerned in paying out, using or in anywise expanding any State or local funds contrary to the provisions of this law shall be liable for the amount so paid out."

The other two measures concren pupil assignment.

One assignment proposal would allow the local superintendent to assign pupils within the system "in such manner as in his judgement x x x will best promote the interests of education within the district. . . and every such assignment shall be made consistently with the maintenance of good order within the district. . . "

The third measure gives the local board of education authority to lay out and create attendance districts which "will best promote public education within the school district."

Several Deny Part In Signing Bias Petition

MACON, Ga. — Several persons whose names appeared on an NAACP petition asking the Bibb County Board of Education for immediate integration of the races in the public schools claim the petition was misrepresented.

The petition signed by Dr. J. S. Williams, president of the Macon Chapter of the NAACP and 42 other Bibb County residents, called for a conference to discuss plans for immediate integration of the races in accordance with the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court. The petition itself was shelved by the board until a "constructive and proper time," however, Board Chairman J. D. Crump said the conference probably would be held within a reasonable time after the first of the year.

In a letter received by the Macon Telegraph, Monday, and signed the "Patrons and Parents of South Macon," it was stated that the petition they had signed was a request for three new grammar schools, one of which was to be built in South Macon if 20 signatures were obtained.

A check of the signers of the petition filed with the board of education revealed that a Mrs. Laura Rodgers of 2933 Blount Street had written the note to the Telegraph. When contacted, Mrs. Rodgers said she had received the petition from a man stating the petition was for the three new schools and she wrote the newspaper after she saw her name published as one of the signers of the integration petition.

Other persons saying they were under the impression they were signing for three new schools were Richard Williams, Jr., Louis Murphy, and Mary Davis. Charlie Chatfield of 3340 Antioch Road, Bosie H. Griggs, 3750 Antioch Road and Aurrie Lewis of 548 Hanson Street, stated they "positively" did not sign the petition.

When quizzed by reporters, Dr. Williams vigorously denied he had misrepresented the petition to the people and said that he had not commissioned anyone else to do so. He then stated that the integration part of of the petition was written in plain view for all prospective signers to see at the top of the petition. He expressed regret that there was a misinterpretation on the part of some of the signers and said "all people who wish may withdraw their names from the petition.' He stated that it was definitely not the intention of the NAACP to misrepresent or trick the people into signing.

However, Dr. Williams continued, this does not alter the NAACP's plans to seek integration of the schools in Bibb County. The only persons asked to sign the petition were self-employed Negroes, employes of other Negroes and employes of the federal government, he said.

Banks Refuse Money For South's Private Schools

ATLANTA — (NNPA) — The refusal of northern bankers to lend money on school bonds looms as one obstacle to the proposed plan of southern states to turn their public schools into private schools to keep for complying with the decision of the United States Supreme Court outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

This obstacle was recognized after Ohio banking authorities said Georgia School Building Authority bonds are not an "eligible investment," although it was indicated that Ohio's ban on Georgia bonds had nothing to do with the school segregation issue or the "private school" amendment passed by the Georgia legislature.

Thurman R. Hazard, Ohio banking superintendent, said the State Bank Advisory Board decided last summer that the Georgia bonds "simply did not conform with Ohio banking regulations."

A pending $40,000,000 bond issue is intended to complete the State's $200,000 project to equalize school building for white and colored students and to replace delapidated buildings.

To Study Bills Backing Segregation

At least two legislative proposals to strengthen the state's present school segregation laws will be studied Wednesday at a meeting of the Georgia Education Commission.

The commission, created to find means of circumventing the U.S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing public school segregation, is expected to consider one bill that would prohibit the use of local funds for the operation of an integrated school.

Another proposal slated for consideration would strengthen the authority of local school officials in the assignment of pupils to schools and in the designation of school district lines.

The latter idea was first suggested to the commission last spring by Rep. Charles Gowen of Glynn County.

The commission meeting Wednesday was called by Gov. Talmadge, as its chairman, to consider legislation for recommendation to the January session of the General Assembly.

The state Constitution now requires separate schools for white and Negro races. The current appropriations bill has provisions prohibiting the spending of state funds on mixed schools. There is no law at present, however, that places such restrictions on the use of local funds for education.

Durwood Pye, commission secretary, and Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook have indicated there are no plans at present for implementing the "private school" amendment to the Constitution which

SCHOOL PROBLEMS IN SOUTH WEIGHED

Educator Meeting in Atlanta Centers Attention on Ruling Banning Pupil Bias

By JOHN N. POPHAM
Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Sept. 6—Education leaders from eleven Southern states met here today in a closed session to discuss problems arising from the Federal Supreme Court's decision banning segregation in the public schools.

The two-day meeting of school superintendents and boards of education members was called by the Southern States Cooperative Program in Educational Administration, which has its headquarters at George Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Truman Pierce, director of the cooperative organization, said that the members had selected the school segregation subject for discussion in a poll taken last March, about two months before the Supreme Court ruling was announced.

He noted that the organization was primarily a study group that sought to improve the region's level of education through research projects and informational exchange. He stressed that the organization was independent of any public education bodies.

No Recommendations Planned

Consequently, Dr. Pierce said, it was decided to continue the past pattern of closed sessions since the participants would engage only in the exchange of developmental information and no recommendations or action proposals would be considered.

The principal speaker at the opening session was Harry Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas (Little Rock) Gazette. He is the author of a report entitled "The Negro and the Schools," a comprehensive survey of racial educational problems that was underwritten by a grant from the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Mr. Ashmore said later that he had told the study group that advances in public school racial integration "should be measured realistically in terms of good faith and understanding of the local situation."

"The important thing," Mr. Ashmore declared, "is to realize that at this stage an honest effort by communities with large Negro populations to work out a plan that is harmonious and fair within the requirements of the law is just as much an accomplishment as is voluntary and full compliance with the law by a community with a small Negro population.

Yardsticks Called Important

"The yardsticks we use are important. South Carolina and Mississippi may need time and patient understanding, while Kentucky can go right ahead with a compliance program.

"The test should be whether South Carolina and Mississippi are showing good faith in their longer journey toward a solution. If they are not in good faith, then court action should be directed against them. But if they are in good faith, that would mean as much right now as a border state that finds it can solve the problem because of a small Negro population."

Consequently, Mr. Ashmore said, he emphasized to the study group the need for the Attorneys General of the Southern states to file briefs with the Supreme Court this fall setting forth the local problems in each state and the time factor involved in any school desegregation program.

"The South must present its point of view if its complex local conditions are to be understood," Mr. Ashmore said.

The states represented at the meeting are Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Florida and Arkansas.

Gov.-Elect Griffin to Join Talmadge in School Fight

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Marvin Griffin, landslide victor in the Democratic gubernatorial primary, will attend a big homecoming celebration at Bainbridge Saturday and then prepare for another election battle.

In the second fight, he will join Gov. Talmadge in urging Georgians to approve the so-called "private school" constitutional amendment in November. The Georgia Education Assn., Parent-Teacher Assn. and other groups oppose the proposal.

PLEDGES HELP

The 47-year-old lieutenant governor received promises of cooperation from his major opponents Thursday.

Former Acting Gov. M. E. Thompson and Griffin met in the halls of the Henry Grady Hotel, and Thompson personally offered his congratulations. Thompson said he was headed toward Griffin's room and that Griffin apparently was headed toward his room when they met in the hallway.

Assuring Griffin the new administration would have his cooperation, Thompson said he hoped Griffin would "carry out my platform as Herman did."

SHARE GOOD

"Something good should be shared by everybody," Griffin replied. He said he had never had a worthier opponent.

Referring to Thompson's victory over him in the 1946 race for lieutenant governor, Griffin remarked: "We're even now. You beat me once and now I've beaten you."

House Speaker Fred Hand and Rep. Charlie Gowen offered their congratulations.

AIDS DRIVE

Gov. Talmadge, whose administration aided Griffin's campaign, offered congratulations to all winners in Wednesday's primary, and said the next four years will be perhaps the most trying in the state's history. He urged all Georgians to join hands to continue Georgia's "march of progress."

Hand and Gowen loomed as potential candidates for governor in 1958, as the current primary closed. Roy Harris, Hand's manager, congratulated Talmadge "for giving the victory" to Griffin, and declared: "Mr. Hand is still running for governor. The date has just been changed to September 1958."

Gowen was mentioned as a probable candidate by virtue of his strong popular vote in this first bid for the governorship. Observers predicted Thompson, thrice defeated for governor, and 66-year-old Tom Linder had made their final political races.

The margin of the victory Wednesday surprised even Griffin leaders. It was attributed to Talmadge's aid, the unusually high popular vote Gowen received that normally would have gone to Thompson, and the inability of Linder to cut deeply into unit votes which went to Griffin, as well as Griffin's own long, hard campaigning and heavy spurt of activity in recent days.

Latest returns continued to increase Griffin's leadership. They showed Griffin leading in 115 counties with 302 of the state's 410 unit votes. Only 206 units are necessary for nomination. Griffin's popular vote in 1,710 of the 1,810 precincts was 201,326.

Thompson was far behind in second place. He had only 24 counties with 56 unit votes. His popular vote was 138,571.

In 1950, Herman Talmadge carried 295 unit votes to Thompson's 115. In 1948 Talmadge received 312 units to Thompson's 130.

Only three others of the nine candidates in Wednesday's primary carried unit votes. Hand had 22 unit votes and 69,104 popular votes. Linder had 28 unit votes and 71,006 popular votes. Gowen had 4 units and 63,576 popular votes.

The Griffin homecoming program will be held at the Bainbridge ball park at 4 p.m. Saturday. Cheney Griffin, brother and manager of the candidate, estimated between 15,000 and 20,000 persons will be present.

Griffin and his family rested in Atlanta hotels Thursday, after hectic election night activities, getting returns and greeting friends. They will be here Friday and then go to Bainbridge. Next week, the Griffins will leave for a short vacation.

After his vacation Griffin will take the stump for the constitutional amendment that would permit the Legislature to abolish public schools as a "last resort" means of preserving segregation.

Griffin and the slate of winners in the primary will be nominated formally by the State Democratic Convention at Macon Sept. 29.

Griffin had no announcements of any appointments for his administration Thursday.

REITERATES STAND AGAINST PVT. SCHOOLS

BY International News Service

Dr. M. D. Collins, Georgia State School Superintendent, reasserted Thursday his opposition to the proposed constitutional amendment that would pave the way for a system of private schools for Georgia.

Collins, replying to prediction he will vote for the proposal in November, said:

"I'll vote against the amendment, if I'm the only one in Georgia who does."

The Georgia educational commission is expected to take a vote next Tuesday on whether it recommends passage of the Amendment as a means to preserve school segregation. Collins, a commission member, said he cannot attend the session but added, "I am going to leave my negative vote."

School Plan Splits Board And Collins

By M. L. ST. JOHN

State School Supt. M. D. Collins and the State Board of Education Monday night were squared off against each other in the battle over the proposed "private school" constitutional amendment.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook compares southern reaction to Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling with resentment after War Between the States. Page 17.

The elective superintendent is against the proposal which would permit the scrapping of the public school system. The board—appointed by Gov. Talmadge—is in favor of the amendment as a means of preserving segregation.

The school board adopted a resolution endorsing Gov. Talmadge's proposed amendment Monday afternoon, after noting that the Georgia Education Association had reiterated its opposition to the amendment Saturday.

Asked later by The Constitution if he shared the school board's views, Dr. Collins, paraphrasing a famous Churchill quotation, declared:

"Absolutely not! I do not think I was elected state school superintendent to liquidate the Georgia public school system.

"I am against the amendment. I am in favor of segregated, public schools. I am for segregation as strong as anyone, but I believe it has got to be handled on the local level. We have too much at stake to abandon our public schools."

The state board's action was taken without discussion, and without a dissenting vote.

Chairman George Whitman Jr. of Atlanta said: "I notice that the GEA has taken a stand against the amendment to make money available for private schools. I want to ask the board to pass a resolution stating that we, as a board, are for the amendment."

Clarke Duncan of Buena Vista made the motion, and Mrs. Julius Y. Talmadge of Athens seconded it. Other members present when the board adopted the resolution without dissent were: H. W. Blount of Waynesboro, James Peters of Manchester, W. H. Lovett of Dublin, Lonnie Sweat of Blackshear, and Irwin Kimsey of Clarkesville.

J. D. Rogers of Blakely, who was out of the room at the time the resolution was passed, told reporters that he could not have voted for the resolution.

Another board member, Glenn Milner of Rome, was absent.

The members of the state board may be voting themselves out of jobs in the opinion of Paul Sprayberry of Marietta, president of the Georgia Education Assn.

Informed of the state board's action, Sprayberry commented: "If they want to support the amendment, that is their prerogative.

If the private school amendment is passed, no one knows what will happen. We don't even know whether we would have a state board of education.

"Regardless of what plans are offered to get around the court decision, I think there will be court tests. I don't think it wise to risk a public school system we have been building for 75 years by attempting a system of private schools," Sprayberry concluded.

GEA Will Outline Fight On 'Private Schools' Plan

The Georgia Education Association's fight against the "private school" amendment will be outlined Thursday to teachers at the GEA's Fifth District fall convention here.

Dr. J. Harold Saxon, GEA executive secretary, said he, State School Supt. M. D. Collins and GEA President Paul Sprayberry will discuss the amendment in their addresses at the meeting in the Municipal Auditorium.

The amendment, which would pave the way for the General Assembly to convert the public schools into a private school system, was condemned in a resolution passed by the GEA state convention last spring.

The district meeting, to be presided over by Homer F. Sharp of Covington, will begin at 9:30 a.m.

Other addresses will be made by Knox Walker of the Georgia PTA, Horace Sturgis, district NEA delegate, and Muscogee School Supt. William Henry Shaw. The invocation will be offered by the Rev. George Hoffman Smith of East Point Presbyterian Church.

Platform guests will include school superintendents Paul West of Fulton, Miss Ira Jarrell of Atlanta, Jim D. Cherry of DeKalb, O. L. Amsler of Decatur, H. C. Eddleman of Rockdale and E. L. Ficquett of Newton, and district GEA vice presidents Mrs. Betty Davis of Tucker, E. E. Baker of Ben Hill and Mrs. P. G. Sessions of Decatur.

Principals Against Pvt. School Plan

School principals of Region Three went on record as being in favor of the retention of public schools, and avowed to support several community and civic programs yesterday at their first meeting held at Bailey-Johnson School in Alpharetta.

The principals pledged themselves to:

1. Encourage all people to use their franchise.
2. Support the adequate program of education in Georgia in all its aspects.
3. To oppose the end of public schools in Georgia.
4. To support the P-TA, local, state and national organizations.

Mr. Daniel Davis, new president of the group, commended the group for its large attendance, and attributed it to their interest in finding solutions for each school's problems.

Mr. E. Bouie principal of Stone Mountain School, reported for the group studying "Ways of Improving Janitorial Services."

Mrs. N. Harris was asked to help bring principals up-to-date on P-TA procedures and program at the next meeting which will be held in January at the Slater School in Atlanta.

Mrs. A. Cathryn Johnson was re-elected chairman of the Workshop Council which includes a member from each of the participating school systems.

Also of interest to principals is the State Principal's Meeting, scheduled for Macon on November 19-20.

Gowen, GEA Hit Griffin School Segregation Plan

Gubernatorial candidate Charles Gowen and two top officials of the Georgia Education Assn. Friday opposed a plan by Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, a gubernatorial candidate, to turn over the public school system to the GEA if segregation falls.

Gubernatorial candidate M. E. Thompson commented: "The president of the Senate seems to be floundering around like a man who is worried about his political future."

Gubernatorial candidate Fred Hand, who says he expects the study commission to solve any problems which an adverse Supreme Court ruling might create, Friday plugged for continued aid to the public school system.

OPPOSE GIVEAWAY

GEA president Paul Sprayberry of Marietta and GEA secretary Harold Saxon both declared that the GEA doesn't want Georgia's public schools given to anyone—including the GEA. They cited a resolution unanimously adopted by the teachers in convention here in March.

This resolution called for adequate financing of public schools, and urged defeat of a constitutional amendment which might mean the abolition of the public schools. Sprayberry and Saxon said they stand behind this resolution, and know it is the sentiment of the teachers of this state.

Speaking to the Sertoma Club at Savannah, Gowen said Griffin's proposal to turn the schools over to the GEA "would make as much sense as turning the courts over to the Georgia Bar Assn. to operate."

WON'T DESTROY SCHOOLS

He expressed assurance that the GEA members would refuse to participate in any plan to destroy the public school system. The people must maintain control over the schools, Gowen said. The schools must not be given to any private individuals, groups or organizations.

Hand addressed the Calhoun Rotary Club. He said state aid to public schools in Georgia has increased from $27,600,000 to $115,500,000.

"During the past six years, we have increased state funds for schools from $47,000,000 to $115,000,000," the House Speaker said. "We must add $6,000,000 annually to upgrade the teachers under the Minimum Foundation Law in the future. We also must try to find some way to give teachers a general pay increase."

Get School Verdict 1st, Hand Urges

Special to The Constitution

SAVANNAH, April 19—Gubernatorial candidate Fred Hand, a member of the commission studying segregation, declared here Monday that Georgians "shouldn't even consider giving away with the public school system until every other avenue for preserving segregation has been exhausted."

Hand commented on a talk given to the Georgia Association of County Commissioners here Monday by Durwood Pye of Atlanta, secretary of the segregation study commission. Pye said private schools would be the only alternative if the courts outlaw segregation in the public schools. The county commissioners prepared to launch a fight for the "private school" plan.

ACTION NOT PLANNED

Hand pointed out that the study commission has prepared no plan of action; it has held only an organizational meeting.

"Any solution worked out before the court hands down its decision would be premature," the House speaker asserted. "We'll have certain rights under any decision, and we ought to know what they are before we start making solutions."

Hand again declared he believes that Georgia's public school system can be preserved on a segregated basis even should the court decide otherwise in the cases affecting other states. He said he would reveal his plan later.

CLAIMS CONFUSION

Meanwhile, another candidate, Rep. Charles L. Gowen of Brunswick, told the Waycross Rotary Club that Georgians are "discouraged and confused" by statements by spokesmen for the Georgia Commission on Education.

Gowen quoted Pye as saying that Georgia can keep the schools segregated by regulating them "just as it regulates railroads." Gowen commented: "If he had ridden a through train or eaten a meal in a dining car on a train passing through Georgia he would know that the railroad setup for handling segregation in our schools isn't what the people of Georgia want."

GRIFFIN COMMENT

Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, vice chairman of the study commission, who will run for governor, made this brief comment on Pye's talk:

"It is quite similar to the plan I suggested for turning over the school system to the Georgia Education Assn. in event the courts ban segregation."

Former Acting Gov. M. E. Thompson, a gubernatorial candidate, declared that he would preserve segregation in the schools if he is elected governor. He predicted, however, that the courts will uphold separate but equal schools.

Commissioners' Fight For Segregation Likely

By M. L. ST. JOHN
Constitution Political Editor

SAVANNAH, April 19—The Georgia County Commissioners Association indicated here Monday it will fight to preserve segregation in the public schools.

It was learned that the resolution committee Tuesday will recommend to the full convention that segregated schools be kept even if it means shifting from public to private schools.

Gubernatorial candidates discuss school segregation issue in Savannah and Waycross. Story on Page 13.

The association also is expected to be asked to campaign for passage of a constitutional amendment, sponsored by Gov. Talmadge, to enable the state to make educational grants to children in lieu of providing public schools.

In this connection, it was pointed out that the Georgia Education Assn. at its recent convention in Atlanta launched a campaign against the constitutional amendment and called on the state to finance an adequate system of public schools.

An appeal on the resolution regarding segregation is expected to be made Tuesday to the commissioners by Gov. Talmadge.

Durwood Pye of Atlanta, secretary of the commission studying segregation, Monday spoke in behalf of the amendment.

His talk indicated that the study group is trying to sell the idea of private schools to Georgians in the event the United States Supreme Court bans segregation in public schools.

In actions Monday the association presented the Georgia Citizens Award to H. L. Wingate of Pelham, president of the Georgia Farm Bureau, for his contribution to local and state government and his interest in the development of roads.

Kenneth Dunwoody of Macon, president of the association, and Frank Allicorn of Meriwether County, chairman of the highway committee, both hit the state administration for "circumventing the spirit of the constitutional amendment allocating gasoline taxes to road building."

Dunwoody and Allicorn said the roads should get all the gasoline and tag funds and should not be "subject to shearing by the budget commission."

Dunwoody also opposed any move to increase the weight allowances for trucks which, he said, "would destroy the highways."

At Allicorn's request the association in fixing its order of business ruled out of order any move which might be made to have the association endorse any candidate for any political office.

This dispelled reports the convention would indorse Jim Gillis, who addresses the group Tuesday, for governor.

More Light Needed On Bell School Plan

A member of the state study commission on segregation, John Sammons Bell, has told the Daughters of the American Revolution that public boards will continue to regulate Georgia's schools even if the schools become private instead of public.

Private schools, public boards? Now there is a statement that calls for careful concentration. Mr. Bell should elucidate further.

His is the second profound suggestion that has come from the commission, Marvin Griffin having recommended that the schools be turned over to the Georgia Education Association. What the two statements indicate is that at least two members of the study commission need to do more studying.

Perhaps when the commission executive secretary, Durwood Pye, addresses the county commissioners convention at Savannah next week he will propose something more digestible. The state will be listening.

Two-Way Plan Is Revealed

By JOHN GOLIGHTLY

PITTSBURGH — (INS) —No decision of the U. S. Supreme Court will change Georgia's school system, in the opinion of Gov. Herman E. Talmadge.

The Georgia chief executive gave the prediction during an interview in Pittsburgh last week.

He contended that previous decisions on segregation by the nation's high court follow the constitution which, he said, upholds separating white and Negro pupils in the school rooms and school buildings.

THE SUPREME COURT is expected to rule soon on an appeal from the NAACP which charges that school segregation is unconstitutional.

Governor Talmadge said the Constitution has not changed but that he believes the court has. He added:

"I hope the court won't be swayed by pressure. If, despite my supposition on the Constitution, the court rules that segregation is illegal, Georgia plans a two-way approach:

"(1) A legislative study commission will be established to recommend a course of action to the general assembly.

"(2) We have in preparation a constitutional amendment for submission to the people of Georgia. If ratified, the amendment would enable the Legislature, at its discretion, to utilize tax money for payment of tuition fees to private schools."

* * *

IN EFFECT, the Governor agreed, the amendment would continue the separation of Negro and white pupils in the schools. He said:

"I assure you the segregation setup in Georgia will not change. Ninety-eight per cent of the white people and 95 per cent of the colored want it as it is."

Governor Talmadge, a tall man, who speaks quietly, delayed a luncheon meeting in his honor while he discussed the controversial question. His visit to Pittsburgh was sponsored by the Pittsburgh Personnel Association. He spoke April 15 on "Leadership and Freedom on Trial."

He emphasized several times, in answering a series of questions, that nothing will interfere with the course he and his legislative leaders have decided upon, even the possible withdrawal of Federal aid to education.

WITH PARTICULAR emphasis, he pointed out that in his opinion the operation of the school system is one of the "basic and individual rights of states and is not a Federal function."

The forty-year-old chief executive added:

"In our educational system, equality prevails. We pay equal salaries to teachers in white and colored schools, providing their professional qualifications are equal. The costs of the buildings are equal and the number of pupils in each is the same.

"Fifty-three cents of every tax dollar in Georgia goes for education and I am proud to say that it is a higher percentage than any other state in the union."

HE SAID the state is spending 225 million dollars for school buildings and facilities for "white and colored in every branch of education."

He stated that he has no future political plans other than to complete the eight months remaining on his second term as Governor.

$10 Million For Georgia Schools

SAVANNAH, Ga. — Painstaking groundwork and a sheaf of facts paid off last week for every Negro child attending school in Savannah and Chatham county, and will continue to pay off for at least a generation in a $10,000,000 building program.

It came about when the State Board of education approved the money, but withheld approval of all building plans and site locations for Chatham county schools, pending "working out the details." The details must be worked out with Negro leaders of Savannah and the city and county board of education.

When these details are worked out, the state board will make $4,211,070 available to the county board. The rest of the money will come from other sources.

Last week's action climaxed seven years of effort begun by a Savannah group called the Hub, and completed by the education committee of the Savannah NAACP, headed by W. S. Scott.

Last October 30, the NAACP committee wrote to the Savannah board, pointing out such dramatic facts as this:

1. There were 100 classes of 3,200 Negro pupils on double shift.
2. There were no white classes on double shift.
3. Of all classrooms built during the term of the previous board president, 71 per cent of all new classrooms were for white children.
4. During that term, $2,005,305 was spent on white schools and $732,091 on Negro schools.
5. That one school and three classrooms in another were closed because of a lack of white students.
6. That Maple Street school for Negroes is 150 years old.

These facts were ignored by the Savannah board, and Scott, B. S. Adams, vice chairman of his committee and W. W. Law, president of the local NAACP took their complaint to the state board during last week's hearings.

Scott told the board the NAACP also objected to priorities in the new building program, and to sites for Negro schools, one of which was beside a railroad.

State board member James S. Peters agreed with Scout that conditions in Negro schools here are deplorable, and the Maple Street school is the worst he has ever seen.

The board then asked Allen C. Smith, director of the state school building program and Paul Cousins, director of the department of Negro education to come to Savannah to work out details of the program with the local board and the NAACP group.

of the public-private plan.
"When the people in the two-unit counties learn what this means to them and then schools they will let their wishes be known in no uncertain terms," Mr. Saxon stated.

He also went on to explain that the private-public would "mean the abolishment of the state teachers' salary schedule."

Proposed Plan Would Destroy Equalization Of School Money

SAVANNAH, Ga. — An official of the GEA warned small Georgia counties Saturday that they might suffer if any publicly-supported private school system should be granted in the State.

The much - publicized private school plan to maintain segregation would make "rich counties richer and poor counties poorer," Harold Saxon, executive secretary of the Georgia Education Association, asserted here.

The GEA official pointed out that subsidies to pupils to attend private schools would not amount to as much in the less-populated coun-

In his speech, prepared for delivery at the state convention of the American Association of University Women, Mr. Saxon said the proposed plan would destroy equalization of school money distribution.

Segregation Hearings To Open June 9

By ALBERT RILEY

Gov. Talmadge and a planning subcommittee of the Georgia Education Commission Tuesday invited white and Negro citizens and organizations to recommend methods of preserving segregation in the schools of this state.

After a closed session with the governor, the subcommittee announced that a series of public hearings will be held on the segregation question, beginning June 9, with a meeting of the full 21-member commission.

At this meeting, scheduled for 9 a. m. in the Senate chamber of the State Capitol, the commission will first hear the views of Georgia's gubernatorial candidates.

Talmadge, as spokesman for the subcommittee, said the commission will then hear from representatives of the Georgia Education Assn., the Parent-Teacher Association and other similar and civic groups."

Leaders of the GEA and PTA have voiced opposition to Talmadge's "last resort" plan of abolishing the public school system and making individual state aid grants to persons for private school education in order to preserve segregation.

"We want every citizen of Georgia who has a plan or a program to submit his views," Talmadge said, as he invited individuals, "white and colored, adult or minor," to submit recommendations in writing to Durwood Pye, secretary of the commission.

The planning subcommittee of the commission, which was created by the last Legislature to study means of preserving segregation—Talmadge referred to it as "the educational segregation commission"—is composed of the governor, Atty. Gen. Cook, House floor leader Frank Twitty, Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of Atlanta Public Schools; Charles Bloch, Macon attorney and member of the State Board of Regents, and W. S. Mann, McRae lawyer. All were present except Twitty, who was in Washington, D.C., and the meeting also was attended by Pye and B. D. Murphy, legal counsel.

GEORGIA EDUCATION COMMISSION PLANNING GROUP
Left to Right: Pye, Mann, Miss Jarrell, Cook, Murphy, Bloch With Talmadge

OPEN STUDY

At the conclusion of the meeting, which set in motion the commission's study, Talmadge as commission chairman announced the group had reached these conclusions:

"1. The full commission should meet at the earliest practicable date at the call of the chairman and that will be at 9 a.m. Wednesday, June 9, in the Senate chamber of the State Capitol.

"2. We will start with a series of public hearings open to the press, radio and television, at which responsible groups and others will be able to present their views and suggestions.

"3. We will invite specifically to this meeting on June 9 all candidates for governor to present their views and recommended plans. We will hear from each one individually in alphabetical order.

"4. When all candidates for governor have been heard from we will hear from the Georgia Education Assn., the Parent-Teacher Assn. and other similar and civic groups.

"5. We want every citizen of Georgia who has a plan to submit his views. In view of the fact that there are 3½ million Georgians, we won't be able to hear all persons individually. If any individual in Georgia, white or colored, adult or minor, has a plan the commission might be interested in, he is invited to submit it in writing to Durwood Pye, Room 328-A at the State Capitol. We would like to have legal briefs submitted if possible, but if a person with a plan doesn't know the law we will have our lawyers look into it."

Asked how long the series of public hearings might last, Talmadge said: "That's like asking how long is it going to rain."

TALMADGE DEFIES HIGH COURT RULING

Governor Says Georgia Will Keep Schools Segregated Even if Troops Are Sent

ATLANTA, May 23 (UP)—Gov. Herman Talmadge declared today that Negroes and whites would not attend the same schools in Georgia even if troops were sent in to enforce the Supreme Court's ban on segregation.

"We're not going to secede from the Union," he said, "but the people of Georgia will not comply with the decision of the court."

"It would take several divisions of troops down here to police every school building in Georgia and then they wouldn't be able to enforce it," he said. "We're going to do whatever is necessary in Georgia to keep white children in white schools and colored children in colored schools."

Governor Talmadge's statements came in a recorded interview on the Columbia Broadcasting System's radio program "The World Today."

Scores 'Inferiority' Argument

His sentiments on the Supreme Court's ruling were echoed on the program by Georgia's Attorney General, Eugene Cook, who took particular issue with the court's argument that to separate Negroes from whites of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race "generates a feeling of inferiority."

"Segregation does not present to the Negroes what we know in Georgia as an inferiority complex," the Attorney General said. "The Negroes in this state don't suffer that.

"I think perhaps they will suffer it more if they're forced to integrate with white children because complex and psychological factors will be a constant reminder that they are not up to par with the average white person."

Mr. Cook contended that the decision "even opens the doors to a constitutional attack on our laws prohibiting intermarriage of the Negroes and white people."

"Now, if it can be shown by a Negro or Negroes that they suffer an inferiority complex because they can't intermarry with white people," Mr. Cook said, "by the same token the court would have to strike down these [laws against intermarriage]."

Others Hail Decision

Another Georgian interviewed on the program, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse college for Negroes, said "the back of segregation has been broken" as a result of the court's decision.

George Mitchell, executive secretary of the Southern Regional Council, said the decision gave every child an equal opportunity to get education. He said the resulting increased skills of the region's population would "enrich this and every other Southern community."

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, dismissed as "nonsense" the Talmadge statement.

Negro or Negroes that they suffer an inferiority complex because they can't intermarry with white people," Cook said, "by the same token the court would have to strike down these (laws against intermarriage)."

Both Talmadge and Cook said Negroes in the state do not want an unsegregated school system.

"The people of Georgia want our school system left alone and left like it is," Talmadge declared. "That is true of 98 per cent of the white people of Georgia and 98 per cent of the colored people of Georgia."

Talmadge said force cannot make people "do things that they are inherently opposed to."

"You can't change ideas, thoughts, thinking, and the customs of people by decisions of the Supreme Court," he said, "that is unless you line them up against a wall and shoot them. And I don't think they'll be able to do that in our republican form of Government."

Georgia an inferiority complex," the attorney general said. "The Negroes in this state don't suffer that.

"I think perhaps they will suffer it more if they're forced to integrate with white children because complex and psychological factors will be a constant reminder that they are not up to par with the average white person."

Calls Negroes Against It

Cook contended that the decision "even opens the doors to a constitutional attack on our laws prohibiting intermarriage of the Negroes and white people."

"Now, if it can be shown by a

Talmadge Says Schools To Stay Split Even If Troops Are Used

By The United Press

New York, May 23.—Governor Talmadge of Georgia declared today that Negroes and whites will not attend the same schools in his state even if troops are sent in to enforce the Supreme Court's ban on segregation.

"We're not going to secede from the Union," Talmadge said, "but the people of Georgia will not comply with the decision of the court."

"It would take several divisions of troops down here to police every school building in Georgia and then they wouldn't be able to enforce it," he said.

A community-level campaign for elimination of public-school segregation has been launched by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. New cracks have been reported in segregation in Southern industries. Stories on Page 4.

Will Leave Office

"We're going to do whatever is necessary in Georgia to keep white children in white schools and colored children in colored schools."

Talmadge's statements were made in a network radio interview recorded in Atlanta.

The Governor, like his father, the late Governor Eugene Talmadge, is a longtime advocate of white supremacy.

Talmadge's term as Governor will expire in January and he is prevented by law from seeking re-election. A move to change the Georgia Constitution and draft him to lead a Southern "crusade against desegregation got under way last week. But Talmadge spiked it yesterday with a statement that he did not want the action to be taken.

Talmadge's sentiments on the Supreme Court's ruling were echoed on the program by Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook. He took particular issue with the court's argument that to separate Negroes from whites of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race "generates a feeling of inferiority. . ."

Court Killed Gowen Plan --Talmadge

Gov. Talmadge said Monday that the U.S. Supreme Court, in effect, already has ruled the Gowen school plan unconstitutional.

Talmadge said he hopes someone will present a workable plan to the segregation study commission for preservation of public schools on a segregated basis.

"I would not want to abolish public schools and go on a private basis except as a last resort," the governor said.

"COURT HAS RULED"

Asked if the plan proposed by Rep. Charlie Gowen of Brunswick, a gubernatorial candidate, would solve the problem, Talmadge replied:

"The court a week ago ruled that the county board of education, the supreme school authorities in a county, cannot assign students to schools by color. If the supreme authority in a county can't do it, I don't see how you could expect a lesser authority, the county school superintendent, to be able to do it."

Gowen has proposed that the Legislature authorize local school superintendents to use their own discretion in assigning students to schools they must attend.

SURPRISED

The governor commented briefly on the Supreme Court's latest segregation decisions Monday.

He said he was surprised that the court permitted segregation on the Houston, Tex., golf course, after ruling against segregation in schools and in a city-operated amphitheater.

The five-member subcommittee of the state segregation study commission will meet at 3 p.m. Tuesday at the State Capitol to draft procedure plans for the full commission.

$5 Million In School Approved

Half of Funds Go to Negroes

The Georgia Board of Education Monday approved an additional $5,688,204 worth of school-building construction, most of which is for Negro schools—without mentioning the United States Supreme Court segregation decision.

Then, with obvious pride, the board announced that one-half of the state's $178,971,750 school building program now under way is going for Negro facilities—although Negroes comprise only one-third of the state's population.

197 OF 203 SCHOOLS

Claude Purcell, director of administration, announced to the board it had approved building applications for all school systems except one, Walton. Walton is involved in a consolidation dispute. He said the program covers 197 of the 203 school systems. Then he noted that half the classrooms will be for Negroes. Board Chairman George Whitman Jr. suggested that newspapers point out how much the Negroes are receiving.

The total building program, excepting Walton County, will cost the state $14,303,340 annually to finance. The local systems are using these grants to finance the $178,971,750 program through the State School Building Authority. Local systems are putting up an additional $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 above the $178,971,750 program.

TO PUBLISH REPORT

At the suggestion of Vice Chairman James S. Peters, the board voted to publish a report on Georgia's unique school building plan and make it available to states throughout the nation. Peters said he found other states interested in the Georgia authority-type financing plan when he attended the National Democratic Committee meeting recently.

The City of Marietta received approval of three white and four Negro classrooms costing a total of $137,478.

Other new projects approved were: Carroll County, 78 white and 47 Negro classrooms, $1,825,791 total cost; Tift, 39 and 50, $1,434,291; Hancock, 6 and 71, $1,200,856; Bleckley, 22 and 11, $426,225; Chattahoochee, 2 and 8, $142,155; Bryan, 7 and 12, $232,515; and Vidalia, 4 and 5, $288,893. The board amended McIntosh's application to provide $900 a year in state aid for housing students from Boys' Estate, located in Glynn County.

GLYNN COUNTY

Glynn County was the only county in the state not to file an application for equalization building funds, Purcell said. A few counties and cities did not use the State School Building Authority plan after getting the state grants.

In the Greater Atlanta area, the school systems are sharing in the building program as follows: Atlanta, $6,753,000; Fulton County, $3,005,000; Decatur, $861,250; DeKalb County, $3,755,000; Marietta, $352,500; Cobb County, $1,547,000.

State To Spend More On School Segregation

The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court outlawing public school segregation, nor the sentiment and compliance by many agencies and groups apparently have had any effect on Georgia which has announced the go ahead on a six million dollar segregated school program.

Such a move was indicated yesterday shortly after the State Board of Education was told by its chairman, George P. Whitman, Jr., that the state must decide between unsegregated schools and private ones.

In the step up on school building, Claude Purcell, director of the State Department of Education, outlined a need for $7,401,869. Actually five million dollars would be used to raise the salaries of present teachers who have obtained higher degrees and to hire 900 more.

However, at a scheduled meeting, July 13, the board announced it will pass a resolution specifying that the money be spent only on segregated schools.

Whitman told the board that he brought out the fact that by has come to the conclusion from the governor's conference that private schools are the only way the U. S. Supreme Court's decision can be obeyed; that the decision will be forced right away, and that campaigns by Negro organizations are only a small part of a total plan to "completely break down color barriers in the country."

Gowen Tags His Plan for Schools Legal

Constitution State News Service

BRUNSWICK, June 2—Gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen said Wednesday the word "segregation" would not be used in his proposal to make local school superintendents responsible for assigning pupils to schools that suit their own best interest and that of the community.

In a speech to the Glynn County Teachers Assn., Gowen said his plan would make assignment an administrative function rather than one controlled by state law. Thus, he contended that his plan could withstand court attacks.

"While I disagree with the United States Supreme Court decision against school segregation, and feel it was political and without legal precedence," Gowen told the Glynn County Teachers Assn., "still the decision is here to stay. Those who cry insurrection, rebellion, and calling out the guard are uttering tommyrot. Such people would be the hardest ones to find if trouble ever breaks in Georgia."

In Atlanta Wednesday, the Georgia Education Commission mailed requests to the Georgia Education Assn. and the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers, asking them to submit plans for maintaining segregated public schools. Both groups have insisted on continuation of public schools in Georgia in contrast to an administration-sponsored constitutional amendment which would permit the state to abandon public schools.

To Serve Ga. In Cell If Elected, Says Fred Hand

By International News Service

House Speaker Fred Hand pledged that if elected governor of Georgia he will go to jail and conduct the state's business from his cell before he will permit a single Negro child to attend a white school in the state.

In perhaps his strongest statement on the school issue so far, Hand asserted he is the "only candidate with the courage of his convictions" in the campaign for governor.

Hand declared that the governor of Georgia has sufficient authority to take action to control school segregation and added, "So long as he stands firm in such a resolve nothing short of impeachment can end his control of the situation."

Hand explained further:

"The Federal courts have no power to enforce their decrees except through citations for contempt. The only course they can take against a governor refusing to buckle under to their orders is to put him in jail.

"And such a prospect does not frighten me because I would consider it an honor to be placed behind bars to spare the people of my state the infamy of a court decision contrary to the constitutions of the United States and Georgia and to the best interests and wishes of both races."

ing for an end to school segregation.

J. Harold Saxon W. P. Sprayberry

In a letter to the state board Thursday W. P. Sprayberry, president, and J. Harold Saxon, secretary of the Georgia Education Assn., advised Peters:

"The Georgia Education Assn. delegates, approximately 135 in number, voted for the resolution passed by the NEA representatives July 2, in full belief that the resolution leaves to each state and territory the determination of all matters pertaining to segregation in public schools.

"The Georgia Education Assn. delegates voted for this states rights resolution in good faith, knowing that the people of Georgia are fully capable of deciding all matters of this kind."

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

Segregation Top Issue, Candidates Agree on TV

Charging that Georgia's lobbying law has been "winked at and completely ignored for 13 years," Billy Barrett, candidate for lieutenant governor, Wednesday night pledged that if elected he will "free the General Assembly from the dictatorial rule of Roy Harris and his satellites."

Barrett of Augusta and three other candidates for lieutenant governor—Bill Dean of Conyers, John Greer of Lakeland and Ernest Vandiver of Lavonia—were interviewed on WSB-TV's Press Gallery, presented by The Atlanta Constitution.

Ralph McGill, editor of The Constitution, served as moderator, and M. L. St. John, political editor, interviewed the candidates.

All the candidates agreed that the school segregation question is the top political problem in Georgia.

Dean and Greer spoke strongly in favor of retaining public, segregated schools. Vandiver said, "I am for the public school system only so long as schools remain segregated."

Barrett said he favors preserving segregation by amending the State Constitution to set up a private system.

Vandiver said he would "go along" with Georgia's next governor "as long as he is interested in the progress and welfare of the state." The other candidates said they would cooperate with the next governor in carrying out his campaign platform.

All of the candidates claimed that their prior service in state government qualifies them for the job. Dean pointed out that he is the only candidate who has experience in the Senate, over which the lieutenant governor presides. He has been a member of the Senate for 14 years.

Georgians Deny Endorsing Mixed Schools

Georgia delegates Thursday denied they endorsed racial integration in public schools at a recent meeting of the National Education Assn. in New York.

The NEA meeting in New York passed a resolution which, in effect, called for abiding by the U.S. Supreme Court decision ruling out public school segregation.

James S. Peters of Manchester, vice chairman of the State Board of Education, called on Georgia delegates to the meeting to appear before the board and explain their voting. Peters said reports of the New York meeting said Mississippi and South Carolina delegates were the only ones voting against a resolution call-

Hummin Begging For Yankee $$

CITIZENS & SOUTHERN BANK A

NEW YORK —Gov. Herman (Hummin) Talmadge of the good State of Georgia, came Nawth last week to talk some Yankee money handlers into giving his home state some business and throwing some good Yankee dollars into the treasury so he can build bigger and better Jim Crow schools.

In fact, the Governor said that the State of Georgia led the whole South in industrial development last year with 270 new plants worth some $100,000,000 and that Georgia is the place for Northern industrialists to go to set up new plants and establish other enterprises.

Further, the Governor said that the recently expanded port of Savannah is the biggest there is, and Savannah is the place where Yankee shippers should do their shipping.

But as far as Negroes and non-segregation in employment in the new Yankee plants and other enterprises that might be set up with the Yankee dollar in the great State of Georgia, Hummin said that in his opinion no employer should be restricted in his choice in the people he employes, whether he "might want to employ Negroes or white workers, Protestants, Catholics or Jews, or men with black eyes or those with blue eyes."

Hummin made no bones about his intention to build bigger and better segregated schools. He repeated his earlier statements that he will turn the public school system over for private operation should the Supreme Court rule out Jim Crow in elementary and secondary schools.

He said he hoped the high court of the land will not allow itself to be "influenced by political considerations" in handing down its decision.

The precedent set by "great justices like Brandeis, Stone, William Howard Taft and Oliver Wendell Holmes," who held that the question of racial segregation is a matter a state should settle for and by itself.

Governor Talmadge spoke at a luncheon forum of the Traffic club of New York, appeared on several TV and radio programs and held a press conference during a two-day visit to the Yankee capitol in New York.

He plans to take his bid for more Yankee business to other Northern states.

At Quitman, he was presented with a bale of cotton by Earl Bentley, Brooks County farmer, to be added to his campaign chest.

Segregation Is at Stake Sept. 8, Griffin Says

By JACK SPALDING
Constitution Staff Writer

WAYCROSS, Aug. 12—Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin swung through south Georgia Thursday speaking on the race question, the Talmadge administration and the "alien Atlanta press."

Talking in Ashburn, Quitman and Waycross, in country where some of his strongest supporters live, he said that governor pledged to continue the program of Gov. Talmadge, and denied that he is a race-baiter.

He told his crowds that the Atlanta papers are "foreign-owned," and in sympathy with those who would abolish segregation and the county unit system.

"If we lose the election this summer, we lose all forms of segregation—in schools, churches and cafes," he declared. "For Georgia is the capstone, the bedrock of the fight. If we lose, we will turn Georgia over to a crowd who won't stop until they abolish all forms of segregation in the state and in the nation."

"IN THE GEORGIA WAY"

"I'm not a race-baiter," Griffin said, "I just haven't forgotten my raising. I'd like to see our Negroes make progress and get all the advantages. I like to see them improve their talents, but in the Georgia way."

The candidate hammered away on his affiliation with Talmadge as lieutenant governor. He praised the governor and all his works and said he hoped to continue and, if possible, expand the Talmadge program.

Griffin told south Georgians he had just come down from the mountains and "we got 'em on the run." He said there's "nobody for Marvin but the folks."

"I've made no deals with professional politicans, broken-down ex-governors, or the alien press which seems determined to break down the Georgia way of life," the lieutenant governor said.

He attacked the record of M. E. Thompson during his 20 months as acting governor and called his administration a "do-nothing" one.

"KINDEST THING"

"And that's the kindest thing I can say about him without mud-slinging," he said.

Griffin declared Thompson is pro-segregation and pro-county unit during this campaign for the sake of getting votes, and said: "M. E. will promise anything to get one vote."

Griffin said that during his electioneering tours he has found people interested in two things:

1. "Which candidate can we depend on to carry out Herman Talmadge's program?"

2. "What persons in this race can preserve Georgia's greatest political and social traditions, the county unit system and segregation?"

Macon Parents Threatened With Jail If School Boycott Starts

MACON, Ga. — (SNS) — Citizens who indicated at a spirited mass meeting Tuesday night that they will keep their children at home if R. J. Martin remains as principal of Ballard-Hudson High School may go to jail if they carry out their threat, according to W. Howard Bridges, assistant superintendent of Bibb County schools.

Bridges explained that every child in Georgia must attend school until he reaches the age of 16 or has completed high school, except children with physical and mental defects.

Under the Compulsory Attendance Law of Georgia, since September, 1954, parents who keep their children out of school for any other reason may be fined $100 for each day of school the child misses, he said.

However, school officials pointed out that a number of Ballard-Hudson students are over 16 and the compulsory attendance law would not apply to them.

Parents threatened to boycott the school after the Bibb Board of Education cleared Martin of personal and administrative mis-conduct charges lodged against him by a citizens committee.

Thompson Hits Race-Baiting In Campaign; Vows School Equality

SYLVANIA — (SNS) — Pointing to his administrative record, former governor M. E. Thompson told his Sylvania audience that four years ago, he recommended an adequate school building program to benefit Negroes.

In welcoming Negroes in his audience, Thompson reiterated that there would be no desegregation in schools if he were elected governor.

He further indicated that "race-baiting is used too often as a political weapon" in the current campaign. He pointed to his confederate ancestry to establish himself as a true southerner.

Mr. Thompson, although accused by Marvin Griffin of a tie-in with "liquor interests," recommended that temperance be taught in Georgia public schools in order to "counteract the ever-increasing menace of alcholism in Georgia."

He also recommended an increase in teachers' salaries, old-age pensions, health facilities and road building. He again illustrated that this could be accomplished with no increase in taxes.

He also went on record as opposing toll roads and demonstrated by his record that this was no new position taken by him for a campaign promise but one he had held for some time.

Talmadge says—

End of segregation would abolish Georaia's schools

ATLANTA, March 15—(AP)—Gov. Herman Talmadge said Saturday that a United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation would automatically abolish Georgia's public school system.

In a lengthy statement, Talmadge argued that the Georgia Constitution prevents collection of state or county taxes for unsegregated schools.

"This means that an adverse decision of the United States Supreme Court would of itself destroy our public school system," Talmadge declared.

IF PUBLIC SCHOOL segregation is held invalid, the Georgia governor has advocated abolishing the public school system and substituting a system of private schools with the state subsidizing the individual child instead of the schools.

Fanned by gubernatorial candidates who have promised to maintain separate public schools, whatever the high court rules, there has been mounting opposition to proposals for abolishing the present system.

"If the public school system of the state of Georgia is ever harmed," Talmadge said in his statement, "it will not be by my hands, which have fought for and nurtured it to the highest state of perfection ever known in history, but will be by the Supreme Court of the United States whose members might fail to regard the evil and unending harmful effects of a purely political decision."

THERE NOW ARE five cases before the U. S. Court directly attacking racial segregation in the public schools.

Board Of Education To Study School Bias Cases

Action on several matters discussed during a meeting of committees Monday night will be taken at the February meeting of the Atlanta Board of Education today at 3 P. M.

At the meeting of committees, the school board voted to have a study committee gather factual information on the implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Public School Cases for the City of Atlanta.

A motion to create a study committee, made by Dr. Rufus E. Clement of the Third Ward, was carried by a 5-2 vote. Such a committee was appointed in 1953 only to be dismissed later.

INTERESTED IN FACTS

Before making the motion, Dr. Clement said: "I am interested in the facts. I want to know the implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Public School Cases for the City of Atlanta no matter what the decision is."

He stressed the importance of having the school administration get the facts "without trying to guess what the decision will be."

The board also passed a resolution requesting the Mayor and Board of Aldermen to adopt a Resolution of Acceptance. In authorizing a letter of commitment to the City of Atlanta Board of Education for furniture and equipment costs, the State School Building Authority made it mandatory that the Resolution of Acceptance be approved by the Mayor and Board of Aldermen.

Chairmen of the following committees made reports:

J. Austin Dilbeck, Building and Grounds; Mrs. Clifford N. Ragsdale, Personnel; Franklin Rodgers, Athletic and Military; P. L. Bardin, Cafeteria; A. C. Latimer, Maintenance and Operation, and Dr. Clement, Purchasing.

President Devereaux F. McClatchey presided. Other members of the board present were Ed S. Cook and Neil M. Baldwin, along with Miss Ira Jarrell, Superintendent of Schools, and other administrative officials.

TALMADGE CITES SCHOOL SYSTEM

ATLANTA, March 14 (AP)—Gov. Herman Talmadge said Saturday that a United States supreme court decision outlawing segregation would automatically abolish Georgia's public school system.

In a lengthy prepared statement, Talmadge argued that the Georgia constitution prevents collection of state or county taxes for unsegregated schools.

"This means that an adverse decision of the United States supreme court would of itself destroy our public school system," Talmadge declared.

If public school segregation is held invalid, the Georgia governor has advocated abolishing the public school system and substituting a system of private schools with the state subsidizing the individual child instead of the schools.

Five Cases in Court

There now are five cases before the US court directly attacking racial segregation in the public schools.

Talmadge again expressed hope that the supreme court will reiterate the so-called "separate but equal" doctrine—that segregation is valid if facilities for the two races are equal.

And he contended that it has been a long established principal that the states have "the inherent, sole and exclusive right" to regulate their schools.

Cites Clauses

If the supreme court outlaws separate schools, he said, "then the state of Georgia and the counties of Georgia would be left without any power under the terms of our state constitution to levy taxes for any educational purposes."

Citing the clause under which US supreme court decisions take precedence over state constitutions and laws, he declared:

"The US supreme court cannot re-write the Georgia constitution so as to grant a power to the state and counties to levy taxes for support of mixed schools which the people of Georgia have not granted to the general assembly and to the counties in our own state constitution."

Talmadge Gives Legal Reason On School Plan

Gov. Herman Talmadge Saturday declared it would be the U. S. Supreme Court, not himself, who will be abolishing Georgia's public school system if the high court rules against segregated schools.

In apparent defense of his own plan for abolishing public schools and substituting "private" institutions for them, the governor cited legal reason why "separate but equal" schools for the races would have to go in Georgia with an adverse ruling.

He said the state's constitution prevents collection of state or county taxes for mixed schools. This, he said, "means that an adverse decision of the United States Supreme Court would of itself destroy our public school system."

Gov. Talmadge's statement, reportedly endorsed by Macon Attoryney Charles J. Bloch, lashed out at some of the other proposals for continuing the present school setup.

"IF THE UNITED STATES Supreme Court outlaws segregation per se," he said, "no amount of gerrymandering or legal fiction will delay for long the speedy application of federal power in all cases where this question is clearly presented to the district court."

Georgians will vote next fall on the governor's proposal for "grants to citizens" for educational purposes. It is a necessary forerunner for his plan to set up private institutions. The pupils, not the schols, would be subsidized.

The measure says the General Assembly "may by law provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state" for educational purposes.

Gov. Talmadge again expressed hope that the Supreme Court will re-affirm the "separate but equal" doctrine. He added:

"IF THE PUBLIC school system of the State of Georgia is ever harmed, it will not be by my hands, which have fought for and nurtured it to the highest state of the perfection ever known in history, but will be by the Supreme Court of the United States, whose members might fail to regard the evil and unending harmful effects of a purely political decision."

The governor said Georgia's constitution permits the state and counties to levy taxes for educational purposes "only if separate schools are provided for white and colored races."

HE SAID THE COURT "cannot rewrite the Georgia constitution so as to grant a power to the state and to counties to levy taxes for support of mixed schools which the people of Georgia have not granted to the General Assembly and to the counties in our own state constitution."

If the Supreme Court outlaws separate schools, he said, "then the State of Georgia and the counties of Georgia would be left without any power under the terms of our state constitution to levy taxes for any educational purposes."

The statement cited the clause under which United States Supreme Court decisions take precedence over state constitutions and laws.

TALMADGE'S TEXT ON SCHOOL PLAN

This is the text of Gov. Herman Talmadge's statement on school segregation:

It is believed that the United States Supreme Court will rule almost any Monday noon on the five school segregation cases pending before it.

The decision when it is rendered will turn on one simple question. That question is:

"Do the states have the right to classify children in the public schools, which they regulate, finance and maintain, according to race?

Lawyers for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People maintain that even though public schools might be equal in every detail, the mere fact Negro children are sent to segregated schools is a deprivation of their constitutional rights under the 14th Amendment.

THE STATES contend that our federal government is one of limited powers and that nowhere in the Federal Constitution is any grant of authority made to the federal government to regulate or dictate how the public schools of the various states shall be operated.

I have expressed and continue to express my profound hope that when the United States Supreme Court renders its decision it will reflect the principles which have been law of the land since our Federal Constitution was drafted, that is all powers not specifically delegated to the federal establishment are reserved unto the several states.

When the Constitution was drawn this principle was implied but to make it doubly sure our forefathers adopted the 10th Amendment setting it forth clearly and specifically so that no future courts or congresses could mistake or pervert the very essence of our entire system of constitutional government.

ALONG WITH the principle enunciated in the 10th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, the architects of our Georgia Constitution wrote into our Bill of Rights, Article I, Section V, Paragraph I, the following language:

"The people of this State have the inherent, sole and exclusive right of regulating their internal government and the police thereof, and of altering and abolishing their Constitution whenever it may be necessary to their safety and happiness."

No man of sound mind and certainly no judge who is a student of law could read the Federal Constitution and our Georgia Constitution and reach any other conclusion but that the people of this State "have the inherent, sole and exclusive right" to regulate their public school system.

This principle of constitutional law recognizing the power of the states to provide separate but equal facilities was enunciated thre escore years ago in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson. This decision of sound and devastating logic, based on our Constitution, has ever since been recognized as expressing the law of the land by such stalwart justices of our nation's high tribunal as White, Hughes, Stone, Brandeis, Holmes, Cardoza and other revered legal giants.

IF THE JUSTICES who now transiently compose the Supreme Court should overturn these foundation stones of constitutional law, my concern and the concern of every parent in the State, both white and colored, as well as the teachers, has to do with the effect of such a revolutionary decision —on the public school system of our State—on the school children of Georgia and the unparalleled progress we are making which might be jeopardized.

Our State Constitution in Article VII, Section II, Paragraph I provides that the powers of taxation over the whole state shall be exercised by the General Assembly for certain named purposes only, among which is "for educational purposes."

That same Article of our Constitution in Section IV provides that the General Assembly shall NOT have power to delegate to any county the right to levy taxes except for certain definite purposes among which is "for educational purposes, as provided in Article VIII of the Constitution of Georgia."

ARTICLE VIII of our State Constitution is the foundation stone of our public school system. It provides:

"The provision of an adequat education for the citizens shall be a primary obligation of the State of Georgia the expenses of which shall be provided for by taxation. Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races."

From a studied examination of the above cited provisions of our Georgia Constitution, it is perfectly clear without any doubt that the authority of counties to levy taxes for the support of mixed schools is specifically barred by Article VIII. While it is not as clear in reference to state taxation, the best legal opinion is that the power of the state to tax under such circumstances is similarly limited.

IF THE SUPREME COURT of the United States should decide—contrary to a long line of established and heretofore unquestioned decisions — that such "separate schools" are violative of the Constitution of the United States, then the State of Georgia, by the force and effect of that decision of the United States Supreme Court, and the counties of Georgia, would be left without any power under the terms of our State Constitution to levy taxes for educational purposes.

This means that an adverse decision of the United States Supreme Court would of itself destroy our public school system in this State and it would prohibit the General Assembly from levying taxes for support of mixed schools.

The Constitution of the State of Georgia permits the State and counties to levy taxes for educational purposes only if separate schools are provided for the white and colored races.

It does not permit, under even a liberal construction, the State and counties to levy taxes for support of a mixed school system.

EVERY LAWYER is familiar with the so-called "supremacy clause" in the Federal Constitution which provides that decisions of the United States Supreme Court and federal laws take precedence over State Constitutions and state laws.

But under the supremacy clause the United States Supreme Court cannot rewrite the Goergia Constitution so as to grant a power to the state and to the counties to levy taxes for support of mixed schools which the people of Georgia have not granted to the General Assembly and to the counties in our own State Constitution.

We must not lose sight of the fact that for sometime now there has been pending a lawsuit in the Federal District Court here brought by the NAACP against the Atlanta Public School System seeking an end to separate facilities. The issue involved in this case is the same as is presented in the cases now before the Supreme Court. If the United States Supreme Court outlaws segregation per se, no amount of gerrymandering or legal fiction will delay for long the speedy application of federal power in all cases where this question is clearly presented to the District Court.

LET'S MAKE this thing abundantly clear so that all can understand that in the event of an adverse ruling outlawing segregation in the public schools not only will Georgia's public school system be abolished thereby but also the power of the state and counties to levy taxes for educational purposes will fall by the wayside. From there we would have to pick up the broken pieces and evolve a whole new constitutional system for providing an adequate education for our citizens.

If the public school system of the State of Georgia is ever harmed, it will not be by my hands, which have fought for and nurtured it to the highest state of perfection ever known in history, but will be by the Supreme Court of the United States whose members might fail to regard the evil and unending harmful effects of a purely political decision.

Rockdale's Negroes Veto School Mixing

Rockdale County Negro leaders have offered a solution to the segregation problem in event compulsory segregation in schools is banned by the U.S. Supreme Court, Sen. Bill Dean of Conyers reported Tuesday.

These Negroes said they will send their children only to schools for Negro children, Dean said.

"The Negro leaders of our community already have informed our school board that, regardless of any decision that might be made, they desire segregated schools—and will send their children to no other," Dean said. "That should and will solve any problem that might arise in my county. I wish that all who seek to promote discussion could be as intelligent as the colored citizens of Rockdale."

Dean expressed faith that the committee named by the Legislature and governor to study segregation problems will formulate a solution "that will enable us to live in peace and harmony with everyone, and to maintain our traditional way of living." He predicted Georgia will find a way to maintain its excellent schools and safeguard the benefits of the teachers.

Talmadge Vows Separate Schools

ATLANTA, May 23 (AP).—Gov. Herman Talmadge declared today that Negroes and whites will not attend the same schools in Georgia even if troops are sent in to enforce the Supreme Court's ban on segregation.

"We're not going to secede from the Union," Gov. Talmadge said, "but the people of Georgia will not comply with the decision of the court."

"It would take several divisions of troops down here to police every school building in Georgia and then they wouldn't be able to enforce it," he said.

"We're going to do whatever is necessary in Georgia to keep white children in white schools and colored children in colored schools."

His statements came in a recorded interview on the Columbia Broadcasting System's radio program "The World Today." A team of CBS men led by Edward P. Morgan made the recording in Atlanta.

$6 Million Increase In State School Budget Tied to Segregation

Board Ruling Promised for Added Funds

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Georgia will step up its spending on public, segregated common schools by an additional $6,000,000 next fiscal year, state officials indicated Monday.

Five million dollars of the new money will be used to hire 900 additional teachers and raise the salaries of present teachers who have obtained higher degrees.

BUDGET STUDIED

The budget, aimed at $108,021,066 is being studied by the State Board of Education. The budget for the year ending June 30, 1954, is $102,021,066.

Claude Purcell, director of administration of the State Department of Education, outlined needs for an additional $7,401,869 to the board Monday. The Budget Commission (Gov. Talmadge, assisted by State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr.) has indicated it will approve an additional six million dollars. The board sent the budget to its finance committee, headed by Henry Bloun of Waynesboro, for study and recommendation at its next meeting July 13.

The board said it will pass a resolution next month specifying that the money be spent only on segregated schools.

The Board Monday moved to encourage counties and cities to raise more money locally for education.

PROPERTY TAX

It eliminated the property tax collection as a factor in determining how much state aid should be given a local school system. The board said that the state is virtually out of the property tax field. A constitutional amendment is pending which will remove the 15-mill limitation on local school taxes.

"The local governments now can increase their property assessments without being penalized on state school grants," Purcell said.

The board appealed to the Georgia Education Assn. to assume responsibility in solving the school segregation problem.

Members questioned Paul Sprayberry of Marietta, president of the GEA. Board Chairman George Whitman Jr. of Atlanta told Sprayberry the GEA's Adequate Foundation Program recommendations "won't be worth the paper they are written on unless the people realize they cannot have public schools and segregated schools simultaneously."

Also Authorize Legal Study Of Questionnaire

By International News Service

The Georgia Education Association voted to make a legal study of the new loyalty questionaire and to fight against the adoption of the private school segregation amendment.

The voice vote on the loyalty oath study was unanimous. A few faint murmers of "no" were heard on the vote to fight against the amendment.

A discussion arose over the amendment, in which Delegate M. L. Powell asked the teachers to vote it down because, he said, "If we vote to fight this amendment we will be saying to the Supreme Court, in effect, make your decision and we will abide by whatever it is."

Kankakee Anderson, former GEA president and superintendent of Polk County Schools, spoke for the resolution.

He declared that he will "never agree to abolish public schools under any conditions, and I ask the legislature to find another way to preserve our Southern customs." He added.

"Asking a school teacher to give up the public schools, is just like asking a preacher to abolish his church."

The Association authorized a study of questionnaire. A Supreme Court Chief Justice, the Speaker of the House and prominent legislators joined in the criticism.

Others, including Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, defended the questionnaire, in principle, as the controversy grew. Gov. Herman Talmadge was expected to touch upon the subject later last night in his appearance before the GEA.

DENIES DEFENSE

Chief Justice M. H. Duckworth, of the Georgia Supreme Court, denied published reports that he defended the controversial questionnaire. He was quoted (not by International News Service) as offering sout defense of the questionnaire.

"I certainly did not say that or mean to imply that," Justice Duckworth said. He added that he had signed a questionnaire himself, but, he said he thought it was a "a foolish, needless thing."

"There is no need for a good American to have to sign a loyalty oath," he said. He added that he thought the questionnaire, about which a storm of controversy now rages, "won't accomplish anything there is need for it."

House Speaker Fred Hand, an announced candidate for governor said he does not believe the legislature anticipated, in passing the anti-subversive act, that the questionnaire would encompass its present scope.

Gov. Talmadge, writing in his political newspaper "The Stateman," defended the questionnaire, although he said it "was not part of the administration's legislative program."

The governor's article, obviously written before formal objections from college professors and the subsequent GEA action calling for a legal study of the project, pointed out that he was "in wholehearted accord with its aims and purposes."

He said Asst. Atty. Gen. Lamar Sizemore has "done an excellent job in a quiet, but very effective manner."

"We have had no witch hunt. We have had no smears," the governor said. He added:

"No one abhors or more vigorously condemns than I the unemployment of unfair or un-American methods in exposing Communist subversion in this country . . . All of us believe in academic freedom . . . but when that academic freedom extends so far as to refusal on the part of any person employed by the state to swear whether he or she is now or ever has been a member of the Communist party, it is my belief that this brand of 'academic freedom' should be exercised outside the borders of our beloved state of Georgia."

School Progress . . . Must Continue

In all the debate concerning the future of the schools in Georgia, surely one fact stands out. Public schools or quasi-public schools or public subsidy to private schools, Georgians will continue to educate their children and the over-all cost will increase.

The State Board of Education recognizes that fact. The board knows it cannot cease to function and to plan simply because the course education will take is a moot question.

For the immediate future, that is, next fiscal year, the chances are strong that the status quo will be maintained—public schools, publicly supported. So the state school board properly is planning its budget.

The proposed budget calls for the expenditure of $108,021,066, six million dollars more than last year, and the greatest amount ever proposed for education in this state. The increase is normal, necessary and not enough.

The number of school-age children is mounting and will continue to mount. The cost of educating children has gone up along with the cost of living. The average per capita expenditure from state and local sources for education in Georgia in 1950-51 was $22. That means for each resident the state and the local government spent $22 on schools as compared to $47 in Wyoming and $42 in California The national average is $33.

The 1950-51 table is the latest available. The per capita expenditure in Georgia has risen since then. It is still low.

Georgians are a proud people. They must be satisfied with nothing less than the best in the nation.

The state board has shown in its budget study that it is aware of what the Georgia Education Association calls the "heart" of the school program. That is the teacher. The current teacher shortage arises from the attraction of higher pay in fields outside the classroom and the mounting enrollments in classrooms from the first grade to high school.

The average salary for the classroom teacher in Georgia this year was $2,700 which places the state eighth from the bottom on the national teacher pay listings.

Of a six-million-dollar increase over last year, the proposed 1954-55 budget tags five million dollars for more teachers to hire additional instructors and to raise the pay of teachers who have acquired additional training.

The state school board has hit at a weakness in education finance in its appeal to local governments to assume a larger share of the burden. Local districts welcome state aid, they resent state control. They can afford to carry more of the load than they have been carrying. They might as well face up to the fact.

The onward march of education can and must continue.

Segregation Leaders Will Fight Court Ruling

ATLANTA, Ga., May 18 (UP).—Dixie segregation leaders pledged themselves today to continue the fight for race barriers in Southern schools with bitter warnings that the South would not accept the Supreme Court decision ending segregation.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia hinted that he might be willing to call out troops to keep Georgia's schools segregated. Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) warned that "the South will not abide by this legislative decision by a political court."

REZONING HINTED

Some leaders indicated the Southern States might try to maintain school segregation by rezoning school districts to follow Negro and white residential areas. However, in rural areas where the races are interspersed, a rezoning might accomplish little.

Talmadge said flatly that no classrooms in the State would have race barriers removed so long as he was in office, a pledge he could easily keep since court officials have pointed out that Negro children would not be entering white classrooms for at least a year. Talmadge's term expires this year and under Georgia law he cannot succeed himself.

BOYCOTT PLANNED

Talmadge and his Attorney General, Eugene Cook, said they would boycott the court's invitation to Southern Attorneys General to submit additional briefs when the segregation issue is reargued in the fall. Cook said 17 other Dixie Attorneys General had told him they were not willing to submit to the decision outlawing segregation without further legislation.

In other developments:

1. Special legislative committees in Alabama and Georgia were directed to meet withi na week to recommend steps to preserve segregation.

2. Several North Carolina legislators urged a special session, but no decision appeared to be in the offing.

3. Louisiana's Legislature began a study of the decision's impact.

4. Mississippi Gov. Hugh White prepared to name a legal advisory commission to draft legislation to get around the court decision.

5. Virginia Gov. Thomas B. Stanley promised to call State and local government leaders together soon to consider the whole problem.

Georgians will vote in November on a proposed amendment to the State constitution to wipe out public schools and set up a private school system which would preserve segregation. South Carolina voters already have ratified an amendment which removes from the constitution a requirement that the State supply public school education.

Says School Planning Should Include Negroes

To the Editor:

Significantly the studies proposed and the meetings held have so far made no provisions for Negro participation in formulating a policy for implementing the recent Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

Everybody would, seemingly, give us a seat in the gallery while they go on with the show and wind up by dishing out to us the packaged results of their manipulations of our afairs neatly bundled and with a string around it.

We should, we must be heard in these deliberations.

The voice that speaks for us must be mandated from the people themselves. No self-appointed spokesman can be authorized as our mouth-piece.

There is evidently no member of the race who would advocate segregation as such with its attendant privation and degradation. When some of us have said we want to keep our own schools, obviously there are valid considerations which they have in mind. Our employment area is tightly restricted. Consequently employment levels above school teaching are virtually closed to our group.

This makes it possible to staf our schools with our top talent With our neighbors, this is not so When industry is bidding $100,000 for brains and ability and education hovering around $5 to $7 thousand, there is small prospect of the classroom attracting the best white talent. This accounts for the larger proportion of county license type white teachers Colored people sense the difference. They also know that prejudice is greatest among the least intelligent.

Chester, Georgia, is a little town in the heart of the Sugar Creek country. In the spring of 51, the Negro school there had an outstanding basketball team of which the whole city was justly proud. With parent audience and parental approval, the white team from the hill on the southside of the town came over to the Negro court on the hill on the northside of town and engaged the Negro team in a series of games. They took their drubbing with exceptional gallantry, picked up oodles of basketball and went on to win the championship of their district conference.

There has been no race friction in Chester. Race goodwill has been cemented.

The public schools belong to the people, and people, white and black, are people still.

black, are people still. It will sound just as silly to talk about white schools or Negro schools as to talk about white post offices and Negro post offices—both public services, no more, no less.

The private school, as a scheme to legalize illicit gerrymandering, deserves the award of "Nonsense of the Year."

The scheme to bootleg Jimcrow learning should find a large place in the funny books of the future.

Gowen Sees 'Isms' in School Shift

By JACK SPALDING
Constitution Staff Writer

STATESBORO, July 12—Conversion of Georgia's public school system into a series of privately run institutions would constitute an invitation to the Communists to come on down to Georgia and take the schools over, candidate for governor Charles Gowen said Monday.

Gowen spoke twice in this college town, once before the Rotary club and again at the courthouse. He also gave addresses at Portal and Brooklet, also in Bulloch County. In all his talks he stressed the importance of keeping public schools public.

He said the passage of the private school amendment would doom the educational system of Georgia.

"The disciples of the various 'isms'—all of which seem to be well financed—would send their people to Georgia to infiltrate the schools under private ownership," he said.

President Eisenhower and Sen. McCarthy disagree on most points, Gowen stated, but they do agree on one thing—each is as fearful as the other on Red influence in the public schools.

A change-over from public to private schools would mean the end of the Minimum Foundation guarantee that rural education is as good as urban education, he said.

"It would condemn the youth of small towns and country districts to an inferior education. It might work in cities, but not in the country. The abandonment of public schools also would mean the end of vocational education, vocational rehabilitation, the school lunch program and would imperil the Teachers Retirement Fund," the candidate said.

Segregation is the greatest challenge the South has faced since the War Between the States, Gowen declared.

The people can follow two courses, he added. One is to do away with the school system. The other is follow his plan of allowing local school superintendents to assign students to various schools.

He described the Gowen plan as "legal, simple and one that will work," and said it has been adopted in substance by Louisiana and Mississippi.

Gowen does not believe that Negroes want their children forced into white schools, and recommended the appointment of Negro advisory committees in each county to work with the superintendent of schools in allocating the children.

The removal of schools from public control is dangerous in many respects, the candidate said, but particularly dangerous in this: The people would lose their right to say what courses and ideologies would be taught in the schools, and who would teach their children during their formative years.

The constitution of 1877 marked the return of white rule in Georgia, and written in was the charter of public education, Gowen said.

"Will you strike it out now?" he asked his Bulloch County audience. "Will you give Georgia Teachers College to private individuals to run as they see fit?"

"We can maintain Southern institutions and traditions by my plan, and by inviting the cooperation of Negroes," Gowen said.

Segregation Panel Lauded

By M. L. ST. JOHN

The Legislature and the governor have named a good commission to find the answer to any segregation problems which Georgia's schools may face. The commission must study any decision the United States Supreme Court hands down on segregation in public schools, and then make recommendations to the General Assembly for action.

The commission may be one of the most important ever established by the Georgia Legislature. Its members are capable of solving any segregation problem involving education.

St. John

The committee will not meet unless the court outlaws segregation in schools. If this happens, it will be the commission's duty to recommend the best plan of educating Georgia's children without disturbance.

Gov. Talmadge obtained legislative approval of a constitutional amendment to permit abolition of public schools in event segregation falls. This will be submitted to the people in November for ratification or rejection. The governor says it doesn't have to be used even if ratified, if the study commission can find a better plan for maintaining segregation.

LOOKING FOR PLAN

Those who oppose the idea of abolishing public schools are looking to this study commission to produce a plan—if a court decision makes their work necessary at all—which will continue public schools for Georgia's children.

Two outstanding school superintendents are on the commission. Miss Ira Jarrell of Atlanta and Mark Smith of Macon would do nothing to harm the educational system. Neither would Mrs. Ralph Hobbs of Cataula, former State PTA president, or John Sammons Bell of Atlanta, representative of the Georgia Bar Association, who were also named by the Governor to the commission.

Other appointees include House leaders George Smith of Swainsboro and Frank Twitty of Camilla; Former Congressman John Wood of Canton, Atty. W. S. Mann of McRae, and Roy Harris of Augusta, a member of the Board of Regents who is pushing a long-range plan to improve public schools.

OTHER MEMBERS

The General Assembly, in writing the resolution, put Chancellor Harmon Caldwell and State School Supt. M. D. Collins—workers for better schools—on the commission. It also named the chairmen of the Regents, R. O. Arnold of Covington, and George Whitman Jr., of Atlanta; House Speaker Fred Hand of Pelham, who happens also to head the State School Building Authority; Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin and Gov. Talmadge. And it included a legal authority and a financial authority by naming Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr.

There will be some disagreement over the ability or spirit of an appointee here and there, but on the whole the Legislature and governor put together a commission capable of finding a solution to the problem of public education and segregation—if such a problem arises.

VETERAN OF HOT SPOT

As to the attorney general, it's nothing new for him to be on the hot spot as a member of a commission. He had to decide in 1947 which of three claimants was the legal governor. Then he had to decide which of two factions was the legal Democratic Party. Now he's in a more awkward spot on something other than the school study commission. The governor has asked him whether the proposed Traffic Court of Atlanta would be constitutional.

The problem is made unusual because of Cook's personal trouble with traffic laws. He is to be tried soon in Fulton Criminal Court. The prosecutor in the county court is against the proposed city traffic court — the prosecuting witnesses (city police) are for the proposed city court. Either way the attorney general rules will make one of his personal courtroom opponents happy and one sad.

Segregation Panel Named By Governor

Gov. Talmadge yesterday announced appointment of a commission to study any decision the United States Supreme Court may hand down on segregation in public schools.

The commission, which will make recommendations for any legislative action which may be necessary, includes Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of Atlanta public schools. One other school superintendent, Mark Smith of Macon, is on the 20-member board.

Nine state officials were named in the resolution passed by the Legislature recently. The governor yesterday announced his choice of nine of the 11 members he is to appoint.

Appointed were: First District, Speaker Pro tem George Smith II of Swainsboro; Second, House Floor Leader Frank Twitty of Camilla; Third, Mrs. Ralph Hobbs of Cataula, former president of the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers; Fourth, not announced; Fifth, Miss Jarrell; Sixth, Dr. Smith; Seventh, not announced; Eighth, W. S. Mann, McRae lawyer; Ninth, former Congressman John Wood of Canton; Tenth, Roy V. Harris, member of the Board of Regents from Augusta, and John Sammons Bell of Atlanta, who represents the Georgia Bar Association.

Georgia told to act wisely on schools

ATLANTA (N N P A) Georgians should act rationally and not be stampeded into disrupting $700,000,000 worth of public schools because of the school segregation cases which the United States Supreme Court now has under consideration, former Gov. Ellis Arnall declared last Thursday.

Addressing the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Arnall urged that the state await recommendations from a 21 - member commission set up by the Georgia Legislature to study the school situation.

"Even if the Supreme Court knocked out segregation," he said, "it would not affect Georgia in the immediate future." He pointed out that the cases the court has under consideration are against other states — Kansas, Virginia, South Carolina and Delaware — and the District of Columbia.

In his judgment, he said, the Supreme Court will not outlaw the present equal and separate theory for schools." He added that he "cannot imagine that the Court would set itself up as a school board in each district and bailiwick in this state and country."

"It would be possible for a suit to be filed immediately in a federal court challenging the entire proposal," Gowen told the Lions Club.

LIMIT CASE

Under Gowen's own proposal to designate the class and school the individual pupil is to attend, the candidate said, any litigation would involve the facts pertaining to that particular case. The verdict would not affect other cases involving other facts, other pupils and other schools, he added.

The candidate said the Georgia Legislature followed a sound course of action in establishing a commission whose purpose is "to preserve our public schools."

SEES PANIC

He hit as "panicky and immature" the administration's proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the public school system and rely solely on private schools to educate the children.

"Under this private school plan, we would give away our present public school plants, which represent an investment of more than $250,000,000, to some unnamed and unknown individuals to use for their private gain and advantage without being accountable to any authority," Gowen asserted. "Such a proposal would turn back the wheels of progress a hundred years."

The speech by Gowen, only announced gubernatorial candidate in the September Democratic primary, was delivered in the hometown of a potential gubernatorial candidate—State Highway Chairman Jim Gillis.

Gowen Rips Talmadge's School Plan

Constitution State News Service

SOPERTON, Jan. 28—Gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen said tonight that Gov. Talmadge's proposed "private school" plan "would play into the hands of those who seek to destroy segregation in our schools."

Talmadge Vows To Use Force

ATLANTA — (ANP) — Reiterating his promise to maintain segregation in Georgia Public schools, Gov. Herman Talmadge last week said he would use armed force if necessary to prevent integration.

Speaking at ceremonies for the installation of a new Georgia Education Commission formed to study school segregation policies, Talmadge said as long as he is governor he is prepared "to use every resource of the state government, every arm of the state police and military to keep segregation."

The statement marked another effort on the part of the chief executive to maintain the dual school system. Earlier he had

Construction projects in 11 counties totaling $11,667,132 were approved yesterday by the State Board of Education.

The action, involving 497 classrooms, was the latest step in the state's vast school building program.

Projects approved were, by school systems with the number of classrooms, total cost and state aid:

Brooks County: 24 classrooms for white, 44 for Negro, $1,077,000, $908,000. Pierce County: 27 white, 17 Negro, $799,998, $805,687 (State aid exceeds total cost when the school system has exceeded its bonding capacity.) Cook County: 20 white, 20 Negro, $1,020,778, $1,030,243. Calhoun County: One white, 40 Negro $752,411; $685,283. Tifton City System: 11 white, $318,140, $202,291. McDuffie County: 15 white, 31 Negro, $694,378, $573,279.

Winder City System: 12 white, 20 Negro, $542,234, $514,245. Newnan City System: 47 white, 14 Negro, $1,097,052; $706,092. LaGrange: 14 white, 30 Negro, $3,216,044, $562,707. Gainesville: 35 white, 26 Negro, $1,088,623, $803,143. Waynes County: 33 white, 14 Negro, $1,060,474, $996,423.

Talmadge To Use Militia If Needed To Hold Color Line

ATLANTA, Jan. 18 (AP)—Gov. Herman Talmadge today repeated his determination to maintain racial segregation in Georgia Schools, even if it is necessary to use the militia and state patrol to do it.

But at the same time, he said the segregation issue will not affect the state's 200 million dollar school building program in any way.

Talmadge's strongest statement to date on the issue was made at the organization meeting of a commission created to study possible courses of action if the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws public segregation.

And it came as members of the state school building authority prepared to leave for New York to discuss sale of another 35 million dollar bond issue to finance more school construction.

The governor previously had proposed to abolish the public school system in Georgia if public school segregation is banned, and revert to a system of private schools.

He sponsored creation by the sion to study possible steps by recent legislature of the commiswhich the state could circumvent an adverse decision.

He told the commission today, "The people of Georgia are determined to maintain school segregation, and I shall use every possible arm of the government, including the militia and state patrol, if necessary, to keep the races separated in our schools."

Pye's Segregation Study Salary Set

Atlanta Constitution

Gov. Talmadge has approved a salary of $500 for Durwood Pye as secretary of the commission created to study means for continuing public school segregation in Georgia.

State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr. said Pye's salary will be paid from the legislative appropriation.

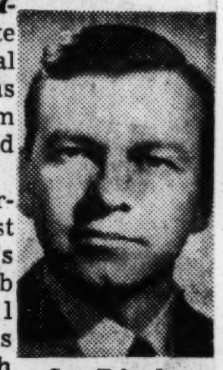
Salary of B. D. Murphy, legal advisor to the commission, has not been fixed. Thrasher said it would be paid from the law department's appropriation.

Talmadge Sees Threats To Segregation in Pacts

Atlanta Constitution

SANDERSVILLE, Feb. 24 (AP)—Gov. Talmadge tonight spoke vigorously in favor of the Bricker amendment, declaring that Communists and fellow travelers are among those fighting it.

Addressing the American Legion Post here, the governor asserted that treaty powers, unless limited, constitute definite threats to racial segregation as well as freedom of speech and the press.



Gov. Talmadge

Branding arguments against Sen. Bricker's proposal to curb presidential treaty powers as "just so much eyewash," he said treaties could now be executed "abolishing segregation, permitting mixed marriages and abrogating the right of men to determine who their neighbors will be."

"The truth," he said, "is that the Communists, their fellow travelers and deluded idealists have discovered that the treaty law overrides the constitutions and basic laws of our nation and the 48 states. And they not only want to keep this fatal defect in our armor unclosed, but also they want to widen it."

The governor noted the Legislature had passed a resolution urging Congress to adopt the proposed amendment.

Fulton School Board Shows Good Sense

Atlanta Constitution

Fulton County School Superintendent Paul West Wednesday received from the county school board full authority to shift county pupils from one school to another.

This provides him and the county system with a sensible, flexible plan for meeting the segregation problem if the Supreme Court, as anticipated, declares segregation in violation of the 14th amendment.

We hasten to congratulate the board on a public service.

Segregation Board Held Backing Public Schools

Atlanta Constitution

Dr. Mark A. Smith, Bibb school superintendent, predicted yesterday a state commission on education of which he is a member will not recommend abolition of Georgia's public school system as a means of keeping racial segregation.

Dr. Smith spoke at a meeting of the Macon Inter-Civic Club Council. He is a member of a state commission set up by the General Assembly to study problems which would be created if the U.S. Supreme Court should rule on several pending cases that racial segregation in schools violates the federal Constitution.

"I don't think there is anyone on the commission who wants to do away with the public schools," Dr. Smith said.

He did not discuss a proposed constitutional amendment sponsored by Governor Talmadge to pave the way for abolition of the public schools and payment of tax funds to citizens for educational purposes. The governor has proposed the state "subsidize the child" in private schools in the event of a court decision ending segregation in public schools.

Dr. Smith said a new system in Bibb County under which the superintendent designates which school a child must attend has "worked out fine" since it was adopted by the Bibb Board of Education last June.

It did not speak o[illegible] the Supreme Court. That is some[illegible] loyal American can do. Nor did it threaten violence or blood in the streets—which we will not have unless political agitators and dangerous fanatics bring it upon us.

There was never any discussion of abolishing the public school system. The Fulton board made a common-sense move. Under it the superintendent can direct pupils to specific schools. If there are schools which do not object to having a few Negro pupils attend, he can do that, too.

Here is a flexible workable plan for whatever emergency arises. It is an example of brains being used rather than bawling abuse.

Once the stigma of segregation by law is removed, many Negroes, perhaps a majority, would prefer their own separate schools. The Fulton plan allows leaders of both races to work out the future . . . it does not shut the door to that future by destroying the school system.

We recommend the use of brains to those political figures who, to date, have done nothing but bawl and cry havoc. And we urge the study commission to note this Fulton action. The commission certainly cannot condone abolishing the public school system.

School Meet Free Of Racial Issues

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Race-baiters would have been astounded at what happened at the Georgia State Capitol the other day. It provided a fine illustration of what can happen when representatives of the two races talk over their problems calmly and sensibly—and for the good of children of all races.

The State Board of Education, appointed by Governor Talmadge, was hearing contests on the school building program. For the first time since the school building program started, a delegation of Negroes came in to protest. There have been a number of white delegations protesting the decisions of their local school boards but never a Negro delegation.

St. John

Leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Savannah didn't like the priorities proposed in the application filed by Savannah-Chatham County Board of Education. Three Negroes carried the appeal to the state board.

Particularly, this group didn't like the idea of building a high school for Negro children of Savannah outside of the city limits—five miles outside, with resulting bus fares of 18 cents each way each day. The Savannah-Chatham board gave two reasons for this location. First, it said it couldn't find a suitable location in crowded Savannah at a suitable price. Second, it said the proposed school would be adjacent to the Negro college and, therefore, could be fitted into a practice school as the college trained future teachers.

The ease with which the representatives of the two races discussed the case without insults and with respect for each other's problems was amazing. Where some conflicting white delegations jab at each other in the debates before the state board, the Chatham administrator and the Negro delegation merely outlined the case without bitterness.

A point at issue was which buildings are to be constructed first. It was not a racial issue, though. The first six buildings to go up will be Negro schools. The Negroes wanted to make some shifts in the priority of these schools, and also give some priority to a couple of schools omitted.

At one point when the Negro delegation seemed reluctant to make a comment, the state board said: "You feel free to tell us exactly what you think."

After hearing the protest, the state board appointed a biracial committee to investigate and try to smooth it out.

First, it asked Prof. G. L. Harper of Atlanta, secretary of the Georgia Teachers Association (Negro equivalent to the GEA), if the Negroes would respect the judgment of Robert Cousins and Claude Purcell in settling the dispute. The gray-haired Negro educator declared that the Negroes regard Mr. Cousins, director for Negro education, and Mr. Purcell, director of administration with the State Department of Education, as "straight shooters—absolutely fair."

The board named Cousins, Purcell and Harper to work out the dispute.

That's the report on how the State Board of Education in Georgia tackled the first appeal from Negro citizens—a calm approach to working out something for the best interests of the children, regardless of race.

School Bias Case Involves Moral Issues Says Calhoun

"The case before the United States Supreme Court relative to segregation in the public schools involves moral issues which every American citizen must confront."

So said Dr. Malcolm Calhoun, secretary of the Division of Christian Relations of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.

"Surely Christian people should be acquainted with these issues and be prepared to give guidance in these momentous days," Calhoun told an interracial group yesterday at Wesley Memorial Methodist Church, 63 Auburn Ave.

He explained that there are four moral and spiritual issues at stake:

I. HUMAN RIGHTS

"Not only does scripture teach the dignity and worth of every person, but also the Constitution of the United States recognizes that man is endowed with certain inalienable rights, among them being life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," Calhoun said.

"The question then becomes Does the practice of segregation in the public schools promote or hinder the full enjoyment of these rights?"

2. THE EXPENDITURE OF MONEY

"A conservative estimate would indicate that it would cost the South one billion dollars to equalize the schools," Calhoun stated. "Is such an expenditure justifiable in view of the fact that this money represents the sacrifice of life in a nation founded upon the principles of freedom?"

3. THE LAW OF SEGREGATION

"'Jesus pointed out that the teaching of the law and the prophets was summed up in two commandments," Calhoun declared. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.' Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

He said it is impossible to understand the application of the law of neighborliness "to the matter of segregation without the spirit of compassion so evident in the life of Jesus."

.4 AMERICA'S INFLUENCE UPON THE REST OF THE WORLD

"No issue should be decided solely on the basis of world reaction," Calhoun said. "But it is not unimportant, especially when segregation is considered an evil thing among many peoples of the world, notably in Communist dominated countries."

"In the minds of Eastern peoples, Christianity is identified with the West. If America holds to the practive of segregation, Christianity will be identified with such action.

"Therefore, this is a time for Christian citizens to give serious consideration to the whole matter of segregation."

Harold Fleming of the Southern Regional Council said:

"The effects of the decision of the Supreme Court are not going to be an overall thing. Changes are going to come slowly."

If the high court rules against segregation in public schools, the decision "can't be protected by the court in the last analysis," Fleming said. Integration or desegregation must be accomplished at the local level.

BASIC QUESTION

He asserted that the basic question involves "the concern of parents about the education of their children," despite legal and moral issues involved. It was this concern that led to the suits now pending before the United States Supreme Court.

"'It is a practical, tangible question of how our children are going to be educated," Fleming stated.

He said the cooperation of all parents is necessary to solve the problem. The problem can be solved. he said.

"If you have a program with both races working together on a pratical basis, you can work out a practical and everyday solution," Fleming declared.

As leader of the discussion period, Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, said:

"Legalized segregation is a badge of inferiority, imposed by one group upon another. It stigmatizes the Negro as being unfit to move about as a free human being. It penalizes a man for being what God made him."

FLOUTS CHRISTIAN TEACHINGS

He said segregation is a moral question because the practice flouts Christian teachings and the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

"To proclaim one thing and do another strikes at the heart of morality," Mays said.

Sponsored by the Fulton-DeKalb Interracial Committee, the meeting was presided over by the Rev. James L. Welden, chairman and pastor of Oak Grove Methodist Church in Decatur.

Segregation Ruling Seen For Monday

Gov. Talmadge Thursday said a "reliable legal source" predicted the U.S. Supreme Court will render a decision on segregation in public schools on Mondoy or "shortly thereafter."

But, although the governor outlined five possible decisions by the nation's highest court, he said again he does not believe the court will be "so foolhardy as to strike down segregation in the public schools of the South, overturn judicial precedent of over 100 years and destroy the Constitution."

SPEEDUP

Nevertheless, he speeded up the Georgia Education Commission's work to prepare for possibility of an adverse decision by naming a five-man subcommittee to formulate plans and procedures for the full 22-member commission to consider.

The governor repeated his statement that he will use whatever state resources and forces are necessary to maintain segregation in Georgia schools.

"The court will end its unprecedented four-week mid-term recess next Monday," the governor said, "and our source—a prominent attorney who has attended most of the court's hearings on the matter and is familiar with the court's policies and procedures—says all signs point to a ruling shortly thereafter, possibly that day."

TIE DISCUSSED

Discussing the decisions, Talmadge said the lawyer stated; declare segregation unconstitutional and the state legislature laws or outlaw segregation without qualification. Aside from these two clearcut possibilities, he said the court could cast a four-four tie vote with Chief Justice Warren abstaining, which would permit segregation laws to stand; to enact legislation to carry out the ruling.

The governor said the court could uphold segregation practicing segregation on a probation period with special "masters" named to bring about integration in South Carolina and four other states. No cases before the court involve segregation in Georgia schools, and the Georgia case is before the court.

Private School Proposal Is Hit in Ministers' Vote

GAINESVILLE, March 10—Gainesville Ministerial Association members, in a majority report, went on record Tuesday with a resolution opposing amendments to the Georgia constitution that would transfer public schools to some form of private jurisdiction.

In a statement prepared at their Monday afternoon session, the Protestant ministers of the community named the public schools and continued constitutional government as the "great cornerstones of Democracy."

They asked the people to remain calm and watchful, should "leaders seek to hurry them into any action not in keeping with their profession as followers of Jesus Christ."

Though they did not specifically name the proposal of the state administration, due to come before the voters in the fall as a proposed amendment to the state Constitution, they obviously were referring to Gov. Herman Talmadge's attempt to solve problems brought up by an anticipated ruling from the US Supreme Court on the matter of segregation in public schools.

See Court In Tie Over Segregation

MANCHESTER, Ga. — The possibility of a deadlock in the U.S. Supreme Court on segregation in public schools was seen here last week by James S. Peters, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Peters added that such a deadlock on the decision, with four judges for and against, the decision by lower courts allowing segregation would stand, and might even delay further action on the issue for five to 10 years.

These statements, Peters said, are based on widely circulated reports at a recent democratic meeting in Philadelphia. These reports, which caused Southern democrats to raise both their eyebrows and their hopes, were in effect as follows:

When former President Truman was in office the Supreme Court stood at four for upholding segregation and four for abolishing it. The late Chief Justice Vinson had not handed down his opinion in the case. It was at this point that the Democratic administration decided to delay the decision.

Later Vinson died and Gov. Earl Warren of California was appointed to the post by President Eisenhower.

Had Vinson lived, it was never determined how he would have ruled on the issue, despite the fact he was a Southerner.

The four to four deadlock now predicted by Peters, can, however, only happen if Chief Justice Warren excuses himself from participating in the opinion on the basis he was not on the court when arguments for and against segregation began.

WHITE GEORGIA EDUCATORS OBJECT TO TALMADGE PLAN TO ELIMINATE PUBLIC SCHOOL SET-UP

Fondle Plan to Continue Segregation Despite Probable Action of U. S. Court

MISSISSIPPIANS HAVE SAME IDEA OF ESCAPE

ATLANTA — (ANP) — Some Georgia educators are not as sold on Gov. Herman Talmadge's plan to abolish public schools as has been indicated previously.

The educators, members of a newly-formed study commission, last week were considering a proposal whereby the state could continue to operate public schools on a segregated basis.

According to the proposal, county school superintendents would be empowered to assign pupils to the schools they must attend. The superintendents would be given wide discretion, making the assignments for the "best interests of the child and also the best interests of the public school system."

Charlie Gowen, gubernatorial candidate, suggested the proposal.

It counteracts the Talmadge plan, approved by the legislature, whereby the state would end public schools in the event the U. S. Supreme court out-laws segregation in the nation's public schools.

A similar plan involving the legislative approach to the issue, was approved in Mississippi last week and is being considered in Florida. Mississippi earlier rejected a bill to abolish public schools if segregation is ruled unconstitutional.

Hand Urges Schools Be Kept Publi

Asks Cool Scrutiny On Segregation

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Gubernatorial candidate Fred Hand of Pelham last night called for continuation of public, segregated schools in Georgia.

In his first speech since announcing for governor, Hand told a Waycross meeting of the Eighth District Principals Association that Georgians shouldn't "act hastily and emotionally" in event the court outlaws segregation.

URGES CALM

"We should be calm and clear thinking in our deliberations of our rights and limitations under such a decision," said Hand, who is chairman of the State School Building Authority now engaged in a $200,000,000 building program.

"A solution should be worked out within the bounds of our Southern traditions that does not disrupt public education in the State of Georgia—a solution which tends always to serve the best interest of our children," Hand asserted.

HIS LETTERS

Elsewhere in the gubernatorial picture, Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin of Bainbridge declared state funds were not used to send out letters announcing his plan to seek the governorship. His statement came after gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen of Brunswick said, "Political letters should not be written at state expense." Gowen also said candidates with state offices should remove their campaign workers from the state payroll.

"The comment of this 'Jim Cox predawn early bird' is of little importance to me," said Griffin. "The letter to which he refers was written on stationery printed at my plant at Bainbridge and mailed with postage bought by me. Those who wrote the letter were paid out of my own pocket, and the letter was not written on state property."

Records in the offices of the state Treasury and secretary of state, which pay legislative employes and buy supplies for state agencies, showed that state funds were not used on the letters nor to pay two or three secretaries recently added to Griffin's staff. The lone state-paid secretary who initialed the letter said she did so on her own time.

Griffin's letter to community leaders over the state said: "It is too early for me to make a public announcement now, but I wanted you to be among the first to know that I will qualify for governor when the State Democratic Committee meets."

Gowen In Favor Of Segregation But Not Private School Plan

BY PAUL W. BURTON

BOSTON, Ga— (I N S) —Rep. Charles Gowen charged last night that political forces in Georgia would, "in a moment of panic," "tear down the state's public school system, which he termed Georgia's greatest accomplishment since reconstruction days.

Gowen launched his campaign for Governor tonight with a direct assault upon Gov. Herman Talmadge's plan to maintain segregation and the benefits of the state operated school system.

Addressing the Kiwanis Club at Boston, Gowen observed:

"In a moment of panic it is suggested that we scrap all of this progress and abolish our public schools. It is suggested we give away all of our school buildings to some as yet unnamed private individuals to operate for their private gain and advance."

He said such a course of action "would bring such dire results that those of us who have studied the situation tremble to even think of them."

FAVORS SEGREGATION

Gowen placed himself squarely in favor of maintaining segregation. He said:

"I want to make it plain I believe in segregation in the public schools and I stand for the preservation of our present pattern of segregation in our schools. But I believe, yes, I know, that we can maintain our public schools and still have the races separated in these schools.'

Gowen charged that to abolish the state's public school system would also mean making the University of Georgia, Georgia Tech, and other colleges, "private" institutions without official standing. He said the plan as proposed in the last session of the legislature would place in jeopardy the teacher retirement system. He said:

TEACHER PROBLEM

"The teacher retirement system is only good because it is guaranteed by the full faith and credit of the public schools, we would also abolish the state's guarantee behind the teachers retirement fund and no teacher could then be assured that when he or she needed the funds that they would be available."

Gowen's own plan would allow every county school superintendent to designate the school and classroom which each child in the public school shall attend. This plan could be put into effect, he said, by a legislative act.

"TRUST" SUPERINTENDENTS

Gowen observed:

"We can trust our county school superintendents to maintain our southern traditions. . . "

He said this plan would preserve segregation "in ninety-nine and ninety-nine one hundredths per cent of the cases.' He added that it was possible 'for trouble makers from the north to import a person or two to try to raise discord and confusion.' He said the legislature could meet this threat by providing for a right of appeal through the County Board of Education, thence to the State Board of Education, with no court suit possible until these administrative appeals had been exhausted.

SAYS NEGROES "WANT SEGREGATION"

If a case of dissatisfaction with a superintendent's assignment of a student to a specific school should reach the courts, Gowen's plan would require that such cases be tried by a jury. He said:

'We will have no trouble and few appeals because in the first place our colored people believe in and want separate schools. But even should there be one or two trouble makers later years, a jury of good Georgia men and women can be depended upon to make the right decision.'

Gowen pointed out tha Mississippi's legislature voted down a proposal to scrap tthe public school system and Alabama's Governor has said he does not believe abolition of public schools is the answer to maintenance of segregation.

New Schools Are Assured --Talmadge

Georgia's multi-million dollar school building program will continue even if the public school system is abolished, Gov. Talmadge declared yesterday.

He made this pledge after threatening to call out troops —if necessary— to maintain segregated schools.

The statements came as the State School Building Authority prepared to issue an additional $35,000,000 worth of bonds for construction of new projects. Representatives of the authority are going to New York

As he organized a commission to study court decisions on segregation, Gov. Talmadge said that regardless of how the United States Supreme Court rules on segregation it will not affect the vast school building program.

State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr. supported Talmadge's view. Thrasher pointed out that the State School Building Authority is not a state agency. It can continue to issue bonds to construct buildings for schools and lease these buildings to whoever is authorized by law to operate them, Thrasher said.

"The children will have to be educated," said Thrasher, a member of the study commission and of the School Building Authority. "The buildings will be needed, regardless of how the schools are operated."

EITHER PLAN

Thrasher contended that the state can continue to appropriate $200 per teacher to each school system, whether this be a public system as presently organized or whether it be chartered as an educational corporation. Even the present appropriation law, which cuts off allocations to systems ending segregation, provides that funds shall continue for capital outlay.

While the governor keynoted the study group's first meeting with a threat to take "extreme action if necessary" to maintain segregation, Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of the Atlanta public school system and a member of the commission, said the group could exercise a stabilizing influence in time of stress.

"If a court decision should outlaw segregation in public schools, we would be prepared to study and determine what should be done," the superintendent said. "It would permit us to hold everything intact until we reached a decision. Instead of running off in all directions, the people could look to the commission for recommendations."

Miss Jarrell said she has no pet plan to suggest. She said she hasn't considered any plan, and doubts if any other member of the commission has.

At the request of Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and Gov. Talmadge, the commission employed Durwood Pye and B. D. Murphy, Atlanta attorneys, as executive secretary and counsel, respectively. Their salaries and fees will be set by the governor and attorney general.

Pye will begin an immediate study of segregation laws and decisions.

Talmadge was named chairman of the study group in the legislative resolution. He appointed Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin as vice chairman.

In an unusual action, the lieutenant governor administered the oath of office to the governor. The attorney general ruled even the governor had to take the oath for this commission.

School Segregation Panel Favored by Board Here

Dr. Clement Calls for Study To Meet 'Inevitable' Decision

The Atlanta Board of Education last night tentatively approved a motion by Dr. Rufus Clement calling for establishment of a special committee to study problems which would arise in city schools by "any one of several possible decisions" on school segregation by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Dr. Clement, president of Atlanta University and first Negro member of the Atlanta school board, warned members that a Supreme Court decision was "as inevitable as death." He said compilation of "purely factual information" could be done objectively now before the matter became "a political football."

Board members, holding a special session of committees prior to their regular meeting today, voted 5-2 in favor of the motion. Franklin Rodgers and Ed S. Cook voted against it, and J. Austin Dilbeck abstained from voting. The matter will go before the board today.

CITES EARLY LEAD

A. C. Latimer, who headed a dissolved committee set up for such a study in the past, declared last night he thought it "incumbent" on the group to establish the new study committee. He said "the state took the lead" from the city board committee, apparently referring to the panel set up by Gov. Talmadge. Latimer said the city board study group should do its work "dispassionately, quietly, and with no political implications."

Meanwhile, board members indicated they will pass a resolution today calling on the mayor and Board of Aldermen to approve a new bond issue. The board has been pressing for a $13,000,000 share of any bond issue floated here for city schools. Dilbeck, directed by fellow board members to prepare a "firm" request for a new bond issue, said city schools needed 350 additional classrooms.

EQUIPMENT GRANTS

The board in its special session lasts night accepted $130,500 in capital outlay funds from the State School Building Authority, Atlanta's share of a bond issue floated by the authority Dec. 18. Board members approved an allocation plan for furniture and equipment for 15 city schools, as follows:

Price School Building

Price school, new $1,000,000 Negro high school built under the state building program for children in the Carver Homes development off Pryor Rd., will be completed and ready to be equipped" by the end of this week, Miss Ira Jarell, superintendent of city schools, announced yesterday.

Miss Jarrell reported equipping the new school will take so much time that she does not anticipate the school will be opened until September.

Statistics Cited as Proof Negro Teachers Fare Ill in Unsegregated School Systems

Blue Mountain, Miss.—Collateral to the school teacher situation is the question of how the Negro teachers will fare under unsegregated school systems.

If southern states follow the example of unsegregated states, Negro teachers will suffer.

From a study of census facts of all states the following facts appear: North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia employ more Negro teachers than all the other states combined.

South Carolina alone employs more Negro teachers than 10 of the northern industrial states including the three most populous. Yet the combined Negro population of these 10 states exceeds the Negro population of South Carolina by more than a million.

New York according to the 1950 census has 918,000 Negroes but employs less than 3,000 Negro teachers. South Carolina with 822,000 Negroes employs 8,845 Negro teachers.

The board also passed a resolution requesting the Mayor and Board of Aldermen to adopt a Resolution of Acceptance in authorizing a letter of commitment to the City of Atlanta Board of Education for furniture and equipment costs, the State School Building Authority made it mandatory that the Resolution of Acceptance be approved by the Mayor and Board of Aldermen.

Chairmen of the following committees made reports:

J. Austin Dilbeck, Building and Grounds; Mrs. Clifford N. Ragsdale, Personnel; Franklin Rodgers, Athletic and Military; P. L. Bardi, Cafeteria; A. C. Latimer, Maintenance and Operation, and Dr. Clement, Purchasing.

President Devereaux F. McClatchey presided. Other members of the board present were Ed S. Cook and Neil M. Baldwin, along with Miss Ira Jarell, Superintendent of Schools, and other administrative officials.

Board Of Education To Study School Bias Cases

Action on several matters discussed during a meeting of committees Monday night will be taken at the February meeting of the Atlanta Board of Education today at 3 P. M.

At the meeting of committees, the school board voted to have a study committee gather factual information on the implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Public School Cases for the City of Atlanta.

A motion to create a study committee, made by Dr. Rufus E. Clement of the Third Ward, was carried by a 5-2 vote. Such a committee was appointed in 1953 only to be dismissed later.

INTERESTED IN FACTS

Before making the motion, Dr. Clement said: "I am interested in the facts. I want to know the implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Public School Cases for the City of Atlanta no matter what the decision is."

He stressed the importance of having the school administration get the facts "without trying to

Segregation Board Held Backing Public Schools

Dr. Mark A. Smith, Bibb school superintendent, predicted yesterday a state commission on education of which he is a member will not recommend abolition of Georgia's public school system as a means of keeping racial segregation.

Dr. Smith spoke at a meeting of the Macon Inter-Civic Club Council. He is a member of a state commission set up by the General Assembly to study problems which would be created if the U.S. Supreme Court should rule on several pending cases that racial segregation in schools violates the Federal Constitution.

"I don't think there is anyone on the commission who wants to do away with the public schools," Dr. Smith said.

He did not discuss a proposed constitutional amendment sponsored by Governor Talmadge to pave the way for abolition of the public schools and payment of tax funds to citizens for educational purposes. The governor has proposed the state "subsidize the child" in private schools in the event of a court decision ending segregation in public schools.

Dr. Smith said a new system in Bibb County under which the superintendent designates which school a child must attend has "worked out fine" since it was adopted by the Bibb Board of Education last June.

Segregation To Continue, Vandiver Vows in Lavonia

Constitution State News Service

LAVONIA, July 9—Ernest Vandiver, former state adjutant general, opened his campaign for lieutenant-governor here this afternoon with a speech in which he expressed hope the Georgia Education Commission would find a way to maintain segregation in the public school system.

Vandiver spoke at a rally featuring string band music and free barbecue, with motorcades coming from neighboring cities and counties.

On the issue of segregation in the public schools, candidate Vandiver stated:

"I sincerely hope that the Georgia Education Commission, which is comprised of the best legal minds in our state, will find a way to maintain segregation within our public school system, but if they cannot, then our traditions must be preserved come what may."

CAN FIND WAY

"Without equivocation, I say clearly to you that I am for any action which is necessary to do the job. I feel that sensible men, working in good faith can find a way."

On the subject of the county unit system, Vandiver stated he would oppose any move to abolish it.

Vandiver also reaffirmed his positions on increased aid to education, aid to farmers, fair and equitable distribution of old-age pensions, development of the state's natural resources, an expanded highway program and adequate civil defense program.

"I will not be aligned with any gubernatorial candidate," he asserted. "I will work hand in hand with any governor who is interested in the continued progress and the welfare of our state."

POLITICAL LEADERS

Political leaders from all over northeast Georgia attended the rally. Col. L. S. Johnson, former assistant attorney general under Eugene Talmadge, was master of ceremonies.

Judge Marshall Allison, former assistant attorney general under Arnall, introduced the candidate. Other speakers included Col. George Good, Toccoa, and State Senator C. G. Campbell, chairman of the rally.

Motorcades from Elberton, Hartwell, Royston, Toccoa, Carnesville and Winder were on hand for the opening of the Vandiver campaign.

State school official in Georgia conferring on private class plan

ATLANTA, June 30—(AP)—An Alabama official looking for a solution to the school segregation problem conferred yesterday with the secretary of Georgia's Education Commission.

Charles Cooper, director of Alabama's legislative reference service, told newsmen that he came here to find out about the private school plan. He got his information from Durwood Pye, secretary of the Education Commission.

He said he also expects to confer with segregation planners in South Carolina where a three-school plan and the private school plan both are under consideration.

He reported that [illegible] to Pye for de[illegible] plan backed by Gov. Herman Talmadge to set up publicly-supported private schools where segregation would be the rule.

provisions of the Constitution of the United States and the recent ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court can, in the opinion of the writer, be legally attained, at least in part, by the following procedure.

The Constitution of Georgia, paragraph 23, article 8, provides that "The General Assembly of the state shall have authority to grant the governing authorities of the municipalities and counties authority to pass zoning and planning laws whereby such cities or counties may be zoned or districted for various uses and other or different uses prohibited therein, and regulating the use for which said zones or districts may be set apart, and regulating the plans for developments and improvements on real estate therein."

Under this section of the Georgia Constitution the General Assembly of Georgia could enact a general statute providing for the zoning of all municipalities in the state for educational purposes. Under such establishment the town or city councils could enact ordinances providing for the zoning for educational purposes in their territories.

However unpalatable or contrary to our reason the holding of the Supreme Court on this question may be, it is now the law, and criticism of it will not change it. However, it does not nullify other laws which do not conflict with its provisions. This plan can be made to work in any state by enactment of the proper constitutional amendments and statutes.

5th Negro School for DeKalb

DeKalb County broke ground Monday on its fifth Negro school building since the Supreme Court handed down its anti-segregation decision, and social abstraction due to custom and the dictates of the best interests of both races."

Speaking at ceremonies breaking ground for a new Negro elementary and high school at Lithonia, Cherry said DeKalb has no idea of stopping its program designed to put every Negro school child in the county in a new classroom by September 1955.

"Any interruption of our plans to provide for our Negro children an adequate education opportunity will come at the hands of the Negroes," he said.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS

"We should understand that the school authorities of DeKalb expect to provide equal but separate schools," Cherry stated flatly.

He maintained it was the direct responsibility of Negro citizens to see that the accumulated effect of a constant long-range effort to improve the South is not lost by "energies absorbed in temporary expedients on school problems and other segregation problems."

Cherry said the Negro teaching profession developed in Georgia and the South depends on the maintenance of equal and separate schools.

SEGREGATION ISSUE

The school superintendent admitted that the issue of segregation looms large and "none would minimize it." But he said in the long perspective, "if we provide an adequate education program it will fulfill our constitutional commitments to all children, give validity to the equal and separate schools arguments, fulfill the desires of the overwhelming majority of our people, and insure the future welfare of our state."

Attending the ceremonies were county and state officials and a large gathering of Negroes of the community.

Segregation Foe Told To Resign Post

The wife of a Baptist clergyman, outspoken in his criticism of segregation, reported Tuesday that she has been requested to resign as a teacher in the Shellman schools.

Mrs. Martha Lee Buchanan said the request was made by trustees of the schools and was forwarded to her in a letter written by J. D. Shepard of Cuthbert, superintendent of Randolph County schools.

"No reason was given as to why I should resign," Mrs. Buchanan told newsmen.

She said she has written Shepard that she will not resign.

"I will not resign," her letter read. "However, in view of the expressed desire of the trustees of Shellman school and the request forwarded through you, it has become imperative that the grounds for this request be plainly stated.

"Moreover, any action that is taken to invalidate the existing contract will have to be initiated by those parties interested in my removal, and the responsibility therefor must be borne by them."

Mrs. Buchanan is a teacher of fourth grade pupils.

She said Shepard's letter was dated July 10 but was not postmarked until July 20. It reached her while she was on a vacation in Louisville, Ky.

Mrs. Buchanan's husband, the Rev. Henry A. Buchanan, was dismissed as pastor of two Baptist churches near Shellman after he expressed his views against segregation.

The Friendship Baptist Church congregation voted July 19 to terminate his pastorate. Earlier, the Brooksville Baptist Church had voted to call for his resignation.

The Rev. Mr. Buchanan is also pastor of the Shellman Baptist Church which has given him a vote of confidence.

Gowen Says Private Plan Will Ruin Rural Schools

By JIM PINSON
Constitution Staff Writer

HAWKINSVILLE, July 28—Gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen charged Wednesday that M. E. Thompson lacks the courage to oppose the Talmadge-sponsored private school plan and that Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin wants to use the plan as a political give-away.

The veteran state legislator coupled the charges with a warning that the private school plan would destroy schools in the state's rural areas.

Gowen noted that the former acting governor (Thompson) is the only candidate who has suggested that the present governor take charge of the Georgia Education Commission after his term of office has expired.

"Melvin Thompson to this day," Gowen declared, "has not had the courage to oppose the private school plan."

POLITICAL PLUM

Griffin, the candidate from Brunswick charged, is supporting the plan so he can use the schools as a "political plum."

"The lieutenant governor wants to pick out a group of citizens and tell them to operate your schools for their own advantage," Gowen said.

Recalling that he opposed the private school amendment in the legislature, Gowen said he would continue his opposition until the amendment "is defeated by the people at the polls in November."

The Glynn County lawyer has emphasized in his campaign through middle Georgia that the country schools would be the losers under the Talmadge school plan. He said there wouldn't be enough per capita school checks sent to the sparsely settled rural areas to keep the schools open.

Each school child would receive a check from the state for education purposes under the private school plan.

Gowen's plan for retaining public schools calls for the assignment of pupils on the local level.

A Thompson platform plank advocating state assistance to municipalities came in for criticism by Gowen in a speech at Eastman.

Such aid could be given to cities, Gowen said, "only at the expense of the road-building program in the rural areas."

AGAINST CITY GRANTS

"I am opposed to the state's giving grants or handouts to the cities. Such grants would be made on the basis of street mileage and the big cities would get the lion's share," Gowen explained. Other Gowen pledges Wednesday included preservation of water rights for farm irrigation, fixed parity for farm products, elimination of speed traps, reduction of hospitalization insurance and the establishment of a statewide probation system to curb crime.

Continuing his person-to-person style of campaigning, Gowen, accompanied by his wife Evelyn and daughters Ann and Bootie, made "handshaking" stops Wednesday at Rhine, Milan, Chauncey and Godwinville.

Thursday's itinerary calls for speeches at Abbeville, Rochelle and Vienna.

Blasts Cook's Refusal To Invite Atty. General

NEW YORK — (SNS) — In a strong letter to Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook, New York Atty. Gen. Nathaniel L. Goldstein accused him of making a "terrible blunder" when, as president of the National Association of Attorneys General, he refused to invite U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell to speak at the association's coming annual convention.

Atty. Gen. Goldstein revealed that Mr. Cook announced he would ignore the time-honored practice of inviting the United States attorney to speak." Mr. Cook's announcement came on June 24.

His reasons were (according to Mr. Goldstein) based on Brownell's filing of a brief to the Supreme Court favoring the abolition of segregation in public education.

Mr. Cook further asserted that because of this Mr. Brownell's presence would be offensive to the host state to the convention, Mississippi. Mr. Cook also scathed the Attorney General for the speech in which one of his assistants explored a controversy involving the Attorney General of South Dakota last year.

In Mr. Goldstein's letter, he stated that the questio nof Mr. Brownell's appearance would have to be acted upon by the association's executive committee.

Mr. Goldstein's letter to Mr. Cook further said:

"You fail to realize that you are acting in a dual capacity, as attorney general of Georgia and as president of the National Association of Attorney's General.

"As attorney general of Georgia, you are entitled to your opinion, however untenable it may be. The court of last resort has spoken.

"But when you speak as the president of the association, you have no right to arrogate unto yourself who shall and who shall not be invited to our functions."

Mr. Cook made no reply to the letter.

He'd Uphold Segregation By Force, Griffin Says

STATESBORO, Ga., Aug. 14—The services of the state militia, the highway patrol, and Gov. Talmadge were pledged Saturday by Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin in his fight against the breaking down of racial barriers.

Addressing a crowd from 15 counties on the Bulloch County Courthouse square, Mr. Griffin promised there will be no mixed schools if he is governor as "long as there is the breath of life in my body."

He stated he would call out the patrol and militia if the need arose, and added that "I will prevail upon Gov. Herman Talmadge and other leaders of our state to stand at my side in this fight."

THE ATLANTA PRESS came in for its usual share of the candidate's attention. This time he prophesied that the Atlanta Journal and Constitution would "roll out lie after lie about Marvin Griffin" until the election.

He said the "Atlanta newspaper monopoly" will attempt to divert its reader's attention with side issues, while "they will heap yellow journalism on my head just as they did on Govs. Eugene and Herman Talmadge."

Reciting the Talmadge gospel on segregation, and including chapter and verse, Mr. Griffin said that presevation of segregation and the County Unit System were the only real issues before the voters. He said also that he was for the private school amendment, would work for it, and vote for it.

THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR barely referred to Fred Hand whose candidacy for governor has been endorsed by The Atlanta Journal and Constitution. He said, instead, that the people of Georgia know "little boy Roy of Augusta, and Gov. Cox's newspaper monopoly are in bed with M. E. Thompson."

He called Mr. Thompson the NAACP candidate, endorsed by the Atlanta Daily World," and said:

"These birds of a strange feather are frantic. They are desperate. But I predict that all the king-makers' horses and all the king-makers' men won't be able to put mix-'em-up Melvin together again."

Mr. Griffin quoted several of Gov. Talmadge's talks on the segregation issue. He also read from the works of various NAACP leaders, and stated that organization's aim was to mix races everywhere, as well as in schools. He quoted the NAACP's Walter White on the possibility of interracial marriages once other bars were down, and called the Supreme Court school segregation ruling an "order to us from Washington mongrelize the South."

"IS THERE ANY doubt in any man's mind that we must get out there and fight to win this election?" he asked.

"Marvin Griffin is the only candidate in this race who can be depended upon to continue fighting these actions in the same forceful manner as Gov. Herman Talmadge," Mr. Griffin said.

He described opponents as a "dastardly group of foes," and asserted that The Atlanta Journal and Constitution are "as dead set on destroying segregation" in the schools and colleges as the NAACP. Their politics are the same, and have never varied, he said.

He accused the papers of editorial silence on this subject, saying they apparently preferred to write "snide editorials about my and Gov. Talmadge's fight to preserve segregation. They have, through their news columns and editorials, contributed to the situation in which we find ourselves today."

Victory is in sight, he told his supporters. Concerning those who back the opponent he recognized principally Saturday, he said, "Why they are leaving in a crowd, like fleas on a kerosened dog. I've never seen the like."

More About The Private School Plan

Of late we hear so much in regards to the converting of the state public school system to private interests. The various candidates for governor in favor of some such plan have never gotten down to a practical equation in their discussions as to how the public schools can be taken from the roster of public state institutions and remain entirely private.

The ambiguities attendant, even in the proposed amendment to be voted on in the general election, are so pronounced, there are doubts in many quarters that the sponsors of the move are in earnest. Surely experienced state administrators and those having to do with the state supervision of private institutions are not without the knowledge that such a vast entity as a public school system cannot be operated even on a private basis without the state entering somewhere in its regulations. Banks, insurance companies and thousands of private institutions belonging to stockholders and otherwise, must at periods for the protection of the public come under the strict scrutiny of the state.

In the first place the private school plan would heavily involve the spending of tax monies for private purposes. The enforcement of another important angle is the state truency law; that law which operate at all times and at the expense of the state for the common welfare. The teachers' pension plan is a state authority that cannot be separated completely from state supervision and administration.

To say nothing about accreditation and public relations having to do with interdealings with other systems of public education in other states, under such a plan the state would still be in the business of public education.

On the face of the statements of those sponsors of this private plan, the state cannot come out of the business of public education without reentering from various approaches.

We have always maintained pride and confidence in the Negro's ability to operate his schools if the responsibility were thrust upon him, but we are far from agreement with the attempted deliverance of the public school to private interests.

Our experience would lead us to envision those irregularities common to institutions operating outside of state supervision and regulation. Besides the point of attendant graft, questionable temptations in the employment of incompetent operators and inferior equipment, and the possibilities of a general deterioration in the quality of education offered, the proposed plan would raise more issues than it would solve. It would also become unwieldly in its complexes, and we undoubtedly would find ourselves engulfed in one of the most expensive ventures beyond our control ever imagined in the operation of wild-cat experiments beyond the reach of the laws of the state.

The schools must be kept public; that was the intention of the framers and founders of the public school system and it is the undeniable debt the state owes to every pupil within its confines.

The sound and most plausable way for the Negro to obtain a greater voice in the administration of his schools is through the members of his race being elected to the Boards of Education.

The WTA (white) and the GETA (Negro) have both vigorously opposed the private school plan and have called on the voters of the state to defeat such a wild dream, meant upon its very face as a device to run around the Supreme Court of the United States.

Yes, the private school plan is "fantastic" and impractical also.

Commissioners' Fight For Segregation Likely

SAVANNAH, April 19—The Georgia County Commissioners Association indicated here Monday it will fight to preserve segregation in the public schools.

It was learned that the resolutions committee Tuesday will recommend to the full convention that segregated schools be kept even if it means shifting from public to private schools.

The association also is expected to be asked to campaign for passage of a constitutional amendment, sponsored by Gov. Talmadge, to enable the state to make educational grants to children in lieu of providing public schools.

In this connection, it was pointed out that the Georgia Education Assn. at its recent convention in Atlanta launched a campaign against the constitutional amendment and called on the state to finance an adequate system of public schools.

An appeal on the resolution regarding segregation is expected to be made Tuesday to the commissioners by Gov. Talmadge.

Durwood Pye of Atlanta, secretary of the commission studying segregation, Monday spoke in behalf of the amendment.

His talk indicated that the study group is trying to sell the idea of private schools to Georgians in the event the United States Supreme Court bans segregation in public schools.

In actions Monday the association presented the Georgia Citizens Award to H. L. Wingate of Pelham, president of the Georgia Farm Bureau, for his contribution to local and state governments and his interest in the development of roads.

Kenneth Dunwoody of Macon, president of the association, and Frank Allicorn of Meriwether County, chairman of the highway committee, both hit the state administration for "circumventing the spirit of the constitutional amendment allocating gasoline taxes to road building."

Dunwoody and Allicorn said the roads should get all the gasoline and tag funds and should not be "subject to shearing by the budget commission."

Dunwoody also opposed any move to increase the weight allowances for trucks which, he said, "would destroy the highways."

At Allicorn's request the association in fixing its order of business ruled out of order any move which might be made to have the association endorse any candidate for any political office.

This dispelled reports the convention would indorse Jim Gillis, who addresses the group Tuesday, for governor.

The school decision

Speculation over when and what the Supreme Court will do in the momentous school segregation cases, mounts higher and higher as the end of the current term approaches.

The guessers have range from Georgia's Governor Herman Talmadge to New York's Representative Adam Clayton Powell.

Monday, March 12 has come and gone without an inkling of how the court will decide. That was the date given by Mr. Talmadge, who said he obtained his information from a "reliable legal source."

Monday, May 3 is the date which has been offered by Mr. Powell, who said he was quoting a source "from the inside."

Curiously, both Messrs. Talmadge and Powell are in agreement that the court would abolish segregated schools.

And they were together in their predictions that the vote of Chief Justice Earl Warren would be the deciding factor in a split court.

Others have been gazing into their crystal balls and coming up with different predictions.

Louisiana's Governor Robert Kennon, after going into a huddle with South Carolina's James F. Byrnes, found himself in agreement with Mr. Byrnes that the court would not disturb segregation.

Both are of the opinion that by a 5 to 4 decision, the Supreme Court will "decide education is within the province of the states."

But the prognostications of Kennon and Byrnes are decidedly in the minority.

Just about everybody else, North and South, has come to accept the belief the court will declare legal segregation violates the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

With the majority, the issue is no longer what the court will rule, but how and when.

Mr. Talmadge fears a "delayed action" decision in which the court will appoint special masters to supervise the gradual ending of segregation.

Even Mr. Powell, whom no one would label as conservative, is willing to give the segregation states as long as three years to get in step with the rest of the country.

It's clear the court is taking its own good time in rendering a decision.

This is testimony of its awareness of the widespread impact the verdict will have on those areas which still cling to dual school systems.

It's also clear that the long delay has served the useful purpose of allowing people in these areas to wisely adjust their thinking to the acceptance of a change.

Meanwhile as we wait for the court to make up its mind, we may as well add our guess is just as accurate as any of those others.

Although we have consulted no "reliable legal source" nor do we have access to an informant "from the inside," we contend

Preserve Segregation By Voting---Talmadge

By M. L. ST. JOHN
Constitution Political Editor

SAVANNAH, April 20—Gov. Talmadge Tuesday called on the "white voters of Georgia" to join him in a ballot box fight to maintain segregated schools and the county unit system. He reiterated that he is backing no candidate for governor.

Talmadge, addressing the Georgia Association of County Commissioners, asked the officials to help defeat a "school of thought which seeks by fright to overturn segregation and all we hold dear in the South."

As speculation increased that the governor's race would attract six or eight candidates, Talmadge's remarks apparently were intended to pinpoint his private school plan as the major issue.

None of the announced candidates has advocated abolishing segregation although there have been differences of opinion as to means of retaining separate schools if the Supreme Court should hold them unconstitutional.

The governor called no names in his speech. At one point there was a shout from the audience that he was referring to former Gov. Ellis Arnall. Talk of Arnall's candidacy has died down but it still appears that he and Talmadge may be senatorial opponents in 1956.

Jim Gillis of Soperton, chairman of the State Highway Board, appeared nearer to announcing his candidacy after he addressed a final session of the commissioners convention here.

He shied away from politics in his speech—the first of his career—and he won a rousing ovation from the gathering. He dealt strictly with progress of highway work in Georgia.

Obviously pleased with his oratorical debut, Gillis told commissioners who gathered around after his address that he would announce his intentions May 1.

The commissioners gave enthusiastic approval to Talmadge's private school plan for use in case segregation is outlawed. The association also accepted a proposal to poll candidates for governor and lieutenant governor on their plans for maintaining segregation.

The poll would question them on the private school amendment, the county unit system, diversion of auto tag and gasoline tax funds and increasing truck tonnage requirements.

Results of the questionnaire would be made public.

The resolution endorsing Talmadge's school segregation plan condemned the Ford Foundation for its gift of $240,000 to the Southern Regional Council for "propagandizing against the principle of separation of races." The resolution said the Supreme Court has no legal or moral right to interfere with the conduct of the schools.

Gubernatorial candidate Charles Gowen, an outspoken critic of Talmadge, listened to the governor's speech, then commented:

"Efforts to inflame the racial issue must be avoided if we are to solve our problem."

Another Talmadge opponent, former Acting Gov. M. E. Thompson, declined to comment.

Other resolutions endorsed before the closing of the commissioners' 40th convention (1) Called for selling auto tags in county courthouses, (2) Opposed increase in truck tonnage requirements or diversion of gas and license taxes, (3) Condemned a pending merger bill for Dougherty County, (4) Asked a continued fight to prevent evasion of state ad valorem tax on automobiles, (5) Urged legislation permitting counties to establish local planning commissions, (6) Invited the National Association of County Commissioners to meet in Georgia next year.

The association selected Augusta as the site for its next convention.

It elected W. A. Blasingame of Moultrie to the presidency; Frank W. Allcorn Jr. of Warm Springs to first vice president; George L. Mathews of Americus, second vice president, and James H. Aldredge of Atlanta, third vice president.

PTA Opens Fight on School Plan

BRUNSWICK, April 29 (AP)—The Georgia PTA, 180,000 strong, officially went on record today opposing Gov. Herman Talmadge's proposal to abolish the state's public schools, if and when the U.S. Supreme Court rules out school segregation.

The Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers unanimously pledged support to the "preservation and improvement of a continuing program of public education as it is now written in our constitution."

Keeping the school setup unchanged was made top plank in the 1954 platform of the parent-teachers organization as the annual state convention ended here today. The governor's proposal, designed to take the state's schools out of public education if segregation is outlawed, will be voted on in November.

Besides setting up specific steps towards establishing the new Adequate Program for Education in Georgia, the PTA platform included a couple of references to current troubles besetting the schools.

One of these emphasized faith in the loyalty of teachers.

Another, in an apparent slap at closed school board meetings, called for "the preservation of the rights and privileges which people have to knowledge in a free and democratic country.

"Freedom of the press, freedom of speech and the freedom of inquiry are basic to our democratic way of life. Any infringement on these freedoms in our schools and communities is the concern of every member of the PTA," the platform declared.

The delegates departed with instructions to decide specifically what their local communities want in the APEG. Local PTAs were also told to determine the cost of the program and how much they think should be raised locally.

At a panel discussion of APEG, a sobering estimate of 40 to 50 million dollars as the cost of maintaining the present Minimum Foundation Program and adding the APEG came from Roy Harris of Augusta, a member of a special Georgia Education Assn. committee.

Harris, who participated in the fight for the Minimum Foundation, differed from statements of PTA leaders that no new taxes would be needed.

He declared the MFP alone will require a tax increase next year. Surplus state funds being used to supplement tax revenues this year will be exhausted, he said, leaving a 10-million-dollar deficit.

Another 30 million dollars will be required for the increased teachers' salaries and expanded courses which the new Adequate Program of Education proposes, Harris estimated. "A lot of you are going to be opposed to more taxes," he told the convention. He added, however, "We are able to pay it and we ought to do it."

William Early, Chatham County school superintendent and president of the National Education Assn., in a closing address called for renewed efforts in behalf of the public school system.

During the three-day session, delegates were told that the Georgia PTA has reached an all-time high in membership of 180,700, a gain of over 19,000 over last year.

Segregation Fight In Ga. Looms

SAVANNAH — A fight to preserve segregated public schools was indicated here last week by the Georgia County Commissioners Association.

It was learned that even if a shift from public to private schools became necessary, the association was ready to ask the full convention that segregated schools be kept.

Support for Gov. Herman Talmadge's campaign to pass a constitutional amendment enabling the state to make educational grants to children in lieu of providing public schools, was also expected to be urged by the association.

In this regard it was pointed out that at its recent convention in Atlanta, the Georgia Education Association launched a campaign against such a constitutional amendment and called on the state to finance an adequate system of public schools.

Gov. Talmadge Defies Ruling on Segregation

ATLANTA, Ga., May 23 (UP). — Gov. Herman Talmadge declared today that Negroes and whites would not attend the same schools in Georgia even if troops were sent to enforce the Supreme Court's ban on segregation.

"We're not going to secede from the union," Talmadge said, "but the people of Georgia will not comply with the decision of the court."

FIRM ON STAND

"It would take several divisions of troops down here to police every school building in Georgia and then they wouldn't be able to enforce it," he said.

"We're going to do whatever is necessary in Georgia to keep white children in white schools and colored children in colored schools."

Talmadge's statements were made on the CBS radio program, "The World Today."

Meanwhile, a local community level campaign for early elimination of public school segregation was launched by the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

Branches in all affected areas were instructed to petition local school boards for immediate ending of racial separation in schools, and to offer assistance in working out problems.

Representatives of chapters in 18 States having mandatory segregation made plans to carry the campaign to the local school boards at a two-day session here.

LONG-TIME ADVOCATE

The Governor, like his father, the late Gov. Eugene Talmadge, is a long-time advocate of white supremacy and has made use of the segregation issue in his campaigns.

Talmadge's current term as Governor expires in January and he is prevented by law from seeking re-election. A move to change the Georgia Constitution and draft him to lead a Southern "crusade" against desegregation got under way last week, but Talmadge spiked it yesterday with a statement that he did not wish the action to be taken.

ECHOES SENTIMENTS

Talmadge's sentiments on the Supreme Court's ruling were echoed on the program by State Attorney General Eugene Cook, who took particular issue with the court's argument that to separate Negroes from whites of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race "generates a feeling of inferiority."

"Segregation does not present to the Negroes what we know in Georgia as an inferiority complex," the Attorney General said. "The Negroes in this State don't suffer that.

"I think perhaps they will suffer it more if they're forced to integrate with white children because of complex and psychological factors will be a constant reminder that they are not up to par with the average white person."

Private School Plan Hit As Political by Gowen

Gubernatorial Candidate Charlie Gowen Thursday hit the "private" school plan as a scheme to "pool" funds in Atlanta and distribute them on a political basis. He made his charges in a talk to the Sylvester Kiwanis Club.

Schools also were discussed by gubernatorial candidate Fred Hand in a talk Thursday to the Eatonton Kiwanis Club. Hand lauded the Talmadge administration's aid to schools program and promised to project it into the next administration. He is not committed to the private school plan.

FILL CAPITOL

Elsewhere on the political scene, rumors filled the State Capitol that Highway Chairman Jim Gillis won't run for governor. Gillis, himself, said he would have no announcement of his intentions until Sunday.

In Bainbridge, Decatur countians prepared for a $25-a-plate fund-raising dinner Friday at 8 p.m. for Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin's campaign. Griffin will speak.

Gowen said persons seeking to destroy the public school system are desperately trying to "sugar-coat the bitter pill even to the extent of throwing the distribution of school funds into politics."

"The recent statement by their spokesman that under a private school plan funds would be 'pooled and distributed on a city-wide or county-wide basis' simply is another way of saying that if your city or county guessed right at election time you would get lots of school money, but if your candidate lost your schools would be starved to death. We have seen what has happened with the political distribution of road funds."

Gowen said the best way to preserve the public school system is to keep control at the county level, and beat the plan to "pool" school funds in Atlanta.

YOUTH AIDED

Hand declared that Georgia's future is almost entirely dependent upon the educational opportunities afforded its youths. The advancements made in education are probably the most important made in Georgia or any other state, he said.

"State aid has increased from $47,300,000 to $115,500,000 in the present administration," the House speaker said. "We are proud to be a part of the administration that accomplished this. We will continue to finance schools in the next administration."

Hand, author of legislation creating the State School Building Authority and also chairman of this authority, said a $170,000,000 school-building program is under way.

'To Preserve Segregation, Griffin Says'

Constitution State News Service

ATHENS, May 5—Marvin Griffin, lieutenant governor of the state of Georgia and candidate for the chief executive's office in the September primary, told a cheering throng of university students and towns people Wednesday night that he will seek to preserve the tradition of segregation in Georgia regardless of cost."

Sponsored here by the Marvin Griffin for Governor Club at the university, Griffin spoke at Legion Field, on Lumpkin street, prior to a barbecue at which over a thousand persons were served.

He declare that he is "satisfied that the social tradition of segregation can be maintained by law in Georgia, and that Georgians will work the problem out."

He reminded his student audience that he had played a "small part" in introducing legislation which will make the science center at the university a reality.

Atlanta Schools List $314,306 Surplus

The Atlanta Board of Education ended the last fiscal year with a $314,306 surplus available for operations, State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr. reported Wednesday.

The report for the year ending June 30, 1953, showed total income of $13,560,777. Of this, $3,662,002, or 27 per cent, came from state aid; $9,108,590, or 67.17 per cent, was from the City of Atlanta, and $790,185, or 5.83 per cent, was from tuition, fees, Fulton County Board of Education, athletics, and other sources.

The $13,560,777 income and the $369,433 cash balance on hand with which the board started the fiscal year made a total of $13,930,211 total income available for the year.

From these available funds, $545,801 was spent on administration; $10,006,520 for instruction; $2,197,871 for plant maintenance and operations; $476,469 for lunch rooms, athletics and other expenses, and $342,871 was paid for land, buildings, improvements and equipment.

The audit listed the salaries of the superintendent and four assistant superintendents as follows: Marion Jarrell, $16,860; G. Y. Smith, Roy Davis, and Thomas Gill, $9,300, and M. E. Coleman, $7,341.

Salaries of teachers, white and colored, ranged generally from $1,900 to $4,400, with some as low as $1,250 and some as high as $5,120.

First Indication

"This article is just the first indication that the public school system intends to mix schools when this thing (a decision by the United States Supreme Court on segregation in the public schools) comes out."

He said Governor Talmadge's private school plan really envisions publicly regulated private schools. Contrary to some views, the plan would protect teachers' salaries, tenure and pension benefits, he declared.

Says integration accepted as fact

ATLANTA (NNPA) — Atlanta school officials "already have accepted the fact of non-segregation," John Sammons Bell, member of Gov. Herman Talmadge's commission—on school segregation, declared.

Mr. Bell told members of the Cherokee chapter, daughters of the American Revolution, that a news article reporting studies of colored and white school facilities made by the Atlanta School Board supported his charge.

NAACP To Hear Report On School Facility Survey

By CLAUDE GEORGE SR.

The Atlanta branch of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People will hear a report on a survey of city school facilities at a meeting at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Mount Olive Baptist Church.

The survey was conducted by Dr. R. O. Johnson and Dr. K. A. Huggins of Atlanta University; Dr. Clayton Powell, a physician, and Dr. L. M. Terrill, pastor of the Zion Hill Baptist Church and chairman of the NAACP education committee.

The officials said they felt citizens should know the present conditions of the schools in view of the fact that the Atlanta Board of Education is preparing a request to participate in the proposed city bond issue.

The education committee also said NAACP's legal staff had advised against pushing local segregation suits in U.S. District Court here until the U.S. Supreme Court issues a ruling.

The executive committee of the Atlanta branch will meet at 7 p.m. at Mt. Olive Church Tuesday.

GEORGIA NOMINEES MAP BIAS TACTICS

Amendments to Constitution and End of Supreme Court Backed to Void Ruling

ATLANTA, June 25 (AP)—An Amendment to the United States Constitution and elimination of the Supreme Court were suggested today as means of nullifying the decision striking down public school segregation.

The suggestions came from two candidates for Governor, M. E. Thompson and Ed Barfield, at a meeting of the Georgia Education Commission, which is seeking means to circumvent the court decision.

Another Gubernatorial candidate, Tom Linder, Agriculture Commissioner, proposed a program of allowing parents to choose all-white, all-Negro or mixed schools for their children.

Four other candidates for Governor, Lieut. Gov. Marvin Griffin, House Speaker Fred Hand, Representative Charles Gowen and Ben Garland, were heard by the commission earlier this month. All seven are seeking the Democratic nomination.

Mr. Thompson, former Acting Governor, suggested amendment of the Federal Constitution as one way to nullify the decision against segregated schools. He proposed an amendment giving states the right to operate their own schools without Federal interference or control.

Mr. Barfield, president of the National Association of Handicapped, denounced the Supreme Court for the segregation decision and suggested that it should be abolished.

State-Wide Census Asked

Mr. Linder based his proposal on the assumption that individuals could practice sanctions through social ostracism.

He suggested a state-wide census in which parents would declare under oath whether they wanted their children to attend segregated or mixed schools. He added that the results should be published in every country and "this would reduce potential trouble to a mere lunatic fringe."

He proposed to place all school-age children in a state-wide pool and assign them according to their choice either to all-white or all-Negro schools.

"Then only a lunatic fringe would be left in the pool," he said, "and the Legislature could provide for them as it sees fit."

He suggested, however, when questioned, that those who chose to attend mixed schools "are diseased and should have institutional care.

Resolution Defeated

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 25 (AP)—Alabama Presbyterians in session here refused to adopt a resolution stating that because "of the brotherhood of all men under Christ it is essential that discrimination with regard to race be removed."

The resolution was part of a report submitted to the annual meeting of the Alabama Synod yesterday by the Permanent Committee of Christian Relations.

School Bonds Opposed

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 25 (AP)—Attorneys for Manatee County Property Owners, protesting validation of $1,750,000 worth of school bonds, told the State Supreme Court today the anti-segregation decision would make the bonds invalid.

Reece Smith of Tampa, representing the property owners, said voters in the bond election had approved construction and enlargement of white and Negro schools with the bond revenue and declared the money could not be used legally for non-segregated schools.

Mr. Smith said he was not arguing in favor of the anti-segregation ruling but declared it would be unconstitutional to spend the money for segregated schools in view of the court's ruling.

Negro Students Approved

BALTIMORE, June 25 (AP)—The University of Maryland Board of Regents today voted unanimously to admit Negroes immediately to the university's undergraduate schools as well as the graduate schools. Negroes have been admitted to the graduate schools of medicine and law since 1952.

Stanley Backs Segregation

RICHMOND, Va., June 25 (UP)—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley declared today that "I shall use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools in Virginia."

Mr. Stanley's prepared statement urged consideration of a proposal to repeal the constitutional provision requiring the state to maintain a free public school system.

When the Supreme Court issued its ruling on May 14, Governor Stanley said he would set up a bi-racial committee "to consider the matter and work toward a plan which will be acceptable to our citizens and in keeping with the edict of the court."

Today he added: "In order that my position may be clearly understood I should like to state further that I shall use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools in Virginia."

He refused to comment on whether he still intended to set up the study commission.

SCHOOL DEDICATED—Dedication of Emma Clarissa Clement School, $300,000 Negro elementary school which was the first Atlanta public school to be completed under the $7,000,000 state school building program, was attended by school leaders of this area. The school is named for the mother of Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University and first Negro member of the Atlanta Board of Education. Here Dr. Clement, Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of city schools, and Devereaux McClatchey, education board president, view a portrait of the late Mrs. Clement, painted when she was named national "Mother of the Year."

Negro School Dedication Is Education Milestone

The first completely new school constructed under Georgia's accelerated school building program was dedicated in Atlanta last week.

The thoroughly modern structure—16 classrooms, auditorium and cafeteria—replaces the antiquated, inadequate Hunter Hills School for Negroes.

Appropriately enough, it bears the name Emma Clarissa Clement School in memory of the mother of Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University, who last month took a seat on the Atlanta School Board as the first Negro member.

From a statewide point of view, with the Clement School the accent is on the "first"—first new school in a $7,000,000 building program that emphasizes equal facilities for Negroes. Throughout Georgia, one can see them going up—splendid new structures to replace ramshackle, frame firetraps.

We have been slow in rising to the obligation of equal educational opportunities, but once having risen we are moving fast.

The completion of the Clement School in Atlanta is a milestone on the way to a new era in public schools, public schools of which we can be proud and a public school system which thinking Georgians believe can be maintained within the letter of any adverse court decision that may come on the subject of "separate" facilities.

New School For Negroes Dedicated

A $300,000 Negro elementary school—first new Atlanta public school to be completed under the $7,000,000 state school building program — was dedicated here yesterday by school leaders who termed it "an expression of our faith in the future."

Emma Clarissa Clement School, named for the late mother of Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University and first Negro member of the Atlanta Board of Education, replaces the old Hunter Hills School, Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of city schools, said.

Already in operation, the modern structure, including 16 classrooms, an auditorium and a cafeteria, provides facilities for more than 500 children. Although some additions to existing schools already have been built and opened under the state prorgam, Miss Jarrell pointed out, Clement School is the first completely new school in use.

A new white elementary school provided under the $7,000,000 program, Venetian Hills School, will be opened Monday and dedicated "in about two weeks," according to Miss Jarrell.

J. Austin Dilbeck, chairman of the Atlanta Board of Education building and grounds committee, presided over dedication ceremonies for Clement School at 180 Holly Rd., NW. Speakers included Devereaux McClatchey, board president; Mrs. L. P. Brown, school principal, and Miss Jarrell. Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Gammon Theological Seminary, offered the dedicatory prayer.

Dallas Anderson, kindergarten student, tripped up to the stage to say, "Thank you, Miss Jarrell, for the beautiful new school!"

GEORGIA PRIVATE SCHOOL AMENDMENT

Group Also Urges Probe Of Teacher Intimidations

Georgia officials who fought for and won passage of the so-called Private School Amendment were denounced yesterday by the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who strongly urged investigation of all cases intimidation of teachers, citizens and public school officials.

The resolutions, drawn up at the 18th Annual Session of the Georgia State Conference of NAACP Branches, did not name former Governor Herman Talmadge or Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin by name, but denounced:

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Rev. J. M. Hinton, militant South Carolina leader, will be the keynote speaker at the NAACP closeout session at Wheat Street Baptist Church. Rev. Hinton, who sponsored the Clarendon County, S. C. school suit that figured in the U. S. Supreme Court decisions, will address a mass meeting at 5 p. m.

"The actions of all individuals and organizations who devise strategies to incite violence, advocate the abolition of public education, and subvert the law as enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States."

CONDEMN POLITICIANS

The resolution continued, "We condemn the acts of politicians, in the forefront or hidden secretly in the background, who advocate the enactment of laws designed to defy our highest Federal Judiciary, and the injection of this insidious propaganda, by distribution, into the schools of our state, which tends to pollute the minds of innocent children.

"We call upon state and Federal governments to investigate these acts for possible violation of our laws and to take appropriate action."

In connection with this, the N. A. A. C. P. urged that "The N. A. A. C. P. investigate any and all alleged cases of intimidation of teacher-personnel, patrons and citizens by school officials, public officials and individuals in every area of activity and that proper action be taken to protect the rights and interests of those involved."

NEWSPAPERS

Georgia newspapers came in for a share of criticism. The resolutions declared, "We deplore the practice of certain daily newspapers which distort the true picture of the magnificent progress made in desegregation by exaggerating the isolated incidents of resistance and playing down the many wholesome and successful processes of integration."

THURGOOD MARSHALL

Georgia, radio and television stations were also mentioned.

"We regret," the resolution said, "the action of radio and television stations who blacked out the program: 'Youth Wants to Know' on Sunday, November 28, 1954 when Thurgood Marshall, Special Counsel of the NAACP gave the other side of the desegregation picture.

"These same stations carried the program when the Governor of Georgia gave his views. Such acts appear to be in violation of Federal Communications Commission regulations and indicate prejudice and bias."

Declaring that housing segregation is tied to segregation in education, branches were called upon to investigate all slum clearance.

Assistance in support and protection for "those groups and individuals who wish assistance" in combatting segregation where no NAACP branches exist was urged.

Branches were also called upon to encourage participation in all elections, while the resolution deplored "the action of certain law-enforcement officers, acting individually and collectively with others, who viciously, brutally and unlawfully, beat, abuse, intimidate, kill and force confessions from a number of our citizens, with immunity."

Officials were called upon to "seek out these perpetrators and to prosecute them to the fullest extent of the law.

The resolution praised the Atlanta branch and Wheat Street Baptist Church for preparing the session, and commended efforts of educational officials and the U. S. Supreme Court for the decision ending school segregation.

GEORGIA EDUCATION COMMISSION

Segregation Hearings To Open June 9

By ALBERT RILEY

Gov. Talmadge and a planning subcommittee of the Georgia Education Commission Tuesday invited white and Negro citizens and organizations to recommend methods of preserving segregation in the schools of this state.

After a closed session with the governor, the subcommittee announced that a series of public hearings will be held on the segregation question beginning June 9, with a meeting of the full 21-member commission.

At this meeting, scheduled for 9 a. m. in the Senate chamber of the State Capitol, the commission will first hear the views of Georgia's gubernatorial candidates.

Talmadge, as spokesman for the subcommittee, said the commission will then hear from representatives of the Georgia Education Assn., the Parent-Teacher Association "and other similar and civic groups."

Leaders of the GEA and PTA have voiced opposition to Talmadge's "last resort" plan of abolishing the public school system and making individual state aid grants to persons for private school education in order to preserve segregation.

"We want every citizen of Georgia who has a plan or a program to submit his views," Talmadge said, as he invited individuals, "white and colored, adult or minor," to submit recommendations in writing to Durwood Pye, secretary of the commission.

The planning subcommittee of the commission, which was created by the last Legislature to study means of preserving segregation—Talmadge referred to it as "the educational segregation commission"—is composed of the governor, Atty. Gen. Cook, House floor leader Frank Twitty, Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of Atlanta Public Schools; Charles Bloch, Macon attorney and member of the State Board of Regents, and W. S. Mann, McRae lawyer. All were present except Twitty, who was in Washington, D.C., and the meeting also was attended by Pye and B. D. Murphy, legal counsel.

OPEN STUDY

At the conclusion of the meeting, which set in motion the commission's study, Talmadge as commission chairman announced the group had reached these conclusions:

"1. The full commission should meet at the earliest practicable date at the call of the chairman, and that will be at 9 a.m. Wednesday, June 9, in the Senate chamber of the State Capitol.

"2. We will start with a series of public hearings open to the press, radio and television, at which responsible groups and others will be able to present their views and suggestions.

"3. We will invite specifically to this meeting on June 9 all candidates for governor to present their views and recommended plans. We will hear from each one individually in alphabetical order.

"4. When all candidates for governor have been heard from we will hear from the Georgia Education Assn., the Parent-Teacher Assn. and other similar and civic groups.

"5. We want every citizen of Georgia who has a plan to submit his views. In view of the fact that there are 3½ million Georgians, we won't be able to hear all persons individually. If any individual in Georgia, white or colored, adult or minor, has a plan the commission might be interested in, he is invited to submit it in writing to Durwood Pye, Room 328-A at the State Capitol. We would like to have legal briefs submitted if possible, but if a person with a plan doesn't know the law we will have our lawyers look into it."

Asked how long the series of public hearings might last, Talmadge said: "That's like asking how long is it going to rain."

A Segregated Hearing On Segregation?

Make no mistake about it, there is a war of words going on in this state over the issue of school segregation.

The announcement through the press and radio Wednesday attributed to Former Acting Governor M. E. Thompson to the effect that he would not appear at the same session with representatives of the NAACP who are scheduled to give their views to the Georgia Education Commission next Friday, is further proof of this fact.

The former governor was quoted as having told Governor Talmadge who is also chairman of the commission that he (Thompson) would not attend a "mixed" hearing before the commission. In other words, Mr. Thompson seems to feel it would hurt him politically if he appeared at the same session with the NAACP despite the fact that candidate Thompson has made it clear that he is for trying to find a way to retain segregation in the public schools. Governor Talmadge is reported to be in agreement with Mr. Thompson's position about the hearing.

The raising of the segregation question at a hearing which should be seeking the best and smoothest means to bring the state in line with the Supreme law of the land is regrettable.

If this issue had been raised prior to the clear and unmistakable ruling of May 17th, we probably would have taken no note of it. But in view of the decision and the publicly announced statement through press and radio that the NAACP would be invited to appear on a segregated basis, a question now arises in our mind if the organization can afford to accept on this term.

The association has won the greatest legal battle of the century; it is only a matter of time before the decision will apply specifically to this and other states not involved in the cases ruled on. On the other hand, the commission is bent on trying to retain a system that the court has declared illegal.

Therefore, in the light of the latest position taken by the head of the commission and one of the principal candidates for governor, the NAACP has been put on the defensive before it get before the commission. Of course we are not afraid of the NAACP not being able to take care of itself even if it now goes before the hearing, but its leaders must take into consideration the fact that it would be appearing in sort of a back door manner.

The question of legal segregation has been settled. There is no legal way to maintain it. No plan can be evolved to evade the court except by mutual racial consent so we hope the politicians will quit talking about it. The only way to meet the situation is on a basis of mutual interracial goodwill and equality. There is no sense in attempting to have any conference, hearing or anything else on this issue except on the basis of mutual equality.

Yes, the local NAACP must be careful that it is not maneuvered into a position of giving tacit approval to segregation. Also it must be borne in mind that in the final analysis the decision on segregation will be made by the various school boards and not the state commission.

In a previous editorial we expressed an opinion that it might be helpful if the NAACP did appear before the commission, but the development of Tuesday changes our position. As things stand today, we now doubt the wisdom of such a course. Whatever the NAACP says will simply be grist for the mills of the politicians. A little grist was sort of manufactured last Tuesday.

Represent Eleven States

College Students Applaud Law Outlawing Segregation

B-U-L-L-E-T-I-N-!

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Georgia NAACP Saturday rejected a bid to participate in a segregated Talmadge education commission hearing on public schools. The NAACP, instead, sent a letter of recommendations to the commission, recommending ways by which white and Negro citizens could plan and work together for elimination of segregation, in line with the Supreme Court's historic decision.

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C.—A strong resolution applauding the recent U. S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public school education was adopted by 317 college students from eleven Southern states attending a South-wide leadership training conference here last week.

The resolution was presented by a group who wanted to take a stand from a Christian point of view and called for, (1) state support and implementation of the ruling; (2) individual and collective church support, and (3) support of individuals and groups of the conference to take a definite stand on this issue "in our local Methodist groups at church and state levels."

A steering committee headed by Jack Wilcox of Emory University in Atlanta, Ga., presented the resolution to the 317 delegates of the conference. All delegates did not vote on the resolution, but all who did, voted unanimously.

When asked by the Courier if the resolution would be popular among the parents of the delegates whose ages ranged from 17 to 23, a spokesman said, "It is our hope that the older people will be encouraged, but it is difficult to say just what the reaction will be. He did say, however, that more and more the young people are informing their elders that the issue can only be solved by those of school age. Some will say, "Well, that's young people for you."

The eight-day meeting was one of six regional conferences being held across the country. The Southern Conference is held here annually on the assembly grounds of the Methodist Church. The Rev. Sam Laird of Emory University was in charge.

Mr. Laird told the Courier that the young delegates wanted the Southern governors who were meeting in Richmond to know their feeling. He disclosed the fact that many delegates wired their governors to "take a courageous and Christian stand."

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich.—An appeal seeking to prevent the Grand Rapids Board of Education from continuing its practice of maintaining segregation in public schools and the discriminatory practices in the assignment of Negro teachers was filed last week by NAACP legal defense attorneys with the Michigan State Department of Public Instruction.

Nashville Denies White Pupils Entry to Race School

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (ANP) —The School Board of Nashville last week refused to allow children of two white professors of Fisk University permission to enroll at a Negro public elementary school.

Byrnes Says School Issue Up to State Legislature

CHARLESTON, S. C. (INS) —Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina announced last week that South Carolina officials have no plan to abolish public schools in favor of private schools and said it would be a matter for the State Legislature.

Sees Baltimore Having Integration This Fall

BALTIMORE (ANP) — Before an assembly of the city's school teachers, Dr. John H. Fisher, superintendent of schools, declared that beginning in September this city would have integrated schools.

Little Rock Attempting To Keep Segregation

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Local school districts in Arkansas were given notice last week to bring Negro facilities up to a leven with whites within three years or face a downgrading of white school standards. The State Board of Education, headed by Marvin Bird of Earle, announced the policy.

School Integration Due In D. C. in 15 Months

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The nation's capital is in the midst of a plan calling for orderly integration of its public schools within the next fifteen months

Georgia Commission to Hear NAACP's Point of View

ATLANTA, Ga. (ANP)—The Georgia Education Commission, which was set up several months ago to find ways of maintaining school segregation in anticipation of the recent Supreme Court's decision outlawing the practice, last week announced that it will invite the Georgia NAACP to express its views in segregation at the next meeting of the commission.

Court Overrules Judge In Admission Case

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The

Clinton High School in Anderson County near Oak Ridge may become the first public secondary school in Tennessee to open its doors to Negro pupils after the U. S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati reversed Federal Judge Robert L. Taylor of Knoxville on an admissions case.

Funds For Segregated Schools Only, Georgia Board Rules

The second hearing of the Georgia Education Commission on ways and means to get around obeying the nation's highest court's ruling against segregated school has been set for June 25 and Durwood Pye, secretary has disclosed that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is invited to testify.

However, the head of the state NAACP chapter disclosed last night that no invitation has been received.

Dr. W. M. Boyd, president of the state NAACP group, said Tuesday evening that "as of tonight I haven't received an invitation."

But he quickly pointed out that "if an invitation comes," the NAACP "will be glad to appear." He further made it clear that they would appear to speak on ways and means to implement the decision, and not opposing it.

Meanwhile, the Georgia State Board of Education formalized its stand that no money be spent for non-segregated schools.

The resolution adopted by the State Education Board, released Tuesday stated:

"All financial commitments and allotments, other than capital outlay, of state funds to a local system shall become null and void unless said system maintains separate schools for the white and colored races."

The resolution mentioned in particular that no salaries would be paid to teachers, principals, school bus drivers, or any other school employees of a school where segregation is not maintained.

The resolution is based on Georgia law.

Elsewhere at the State Capitol yesterday, Durwood Pye, secretary, announced that the second meeting of the Georgia Education Commission will be held June 25.

At that time the Commission is expected to hear plans to keep segregation in Georgia schools submitted by two gubernatorial candidates, former Gov. M. E. Thompson and Agriculture Commissioner Tom Linder. Edmond F. Barfield, who says he will run for the post of governor, also will be invited to appear.

Representatives from the Georgia Education Association and the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers will present their plans and a representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will give the views of the NAACP.

Four gubernatorial candidates, speaker of the House Fred Hand, former Solicitor Ben Garland, Rep. Charles Gowen, and Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, presented their ideas to the board at its first meeting June 9

ANOTHER SEGREGATION PROPOSAL

Educate Negroes in North

Sending Negroes to schools in the North was suggested to the Georgia Education Commission Tuesday as a means of preserving public school segregation.

The suggestion was contained in one of four letters received Tuesday by the commission created to find a method of circumventing the U.S. Supreme Court decision that outlaws separate public schools.

During the day, an Alabama official seeking a solution to the segregation problem conferred with Durwood Pye, secretary of the commission. The official, Charles Cooper, who is director of Alabama's Legislative Reference Service, said he came here to find out about the Talmadge-sponsored private school plan.

The letters to the commission were released by Pye. At the suggestion of Gov. Talmadge, names of the writers were withheld. They suggested:

1. Provision of funds to send Negroes to Northern schools.
2. Recognition that an end of segregation is near.
3. Local referenda on whether schools would be segregated or mixed.

The fourth criticized women's groups who asked the commission to obey the court ruling.

"If the court held that you cannot legally force students to go to different schools because of their color, then, under the same reasoning, the court, by implication, has ruled that you can't legally force students of different races to go to the same school."

Figure it from there and you have a preview of the Linder plan.

CANDIDATE M. E. Thompson will appear at the same meeting. He has not said whether he plans to make any specific suggestions.

Fred Hand has proposed using a "multitude of plans" to continue segregation. He has said he has a couple in mind but has not disclosed them.

Marvin Griffin suggests 100-member school boards, to be elected by citizens, to handle segregation.

Mr. Gowen advocates letting school superintendents assign children to school by races.

Ben Garland, joining all candidates in pledges to keep schools segregated, thinks it can be done by local school boards. He further proposes segregation by sexes.

CAPITOL MEMOS

Linder to Unveil Segregation Plan

Agriculture Commissioner Tom Linder, who so far has been the quietest of the gubernatorial candidates, may start his big shooting this week before the Georgia Education Commission.

He'll present his school segregation plan to the commission on Friday and says in advance only that it won't be the 'private school' plan.

That's the plan proposed by Gov. Talmadge and the one obviously favored as the long-haul solution by the commission's legal aides. Just about all other candidates now have given the governor's proposal at least a "last resort" rating.

UNDER CONSIDERABLE badgering, Rep. Charles Gower who is actively campaigning against the Talmadge plan, said at the first commission session he would be willing to try it only after all other suggestions fail.

But Mr. Linder may come out shooting and keep on shooting. Characteristically keeping his own counsel, he hinted only that what he has in mind is based on something he told the United Daughters of the Confederacy here on June 4. And that was:

Offer Segregation Plans, GEA and PTA Are Urged

By M. L. ST. JOHN

The Georgia Education Commission Monday made a second—and more insistent—request for the Georgia Education Assn. and the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers to produce a plan whereby the state may continue public and segregated schools.

The request came after the commission heard three candidates for lieutenant governor endorse and one oppose Gov. Talmadge's proposed constitutional amendment under which private schools would replace public schools.

Rep. John Greer of Lakeland, who opposed the amendment, was questioned at length by the committee's lawyers and members. Ernest Vandiver of Lavonia, Billy Barrett of Augusta, and William Dean of Conyers supported the amendment.

GEA Secretary Harold Saxon and President Paul Sprayberry presented plans for an "adequate education program" and urged continuation of public, segregated schools.

Under questioning, however, they said the GEA had no plan to suggest on how public, segregated schools can be maintained in the face of the U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Mrs. H. M. Kandell of Savannah, president of the state PTA, wrote the commission that the PTA had not met since it received the commission's request for a plan on June 25.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook declared that the GEA and the PTA — being organizations of teachers and parents—should be in a better position than anyone else to aid the commission in a solution to the segregation problem. He said they should present a plan. On his motion, the commission notified the two groups that it urgently requested plans from them by Oct. 1.

Sprayberry and Saxon said they would carry the message to the GEA.

CLASHES

Saxon's appearance before the commission was highlighted by clashes with a commission member, John Sammons Bell. Bell is attorney for the Georgia Association of County Commissioners, which supported the constitutional amendment while the GEA convention was opposed to it. Bell accused Saxon of interrupting the questioners and of not giving definite answers to the questions.

Vandiver accepted the amendment as the "only" resort to preserve segregation in the event the citizens refuse to practice segregation voluntarily in public schools. He suggested that the state continue operating public schools where the local communities practice segregation through unanimous consent of whites and Negroes.

CUT OFF FUNDS

He would cut off funds for those communities where, by federal decrees, segregation is banned. New provisions would be made to educate the children in the latter communities, he said. Vandiver urged enactment of laws at the earliest opportunity to protect segregation—"without awaiting a decision against any Georgia school."

Barrett, former director of the State Veterans Service Department, said Georgia can finance and supervise private schools just as the federal government now operates the "private" schools for GIs. He said the federal government sets the standards for the schools and pays the veterans' tuition. Barrett termed as "political hogwash" the plans of gubernatorial candidates to keep both public and segregated schools. He said it could not be done.

ZONING LAWS

Dean suggested enactment of zoning laws, ordinances, and classifications not based solely on race as a means of continuing segregated public schools. He said this could work until the U.S. Constitution is amended so as to give the states exclusive power over education—or until some future Supreme Court reverses the recent decision.

Greer advocated preserving segregation by having local school boards zone the districts. He also suggested establishment in the attorney general's office of a "legal combat unit" of state lawyers to be thrown into any county where tests are made. He said he favors segregation, but the situation is not so critical yet as to jeopardize the public school system by passage of the proposed constitutional amendment.

Teachers Take Stand Against Segregation And Bossy Principals

CHICAGO. —(INS) —The AFL American Federation of Teachers Union, which concluded a five-day convention in Chicago Friday, has taken a stand on salaries, communism, segregation and bossy principals.

The 1,000 delegates voted the following resolutions: To suspend locals which have not made sufficient progress toward de-segregation in their schools by the 1955 convention; to urge locals to work for a minimum salary of $4,500 and a maximum of $8,000 for teachers with bachelor's degrees.

Also to force principals to inspire confidence and operate their schools without the use of "stool pigeons" and unnecessary displays of authority and to oppose the discharge of teachers on hearsay evidence of Communism taken from "misused" files of the attorney general.

Vandals Wreck Negro Elementary School in Chicago

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Vandals set fire and wrecked an elementary school here early Monday, Dec. 6, causing damage estimated at between $5,000 and $10,000.

Fire destroyed a 1st-floor classroom, and adjoining classroom and damaged a hallway at the McCosh Elementary school.

Damage from the fires set by the vandals, was not as great as that caused by other acts of vandalism, according to Chief Engineer John C. Keenan.

Fifteen classrooms were damaged. The school, which has an enrollment of 1,500, held classes as usual although sixth and seventh grade students were transferred from four of the rooms most damaged.

Ink was spattered on walls and blackboards in many of the rooms papers were strewn over the floor. Drawers were pulled out and desks and cabinets overturned.

Capt. John Golden of the Woodlawn police station said the wrecking and the fire "were without question" the work of kids.

Last May, four boys, all McCosh pupils, were caught tearing up desks, destroying pictures and light fixtures, and breaking 150 windows.

Damage then was estimated at $1,800.

Negro Teachers Serve In Illinois Integrated Schools For First Time

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (ANP) — Negro teachers who have cracked the color line in 11 downstate Illinois public schools have gained recognition for their work in those integrated schools.

Official news organ of the Illinois Commission on Human Relations, published an editorial from the Decatur Review praising the work of the teachers and urging other Illinois school boards to "join the Illinois honor roll" by hiring teachers on merit alone.

The editorial also cited the 11 communities named to the ICHR "honor roll" for their integrated policy. They are:

Decatur, Champaign, East St. Louis, Springfield, Kankakee, Peoria, Rockford, East Moline, North Chicago, Moline and Waukegan.

Pointing out that there have been no adverse reaction to the employment of Negro teachers in these communities, the editorial declared that school officials have received much favorable comment.

"...The employment of Negro teachers on an equal basis with white teachers has proved so beneficial to all concerned that one wonders why Illinois communities delayed so long in doing it,' it said.

Prior to 1951, no Negro teachers were employed in public schools outside of Cook county.

Cairo Lawyer Answers Note From Wheeler

A white Cairo, Illinois, attorney who is being ostracized in his community for his fight for desegregation in public schools this week, sent a warm note to Henry Winfield Wheeler in answer to a letter the dynamic former St. Louis branch NAACP president wrote him when the community snubbing of the lawyer was published in December.

David V. Lansden thanked Wheeler for his interest in the conditions in Cairo. Lansden is currently the only white person in the Southern Illinois city still active in the NAACP. He represented the Cairo branch in its fight to open all public schools to Negro children.

Lansden wrote in part:

"I was really quite moved when you wrote about Wendell Phillips, the abolitionists and Boston. I attended Harvard Law School for one year...People out here in the Middlewest do not quite understand how they think and act around Boston, but that area has a wonderful past and present when it comes to standing for 'liberty' and 'freedom'."

Schools Face Cut in State Aid: Nickell

BY JOHNSON KANADY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Springfield, May 28—Money appropriated by the last session of the legislature for state aid to public schools will be insufficient to meet the amount promised to schools this year or next, Vernon L. Nickell, state superintendent of public instruction, said today.

In addition, studies of school problems have shown administration leaders that the next two year fiscal period, beginning July 1, 1955, will need from 30 to 40 million dollars more than was appropriated last time, if the current guarantee per pupil is maintained.

The current Illinois fiscal situation does not indicate that such an increase is possible, without a tax increase.

$173 Per Pupil Guarantee

The present equalization figure is $173 per pupil. The state guarantees to provide enough money over and above money raised by local taxes to establish that amount for each pupil in a school district, provided the tax rates applied by the school district meet state requirements.

Nickell said that because of errors in projecting the expected pupil load for the present and next school year the 139 million dollars provided by the legislature will be 4 to 5 million short of the amount needed. That means paying approximately 98 per cent of equalization this year, and 92 per cent next year, he said.

Predicts 30,000 Increase

The student population for the next four years is expected to increase at a rate of 30,000 pupils a year, Nickell said. Thus, to maintain the $173 equalization figure, 170 million dollars or more will have to be appropriated for school aid by the legislature next year.

An alternative plan being studied is to change qualifying tax rates so that the state could shift more of the school tax burden to the "richer" districts and thus continue to help the poorer districts without increasing the over-all outlay of state money.

School Segregation Is Still A Hot Issue In Southern Illinois

SPRINGFIELD — Public school segregation is still an issue in southern Illinois — a region that has been on the threshold of desegregation for years and is now faced with the great social transition ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court on May 17 when it declared segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

Southern Illinois communities have operated segregated school systems since 1874. But in 1951 the legislature put the heat on discrimination and threatened to withhold state funds.

While there were many smash-victories for public school tolerance that resulted in the integration of Negro and white students in some communities, there were, on the otherhand, many failures and just as many reprisals.

One example of "failure" was in the Memphis-like Cairo, Ill., where fiery crosses were burned and where local school boards insisted that existing segregation was logical because of the residential pattern.

Reprisals occurred when Negro teachers were fired after integration began to take hold. There leaders of both races working to end segregated education.

There is, too, what people "down here" call "voluntary" segregation.

In 1949, the Carbondale School Board declared that children may attend the school of their choice, but segregation persists there on this so-called voluntary basis.

According to leaders here, like Billy Jones, chairman of the Illinois State Conference of Branches, NAACP, this is mainly a result of segregated residential patterns.

Leaders, such as Jones, State Representatives Charles Jenkins and Corneal Davis, have said that Negroes have hesitated to push integration because Negro teachers might be fired as they were in Brookport, Metropolis and Edwardsville.

Rep. Jenkins (R-Chicago), has been one of the Negroes leading the anti-segregation action by the 1951 legislature.

Joliet Hires First Negro Teachers

JOLIET, Ill. —Somewhat overshadowed by the sensationalism created by the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision banning segregation, are the advances made in human relations in the field of public school education.

One such was achieved last week when the Joliet School Board, acting upon recommendation of Supt. Gayle N. Hufford, hired two Negro teachers, Miss Juanita Kinder and Mrs. Ina M. Varnado, both of Joliet, for the first time in the history of the local school system.

Miss Kinder, a recent graduate of the College of St. Francis, with a major in music and education, has been assigned to Thompson school at a salary of $3,200 per year.

Mrs. Varnado is an education major of Jackson College, Jackson, Miss. She holds a master degree from the University of Illinois. She was assigned to McKinley school at a salary of $3,900.

Racial Flareup, Rowdyism Lead To Night Football

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Chicago's public schools were ordered last week to cancell all night football games on their schedules.

The action came after racial incidents at football games almost led to minor race riots in at least three instances, and acts of "rowdyism" caused John M. Fewkes, head of the Chicago Teacher's union, to ask for special police details for each of the 39 public schools.

Serious destruction of property and several instances students led to the emergency banning move by the school Supt. Benjamin C. Willis.

A fist fight during the Du Salle high school (all-Negro) and Harper (almost all-white) football game grew to such dimensions that police were forced to put Emergency Plan 2 into effect and rushed 11 squads of police to the scene.

The decision to ban the game came as a surprise to many prep coaches, as much of the income from prep games comes from night tilts. Willis said that if gate receipts fall off, and no longer can pay for the cost of uniforms, referees and other items, he will recommend support of the athletic program be made part of the school's budget.

Meanwhile, Police Comm. Timothy O'Connor disclosed he has had police assigned to six high schools since last March, and that near 17 other schools, the beat of patrolmen have been cut down to provide better surveillance.

O'Connor says he does not have the manpower to provide a special detail at each of the 39 schools.

All high schools in the city having enrollments exclusively or predominantly Negro are under permanent or informal police surveilance. Other high schools which have almost an equal number of Negro and white students are under informal surveilance also.

Three of the city's all-Negro high schools are under permanent police surveilance. They are Englewood, DuSable and Dunbar high schools. Three white schools are also under permanent police surveilance.

All-Negro Carver and Wendell Phillips high schools are under informal surveilance as well as Hyde Park, Manley, Marshall, Morgan Park and Wells, schools with large Negro enrollments.

There are no high schools in which Negroes are enrolled in the city that don't have informal or permanent police surveilance.

The allocation of large numbers of policemen to quell explosive racial situations in Chicago is not new. As many as 1,200 policemen in a 24-hour period were required to hold the Trumball Park situation in check.

Flare-ups in public school athletic contests date back to last winter during the basketball season.

Many of the fights occurring after the football contest occur on streetcars and buses. Principals and coaches were scheduled to meet to work out a better "disposal" plan after games with the Chicago Trans it authority, which will be asked to provide more buses for the games.

In one instance, fighting started on the playing field and spread to the stands.

Commenting on the situation, A. H. Pritzlaff, director of physical education and health program, said:

"We must instill a higher level of sportsmanship in the students."

One of the board of education members was quoted as saying that a few trips to the wood shed for some of the offenders would clear up the problem.

Ill. City Hires 1st. Negro Teachers

JOLIET, ILL.— (ANP)— Somewhat overshadowed by the sensationalism created by the recent U. S. Supreme court decision banning segregation, are the advances made in human relations in the field of public school education.

One such was achieved last week when the Joliet School board, acting upon recommendation of Supt. Gayle N. Hutton, hired two Negro teachers, Miss Juanita Kinder and Mrs. Ina M. Varnade, both of Joliet, for the first time in the history of the local school system.

Miss Kinder, a recent graduate of the College of St. Francis, with a major in music and education, has been assigned to Thompson school at a salary of $3,200 per year.

Mrs. Vernado is an education major of Jackson college, Jackson, Miss. She holds a master degree from the University of Illinois. She was assigned to Mckinley school at a salary of $3,900.

Candidacy Of Negroes Pushed In Background By Race Issue

CHICAGO — ANP) — In many election races around the nation, the candidacy of Negroes was pushed around as carelessly as if they were handling a volley ball.

And in some notable instances, whites who baited Negroes were soundly thrashed.

In Maryland, Gov. Theodore McKeldin became the first Republican in the state's history to be reelected. And in the Democratic stronghold, he ran against some formidable odds.

With the Baltimore school "race-hate" strikes screaming across the front pages of the state's newspapers, Gov. McKeldin refused to cast his lot with segregationalists and continually stated, "I stand for the law."

His Democratic opponent, H. C. Byrd, former president, University of Maryland, repeatedly injected the race issue into the campaign and openly advocated defiance of the Supreme Court decree.

Byrd forces issued 250,0000 copies of a handbill to white voters carrying pictures of Negroes who have been named to high office by McKeldin. The trick didn't work however, McKeldin tallied 379,634 votes while Byrd registered 317,685 votes.

In Illinois, almost a similar situation existed. GOP candidate Richard B. Vail, trying to unseat Democrat incumbent to the state house of representatives, Barrett O'Hara, issued pictures of O'Hara with prominent Negroes captioned. "Who Backs O'Hara— Pictures Tell." Vail also injected the explosive race issue into a district which is beginning to be populated by Negroes.

Chicago papers repudiated Vail and voters followed suit, electing O'Hara by a sizeable majority.

In the Deep South, opponents generally tried to see who could out-bait Negroes the most. But more important were amendments to state constitutions designed to curb Negro rights. The Southern states voted to keep Negroes out of white schools and a third voted to curtail Negro voting.

The police power amendment is expected to provoke a legal fight since the 14th amendment to the U. S. Constitution guarantees equal protection of the law. The Supreme Court has ruled against using the police power in a zoning case, but has never applied it in relation to schools.

Mississippians approved overwhelmingly (at least 1991, a constitutional amendment setting up new voter qualifications.

When the amendment was "debated" in the general assembly, it was frankly labeled as a move to curb Negro voting. Out of 980,000 Negroes in the state, only 22,000 are registered voters.

The voter amendment requires applicants to apply in writing and to be able to read, write and interpret the state constitution to the satisfaction of the registrar.

In a broad sense, it might be said that Negro vote failed to deliver for the Republicans. With the Democrats firmly in power in the house and in apparent control of the Senate, it looks as though Republican efforts to capture the Negro vote have failed.

However, as some observers point out, Republicans might have fared worse than they did had it not been for the Negro vote. But in the large cities, Negroes continued to vote as solidly Democratic as ever.

Five-Year Plan Near End

Smoothness of Desegregation Surprised Indiana Educators

By A. BROWN RANSDELL,

INDIANAPOLIS—The system used to completely desegregate public schools in Indiana has worked with a smoothness beyond the expectations of leaders in the field of education.

It was incorporated in an Act of the 1949 General Assembly to outlaw discrimination or segregation because of race or religion in all schools, colleges or universities which received support from State tax money.

The Indiana system might not prove equally successful in states where 100 per cent segregation has been the rule. At the time the Legislature declared it to be this State's policy "to provide equal, nonsegregated, nondiscriminatory educational opportunities to all" many schools already had abandoned segregation—or always had been integrated.

In view, however, of Tennessee's proposal that desegregation under the Supreme Court's order be done grade by grade—and thus spread over several years—the system laid down by Hoosier lawmakers offers an interesting alternative.

System Explained

In brief, the Indiana system provided that beginning September, 1949:

In schools where pupils were segregated, authorities must discontinue enrollment on the basis of race, color or religion of pupils entering for the first time kindergarten, First Grade of elementary schools, and the first year of junior and senior high schools.

Pupils enrolled in other grades must be free to leave the school they had been attending and go to another school of their choice.

The Courier-Journal Indianapolis Bureau

In schools or districts where equipment and facilities were unavailable for integration in September, 1949, the period of compliance could be delayed or extended. The Legislature wrote into the act the specific periods for which such delays were granted. Kindergartens and grade school were given until September, 1950; junior high, September, 1951, and senior high until September, 1954.

With this schedule the lawmakers mandated completion of desegregation within the five-year period that ends this September. The system is termed the "one-seven-nine plan," since it is based on the first, seventh and ninth grades.

Wilbur Young, State superintendent of public instruction, said desegregation has proved no problem in Indiana.

"It has worked so smoothly, it hasn't been noticed," Young commented. "There was a small flareup of opposition from Rockport, but it was soon settled.

"The general commission of the State Board of Education held a hearing with a delegation from Rockport. The success of the program in Evansville, New Albany and Jeffersonville was cited and the protestants were told they would have to abide by the law."

Young was State superintendent in 1949, and he recalled there was "very little opposition" to the desegregation measure in the Legislature.

"It has gone very smoothly as far as the pupils are concerned," Robert H. Wyatt, executive secretary of the Indiana State Teachers Association said. He added:

"I think the system has been more satisfactory than most people expected it would be."

Charles Noble of Vevay, superintendent of Switzerland County schools, is president of the County superintendents state association.

No Direct Contact

"There was no segregation in the schools in my county when the law was enacted," Noble said. "For this reason I did not have direct contact with the problem.

"However, from what I have heard from members of our association the system for integration has gone very smoothly."

Ray Goldman, Huntingburg City superintendent, heads the state association of City school superintendents.

He said desegregation posed no local problem because there were no Negroes in his area. Reports by members of his association indicated that "by and large, the system has worked out very well."

"We have not run into any teacher problems yet," Goldman continued, "but I can see how they could arise."

Effect on Negro Teachers?

Other persons who are familiar with the education field suggested desegregation in Indiana presently may adversely affect job opportunities of Negro teachers.

They reported there apparently is a growing trend for Negro pupils in the larger cities to switch from what were the Negro high schools to the white high schools. There is, it was pointed out, a possibility that if this movement from the Negro schools continues to grow there might be a consequent drying up of job opportunities for Negro teachers.

Generally the view is, however, that given time to work out some adjustments, statewide desegregation need not cause too much economic hardship on Negroes in the teaching profession.

Picket Line in Evansville

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Sept. 20 (AP)—A picket line of forty parents paraded today in front of the Harwood School in near-by Center Township, protesting the admission of thirty Negro pupils. The picketing was orderly as a sheriff and two deputies watched.

Negroes attend all high schools and most grade schools in Evansville, but this is the first time they were admitted in the Center Township school, just north of Evansville.

Alabama to Shun Hearing

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., Sept. 20—Alabama will not participate in the school segregation cases awaiting final decrees in the Supreme Court, Acting Attorney General Bernard Sykes indicated today. He asserted that while the state was not directly involved in the pending cases, the filing of a brief might obligate the state "legally or morally."

Spring Hill College, a Jesuit institution at Mobile, admitted Negro students to its day classes for the first time in its 124 years. The school said Negroes had been admitted to night classes during the last several years.

In Montgomery twenty-three Negro students unsuccessfully attempted to enroll at a white elementary school. They were told the State Constitution forbade the mixing of white and Negro students in public schools.

Topeka To Drop School Color Bar

TOPEKA, Kans. — While this city is preparing to end segregation in 12 more elementary schools next fall, three of the four other states with school segregation cases pending before the Supreme court have reaffirmed their determination to keep dual systems.

Action by the Topeka board of education last Thursday will affect 113 Negro pupils and is part of a gradual abolition of segregation. However, the city next Fall will still operate five segregated white schools and four Negro ones.

Governors Herman Talmadge of Georgia and James Byrnes of South Carolina again, last week, vowed to end public schools in their states in the event the high court outlaws segregation.

Meanwhile, the Mississippi house of representatives went "on record as to what this state believes" by voting 93-3 to "resist by all lawful means" any attempt to abolish segregation in schools. Gov. Talmadge warned Monday that he will call out the state militia if necessary to enforce Georgia's traditional Jim Crow policies in schools. He made his statement as he swore in a special education commission formed to study methods of preserving racial segregation, should the Supreme Court outlaw the current practice.

Byrnes, in an address before the South Carolina general assembly, expressed belief that there will be years of litigation regarding of how the high court rules.

ed its plan of ending racial discrimination in its grade schools Wednesday by opening twelve more schools to Negro pupils. One hundred and fifteen Negro children attending the city's four all-Negro schools are affected by this change.

Only five all-white schools remain in this city. There are plans under way to admit Negro children to these schools and thus end all separation of Negroes.

Topeka Kansas Goes Ahead With Integration

TOPEKA, Kan. — The Topeka Board of Education is not waiting for the U. S. Supreme court to outlaw segregation It is going ahead with its program for the gradual elimination of separate schools.

Last fall, the Topeka school board began this program by opening two previously "all white' schools, Randolph and Southwest, to Negro pupils. Ten Negro children have been attending these two schools since September.

The second step toward integration was taken Wednesday when the Topeka school board voted to end segregation in 12 more elementary schools beginning in September of 1954.

The four schools operated as Negro schools will continue to operate next year the board said, but 113 of the Negro children attending them will be transferred to the 12 schools now attended exclusively by white.

The board announced that the following white schools will begin to integrate next fall and will enroll the following number of Negro pupils Central Park 21; Clay 13; Crestview ,none; Gage one; Grant, 3; Oakland none; Polk 3; Potwin, none; Quincy, 34; Quincy Height 10; State Street, 21 and Summer 7.

The schools which will become integrated are located in sections of Topeka where Negro families now live. The colored children now are sent to one of the four Negro schools with the school board paying the transportation Beginning next year, the board will no longer pay the transportation to the Negro schools but parents may continue to send their children to the Negro schools if they desire.

With the change at the 12 schools next fall, that will leave only five Topeka schools exclusively for white pupils. Members of the board said that their ultimate goal is to integrate these five schools and the four schools now attended only by Negroes The four Negro school have a total enrollment of 711 pupils.

The furor raised in Topeka last year over the school board's plan to "purge' the system of Negro school teachers in the event that segregation was outlawed by the Supreme Court was eased temporarily when the Supreme Court decision was delayed. Six Topeka teachers dismissed in anticipation of a ruling against segregation were re-employed last fall.

The citizens of Topeka and the state of Kansas plan to fight for the integration of Negro teachers into the public school system as well as the pupils.

Mixed Classes to Be Held In Kansas City Schools

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, June 12.— Mixed classes or Negroes and whites in public schools will be permitted for the first time in Kansas City's history with the opening of the summer session Monday.

That decision was reached by the Board of Education last night after a brief discussion of the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation in public schools.

"The majority of the board felt the action must be taken because it was the law of the land, and we must abide by the law," Ray O. Joslyn, board president, said.

Mr. Joslyn said the board will decide later whether to abolish segregation in the regular school term starting in September.

New Policy on Tax Assessment Brings School Equality Nearer

MORE than 40 years ago a special commission pointed out that Kentucky counties generally ignore the Constitution in the matter of property taxes. A report warned then that much property escapes taxation and that even more, if not most, was unfairly assessed.

Failure or lack of public services was traced in 1913 to lazy or complacent local custom, political timidity, ignorance of proper methods, absence of supervision and instruction. The principle of Section 172 was in consequence widely flouted. This is that assessment be made on "fair market value . . . estimated at the price it would bring at a fair voluntary sale." The losers were the people, in their schools and in the quality of their general government.

After seven or more succeeding reports, each more emphatic than the one which went before, a special session of the legislature in 1949 moved to mend the situation by new assessment laws. A plan of state aid and supervision was the core. On the basis of these and of authority that already existed, the state now moves toward equality and fairness. The State Tax Commission orders that no property assessments shall fall below 30 per cent of fair market value.

This is the first step. The prospect is that next year the minimum will be raised to 40 per cent. As it is, 71 of Kentucky's 120 counties must bring their assessments up to the floor of 30 per cent as to town lots, farm acreage or both. The State Tax Commission may reject assessments which do not come up to the minimum.

As Governor WETHERBY says, this is sound policy. It is to be enforced for the sake of local services which include first of all schools, then county and city governments. It is fair policy, as may be seen in the comment that property assessments ranged in 1953 from 17 per cent of cash value in Magoffin County to 57 per cent in Wolfe County. These counties lie side by side. Their resources and standards are approximately the same. What this means is shown by comparisons made by HUGH MORRIS, reporting the new policy in a Frankfort dispatch: "A $10,000 house is assessed at $5,700 in Wolfe County and $1,700 in Magoffin. A $2 tax rate would cost the homeowner $114 in taxes in Wolfe and only $34 in taxes in Magoffin."

The rate of $2 on the $100 of property valuation for taxes is that which is allowable for schools. The comparison shows how much lesser advantage Magoffin's children have than Wolfe's, in case both have the same tax rate. There is a fresh, sharp point in this fact, since the state is committed to supporting a minimum foundation for education. This guarantees to each school district a basic level of schooling. What the district itself provides over this amount is the measure of the district's accomplishment for its children.

The state's insistence upon a more nearly equal level of assessments is therefore first of all a demand for fair play in the name of school children. The whole purpose of a minimum foundation could be defeated if a county or district inclines toward taking the state guarantee as a relief from local responsibility. It is this point that the Governor labors in his comment on the new policy on tax assessments.

"THIRTY-TWO school districts had short terms during the past year," said Mr. WETHERBY, "as result of lack of money to pay for a full nine months' term. All of us want to pay our fair share of taxes—but no more. We want our children educated properly and to see law and order prevail in our communities. Property taxes make these things possible."

Here is a fact which may go far to disarm resistance to the state's new policy. It is local government that benefits from property taxes. This means in most Kentucky counties, perhaps five out of six, mainly the school districts. The county tax rate is limited to 50 cents on the $100, the state rate to a mere five cents. Tax rates for small cities may not exceed 75 cents. For schools, the limit goes up to $2, counting the special 50-cent building tax now allowable.

The stake of Jefferson County and Louisville in the new policy is a matter of the future. By the Tax Commission's figures, this county is barely above the 30-per cent floor—town lots assessed at 30.6 per cent of cash value, farm acreage at 31.3 per cent. These calculations are disputed by County Assessor TRAGER's office, which claims that the state's selection of sales records is not representative. However, another lifting of the floor would almost certainly raise Jefferson-Louisville assessments.

School Officials Discuss Desegregation Problems

Negro Teachers and Assignment of Pupils Are Topics as Kentucky Superintendents Meet

By ANNE PARDUE
The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 10.—Problems that will confront Kentucky public schools when the Supreme Court orders desegregation were discussed here today at the annual conference of Kentucky school superintendents.

In a discussion led by Omer Carmichael, superintendent of City schools at Louisville, the group considered these the principal problems they will face when the Supreme Court lays down its pattern for carrying out desegregation:

1. The Negro elementary-school teacher who has a continuing contract, in particular, and all Negro teachers in general.

2. Pupil assignment, and how flexible to make integration.

3. Where and when integration should begin, once the Supreme Court settles the matter.

'High Schools A Starting Point'

It was thought by some that integration should begin in high schools because most Negro high schools are small and offer limited curricula.

Several superintendents thought the court should order integration immediately, from a financial viewpoint.

There were other discussions on budget problems, teacher tenure, recruitment and retirement, textbook adoption, building programs, tax collection and assessment, and vocational education.

The school administrators were concerned with present salary schedules for teachers and lack of new teachers, and were confused about the teacher-tenure law.

F.T.A. Chapters Urged

They suggested that a chapter of Future Teachers of America be organized in every school in Kentucky to encourage more youngsters to become teachers.

They also asked Wendell P. Butler, superintendent of public instruction, to distribute to all superintendents a digest of Kentucky's teacher-tenure law, with its recent interpretation by the courts.

A group of about 45 endorsed the State's property-equalization program.

Chief problems in the school-construction field were overcrowded schools and how to lower building costs without lowering the standard of construction.

Discussion Leaders

Discussion leaders were Superintendents C. D. Redding, Frankfort City schools; Frank Ogden, Winchester; Claude H. Farley, Pike County; A. D. Owens, Newport; Richard Van Hoose, Jefferson County; Zelna Carter, Murray, and James Patton, head of the Bureau of Vocational Education of the Department of Education.

At a dinner meeting tonight, John Fred Williams, superintendent of public instruction during the administration of Governor Simeon Willis, cautioned the educators not to take the "narrow view" in seeking ways to fully finance the new school/foundation program.

"Don't overlook the fact that highways, welfare, conservation, and other State services, also contribute much to the whole development of Kentucky," he said.

Warns of 'Selfish Pressure'

Williams urged the group not to set up a "selfish pressure group" to try and put over a specific tax program.

He said educators should rather take the problem to the people, explain the foundation program to them, and let the people suggest ways to finance it.

The association presented gifts of wrist watches to Superintendent and Mrs. Butler.

About 200 registered for the meeting, which will end at noon tomorrow. Theme of the conference is financing the foundation program.

Speakers Listed

Speakers this morning included C. R. Hager, Nicholasville, president of the Kentucky Association of School Administrators; Carlos Oakley, Morganfield, superintendent of Union County schools; Mrs. James G. Sheehan, Danville, former president of the Kentucky Congress of Parents and Teachers, and Wendell Howard, Louisville, director of insurance services of the Kentucky Farm Bureau.

Butler urged unity in achieving a method to finance the foundation program.

Plans for financing the program will be discussed tomorrow morning by Butler, Hager, and Marvin Dodson, executive secretary of the Kentucky Education Association.

Integration Leader Pooh-Poohs Critics

Attorney Thurgood Marshall Here For Negro Church's Convention

By PHIL HARSHAM

The attorney who led the Negro's fight for the Supreme Court's public-school-segregation ban pooh-poohed yesterday those critics who say desegregation won't work.

"Sure there'll be fights," Thurgood Marshall said here in an interview here. "But there are fights every day in Negro schools. And there are fights every day in white schools."

He recalled his own school days in an all-Negro school in Baltimore. "We fought each other," he said, "and you know why?

"Because one kid called another a dirty so-and-so, or a pigeon-toed so-and-so, or a flap-lipped so-and-so.

Noun More Important Than Adjective

"Mix the students and some of them will call others black so-and-sos, or white so-and-sos. And they'll fight.

"But they'll be fighting over the noun, not the adjective."

It's the noun that Marshall considers most important in the Supreme Court's ruling also.

"The main thing is to have public-school laws refer to students," he said. "Not white students or colored students."

And when that is accomplished, he believes, the details of desegregation will take care of themselves.

Some critics, he said, fear trouble in schools having swimming pools. White parents, he said, don't want their children swimming in the same pool with Negro children.

But that will solve itself, Marshall said. "Just let the white kids hold a swimming meet. Then let the Negro kids hold a swimming meet."

Thinks Athletics Will Aid Integration

Soon, he said, they will be challenging each other. He believes athletics will have a major role in making desegregation work.

Marshall arrived here yesterday from New York to address a meeting last night of the A.M.E. Zion Church's General Christian Education convention at Central High School.

He will return to New York today to meet with other lawyers employed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People who are working on the brief to be used in arguments on terms of the Supreme Court desegregation ruling. Briefs must be submitted by October 1 and the arguments will begin later that month.

At present, Marshall said, he hasn't "the faintest idea" what approach he'll use in the arguments. That depends largely, he said, upon the approach to be taken by representatives of Southern states opposing the Supreme Court ruling.

Marshall refuses to "take swipes" at state governors who insist they will not permit desegregation in their schools.

"They don't bother me," he said, "because they don't really count.

"It's the little people in the communities that do count. And while the governors are arguing, the little people are getting together and figuring out ways to make the Supreme Court ruling work. The little people will abide by what their Federal Government says regardless of what their governors say."

He said he has been outside the South only 12 or 15 days since the Supreme Court reached its decision in mid-May. "From what I've seen," he said, "I don't anticipate any trouble whatever."

Marshall, who is chief counsel for the N.A.A.C.P., said that organization would carry its fight against segregation into other fields after the public-school issue is settled.

The N.A.A.C.P. has already asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to end segregation on public carriers going from state to state. It will concentrate next, Marshall said, on segregation in the interurban transportation field.

Desegregation Group Meets With Wetherby

The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 17.—Governor Wetherby held his first meeting with his advisory committee on education segregation today.

The meeting was closed. Both the Governor and the committee declined to be photographed.

The Governor said the committee hoped the matter would continue to do its work as it has until now, "with as little fanfare as possible."

After the hour-long conference, Wetherby said the advisory committee would meet with the State Board of Education to discuss the desegregation problem. Meantime, committee members will continue to study the question so that their ideas and suggestions can be given to the State board at its next meeting in March.

Present were Dr. Wade Weldon, Owensboro, minister; the Rev. Homer E. Nutter, Lexington; Earl Pruitt, Louisville; Walter Wells, Pikeville; Ernest Pittman, Elizabethtown, and Wendell P. Butler, superintendent of public instruction. Pruitt and Nutter are Negroes.

Unable to attend today's meeting were Mrs. Simeon Willis, Ashland, and Pryor Sutherlin, Mayfield. Because of their absences, the Governor said, the committee did not choose a chairman.

Southern Whites Tell How Negroes Entered Schools

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — (ANP) — Three white Southern educators told a conference here last week how Negroes were admitted to their respective schools.

The unrevealed story of how Negroes were first admitted to the University of Louisville, University of Kentucky and Louisiana State University was given to two separate conferences of educators meeting here.

President Troy H. Middleton, Louisiana State University and President Phillip Davidson, University of Louisville told their stories to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Dr. Frank Dickey, dean, University of Kentucky School of Education, told of his school's progress to the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

"This was our approach—to oppose with dignity (their admittance) in the courts," Middleton said. "You can well understand the reluctance in that part of the country to admit Negroes to a white institution."

He also told the group that not all LSU schools are open to Negroes.

"We will continue to admit them by court order only, at least for the time being."

92 NEGRO STUDENTS

However, he admitted that 368 Negroes have been admitted to the school since 1950. Last summer 232 Negroes, mostly teachers in Louisiana public schools—attended the graduate summer school. The school now has 92 Negro students in graduate schools.

The only Negro ever admitted as an undergraduate entered in September, 1953, after a court fight. The decision, Middleton said, was overthrown by a higher court on a technicality and the student went elsewhere.

In sharp contrast to Middleton's story was that of President Davidson. He told how all U of L schools and divisions were voluntarily opened to Negroes in 1951. This came after an amendment to the Day law which prohibited Negroes from attending the same classroom.

FIRST ADMITTED

"We are not trying to promote racial equality, or social reform, but we are trying to operate a first-class educational institution in every way," he declared.

Immediately after Negro students were first admitted, "a lot of white students leaned over backwards to have a Negro student on every committee, and things of that sort," he observed.

Now, student committees are picked on the basis of "who's the best man for the job," he said.

Davidson admitted he has been "troubled" by the fact that integration of the old Louisville Municipal College (Negro) with the U of L meant "we were unable to take on many able people" who formerly taught at the Negro institution.

He said there are at least 200 Negroes in the school but he was unable to tell the exact number since no record was kept of the number in attendance. He concluded:

"At the University of Louisville, we have social activities on the campus open to all students. Colored students attend the dances, although I don't know that we've had mixed dancing. There is a Negro fraternity on the campus....I don't believe the white fraternities and sororities admit Negroes."

Desegregation Group Proposes Teachers' Pool

Also Suggests New State Division To Work On Local Problems Created by Integration

By HUGH MORRIS

The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 16.—The State Board of Education was asked tonight to take three preliminary steps toward meeting problems expected to arise when the Supreme Court finally lays down its pattern for desegregation in the public schools.

The request was presented by a Citizens Committee on Desegregation, headed by James A. Crumlin, Louisville, president of the Kentucky Conference, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

With Crumlin were Mrs. Anita Wilson Robinson, Louisville, executive secretary of the Kentucky Teachers Association; Harry S. McAlpin, Louisville attorney and member of the executive board of the N.A.A.C.P., and Dr. R. B. Atwood, president of Kentucky State College here.

Proposes Pool of Jobless

McAlpin, spokesman for the group, urged the State board to consider these suggestions:

1. Set up a state-wide pool of qualified teachers, both white and Negro, who may be forced out of jobs in local school districts by integration, consolidation, or merger. These qualified pool teachers would then be used to replace many of the emergency teachers now being employed.

2. Create within the State Department of Education a new division, to devote full time and attention to local desegregation problems, headed jointly by white and Negro associate directors.

Would Ask for Money

3. Request the Governor to allocate sufficient money from his emergency fund to carry on the work of the desegregation division as long as it may be needed.

McAlpin said those were the compositive views of the three organizations he represented—the N.A.A.C.P., Kentucky Teachers Association, and the Parent-Teacher Association. The three groups have held meetings to discuss the problem, McAlpin added.

McAlpin said he felt sure the State board would agree "that the Supreme Court has made this a problem for all of us."

Not 'Usurping' Powers

"It is not a white persons' problem. It is not a colored persons' problem. The decision—as it affects our children—already has been made. Segregation now is not constitutional. It only remains for the Supreme Court to say how integration shall be brought about."

McAlpin said his group was not trying to "usurp" powers and functions of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Education Desegregation. But it feels that since the State Board of Education will be charged directly with the responsibility for integration, it should offer to co-operate and help the State board in any way possible.

Most Negroes Qualified

McAlpin said his group was deeply concerned about the future of qualified teachers and the employment of new teachers in an integrated school system. Very few of the 2,000 Negro schoolteachers in Kentucky are not fully qualified, he said.

"We are concerned that qualified persons do not suffer because of the color of their skin," he said.

In proposing that the State board set up a "pool" of qualified teachers, McAlphin pointed out that State law allows emergency teachers to be employed only with approval of the State Board of Education.

And, since each school superintendent wanting to hire an emergency teacher must state that he is unable to find a qualified teacher, the State board could instead refer him to the pool and suggest he hire one of those qualified teachers.

Says Thought, Effort Needed

"The problem, we believe, will be solved where thought is given and efforts are made to make it work," he added.

In proposing a new division of desegregation in the State Department of Education, McAlpin said the associate directors should be "persons of broad social outlook with a background in the field of education and a desire to see it work."

This division and its staff would devote its entire time to helping and advising local school districts with their desegregation problems, thus "setting an example for the state, the nation, and the world," he said.

Budget Problem Involved

"Now I realize there is a budgetary problem involved in such a proposal," McAlpin admitted, "but we feel the matter is so important it would justify the Governor's using some of his emergency funds to carry on this work as long as it might be needed."

Mrs. Robinson thanked the State board for the opportunity to be heard, and told the members:

"If your stand is firm and sure, you will strengthen all the local school boards to stand firm. I urge you to take that stand."

Chairman Wendell P. Butler assured the group the State board would give the suggestions "every consideration."

KENTUCKY

Nun Can Teach In State School, Court Declares

Circuit Judge Upholds Right Of Sisters; Constitutionality To Be Tested In Appeal

By ANNE PARDUE
The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 28.—Franklin Circuit Judge William B. Ardery today upheld the right of garbed Roman Catholic sisters to teach in Kentucky public schools.

The decision upheld a long-standing practice of some school districts which the Rev. J. C. Rawlings, Bradfordsville, sought to have declared illegal in a suit filed last October 13.

Today's ruling, in effect, also disposes of a similar question raised in a suit filed two weeks ago by 460 Marion County residents against their Board of Education.

Residents Contest Decision

The residents, embittered over the Marion County board's August 21 decision to close Bradfordsville High School and transport pupils to Lebanon High School, asked the court to reopen their school and to halt employment of Catholic sisters as teachers.

The issues in the Bradfordsville controversy are now apparently reduced to whether the Marion County board exceeded its authority in closing the Bradfordsville school, and whether the board has indulged in certain practices of discrimination against the high school, as charged in the suit.

Rawlings Is Retired Pastor

Mr. Rawlings, 80, is a retired Methodist minister and president of the Kentucky Free Public Schools Committee. His attorney is Eugene Siler, Williamsburg, former judge of the Court of Appeals, and moderator of the General Association of Baptists in Kentucky.

Mr. Rawlings brought suit against Wendell P. Butler, State superintendent of public instruction, and the boards of education of Casey, Grayson, Marion, Meade, Nelson, and Washington counties. He asked that they be restrained from permitting public money to be used in schools where garbed Roman Catholic sisters are teaching. Eighty-three Catholic sisters teach in the six County-school districts.

Judge Ardery's order in the church-state suit said:

"The only question here is, may sisters of the Catholic Church, while garbed in the habiliments of nuns, teach in the public schools.

"On this question we find nothing in the Constitution, the Statutes. or the Kentucky Recorded (court) Cases that prevents such teaching."

The suit also charged that the Nelson County Fiscal Court contracted to pay the School Board $10,000 this year to transport pupils attending Roman Catholic schools.

Of this, Judge Ardery said, "We may not determine . . . the constitutionality of the appropriation of the Nelson Fiscal Court which provides bus service to Church-owned schools for the reason the Fiscal Court of Nelson County is not a party to this action."

(In 1945, the Court of Appeals upheld a 1944 legislative act permitting fiscal courts to pay for transporting parochial students with money from the counties' general operating funds.)

Both Siler and Attorney General J. D. Buckman, Jr., are anxious to "get the matter settled one way or the other."

Appeal Will Be Filed

Siler, in Louisville for a Baptist meeting, said he will file an appeal with the Appellate Court within 30 days.

The Williamsburg attorney expressed disappointment at the ruling. He added, "A great many Kentuckians likewise will be disappointed, but at the same time will look at it as a constitutional matter, rather than personal prejudice, as I have done."

Siler reiterated his stand that the practice contradicts the principle of separation of church and state insured by the United States and Kentucky constitutions. "When we depart from that, we are violating the principles of Americanism," he said.

Buckman Is Pleased

Buckman, pleased at the ruling, said he felt Judge Ardery had followed the intention of the constitutions.

"We want it appealed to settle it once and for all," said the attorney general.

Butler declined to comment, leaving any statements to the attorney general, who handled the case for him.

The suit made these principal contentions:

1. The policy of the Roman Catholic Church and the policy of the Commonwealth of Kentucky are irreconcilably opposed in the field of education of children. As a result, the two policies cannot coexist in any one school at the same time.

2. If the Roman Catholic Church policy is in effect, wholly or partially, in any school, that school cannot in fact be a common school or a free public school within the meaning of the policy of this State.

3. The use of public money, whether collected locally or received from the State, for the support of any school in which Roman Catholic Church policy is either dominant or effective, is an unlawful act contrary to the laws and policy of Kentucky.

4. The sisters teach sectarian doctrine in their respective common schools by reason of their distinctive garb, the wearing of religious symbols, and the manner of life followed by them.

5. By reason of these practices, a preference has been given the Roman Catholic Church. Citizens of Kentucky have been compelled to send their children to schools to which they are conscientiously opposed. Public taxes have been levied and collected for educational purposes, and have been appropriated and used in aid of sectarian schools.

Unconstitutionality Denied

The Commonwealth denied the suit's contention that the practice violates either the United States or Kentucky constitutions.

It contended that if the State should refuse to permit sisters to teach in public schools, it would abridge the privileges and immunities guaranteed them as citizens by the U. S. Constitution.

The State also contended the sisters would be denied the equal protection of the laws and would be deprived of liberty and property without due process of law.

Further, the State argued, to deprive Roman Catholic sisters of the right to teach in Kentucky public schools solely because of their garb amounts to persecution. It is not the business of the school boards or the superintendent to question the attire of teachers so long as the teachers are clothed decently, the State declared.

The State added that the sisters should be barred from teaching only if they sought to teach or impress their religious beliefs upon the pupils.

85 Sisters Now Teaching

An assistant attorney general said that approximately 85 sisters were all known to be teaching in public schools of the state.

Opposing attorneys in the case had agreed that:

The six County boards had these sisters teaching in public, tax-supported schools—Casey, 2; Marion, 43; Washington, 9; Nelson, 13; Meade, 14, and Grayson, 3.

The boards had public schools in property owned by the Catholic Church and leased to the boards as follows—Casey, one building, rent free; Washington, one building, rent free; Marion, various rooms at $75 a room per year; Nelson, one building rented for $900 a year; Meade, one building rented for $300, and another for $32 a year, and Grayson, one building, for $2,400 a year.

Each nun regularly turned over her salary as a teacher, after deducting living expenses, to her order or religious community.

Can't afford compromise with JC in school cases

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (ANP)—Resolutions urging leaders not to "enter into any collusion or compromise" in affecting the Supreme Court decision on segregation were adopted by the AME Zion Church during its recent week long convention here.

The resolutions, submitted by the bishops of the denomination, called the Court's decision nothing short of a divine miracle. . ."

The warning to the leaders was contained in a statement which read:

—o O o—

"WE WOULD ALSO press it upon those of our leadership who have the desire to get along with neighbors peacefully in race relations that they do not for the mere sake of temporary peace and falsely professed good will enter into any collusion or compromise in applying this great decision of law to the local communities.

"And by no means should we in any place permit ourselves to become adjusted to voluntary segregation, professing that we think it necessary to keep the peace."

The convention elected the following officers:

John S. Tally, Detroit, president; C. M. Palmer, Durham, N.C., vice-president; Dr. Victor J. N.C., vice-president; Dr. Victor J Tulane, Washington, executive secretary, and Arthur E. Brooks, Washington, treasurer.

K.E.A. Group To Study Segregation-Ruling Effect

Site Here for Headquarters Building Sought; J. Marvin Dodson Named Executive Secretary

By JEAN HOWERTON

The Kentucky Education Association board of directors yesterday:

1. Voted to appoint a committee to study the possible effects in Kentucky of a forthcoming United States Supreme Court ruling on school segregation.

2. Appointed J. Marvin Dodson executive secretary for a four-year term. He has been acting secretary since January, 1953.

3. Announced that a site is being sought in Louisville for a new K.E.A. headquarters building.

The directors were asked by Dr. Charles H. Parrish, professor of sociology at the University of Louisville to set up the committee to explore the segregation question.

Negro Committee Named

The Kentucky Teachers Association, state Negro group now meeting here, last night named a similar committee to work with the K.E.A. committee. Appointed by K.T.A. president A. R. Lasley were Dr. Parrish; Dr. R. B. Atwood, president of Kentucky State College, Frankfort; Dr. D. G. Wilson, Frankfort; H. E. Goodloe, Owensboro, and J. A. Matthews, Benham.

A Negro college president says the Supreme Court will abolish segregation in public schools, according to a story on Page 19.

Ruling Expected In June

K.E.A. President Lyman V. Ginger, Lexington, said he learned yesterday the Supreme Court decision is expected in June.

The court will rule on five cases involving the constitutionality of State laws relating to separate schols for white and Negro children. Kentucky is not one of the five states. How the decision would affect Kentucky, whose Day Law makes segregation mandatory in grades one through 12, is not known, Ginger said.

"We don't want to be taken off guard when the decision comes," Ginger said. "That's why we will set up this committee to find out what could be done in Kentucky communities to take care of the problem if segregation is ruled unconstitutional."

Might Void Day Law

William T. Baskett, attorney for the Louisville Board of Education, told a reporter he believes a Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation would automatically make the Day Law unconstitutional. Baskett believes it would be unnecessary to repeal the Day Law.

However, Baskett said a special session of the General Assembly might be necessary to discuss the question.

Dodson told a reporter a site for the new K.E.A. building is being sought in an outlying area of Louisville on or near a highway leading into Louisville.

K.E.A. headquarters have been in the Heyburn Building for a number of years.

Directors Meet First Event

The K.E.A. directors' meeting yesterday morning was the opening event of the three-day 82d annual K.E.A. convention.

The directors gave new titles to members of the K.E.A. office staff. They are Miss Lillian Lehman, consultant for professional services; Mrs. Coletta Capstack, secretary to Miss Lehman; Miss Rachel Bell, administrative assistant to Dodson; Miss Lillian Gebhard, treasurer and bookkeeper, and Mrs. Vernice Baker, secretary to Miss Bell.

At an afternoon session of the 430-member delegate assembly, legislative body of the K.E.A., Dodson reported the association has 18,633 members.

Mrs. Willie Ray, Shelbyville, National Education Association director for Kentucky, reported there are 9,901 N.E.A. members in Kentucky.

A total of about 6,500 persons are expected to attend the convention.

H. Roe Bartle, Kansas City attorney and administrator of the American Humanics Foundation, told an estimated 1,500 teachers last night at Memorial Auditorium to believe in religion, in education, and in politics. He said they should inspire youngsters to enter the teaching profession.

"Nobody ever told me to be a preacherman or a teacher," he said. "They told me to go make money if I wanted to be a success."

On today's program are 9:30 a.m. and 8 p.m. general sessions at Memorial Auditorium and a 4:30 p.m. meeting of the delegate assembly at the Louisville Service Club.

Speakers at the morning session will be Wendell P. Butler, State superintendent of public instruction; President Ginger, and Harold C. Kessinger, Municipal judge of Ridgewood, N. J.

Dr. Ernest O. Melby, dean of the New York University School of Education, will speak at the night session.

New K.E.A. officers will be nominated at today's assembly meeting and elected tomorrow by secret ballot.

C. R. Hager, Nicholasville, superintendent of Jessamine County Schools, was elected president of the K.E.A. department of school administrators. Other new officers are Roy G. Eversole, Hazard, vice-president; James Sublett, Louisville, secretary-treasurer, and John E. Robinson, Dansville, and Sam B. Pollock, Madisonville, directors.

Ky. Negro Supports Jim Crow Education

LOUISVILLE — (ANP) — The lone Negro member of the Kentucky state board of education, last week supported a resolution calling for a continuance of segregation in schools, despite a statement by the state chief executive that Kentucky would comply with the Supreme court ruling outlawing segregation.

The board member, A. E. Meyzeek, Louisville, made a motion for the adoption of a statement advising local boards to plan their 1954-55 term under Kentucky law requiring segregated classes. The state board decided on the policy

Easy Integration Likely In Western Kentucky

Almost Unanimous Opinion Voiced By School Superintendents In That Area

By HARRY BOLSER
The Courier-Journal West Kentucky Bureau

Paducah, Ky., May 16.—School facilities generally in Western Kentucky will be sufficient to meet changes resulting from the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation, superintendents of most of the section's larger schools said today.

The superintendents were of the almost unanimous opinion that little or no trouble will be encountered in opening the school systems to Negroes. Several gave offhand opinions that one of the big problems will be maintaining faculties. They said they believe many teachers will refuse to teach Negro students and will leave the profession.

Expects No Great Rush

A veteran Western Kentucky Negro educator, C. L. Timberlake, president of the State's West Kentucky Vocational School here, predicted there will be no great rush of Negroes into white schools. He explained that the chief interest of his race has been removal of the stigma of not having equal social and educational rights.

Here is the reaction of some of Western Kentucky school administrators on the Supreme Court decision:

Timberlake—"I think you will find that the Negroes will proceed slowly and cautiously in this matter. Colored people generally have had no great desire to move into the white schools and other places. What they have been seeking is removal of the stigma of not having the right to do those things."

'Democracy In Action'

Professor Timberlake said he doesn't believe the end of segregation will affect West Kentucky Vocational except that the school will now be opened to white students.

E. W. Whiteside, principal of Lincoln High School for Negroes, Paducah—"This is democracy in action; a step in the right direction, especially since the United States is in a strategic position of world leadership."

Dr. Mark Scully, superintendent of Paducah City schools—"ending of segregation will have no tremendous effect on us."

Owensboroan Optimistic

Dr. Ralph W. Cherry, Owensboro City schools superintendent—"If we are permitted a period of readjustment I don't think we'll encounter many problems. Of course, we'll abide by the law—whatever that takes. Owensboro will not encounter too serious a problem in effecting a change-over. We have a large modern Negro high school. There will not have to be many population shifts in order to comply with the law. Of course, there will be some friction. We know that, but we'll just have to face it like any other school problem."

Ohio, McLean, and Hancock counties also send their Negro high-school students to the Owensboro Negro High School.

Been Thinking About It

George Taylor, Central City schools superintendent—"We've been thinking about that problem for some time. But we will not encounter the problems that face other cities. Central City has lost much of its Negro population in recent years. We have a five-room Negro school, but two of those rooms are vacant now. Actually, our Negro school census shows only 70 from ages 6 to 18. I don't anticipate any sentiment against the end of segregation here."

J. Marvin Glenn, Mayfield superintendent—"We can handle the situation adequately."

Fulton Facilities Adequate

W. L. Holland, Fulton superintendent: "Our facilities are adequate to meet the change in the system. We have a modern elementary school. We anticipate no trouble in acceptance of the situation. Actually the change will mean an addition of only 28 to 30 students in the high school."

Gladstone Coffman, Hopkinsville superintendent—"We'll have to conform with the law, of course. But we'll face a much greater problem than most school systems in Kentucky because of our large Negro population. Our last school census showed 2,585, 30 per cent of which are colored students. I hope we'll be afforded a sufficient period of adjustment."

Negro Population Large

In proportion to size, Hopkinsville has one of the largest Negro populations of any Kentucky city.

L. C. Curry, Bowling Green superintendent—"We've been expecting this. We'll conform with the law in every detail. There is a good spirit among all groups here and we don't anticipate any difficulty in making the adjustment. We're building a new large Negro school and that, of course, will be used for all students.

No Surprise In Henderson

Stanley Johnson, Henderson superintendent—"That comes as no suprise to us in Henderson. We've been making plans to handle such a situation. We're in the midst of a school-building program and when it is completed we'll have adequate facilities. Henderson doesn't have a large Negro population."

Sam Pollack, Madisonville superintendent—"Because of the merger of the City and County school systems our physical properties will not be adequate to meet the change. The first buildings under the consolidation plan have not been completed and our facilities now are inadequate. We will face a serious problem in conforming with the law."

Eastern Kentuckians Foresaw Court Ruling

School Officials Expect No Repercussions From Decision Banning Racial Segregation

By GERALD GRIFFIN
The Courier-Journal East Kentucky Bureau

Pikeville, Ky., May 17.—The Supreme Court's ruling against racial segregation in public schools came as no surprise to Eastern Kentucky school officials.

As there is no cause for immediate action, Eastern Kentucky school men probably will mark time until the matter is discussed at the teachers' work shops this summer at the State colleges.

John M. York, superintendent of Pikeville City Schools, said he expected the court to rule as it did. "Here in Pikeville," he said, "we will follow what the State board says we must do."

Has Good Negro School

The problem, he said, is what to do with the Negro teachers now employed in the Negro grade and high schools here. He thinks the possibility of voluntary segregation is good, especially in a town like Pikeville, which has a good Negro school.

The only facility of the white school now utilized by Negro pupils is the gymnasium. Basketball games of the Perry A. Cline Colored High School team are played in the Pikeville High School gymnasium, one of the finest in the state.

Holds Office In Association

J. A. Cawood, superintendent of Harlan County schools, isn't worried about repercussions over the decision.

There already is a fine relationship between white and Negro teachers in the Harlan County school system, Cawood said, with teachers of both races holding membership in the Harlan County Educational Associatoin.

A Negro, J. A. Matthews, is secretary of the association. Principal of the Benham Colored High School, Matthews holds a master-of-arts degree from the University of Michigan.

Cawood said there has been only one association in Harlan County for 10 or 15 years. There are 23 Negro teachers serving in the eight Negro graded schools and one Negro high school in the county.

Race Relations Lauded

"There are probably better race relationships in Harlan than in any other county in the state," Cawood said.

There is no problem in the schools of Paintsville and Johnson County. As there are no Negro residents in the entire county, there is no need for a Negro school. There never has been.

From Central and Northern Kentucky came these comments:

Superintendent Glenn O. Swing of Covington: "I anticipate little difficulty because I believe Negroes will want to continue in their own schools."

Superintendent A. D. Owens of Newport: "Our system will have to formulate a new program in view of the fact Newport pays tuition now to send its Negro high-school students to William Grant High School. in Covington."

Fayette County Superintendent N. C. Turpen: "I feel people in Kentucky are law-abiding and will make whatever adjustments are required."

Lexington City Superintendent John M. Ridgway: He and members of the City School Board have been studying the matter for some time and they feel it will make "relatively little difference" to the City school system.

Desegregation Delayed In State

Schools Told To Make No Change Until Court Ruling Becomes Final

By ALLAN M. TROUT
The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., June 17.—Pending a final decree on desegregation by the Supreme Court, the State Board of Education today advised local boards to plan their 1954-55 term under Kentucky law requiring segregated classes.

The board instructed Wendell P. Butler, superintendent of public instruction, to mail this statement of policy to all superintendents:

"The Supreme Court has ruled on segregation, but has not issued the final decree on how and when the decision is to be carried out.

'Action Not Final'

"Since the present action of the Court is not final, it is contemplated that public schools of Kentucky will operate for the 1954-55 school year on the same basis as for the current year. No immediate change in the financial operation of public schools for Kentucky in 1954-55 should be made.

"The public-school system of Kentucky is administered under the State Constitution and the statutes passed by the Kentucky Legislature. No change should be made until further action has been taken by the Supreme Court. Every local board should plan its budget, program, and policies for 1954-55 pursuant to Kentucky law."

NEW NEGRO SCHOOL AT CAMPBELLSVILLE

Campbellsville's New Negro School Drawing Attention of Larger Towns

It Was Finished Before Ruling

Special to The Courier-Journal

Campbellsville, Ky., Aug. 5.—The Campbellsville Graded School District is providing educational facilities for Negroes on the elementary and high-school level that are possibly not equaled in a town its size in Kentucky.

The new Durham School was built at a cost of $150,000 last year, months before the United States Supreme Court ruled against segregation.

Construction began in February, 1953, and the building was put into use in October. Campbellsville's population was listed as only 3,500 in the 1950 census.

Other Towns Take Note

The new school has drawn attention from many larger towns in the state, particularly since the segregation decision.

Plans for the school, to replace an antiquated building, were begun several years ago by the Campbellsville Board of Education.

Money was not available for the Negro school or for a much-needed addition to other public schools in Campbellsville.

Taxpayers Increase Load

A special school building-fund tax was voted in 1951 for an additional 50 cents on each $100 of assessed valuation. Campbellsville School District residents were already paying the maximum $1.50 and had to vote an extra tax on themselves in order to increase local school facilities.

(Taylor County schools are operated under a separate setup, and the County is now in the process of merging the 20 one-room elementary schools into a consolidated system.)

With additional revenue coming in, plans were drawn for the construction of Durham School and for a large addition to the Campbellsville High School.

Is Easily Accessible

The Durham School is about a mile and a half from the business area of Campbellsville on a 30-acre plot facing a State highway. It is easily accessible. Twelve acres of the plot will be retained as a permanent school site.

One of the chief boasts of the Durham School is its faculty. The six teachers, including the principal, are all college graduates. Two have master's degrees.

Last year's enrollment in the elementary school was 108. There were 54 in high school.

Has Gym, 7 Classrooms

There are seven classrooms in the new building, also a library, kitchen, and gymnasium-auditorium. The gym has a regulation-size basketball floor and will seat 500 persons. There are also an office for the principal, showers and rest rooms, and a furnace room housing a modern oil heating system.

A look into the new building reveals well-furnished classrooms. The library is equipped with shelves, tables, chairs, magazine racks, and a convenient workroom for the librarian.

The kitchen has an electric stove, a 30-cubic-foot refrigerator, steam table, and sinks. The home-economics room is also supplied with electrical appliances and conveniences.

Ky. education group favors integration

ASHLAND, Ky. (ANP) — Desegregation picked up another friend in the Blue Grass State last week as the Eastern Kentucky Educational Ass'n. endorsed a resolution favoring the abolition of segregation in the state's public schools.

The resolution came at the end of the 31st annual meeting of the organization. It was first passed by the National Education Association when it met in New York last summer.

It says, in part, that "All problems of integration in our schools are capable of solution by citizens of intelligence, saneness, and reasonableness working together in the interest of national unity."

KENTUCKY IS reportedly waiting for a final Supreme Court ruling on integration of the races in public schools before going ahead with a desegregation plan.

Meanwhile, Kentucky's colored teachers were told they must prepare themselves for desegregation if the nation's program is to succeed. Dr. Mozell Hill, chairman of Atlanta University's sociology department, speaking at a meeting of the fifth district of the Kentucky Teachers Association at Central High School, said some Southern states may delay desegregation, but they cannot hold out for more than five years.

The association represents some 1,800 colored teachers in the state.

"It is a matter of whether the South is going to be lawless or obey the law," he said. He also said colored teachers should prepare themselves for their role in the new program or "be pulled into an unwitting conspiracy to prove that desegregation is unworkable."

—o O o—

HE ADDED THAT colored teachers should prepare to be "psychologically" ready for new problems of teaching members of both races.

MISS. SOLON FIGHTS FOR JAMES CROW:

Kentucky senator seeks integration

FRANKFORT, Ky. (ANP)—A Kentucky legislator last week asked for the end of segregation in the state's public schools, while a solon in Mississippi called for additional legislation to continue segregation in his state's schools.

Sen. C. W. A. McCann of Louisville introduced a bill in the Kentucky legislature to ban segregation in Kentucky schools. If the Democrat senator's bill is approved, a constitutional amendment will be required, with the approval of voters, to repeal Section 187, which calls for separate but equal schools for colored and white pupils.

In Mississippi, Rep. Joel Blass said he was preparing a bill to make it illegal for mingling of the races in the state's schools.

Would Continue Theory

Calling for a continuance of separate but equal theory, the bill states the state legislature recognizes that white and colored races are entitled to equal educational opportunities and further recognizes that in order to prevent disturbance of the peace it is necessary to prohibit the commingling of races in public schools.

Representative Blass is relying on police powers reserved by the state, to make such a law valid, regardless of a U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

Kentucky Proposal

His bill, if it becomes law, would make it a misdemeanor for any parent or guardian or any school board to send a pupil of one race to a school of another race. Violators would be subject to fines ranging from $1,000 or imprisonment of 30 days to six months, or both.

In Kentucky, Senator McCann is asking the legislature to change Section 187 so that it will allow admission of pupils to public schools without regard to race, color, religion, creed or national origin.

As it now is written, Section 187 says "no distinction shall be made on account of race or color," but it also points out that "separate schools for white and colored children shall be maintained."

Bill Would Kill Law Segregating Schools

The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 6.—A bill that would repeal Kentucky's Day Law was introduced in the Legislature today by State Senator C. W. A. McCann, Louisville Democrat.

The Day Law generally requires separate schools in Kentucky for white and Negro students.

McCann's bill would require all educational institutions except denominational schools to admit qualified students regardless of "race, color, creed, or national origin."

McCann's bill also calls for repeal of the section of Kentucky's Constitution that requires separate schools for whites and Negroes. This would require approval of the voters.

Law Nullified In Part

Recent Federal Court decisions, coupled with exceptions enacted by the 1948 and 1950 Legislatures, have nullified the Day Law in part. But its broad application continues, especially in elementary and high schools.

The General Assembly was asked to approve legislation to extend state senators' terms to six years and representatives' to four years. The terms now are four and two years, respectively.

Senators E. V. Withers, Hardyville Democrat, and John M. Williams, Guston Democrat, introduced a bill for the terms' extension.

It proposed a constitutional amendment, which would have to be approved by the voters.

Scooter Licensing Sought

Representative Fred H. Morgan, Paducah Democrat, introduced a bill to authorize a special license for youngsters between 14 and 16 years old to operate farm vehicles, motor scooters, and motorized bicycles. Manufacturers would be required to stencil the place of manufacture and horsepower on each motor scooter and bicycle.

Representative Morris Weinstraub, Newport Democrat, introduced a bill that would subject capital stock of building and loan associations to taxation by cities as well as by the State.

Would Nix Jim Crow In Kentucky Schools

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 6.—A bill to ban racial segregation in public schools of Kentucky was introduced last week in the state senate by Democrat Senator C. W. A. McCann of Louisville.

Why Be Afraid of the Supreme Court?

IF THE Supreme Court holds that separation of white and Negro children in public schools must stop, what will Kentucky do about it?

This is a natural and pressing question, but one which everybody seems to have been shying away from too long. The court's rule, for or against separate schools, will come almost any week now. There should be a blueprint for adjustment if, as it reasonably appears, the decision is against the historical and statutory arrangement in this and 16 other states.

Thus, although it may be a little late, Kentucky's school people set out to find the answer. Committees from the Kentucky Education Association, representing white teachers, and the Kentucky Teachers Association, Negro teachers, join forces for the study.

One thought occurs immediately. Kentucky, for all her advances toward better relationships in the last few years, has still some distance to go when professional groups concerned in the matter, the teachers themselves, are separated by race. This may be incidental, of course, but it stands out.

Then comes the thought that Dr. Lyman Ginger, president of K.E.A., has put the question in its proper setting when he says: "We will set up this committee to find out what should be done in Kentucky communities to take care of the problem if segregation is ruled unconstitutional."

It will be, first and last, a problem for communities or school districts to work out, and this is best. A rule imposed from the top—say, by states—could well bring about the worst of the fears. It is a problem for people to settle.

If the Supreme Court rules against segregation, the direct order in the case doubtless will go to the five school systems involved in the suits. These are in Clarendon County, S. C.; Prince Edward County, Va.; Topeka, Kansas; Wilmington, Del., and Washington, D. C. The rule will hold generally, however, as far as all the other separated systems are concerned. There are some 11,000 of these. In many, there will be swift compliance. In perhaps most, the rule will have to be pressed through lawsuits citing the Supreme Court decision or through simple petitions and conversations.

Perhaps for the sake of accord among neighbors, for the sake of community relations over the long pull, there will be few immediate moves to force "desegregation." This is an opinion expressed by Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, a famous Negro school.

"We are unduly excited," said Dr. Mays, in a paper published by the Southern Regional Council, "because whether we like it or not, the process of desegregation will be much slower than we think, and it will be easier than we think."

Negro parents in many parts of the South, Dr. Mays said, will move cautiously. "Once Negroes have gained the right to attend non-segregated schools," he explained, "and once segregation by law is knocked out, the cause for the pressure of non-segregation will have been removed. There will be a tendency for the Negro to relax. . . . In many areas of the North, Negroes are free to worship in white churches, but they prefer the Negro church where they hold membership and where their fathers and mothers were members. This will be the case in public schools if the Negro school is first rate. . . .

The Supreme Court rule, in effect against segregation, will hasten the correction of injustices and inequality in education. It will impose reason as well as fairness. It will as a prime fact write a principle of freedom for the world to see. But it should not, in a community where friend-

Segregated Schools Deplored at Hearing

Galleries Full As All Speakers Back Senate Bill

By JOHN BRINEY
The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 24.—The morals, ethics, and economics of segregated schools were discussed today at a Senate public hearing.

And the emotional aspects of the question were touched on by Miss Connie Willard, a Negro student at Berea College.

Miss Willard's story of her experiences, first in a segregated school system and later at Berea College, drew loud applause. She said:

"When I was a child, the white and Negro children in my community played together, lived together, and loved each other.

"But when we were old enough to go to school, we found things were different. Their school was nicer than mine. . . . And there were other differences.

"At first we were shocked—we didn't know what was behind it all."

"Later, we found that a barrier had grown up between us. I felt inferior, they felt hostile, we both felt insecure."

The hearing, on Senate Bill 6, was held before a joint House-Senate committee on constitutional amendments. Senator Carl Ruh, South Fort Mitchell Democrat, presided.

Senate Bill 6, introduced by Senator C. W. A. McCann, Louisville, would:

1. Repeal the Day Law, which provides penalties for nonsegregation practices in Kentucky schools.

2. Amend Section 187 of Kentucky's Constitution, which provides that the State shall maintain separate school systems for whites and Negroes.

No one spoke against the bill.

Abets Reds, Minister Says

The Rev. M.M.D. Perdue, Louisville, chairman of the Citizens Committee for Democratic Schools in Kentucky, pleaded for "one integrated school system ruled by fair educational practices."

He indicated that a segregated school system—because it hampers the Negro student economically all through his life—encourages the spread of communism.

The Rev. Daniel J. Hughlett, secretary of the Jefferson County Sunday School Association, said scientists had proved that there is no biological basis for a feeling of racial superiority.

Rabbi Cites 'Basic Right'

Professor Roscoe Griffin, Berea College, said segregation "sharpens resentment between whites and Negroes."

And Rabbi Maurice Davis of Temple Adath Israel, Lexington, said many white college students felt they were being deprived of "a basic right" in not being allowed to go to school with Negroes.

This week is Brotherhood Week, Rabbi Davis pointed out. "But in this state even during Brotherhood Week, citizens still ride in segregated trains, still wait in segregated depots, still eat in segregated restaurants, and—most important of all—will attend segregated schools," he said.

William F. Billingsley, secretary-treasurer of the state C.I.O. Council, said he believed the people in Kentucky really desired nonsegregated schools.

R. Everett Ray, Louisville attorney and past president of the Louisville chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that "segregation in public education violates every known principle of common decency."

He and other speakers argued that maintaining separate schools for whites and Negroes in a community is uneconomic.

Among others who spoke—and there were about a dozen speakers in all—were Norbert F. Blume, representing the Kentucky State Federation of Labor, and Miss Wanda Smith, a student at Eastern Kentucky State College.

The hearing drew a sizable crowd. The Senate galleries were full and a good many standees lined the walls of the chamber.

After the hearing, at least one Frankfort segregation barrier was broken down. About a dozen Negroes who attended the hearing ate lunch at the cafeteria in the Capitol Annex. The cafeteria usually is off limits to Negroes.

Paducah Negroes Ask Integration In Schools

Courier-Journal West Kentucky Bureau

Paducah, Ky., Aug. 18.—The Paducah branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has asked for integration of whites and Negroes in schools and public housing and ending of exclusion of Negroes from juries.

The organization requested early conferences with education, housing, and court officials.

The requests were in letters sent to Dr. Ralph W. Osborne, City school superintendent; J. J. Munal, head of the Municipal Housing Commission, and McCracken Circuit Judge Holland G. Bryan. The letters were signed by Curlee Brown, N.A.A.C.P. Paducah branch president.

Catholics Adopt Wait-See Policy

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Any announcement of policy on Catholic school segregation here has been deferred until it is determined if the recent Supreme Court decision invalidated the State's Day Law provisions on private schools.

Father Felix Pitt, superintendent of Louisville Catholic schools, last week said attorneys were studying the question.

Several Catholic dioceses have voluntarily banned segregation, including New Orleans, St. Louis, Baltimore and Wilmington, Del.

When Negroes, Whites Went to School Together in La.

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA Jr.

Back in 1868 State Constitution Okayed Action and It Worked Under Wm. G. Brown, Negro Superintendent

NEW ORLEANS, La.—There's hardly a man around who remembers it, but some eighty-five years ago Negroes and whites did attend the same schools in the State of Louisiana.

The Louisiana State Constitution, adopted March 7, 1868, pointed out that all persons of the state between the ages of 6 and 21 "shall be admitted to the public schools . . . without distinction of race, color or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools nor institutions established exclusively for any race by the State of Louisiana."

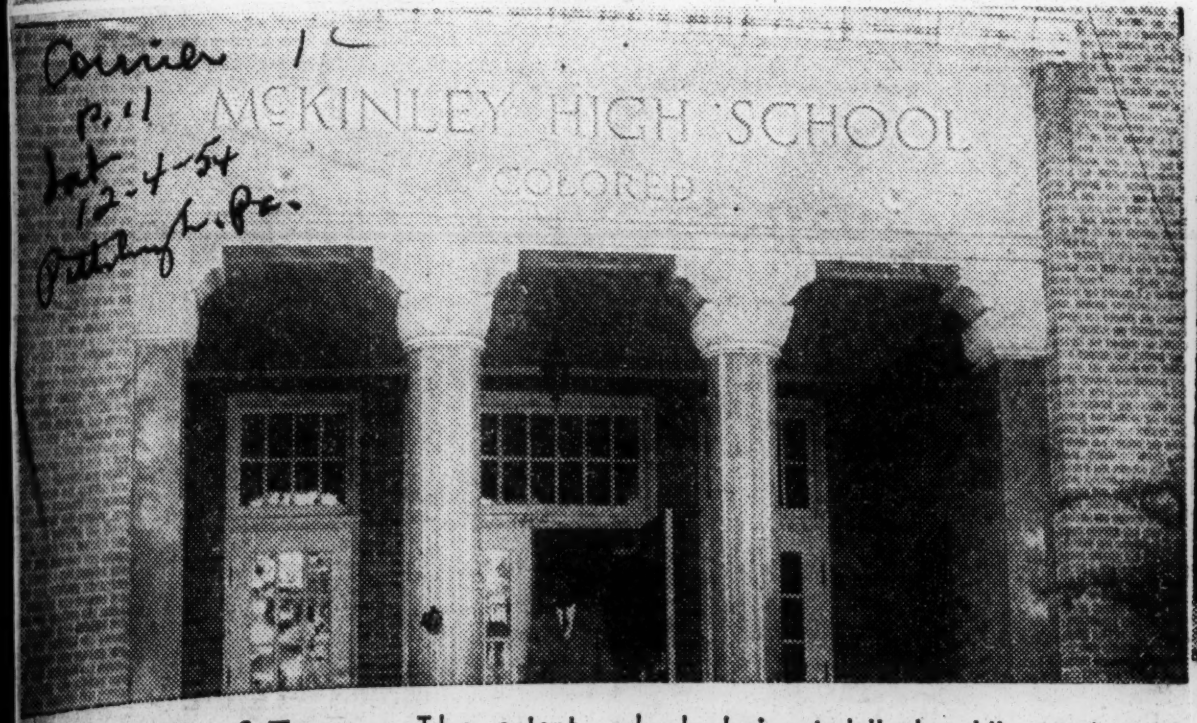
In the Republican landslide of 1872 William G. Brown, a Negro, was elected State Superintendent of Public Education. He served in this capacity until 1876.

During his period of office he fought for complete integration and set up a workable educational system. Before he became superintendent, schools for whites had been very poor and there were none for Negroes.

Mr. Brown met tremendous opposition from hostile whites during his campaign for integration.

Following the overthrow of the "Carpetbag Government" in Louisiana by the White League on Sept. 14, 1874, white supremacists began the fight against the integrated educational system but had no success until 1878.

When the integrated schools were finally abolished and separate schools set up for Negroes and whites, an attempt was made to establish entirely different schools in New Orleans for mulattoes and light-skinned Negroes who objected to attending schools with darker Negroes. This final move proved unsuccessful.



Reversal of Form—The extent to which the school authorities went to differentiate between white and Negro schools is shown here. If the Supreme Court's decision is implemented scores of whites will go to the schools designated "colored." At the McKinley High School in Baton Rouge, La., many whites and foreigners who own shops in Negro ghettoes would be forced to send their children to the "colored" school.—Rivera Photo.

Pity! Pity!—In New Orleans the life between white and Negroes is easy-going. The most irritating segregation occurs on the buses. Negroes are required by law to sit behind a sign marked "For Colored Patrons Only." The sign slips into holes on the back of each seat and as the bus fills up with Negroes they move it forward. When white passengers are predominant they move it back. Negro students drop them out of the window and take them home for souvenirs.—Rivera Photo.

Dedicate 2 New Public Schools

Courier p. 17
Sat. 11-13-54

NEW ORLEANS—The Carter G. Woodson Junior High School, 2514 Third Street, Charles B. Rousseve, principal, and the McDonogh 36 School, 2631 Freret Street, Mrs. Inez R. Labat, principal, were formally dedicated with impressive ceremonies last week.

These new schools are the fifth and sixth dedicated under the Orleans Parish School Board's new building program. Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Woodson school is designed to accommodate 1,500 students and is comprised of seven separate buildings connected by covered passageways. It is the first secondary school to be dedicated under the construction program.

McDonogh 36 is of similar design and will handle 1,000 students.

Mrs. Jacqueline T. Leonhard of the school board addressed audiences at both dedications. Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison appeared on the Woodson program. Others on both programs included Dr. James F. Redmond, superintendent of schools; Dr. Clarence Scheps, school board president; C. P. Besse, school board member, and Ernest O. Becker, assistant superintendent.

Catholic Schools At New Orleans To Uphold Ruling

NEW ORLEANS, May 27 (AP) — The Catholic School board of the New Orleans archdiocese today gave its support to the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling against school segregation and urged all citizens to "work sympathetically" toward applying the tribunal's decision.

The Very Rev. Msgr. Henry C. Bezou, superintendent of Catholic schools and board secretary, issued the board's statement today. It was passed unanimously last night.

Courier Post
5-28-54

The board said, "we consider the statement of the court fully in according with the principles of democracy . . . and Christian social principles affirming the equality of all men."

"Undoubtedly the ruling . . . will increase the prestige of the United States in the eyes of other nations . . . that in recent years, have looked with increasing interest and reverence to this country for leadership."

The statement added that the board recognized the difficulties involved in the practical application of the decision.

But it said, "we feel that all should work earnestly and sympathetically to the end that a practical implementation of the decision may be successfully and charitably effected."

Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel is president of the board.

La. Decision Backs School Segregation

BATON ROUGE, May 24 (AP)—The Senate Education Committee today passed a resolution favoring continued public school segregation after rejecting an amendment to further soften the language.

"This resolution is strong for a purpose," said Sen. W. M. Rainach of Summerfield. "Strength will gain us time. A strong stand will incline the U.S. Supreme Court to be lenient in putting the decree into effect.

"A weak stand will signify acquiescence on our part and in effect tell the court there shall be no delay in putting its decision into effect."

The resolution, which calls for positive action by the Louisiana Legislature to maintain segregation in public schools, barreled through the House by a 93-3 vote.

Legislature Votes for Continuing Segregation in Public Schools

Special to The New York Times.

BATON ROUGE, La., May 26—The Louisiana Senate was told today that "positive action" to keep segregation in effect in the state's public schools would be taken during the current legislative session.

The pledge came from Senator William Rainach of Summerfield, who pushed through the Senate a resolution denouncing the United States Supreme Court decree that segregation must be abolished. The House had approved the resolution. The Senate vote was 32 to 1. Senator Charles Deshotels of New Orleans cast the lone opposing vote.

The resolution calls for positive action to continue segregation in Louisiana schools and terms the court decision "intolerable, impracticable and unenforceable.".

Catholic Board In N. O. Backs School Decision

NEW ORLEANS, May 27 (AP)—The Catholic school board of the New Orleans archdiocese today gave its support to the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling against school segregation and urged all citizens to "work sympathetically" toward applying the tribunal's decision.

The Very Rev. Msgr. Henry C. Bezou, superintendent of Catholic schools and board secretary, issued the board's statement today. It was passed unanimously last night.

The board said, "We consider the statement of the court fully in accordance with the principles of democracy . . . and Christian social principles affirming the equality of all men."

Ask Legislature Find Ways To Impliment Ruling

Mounting evidence of sentiment to comply with the U. S. Supreme court's ruling to outlaw segregation in public schools spotlighted the news on the local scene this week when the New Orleans Council of Churches, the Council of Social Agencies and an attorney publicly agreed that the ruling was in keeping with the principles of democracy. The two named organizations urged Louisiana legislators to find ways to implement compliance with the decision.

The New Orleans Council of Churches last Monday passed a resolution approving the Supreme court's decision as "consistent with the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ." Board members of the Council of Social Agencies went on record last Saturday as opposing any Louisiana legislation that "might tend to eliminate or destroy the public school system in the state." Speaking before the plenary session of the National Community Relations Advisory Council in Atlantic City, N. J., last Saturday night, Atty. Isaac S. Heller stressed that the Supreme court decision abolishing segregation must be accepted and carried out according to its present terms.

Similar action was taken several weeks ago by Archbishop Joseph Rummel of the New Orleans Catholic archdiocese.

The sentiments of these and other organizations throughout the city showed the significance of the far-reaching edict and gave a clear-cut picture of liberal-minded citizens who sanction the belief that all men are created equal, having the same rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In sharp contrast to these forward-looking and implementing views, the Louisiana State legislators continued this week to seek ways and means to by-pass the highest court in the land's desegregation edict in the public schools.

The Council of Churches' resolution stated:

"We humbly confess that we have not achieved what we believe to be God's will in this area of human relations . . . Christian truth and strategy must reach us where we are and lead us by divine grace where God would have us be.

"We believe that the effectiveness of the ruling will be greatly enhanced by the wise decision of the court to postpone for months the hearings on the means, methods, and time scheduled by which this whole issue of segregation may be resolved.

"We call upon the members of our State Legislature to find just ways of implementing in our state the decision of the U. S. Supreme court. We ask th[e] r- cumstance they e[xpect] d calm judgment an[d] ood will in all their a[ctions] d ac- tions concerning [the] matter in accordance wit[h] eals of our Christian faith."

Miss Mary C. Raymond, executive director, announced last Saturday that the board members of the council of social agencies listed opposition to:

"H. B. 1136, a constitutional amendment, and H. B. 1139, an enabling act, as in effect destroying the public school system and substituting payment for individual children in private schools.

"H. B.'s 1137 and 1138 as tending to circumvent the recent Supreme court ruling on segregation."

Apparently realizing the many years of tireless struggling the Negro has undergone in his fight for first-class citizenship and a firm longing for a feeling of belonging, Heller declared: "It (the decision) must not be diluted by the pleas of expedience. There must be no turning back of the clock of progress."

He diagnosed the chief method of attacking the desegregation ruling as an attempt to do away with the public school system.

In pointing out that desegregation is not only right but works, the local lawyer explained: "Tucson integrated its schools in 1951 with noteworthy smoothness. When Arizona amended its segregation law, making segregation optional, Tucson announced that the dual system would be abandoned at the beginning of the next term.

"School officials had been preparing for the move for some time, and there was active support among leading church and civic groups."

Heller assailed the stereotype myth of racial inferiority, explaining it was untrue and an evil concept. The Negro's record in America shows that he has made unprecedented progress in a little over a century, he said.

He advised: "With respect to this problem of segregation and with respects to all problems of the relations of groups—the safest principle to follow is that on which our nation was founded, that all men are created free and equal, and the rights with which they are endowed may not be alienated."

Louisiana Group Asks Integration

BATON ROUGE, La., May 30 (AP)—Louisiana leaders for the Neation Association for Advancement of Colored People today called for an "integration of students, teachers and the personnel" of state public schools.

They listed two suits pending and 21 ready to be filed if the state stalls in putting into effect the U.S. Supreme Court's decree banning public school segregation.

Daniel Byrd of New Orleans, field secretary for the NAACP legal staff, said Louisiana had more suits ready to file than any other Southern state.

The 12 members of the executive board of the state NAACP met here, approved a statement of policy issued last Sunday at Atlanta by NAACP leaders from 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, and named a nine-member group to work with state officials in school integration.

Dr. E. A. Johnson of Natchitoches, state president, said the group would meet 4 p.m. Tuesday in New Orleans to elect officers and discuss plans.

"We're willing to work with state officials in whatever way we can," Johnson said. "We realize it is a problem and we think that by getting together and talking it over we can smooth some of the rough spots.

"We might have some suggestions and they might have some. We want to negotiate in good faith, but we don't want to be sucked into any attempt to circumvent the court's ruling."

Fight Seizure Of Land For Negro School

NEW ORLEANS — The recent U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools is being used by a New Orleans attorney to fight the seizure of a piece of property for a Negro school.

The Orleans Parish board has filed suit in Civil District Court to expropriate property owned by John A. Shambra at 2600 Dumaine.

Counsel for Shambra contends that the seizure of the property to build a Negro school would be unconstitutional, because the recent Supreme court decision has declared segregation of whites from Negroes in the public schools is illegal.

Judge Stich has dismissed the plea on the constitutionality ground, but had not ruled early this week on whether the school board's petition will be granted.

NEGRO EDUCATION GAINS ARE CITED

PAR Reports Progress in Several Areas

BATON ROUGE, June 12 (AP)—Negro education has shown solid gains in per cent of children of education age enrolled in school, length of school sessions, education of teachers and pupil-teacher ratio in the last two decades.

The Public Affairs Research Council reported today the following gains from 1930-31 to 1951-52:

Enrollment of educables, 61 per cent to 71.

Length of sessions (days), 111 to 174.

Teachers with two years or more of college, 43.2 per cent to 94.9.

Average pupils per teacher, 41 to 29.3.

During the same period the white schools changed at the following rate:

Enrollment of educables, 70.5 per cent to 71.

Length of session, 174 to 180.

Teachers with two years or more of college, 89.5 per cent to 99.1.

Average pupils per teacher, 25.5 to 22.6.

Noting that bills before the Legislature provide for granting of financial aid to children attending private schools maintaining segregation, PAR said that about 87,000 children—about 17 per cent of the school age children—go to private schools.

PAR said the proposals raised two questions:

1. Would the children now attending the private schools be also eligible to receive financial support as proposed for children now in public schools?

2. If so, what would be the added capital outlay and operating costs?

PAR says Louisiana is one of 17 states and the District of Columbia which maintains separate schools for Negro and white children. The District of Columbia, Kentucky, Maryland and West Virginia have announced plans to integrate their school systems next fall as a result of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision banning public school segregation.

Of the 31 states with integrated schools, PAR says four have laws permitting segregation, 16 forbid it and 11 have no legislation on the subject.

Louisiana Senator Makes Claim

Senate Told Mixed Schools To Cause Strife, Turmoil

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — Senator Allen J. Ellender, Democrat, of Louisiana, Tuesday presented to the Senate a resolution passed by the Louisiana Legislature deploring the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

The resolution, presented by Ellender without any comment, was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The decision, the resolution declared, "can only result in racial turmoil, strife and confusion, to the irreparable harm and injury of the people of the State of Louisiana and of most of the States of the Union."

THE RESOLUTION also states that it is the "solemn judgment" of the Louisiana Legislature that the mixing of white and colored children in public schools is not desired by the vast majority of colored or white people in the State, and that it is "clearly intolerable, impracticable, and . . . unenforceable upon the free people of a sovereign State."

The Louisiana Legislature petitioned other states "to take positive action" to uphold the reserved powers of the states against "usurpation" of power by the Supreme Court.

IT CHARGED that the decision violated the spirit of the constitution when measured by previous decisions on the same subject matter.

In the preamble to the resolution, the legislature declared that the establishment of segregated schools was a valid exercise of states' rights, and that separate but equal schools have been provided "at staggering expense to the taxpayers" of the states maintaining dual school systems.

N. O. Parochial Schools To Keep Segregation

NEW ORLEANS—(INS)— Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel of New Orleans has scotched rumors that segregation in the city's parochial schools will be abolished this year.

In a statement that also condemned the measures passed by the 1954 Louisiana legislature aimed at maintaining segregation, the Archbishop said that any attempt to wipe out segregation in parochial schools this year would "create a stupendous problem."

He said that the problem involves "an extremely grave responsibility, considering the crowded conditions of our parochial schools both for white and colored children."

Regarding the segregation measures, the Archbishop said that they were "conceived in an atmosphere of haste, prejudice and controversy and conflict with the Federal Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court."

believed that it would serve as a delaying tactic.

Three Adopted

The three measures were adopted with only two dissenting votes in the Senate and none in the House. Orators had a field day with such phrases as "way of life of the South" and assertions that colored people as well as whites desire to continue segregation.

Bill No. 1 was an act authorizing state agencies to use the state's police power to continue segregation in the public schools for the specific purposes of preserving peace, order, and health.

Bill No. 2 put the same proposition in the form of an amendment to the state constitution to be submitted to the voters in a referendum in November.

Assignment Provision

Bill No. 3 directs parish (county) school superintendents to assign children to schools in advance of school terms.

Before the bills were passed, provisions which would have extended their effect to Catholic schools were stricken by amendments. Also stricken was a clause making it a crime for an attorney to bring suit attacking segregation in Louisiana.

Louisiana solons pass three bills to keep segregation

BATON ROUGE, La. (NNPA) — The Louisiana Legislature, the first southern state legislative body to hold a session since the United States Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation in public schools, Tuesday passed three bills designed to maintain segregation through use of the state's police power.

The police power idea was put forward by a ten-man legislative committee, headed by State Sen. William M. Rainach. It is based on the theory that all states have inherent power to preserve peace, order and the health of their people.

Some Senators predicted during debate that the Supreme Court would knock down this theory in five minutes. Others

Act of defiance

Louisiana intends to openly and deliberately defy the Supreme Court decision by perverting the use of its inherent police powers.

The scheme, the brainchild of a ten-man legislative committee, was overwhelmingly adopted by the legislature called into special session by the state's Dixiecratic Governor Robert Kennon.

In what is hoped will be a court-proof plan to sidestep the May 17 decision, the legislature would retain segregated schools through a three - point plan.

First, it would ask consent of the voters to amend the constitution to permit use of police powers to enforce school segregation;

Secondly, it would accomplish the same objective through a legislative act;

Thirdly, it would empower school superintendents to assign children to specific schools in advance of the regular terms.

The first step must first be approved by the electorate before it becomes law.

The last two, already okayed by the legislature, await only the signature of Governor Kennon.

It's important to note that parochial and private schools asked and obtained exemption from these bills.

The Catholic Archdiocese of New Orleans made it clear that it wanted no part of this conspiracy of defiance of the nation's highest judicial body.

We are in agreement with Louisiana State Senator Laurance Eustis, who in voting against the proposal, wisely predicted: "The Supreme Court will knock this out in five minutes."

The Louisiana legislators are fooling nobody. Their triple-play was clearly executed to evade and prolong a situation that they may as well face right now.

LOUISIANA FIRST STATE TO DEFY SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES RESPECTING SEGREGATION

Will Use Police Power of Commonwealth To Continue Dual System of Education

GOVERNOR TO SIGN TWO LEGISLATIVE ENACTMENTS

BATON ROUGE, La.—(ANP)—Louisiana became the first southern state to openly defy the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation when its legislature last week passed three bills designed to maintain the dual school system.

Two of the bills now go to Gov. Robert Kennon. He already has announced his intentions of keeping segregation, thus is expected to sign the bills. The third bill paves the way for a constitutional amendment and will have to be submitted in a general election scheduled for November.

The bills would allow:

The state to use its inherent police power, never contested by the Supreme court, to continue separate white and Negro schools in Louisiana; the legislature to call a special election at any time to consider educational change in the state constitution when the high court hands down its decree enforcing the segregation decision, and school superintendents to assign children to schools in advance of the school term.

Two senators, Lawrence Eustis and David Machauer, both of New Orleans, voted against the bill for the constitutional amendment.

All three bills were amended to exclude private and parochial schools. This was done because of objections raised by the Catholic Archdiocese of New Orleans.

Sen. William M. Rainach, Summerfield, suggested using the state's police power to keep segregation. The idea is based on a theory that all states of the union, irrespective of the Supreme court have inherent power to preserve peace, order, and the health of their people.

Some senators supported the idea; others did not.

Among the latter were Sens. Eustis and Machouer.

Sen. Eustis said the state was "wasting its time on these bills I think they are unconstitutional and the Supreme court will throw them out in five minutes.

"We should have our attorney general and other representatives in Washington right now, talking to the Supreme court, to work out some plain . . ."

Sen. Machauer, a Catholic, disagreed with the bills for Christian reason. He said he could not vote "as a Christian" for the principle that "long has been immoral and is now illegal."

The bill, which would give local superintendents the right to assign each pupil to a school, was passed without dissent.

House bill 1136—a constitutional amendment which would require public approval—is the heart of the entire program. It would give the Legislature constitutional power to call a special election at any time to change the constitution with emergency educational plans once the supreme court issues its final decrees.

"House bill 1136 is the one that will arm Louisiana with power to insure continuance of segregation once the supreme court takes its final stand," Rainach said.

"We think Louisiana has developed the most practical and workable answer to the problem in the South."

House bill 1136 also authorizes the Legislature to establish entrance requirements for admission to public schools. It directs separate school facilities for both whites and Negroes—as present law does—with the new feature that this is done "in the exercise of the state police power."

The House will act on House bills 1136, 1137 and 1138 Monday. "These measures," Rainach said, "are designed to alter the existing laws in order to require segregation of white and colored school children on legal grounds not heretofore held unconstitutional by the supreme court."

The last two are legislative acts that would:

1. Declare the state shall maintain separate school facilities, "for the preservation of peace and good order in the state and 1136, 1137 and 1138—are "still objectionable" notwithstanding the exemption of parochial and private schools.

This was so, he said, "because they place education under the state police power, were conceived in an atmosphere of haste, prejudice and controversy and conflict with the federal constitution as interpreted by the supreme court."

The archbishop's statement further said, "Unfortunately, an erroneous and unwarranted impression has been created that we intend to desegregate our parochial schools in whole or in part in September of the present year.

"For this precipitous action there is absolutely no evidence in the form of an official statement, but we have explicitly indicated in the resolution of our school board that we would await further instruction from the supreme court."

The archbishop concluded that "wisdom and prudence imperatively counsel deliberation."

Left-Handed Deal: Jeff Davis School Given To Negroes

NEW ORLEANS — Another school, heretofore used for white children, has been converted to Negro use. Ironically the name of the school is Jefferson Davis, in honor of the Confederate leader.

The school is in the downtown section of the city and is expected to relieve congested conditions in V. C. Jones and Marie Convent schools.

Separate Parochial Schools Won't End This Year, Says Archbishop

Segregation will not be abolished in New Orleans parochial schools this year, Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel said Thursday.

To do so at present, he said, "would create a stupendous problem, an extremely grave responsibility considering the crowded condition of our parochial schools, both for white and for colored children."

He released a statement in which he also condemned three bills of the Louisiana Legislature which invoked state police powers to enforce segregation.

He said the bills—House bills

In New Orleans last year nearly 10,000 Negro children were given only half day schooling. The vote to convert was three to five, the president and one member of the board voting against it.

Many of the schools in New Orleans now used by Negroes have been converted from white use due to the shifts in population.

New Orleans School For Negro Use

NEW ORLEANS — (ANP) — Latest development in the fight to maintain segregated schools in New Orleans occurred last week with the conversion of Jefferson Elementary School from white to Negro students, effective in September.

School board members estimated that 100 Negro students would have to attend school on a half day basis unless this change was made. The separate school system is to be maintained in the city for at least another term.

Board members were told that Valena C. Jones and Mattie C. Couvent schools would have to place their Negro students on a part-time basis if Davis School were not converted. The parish board voted 3-2 for the conversion.

Action Upcoming Monday on Segregation Program

Legislature Takes Wraps for Legal Plan

By JAMES M'LEAN

BATON ROUGE, June 26 (AP)—The Louisiana Legislature, first since the supreme court ruling to plot ways of continuing school segregation, has unwrapped a flexible legal "out" its sponsors hail as smartest in the Southland.

With two weeks to go, the 60-day Legislature finally is ready to try out the first of its six-point program in a House vote Monday.

After the court shattered Dixie's tradition of separation of the races in public schools, Gov. Robert F. Kennon pledged Louisiana would keep its prized dual school system.

And the Legislature, quickly, said by resolution that's exactly what it intended to do. The state is proud of equalized school facilities.

To co-ordinate legislative thinking, a 10-man committee of five senators and five representatives was named to take over. But its first steps were hush hush.

When three of the six proposals were trotted out for a floor test last Thursday, the House balked because some members warned against "haste" and protested strongly they didn't know what it was all about.

In an interview Saturday, Sen. W. E. Rainach of Summerfield, chairman of the special legislative committee on segregation policies, offered the first authoritative analysis of what is proposed.

"This program is extremely flexible," he explained, "because it will permit the Legislature and the people to act quickly in counteracting any final decree of the supreme court that would destroy our Southern institutions, traditions and way of life."

under its inherent police power; prohibit "fomenting" of court action to defeat purposes of the act by persons not directly interested; deny Louisiana's free textbooks and state-financed school lunches to schools violating the separate-facilities requirement.

2. Direct the parish school superintendent to assign each student to a school and provide steps of appeal from such assignment.

If these laws are knocked out, constitutionally, then the Legislature can fall back on the flexible provisions of House bill 1136.

Three other measures—all constitutional amendments — are geared for later action. They extend the state's helping hand to school boards already at their limit of debt in school construction.

It will be two years before another regular session of the Legislature convenes. Present law permits a public vote on constitutional amendments only in elections for Congress or the Legislature.

Because of this, Rainach said, "the Louisiana school system for at least two more years will be at the mercy of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other agitators who would destroy it, unless these constitutional amendments are adopted at this time.

"It is urgent that every citizen interested in the welfare of school children contact his legislators at once," Rainach appealed.

"Let them know that they will receive the support and assistance of the people of the state in carrying through this program."

Final drafts were prepared as a joint effort by the committee, the education department, the state board of education, the governor's office and the attorney general's office.

Rainach said original proposals were eliminated which sought to set up state financial assistance for students in private schools and which would authorize a school zoning system.

Fear that these designs would lead to abandonment of the long-established public school system and would inject a religious issue —since South Louisiana has a large number of private Catholic schools—caused these features to be thrown aside.

The three equalization finance measures:

House bill 837 would raise the maximum limit on bond debt of local school districts from 20 to 25 per cent of assessed valuation.

House bill 997 would permit local shool boards to levy an additional maintenance and capital outlay tax of five mills, when necessary.

House bill 1190 lets the Legislature use surplus money from the beer tax to provide grants-in-aid for school districts to completely equalize separate school facilities when the districts have reached the maximum debt limit under the law.

Sen. Rainach described all six of the measures as emergency legislation.

Once the Legislature adjourns in two weeks, he said, the committe will call statewide hearings on the constitutional measures designed for a public decision in the November election.

Students Denied Entry To College In Hammond, La.

HAMMOND, La.—(INS)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attempted tonight 12 Negroes enrolled at Southeastern Louisiana College at Hammond Friday in a test move, eastern said the 12 negro students but they were turned down.

President Luther Dyson of South were rejected on the basis of the State segregation law which forbids integration of white and Negro students.

Atty A P. Tureaud Sr., of New Orleans, a NAACP official in Louisiana said the students merely were seeking to enroll for the fall term as they have in other schools

Last week students were rejected at a West Baton Rouge Parish Public School on the same basis— the state's segregation law.

Louisiana Also Declines To Admit Negro Children

ATLANTA, Sept. 3 (UP)—Baton Rouge, La., officials refused today to admit 30 Negro children to an all-white school located a block from Negro homes as an apparent Southwide drive got underway to break down public school segregation.

It was the second march in two days by Negroes on a segregated school. Formal petitions have also been filed in Texas, North Carolina and Mississippi for admission of Negro children to all-white schools.

With the opening of Southern schools this week, however, Negro leaders apparently are seeking immediate obedience to the court ruling.

School authorities told the children at Baton Rouge that "the registration hours are over" as they sought to enroll in the Gilmer Wright School, located in a school district where both whites and Negroes live.

Attorney Alex Pitcher, who accompanied the group, said that in the past, "Negro children have had to bypass the school to find equal facilities in other parts of the city."

Pitcher said the orderly attempt to gain admittance served as a "test" case.

A group of Negro school children sought Thursday to enroll in a white school at Montgomery, Ala., but also were turned down. No demonstration accompanied the move although Aubrey Williams Jr., who went with the youngsters, said he received two threatening telephone calls afterwards.

Williams said one caller told him, "We'll get you tonight," while the other said, "We'll meet up sometime." Williams, son of the former WPA and NYA official, termed the callers "just excited people."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, heading the drive to gain admittance to white schools, has filed petitions to force school officials to take in Negroes at Dallas, Walthall County, Miss., in Vance County, N. C., and in a number of Louisiana parishes.

ALL SOUTHERN STATES URGED TO FILE BRIEFS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Sept. 3 (AP)—An Arkansas newspaper editor urged today that all Southern states file briefs with the U.S. Supreme Court advising how and when they think the ruling outlawing racial segregation in public schools should be put into effect.

Harry Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, said it was "unfortunate" that Georgia state officials had taken the position that they would decline the Supreme Court's invitation to file friend of the court briefs in the case.

"I feel that the South's point of view needs to be represented as fully as possible," he told newsmen here.

"The court deliberately delayed ordering its decision into effect in order to get the views of the Southern states as to how the decision should be implemented."

Ashmore, en route to Atlanta to speak to a group of Southern school officials on the Supreme Court decision, stopped off here on invitation of Florida Supt. of Public Instruction Thomas D. Bailey and Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin for consultation on the matter.

Ervin is preparing a brief in which he will urge that desegregation, if it comes eventually, should come only after a reasonable period of time and then on a county by county or local basis.

Ashmore, who has done research for the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education on the problem, said he agreed that desegregation should come gradually and on a local basis.

Ashmore said the northern tier of Southern states would begin setting desegregation patterns "after two or three years" in his opinion, but it would be a long time before some of the deep South states would desegregate.

There will be less pressure against desegregation generally in the rural areas than in the cities, he predicted.

RACE IS MARKED, COLUMNIST SAYS

Court Rule 'Very Clearly Labels Negroes'

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

ALEXANDRIA, La., Sept. 17—"If I were a Negro I would resent the supreme court decision," Thurman Sensing, well-known southern newspaper columnist, told 300 members of the Louisiana Forestry Association at their seventh annual banquet held here Friday night.

"The decision (on school segregation) very clearly labels Negroes as an inferior race."

Sensing was the second nationally known speaker appearing before the forestry group. At a noon luncheon, Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia discussed the progress of forestry in his home state and in the South.

Gov. Talmadge said the tremendous strides in forestry protection in his state have been due largely to "the intense interest the present administration took in forestry."

Talmadge said Georgia now leads the nation in acres of forest land under organized protection.

Georgia landowners, he said "received more annual income from the forest than from any other agricultural crop." He said more than 175,000 Georgians are directly engaged in forestry and allied industries.

"Georgia's forests are her most valuable and extensive crop, and her greatest renewable resource," Talmadge said. "Comprising a total of 25,178,964 acres, woodlands cover 86 per cent—two out of every three acres—of the total land area of the state. Georgia ranks first in the nation in privately-owned forest area."

He said the total turnover from growing, harvesting, manufacture and sale of forest products in 1947-48 was $300 million. The turnover has now jumped to $750 million.

SPECIAL SESSION HELD NOT NEEDED

Rainach Cites Segregation Situation in State

New Orleans

(The Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 17—Sen. W. M. Rainach, Summerfield, chairman of a 10-man joint legislative committee on segregation, said here Thursday that he saw no need for a special session of the Legislature to check attempts by Negroes to register in white schools.

Sen. Rainach said that the laws "we have passed and have on the books will give us enough power to handle the situation."

The state Legislature at its last session approved legislation to protect segregation. The legislation included a proposed constitutional amendment giving the Legislature power to call special elections to cope with any decree the supreme court may hand down in connection with its segregation decision.

The North Louisiana senator also said that he does not believe Louisiana plans to file a brief with the United States supreme court in connection with the decision banning segregation in the public schools.

Filing of Briefs

States that require or permit segregation have been invited to file briefs offering the supreme court advice on working out the mechanics and timetables for final integration of the races in the public schools.

Sen. Rainach was here Thursday for a meeting of the legislative committee set up to preserve segregation.

Maps Program

He mapped a three-point program of action:

1. "We must accumulate data and statistics to defend the measures we have passed."

2. "We should exchange information with representatives of other states."

3. "We must pass from the defensive to the offensive in our fight. We must restore to the states the control of education that have been usurped by this supreme court in order to curry favor with the NAACP."

Lawyers' Case Aired

Times-Picayune

Sat. 12-11-54

BATON ROUGE—The Louisiana State Bar Association's committee on professional ethics and grievances last Thursday and Friday held a hearing on complaints against Attys. Alex Pitcher Jr. and Johnnie Anderson Jones, charged with "stirring up strife" by trying to enroll twenty-three Negro children in a white school last September.

Committee Chairman James A. Schillin, New Orleans, said the attorneys did not obtain consent of the children's parents for the action. Defense counsel were Attys. Jesse N. Stone, Shreveport, La., and Richard Millspaugh, Opelousas, La.

Harry B. Kelleher, New Orleans, vice chairman of the state bar committee on professional ethics and grievances, said the only issue to be considered is that of possible professional misconduct.

THE HEARING, which was aimed at possible disbarment, began at 11 A. M. Thursday when Mrs. Lilly Taylor, principal of the Gilmer Wright School, testified that she refused to admit the group of Negro children because "I could not register them without court proceedings."

A statement introduced by Pitcher said he was representing the North Baton Rouge Civic League when he attempted the registration and that he and the children, while walking to school, had met Jones and took him along also.

Pitcher said also that he is a member of the NAACP and had consulted Atty. A. P. Tureaud, New Orleans, before taking action.

AMONG WITNESSES called were Mrs. Wilma Isaac who denied giving permission to her two children to attempt registration in the white elementary school, but added that her daughter, Deana Isaac, had seen other children going to the white school and had taken her brother and joined the group; Mrs. Mary Hilton, who said she had not given permission to her son, Mack, 10, as she was in the hospital that day, but that her oldest daughter had given the boy permission, and Ellis Robinson, who said he had given permission to his nephew, Harold Porter Kent.

Sitting with the bar committee was W. M. Shaw, Homer, La., attorney for the Joint Legislation Committee to Preserve Segregation.

NEGRO SCHOOLS ARE DEDICATED

Integration Will Work in City, Speaker Predicts

Mon. 10-25-54

The opinion that racial integration will work in New Orleans schools was expressed by one of the speakers at the dedication of a new Negro school Sunday.

Clarence Laws, public relations director of the Louisiana Weekly Publishing Company, urged that "democracy not only be taught in our schools, but be put into action here" as he spoke at the dedication of the John W. Hoffman school, 2622 S. Prieur.

"The beauty of this new Hoffman school will be enhanced when it becomes a school for all children and not just a school for Negroes," Laws said.

New Orleans States

He described a proposed amendment by the state Legislature to avoid integration in public schools as an "emotional and short-sighted act to circumvent the supreme court decision."

Laws was one of the speakers at dedication ceremonies for two new Negro elementary schools, Hoffman and the Paul Dunbar school, 9330 Forshey.

P. 3

Mrs. Jacqueline T. Leonhard, vice-president, Orleans parish school board, and Dr. W. T. Talbot Handy, district superintendent, New Orleans District Methodist church, Central Jurisdiction, were other featured speakers.

'Symbol of Hope'

Mrs. Leonhard spoke at the Hoffman ceremony and described the new school as "a symbol of hope for progress for the people and said "this school will turn out many fine citizens in the future."

Dr. Clarence Scheps, president of the school board, and Dr. James F. Redmond, superintendent of public schools, spoke at both dedications.

Dr. Scheps said the city was marking "a revolutionary day in providing adequate schools" with the two new buildings and promised the board would continue to work for more and better facilities.

Faculties Praised

Dr. Redmond told the two audiences that "this program today has a theme of hope for the future" and praised the principals and faculties of the schools.

Archie W. Arnaud, principal of Hoffman school, and Mrs. Maud A Cummings, principal of Dunbar, were praised in two talks by Parent-Teacher Association presidents.

Mason R. Harrison, a fifth grade pupil at Hoffman, accepted that school on behalf of the student body and two other pupils were on the program.

A first grade pupil, Barbara Ambrose, accepted a school banner presented to the school by Rev. Avery S. Alexander. Camille Ross, a second grader, accepted an American flag given the school by Clifton H. Denson.

The Dunbar program featured a responsive reading dedicaiton service with the audience participating.

Petition Against Inequalities

Allen Pr. Parents Attack Biased School Board Prog.

The glaring inequalities which exist between white and Negro public schools throughout the state was attacked last week in a petition by parents of Negro school children in Allen parish.

The petition, the fourth in a series of similar petitions within Louisiana, is the first one this year. The other three cases were filed last year which included eight parishes.

Louis Berry, of New Orleans and Alexandria, is handling the allegations which is termed a "class action."

Named as plaintiffs were Joseph L. Watkins, Jr., Herdly Gaudeau, Herbert Delafosse and Jessie Prudhomme.

The plaintiffs contend that the designated use of the schools is based simply on race and color and that the Allen Parish Training (Negro) school is grossly inferior and inadequate to the Oakdale (white) High school in that the Allen Parish Training school is a frame structure with no sanitary toilets, gymnasium, inadequate floor space, curriculum, transportation and personnel. Whereas the Oakdale High school is a modern brick structure with sanitary toilets, gymnasium, adequate floor space, curriculum, transportation and personnel.

The facilities furnished the petitioners' children and all other Negro children similarly situated constitutes illegal discrimination based simply and solely on race and color which violates the equal protection clause to the 14th amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the petition disclosed.

The petitioners further showed that the maintenance of a segregated school system based simply and solely on race and color wherein Negro children are supplied inferior facilities, violates the 14th amendment of the United States Constitution.

The petitioners ask that the Allen Parish School Board immediately provide equal school facilities for their children and other Negro children similarly situated and that the board grant them permission to attend Oakdale High school and any other state supported institution without any restriction based on race or color.

The first series of petitions were filed last September by five parishes. In October the second series was filed by two parishes and the third in December. The parishes Claiborne Union, Rapides, Lafayette, Webster, East Carroll, Madison, Lincoln and Franklin. The present case ups the total to nine parishes which are attempting to alleviate the pitiful and deplorable plight of Negro school children within the state.

N.O. Principal 'Not Interested' In Integration

NEW ORLEANS — The Orleans Parish School Board met last week and Negro and white principals sat side by side as part of an expressed policy of integration.

The meeting was, however, not without incident. One principal, M. H. Bowles, of the Dunbar School, stated he was not interested in meeting with "the white folks." He said he would much rather meet with those of his own race, with whom he "felt at home."

Though the meeting was not segregated no Negro principals were on the panel program.

La. Gov. Takes Stand Against De-Segregation

NEW ORLEANS —(INS)— Gov. Robert Kennon of Louisiana said in New Orleans that a decision by the U. S. Supreme Court to abolish segregation in the public schools would be a blow against local self-government.

Speaking before the Louisiana School Boards Association in New Orleans Kennon curtly commented that "we don't want an edict from a town on the Potomac River to handle our children in Louisiana."

Kennon added that Louisiana had done much for its school children, "regardless of creed or color, more than any other state, I believe."

Continuing, Kennon declared that it was against the very fundamental American principles of self-government for a decision to be made on the Potomac River as to how the various school districts will operate their local affairs.

"We've made progress in recent years and we expect to continue.

"We don't have to be made to continue,' he concluded.

Negro Schools Consolidation Set

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

SHREVEPORT, La., April 8— A consolidation of Negro schools in Caddo parish, creating seven new centers and calling for expenditure of $4,369,500 for new buildings has been adopted by the Caddo parish school board.

The plan has been under study by the building and grounds committee for two years and follows largely the recommendation of the Peabody survey report. The survey had recommended expenditure of $3,500,000 for 16 centers. The number of school centers was reduced but the expenditure was increased.

Supt. Roscoe H. White said the belief is that the fewer centers will be as economical, if not more so, than the 16 schools recommended.

The number of small frame, one and two-room schools, will be reduced from 78.

United Action Marred By Only Two Exceptions

Tired of their children being humiliated, embarrassed and shamed at the annual McDonogh Day observance in Lafayette Square, parents of Negro children in the finest effort of unity in years finally put their foot down last Friday and kept their youngsters away from the shameful spectacle.

For the first time since the beginning of the historical ceremonies, there was only token Negro participation in paying homage to the great public school benefactor who left his wealth to educate both Negro and white children, equally.

The limited delegation was attributed to a "keep your children at home" movement spearheaded by PTA, labor and civic leaders who resented the open "display of racial supremacy and a humiliating experience of shame for the Negro children who in past years had to wait under the most trying circumstances until the white children had concluded their celebration."

The effort which was the most unified action ever undertaken by local Negroes was marred by only two exceptions.

The two exceptions were: four eighth grade pupils and Miss A. M. Glasper, the ranking teacher of Valena C. Jones, and approximately 30 boys from the Milne home for boys accompanied by Principal Aubry who reportedly had no choice in the matter. They were ushered through city hall by Dr. James F. Redmond, superintendent of the Orleans parish school board, where each school received a key to the city from Mayor de-Lesseps Morrison. Prior to this distinction, a member of the visiting school was presented a certificate of merit at the foot of the McDonogh monument by Dr. Clarence Scheps, president of the school board. There are approximately 32,000 Negro children in the public school system.

Also in attendance was Miss Fannie C. Williams, principal of V. C. Jones, who told a reporter that she had come to "unofficially" observe the ceremonies. "I have been attending these ceremonies for quite some time," she added, "and since this is my last one before my retirement, I felt that as an American citizen I would not miss the opportunity."

Commenting on the mass action, Mrs. Ethel J. Young, president of the Parent-Teachers Associations council, declared, "The parents have spoken and have gone on record as not approving of the second-class citizenship demonstration accorded their children at the biased McDonogh Day ceremonies. This was proven by their action last Friday, although they did not forget the great benefactor. The schools did send flowers. Appropriate exercises paying tribute to the founder were held in all of the school classrooms."

Dr. Scheps said, "I am very sorry that all the Negro children did not participate in the ceremonies, because it means a great deal to them. It's a shame Negro leaders and parents deprived their children of an educational experience." No comment was made on what type of educational experience the Negro children were missing by their remaining away.

Mrs. Simon Marine, president of the PTA at Jones school, stated, "I don't feel discouraged. I worked hard for them not to go, and I am greatly disappointed that even four children from my school had to go.

"I know of one case in which the teacher actually went to the parents asking that the child attend. One or two of the parents permitted their children to go, fearing that failure to comply with the teacher's request would mean no promotion for their children.

"One child who attended said that she did not know why. Another parent came to the school to stop her child from going, but the child began crying so the parent gave in. When the delegation left, the accompanying teacher said that she was an American citizen and would go anywhere she pleased."

SCHOOL MEASURE BACKED, 79 TO 4

Would Set Up 9-Member Legislative Committee

BATON ROUGE, May 31 (AP)—With little noise and limited debate, the Louisiana House Monday voted, 79-4, to set up a nine-member legislative committee to seek means of continuing public school segregation.

The concurrent resolution now moves to the Senate.

The committee is the second step following adoption of a concurrent resolution by the Legislature urging positive action to retain segregation.

Rep. E. W. Gravolet of Plaquemines parish introduced Monday's resolution, just as he sponsored the previous one.

Reps. Bernard Engert and Mrs. Bland Cox Bruns of Orleans parish and Edward Pavy of St. Landry parish opposed the first resolution. They were joined by Rep. Mrs. Richard S. Parrott of St. Landry Monday.

Engert and Mrs. Bruns spoke against the resolution.

Mrs. Bruns called for "calm consideration" of the problem and reminded "the whole United States is watching this Legislature and churches are attempting to take leadership in this issue."

Her talk brought light applause. She moved the bill be refered to the education committee and was voted down, 7-12.

Engert argued the resolution was "an attempt to get around the laws of our United States."

Rep. Wellborn Jack of Caddo parish said, "Let's be frank enough to say whether you want your children to go to school with Negroes. My children are not going to do so."

The House was silent as Jack concluded.

Rep. Lee Fontenot of Evangeline parish said, "As a school teacher, I want to say I will teach Negro classes or white classes. But I will not teach mixed classes."

The Gravolet resolution gives the group of four senators and five representatives the power to call upon state agencies and school boards for information.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS AID IS PROPOSED

Six Bills to Counteract Ruling Presented

By B. L. KREBS
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

BATON ROUGE, May 31—Five bills were introduced in the House of Representatives Sunday night to counteract the effect of the recent US supreme court decision outlawing "equal but separate" public schools for Negroes.

One group, including a proposed constitutional amendment and three enabling acts, introduced by Reps. E. W. Gravolet Jr., Plaquemines, and T. T. Fields, Union, would authorize the state, parishes and municipalities to provide financial assistance to minors for obtaining elementary and secondary education in private schools, subject to provisions of the Legislature therefor."

Authority for state and local assistance to individual children would be enacted by amending Sections 14, 15, 16, and 23 of Article 12 of the Constitution to include the above quoted language.

Section one of the article would also be re-enacted to include, following the constitutional requirement for separate white and Negro schools, the assertion:

"This provision is made in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, morals, better education and the peace and good order of the state, and not because of race. The Legislature shall enact laws to enforce the state police power in this regard."

Separate Measure

A separate measure by Representatives H. N. Goff, Rapides, and Nicholas Cefalu, Tangipahoa, would provide:

"Each parish or city school board shall have authority and power to establish zones of school attendance and designate the school in which any child may be enrolled, and no child shall attend any school until such individual designation shall have been made.

"The assignment and designation shall individually take into consideration the educational needs and welfare of the child involved, the welfare and best interests of all the pupils attending the school or schools involved, the availability of school facilities, health, safety and moral factors at the school or schools involved and in the community, and any other factors deemed pertinent."

A similar law providing for school attendance zones was enacted by the Mississippi Legislature at its recent session.

In a bill introduced by P. R. Cefalu and Wellborn Jack of Caddo, the school superintendent of each parish would be authorized to designate the school to be attended by each pupil.

One of the Gravolet-Field acts accompanying the proposed constitutional amendment provides that all elementary and secondary schools shall be operated separately for white and Negro school children, and prohibits the state board of education from approving any public or private school which violates the act. The bill further prohibits the state university and state colleges from recognizing for admission the certificate of any public or private school violating the act.

Parishes Would Decide

Another proposed act by Gravolet and Field authorizes the parish superintendent to determine each year "the particular public school within each parish to be attended by each school child therein." In event of dissatisfaction with the school assignment, parents or next of kin may apply for a hearing, with a decision to be handed down within 30 days after the hearing.

The decision of the superintendent resulting from the hearing may be reviewable by the school board on petition of the aggrieved party, the hearing to be held within 60 days, and the applicant to pay the cost of transcribing the evidence and furnish bond. Following the decision of the school board, to be given in writing "as soon as practicable," the petitioner can then appeal to the courts.

A third enabling act by Gravolet and Field, setting up boards for private schools and providing for financial assistance to individual children to obtain an elementary and secondary education reads:

That the parish school boards of the state of Louisiana be fully authorized and empowered to grant and to give financial assistance to minors residing in their respective parishes to defray or assist in defraying the cost of attending private elementary and secondary schools of their choice and that such grants may be made by school boards on the basis of the total amount of available parish school funds and the number of minors applying for admission either to the parish public school for financial assistance to attend private elementary and secondary schools.

Schools Regulated

That all such grants of financial assistance shall be made for and on account of said minors applying therefor to private school trustees who may volunteer or may be selected by the parents of such school children, and approved by the parish school board as to their number and qualifications of responsibility. Said private school trustees shall be required to furnish bond in such amount as may be required by the school board, consistent with the amount of funds to be handled by said trustees for said minor school children which bond shall be conditioned upon their faithful performance, for the violation of which, the parent or tutor of any minor who may suffer loss as a result of any violation of such trust shall have a right of action to enforce the conditions of said bond. Upon the grant and transfer of such financial assistance to said finors, through their private school trustees, for their elementary or secondary school education, full title to said fund shall vest in the minors, as recipients thereof through said private school trustees, and the school board shall have no right or authority over the handling or disbursement of said funds.

Parish school boards are fully authorized and empowered to sell or lease any school property under such terms, conditions, and for such consideration as, in their judgment, may be to the best interest of the parish, after advertisement in the parish official journal for not less than fifteen (15) days requiring sealed bids to be submitted therefor. After selling or the leasing of said school property, the school board shall have no control over the operation thereof.

This act shall take effect only after adoption of House joint resolution No. ——— for amendment to setcions 1, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 23 of article XII of the constitution of Louisiana and only in the event of there being a final unappealable decision rendered against the continued maintenance of separate public schools for the education of white and colored children in the state of Louisiana.

14d(1) 1954

No Time to Dally on Education Law

Although the Louisiana Legislature several weeks ago went on record as determined to attempt to keep separate school systems in the state, no positive action toward that goal had been taken Sunday by either the House or Senate.

There seemed to be an attitude on the part of some members of the Legislature to put off action as long as possible.

This, it seems to us, was shortsighted.

If no action is taken by the present Legislature, there is a strong probability that no effective action will be possible until 1956—if ever.

As it stands, the state constitution provides that proposed amendments to its articles or sections shall be voted on in general elections for the Legislature or for members of Congress.

Article 12 of the state constitution, as presently written, is in conflict with the United States supreme court decision of May 17—which held that segregation in public schools should come to an end.

As we observed when that decision was handed down, by calling for briefs and arguments "on when and how its decision should be effected, it (the supreme court) indicated that it is as much lost as anybody about how to achieve its purpose with the minimum possible damage to education and disturbance of the people."

A proposed constitutional amendment pending at Baton Rouge would change the language of Article 12 to assert that the state maintains separate school systems in the exercise of its police power. More important, it seems to us, is another clause in the proposed amendment which would permit future changes in Article 12 to be voted at special elections—instead of at general elections which come every two years.

We believe it imperative that the Legislature should give the people in November, 1954, a chance to express themselves on this issue and to place in the state government machinery a flexibility or a mobility which it now lacks.

If the supreme court should issue an order in late 1954 or early in 1955 to enforce its anti-segregation decision, Louisiana would be unable to amend its basic law to meet the new situation until November, 1956—unless the present Legislature takes action.

In addition to the proposed constitutional amendment, the present Legislature has before it a proposed statute which we consider worthy of immediate attention.

This bill would set up an administrative system by which parish school superintendents would assign pupils to various schools. Under the bill, a procedure would be provided by which appeals might be filed with school boards from the superintendents' decisions. Finally, appeals to the district court would be in order.

Unless some such administrative system is established, it seems to us, chaos and friction will be inevitable. Without such a system, the courts will be swamped.

None of the proposals offered by the 10 legislators selected to consider this problem is perfect, but all are worthy of immediate consideration and action. The authors apparently have faced their task seriously and diligently.

We urge other members of the Legislature to give their recommendations serious and diligent consideration and recommend strongly that the people of Louisiana, in November, have an opportunity to express themselves on this issue.

'Integrate Schools Immediately'--Bourgeois

Former School Supt. Proposes Positive Approach To Decision

By Clarence A. Laws

In the absence of a positive approach to de-segregating public schools by state and parish superintendents of education, and in view of the negative approach being advanced and fostered by certain members of the state legislature, on Tuesday Lionel J. Bourgeois, former superintendent of public schools for Orleans Parish, was interviewed for his reaction to the court ruling and for recommendations for implementing that ruling.

Addressing himself to the "problem of adjustment" Mr. Bourgeois said:

"There is no gainsaying the fact that implementation of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court poses problems of adjustment which can be satisfactorily made only through wise leadership in a spirit of temperance and moderation. Unfortunately, recent utterances of men in high position are the antithesis of what is pressingly needed if we are to move from segregation to integration in schools of the South. I firmly believe, and feel reasonably assured that most constitutional lawyers will agree, that no legal subterfuge can be found with which to circumvent the forthcoming decrees implementing the decision of the court outlawing segregation in the public schools. It appears to me that the wise and intelligent thing to do is to accept the decision as an axiomatic fact in the American system and to proceed from that point towards devising ways and means to soften those adjustments which must be made during the period of transition.

"Since no one has yet proposed anything resembling an affirmative program for immediate action fully, realizing that in doing so I am treading on very thin ice which may not support me because of the avalanche of criticism which may with Negroes ... e has convinced me ... ave great pride in their ... rtecedents, in their compl... ty to compete on equal ... ith the best racial stocks o... ... and their full measure of ... cism and devotion whereve... ... owe allegiance. All of v... convinces me that in practice ... Negroes will elect to attend schools preponderantly of their own race.

"Should the intelligence and sober judgment of both races prevail in accepting the two proposals submitted above, or, for that matter, any affirmative plan, New Orleans might well be cited for again taking its place in the vanguard of progress."

Mr. Bourgeois speaks from a background of 30 years of experience in the public school system of New Orleans. He held just about every position in the system having to do with the education of youth. These included instructor of commercial law at Warren Easton, beginning in 1921 through principalships of elementary and then high schools, district superintendent, assistant superintendent, superintendent in charge of all instruction, and superintendent of schools in 1946. Mr. Bourgeois tendered his resignation as superintendent in May, 1950, to become effective January 1, 1951. This action was taken after he had won a case in the Supreme court involving a dispute between him and the school board.

Since he resigned from the school system Mr. Bourgeois spent some time in private law practice and as a representative of a publishing company. He is now associated with Meyers, Whitty and Hodge, a firm which handles all forms of general insurance.

follow. If, however, the proposal proves as successful in practice as were the Green Book proposal to convert Kruttchnitt, White, Davey, McDonogh 18, Merrick and Rogers schools from white to Negro occupancy (despite hysteria and law suits), the community will have made another step forward in race relations."

"Here is the proposal: 1) Integration immediately at all levels. 2) Return immediately to separate schools for boys and girls at the junior and senior high school levels.

"As to proposal 1, all will agree that young children will adjust to integration without incident, and that during the first six grades each child will learn the basic meaning of the dignity and worth of each human being as such. The second proposal is frankly aimed at minimizing boy-girl incidents at the post-pubescent and adolescent stages of maturation. It is in this area that the smallest incident can undo or retard the complete acceptance of the new order.

"Hysteria and unwarranted fear should be substantially allayed by the fact that geographical distribution of the races of itself will for a long time continue a considerable degree of natural segregation the result of domicile."

When asked to comment on the social implications of integrated schools which have been raised by some of the bitterest opponents of the plan, Mr. Bourgeois commented:

"In the last analysis integration to the Negro will have greater meaning as a symbol of equality than as the professed desire to force his friendship upon anyone. My long experience in dealing Louisiana's State Senate has approved three bills designed to flout the United States Supreme Court verdict against segregation in the nation's public schools.

The pro-segregationist measures were passed despite the admonition of one of their supporters, State Senator Laurence Eustis of New Orleans, who admitted that he felt the High Court would declare the acts unconstitutional "in five minutes."

The three measures call for mandatory segregation on elementary and secondary levels in Louisiana schools backed by police power; mandatory state regulation of enrollments; and, state control of "qualifications for admittance" to public schools.

BUT, IN Morgantown, W. Va., a different approach to the question was achieved when the school board legislated the all-Negro Monongalia High School out of existence.

The West Virginia action provided for 100 per cent integration of teachers and pupils into the town's school system.

The new setup takes effect on Sept. 1. The Monongalia High School, under the principalship of Arthur Barnett had been in existence since 1916.

Down in Washington, D. C., George Washington University announced that it had dropped all racial bars in opening its doors to Negroes. This action was taken as a Supreme Court spokesman said that the court's first conference in Oct. 11 will announce the date on which it will hear arguments designed on how it will carry out its decision against school segregation.

IN NASHVILLE, Tenn., Roman Catholic Bishop William L. Adrian announced that all parochial schools in the city would be open to both Negro and white in accordance with the High Court's verdict. In addition, one of the city's two all-Negro Catholic Churches has been shut down.

In Missouri, Attorney-General John M. Dalton ruled that segregation in the "Show Me" state had been kayoed by the Supreme Court's ruling.

A Pine Bluff, Ark., citizens' group, headed up by Atty. W. Harold Flowers lashed out against "the complacent and indifferent attitude of Arkansas" in planning for the end of school jim crow.

Florida's office of the Attorney-General is conducting a "survey" among white and Negro citizens in ten counties, material from which will be used by the state in its arguments before the High Court.

THE PRESBYTERIAN Church of the South adopted "wait and see" attitude with respect to Kings College in Bristol, Tenn., postponing action on the segregation issue until 1955.

The State of South Carolina has sent out a "fact-finding" group of six men to tour other Southern states to find out what is being done about school segregation. The group is headed by Senator L. Marion Gressette, chairman of a South Carolina sub-committee.

Gov. Lawrence W. Weatherby of Kentucky named two Negroes to an "advisory committee" which will study ways and means to end public school segregation.

Delivering a speech in West Lafayette, Ind., on Saturday, U. S. Attorney-General Herbert Brownell cited the High Court's school decision as a weapon against communism.

He asserted, "Now the court's decision must be implemented and carried out in communities throughout the nation. I urge each person here tonight to give support and exercise leadership to this end. The decision presents new responsibilities and new opportunities as well—to the American people.

"I am confident that their response will be in keeping with the cause of human dignity and freedom."

School Decision by Court Praised

A resolution praising the recent decision of the United States supreme court against segregation in public schools was unanimously adopted by 1500 delegates from 64 Louisiana parishes at the conclusion of the Louisiana Missionary Baptist State Convention in New Iberia Sunday.

Dr. Gardner C. Taylor, minister of the Concord Baptist church in Brooklyn, N. Y., called the decree "the hand of God and the forward march of civilization." Ministers were urged to prepare their congregation for changes resulting from the court's decision.

30 Negroes Refused At Baton Rouge

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 3 (AP).—Some 30 Negro children accompanied by an attorney and two Negro adults attempted to register at a white elementary school here today. But the principal refused to accept them.

The attorney told the woman principal the action was a test case.

G. A. Smalling, assistant superintendent of East Baton Rouge Parish Schools, said it was the first time in the Capital City history, as far as he knows, that Negroes sought admission to white public schools.

LOUISIANA PASSES SEGREGATION BILL

BATON ROUGE, La.—An amendment to the state constitution and two bills designed to evade the U. S. Supreme Court decision on school segregation went to the governor of Louisiana last Thursday after the senate tacked on the amendment to satisfy objections raised by the Catholic church to what it termed "government encroachment."

State Senator W. M. Rainach declared, "A vote for these bills is a vote to preserve the southern way of life. A vote against them is an open invitation to the carpet baggers, scalawags and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to integrate our schools."

The senate Tuesday gave final legislative passage to the constitutional amendment and two bills enabling Louisiana to use its inherent police power to continue separate white and Negro schools and directing parish superintendents to assign children in advance of a school term.

The constitutional amendment will be submitted to voters for approval in a November general election. The others become law with Gov. Robert Kennon's signature.

Kennon, who has said Louisiana would continue to have segregation, previously indicated he would sign the legislation.

Reference to parochial and private schools were deleted from all three measures after the Catholic archdiocese of New Orleans protested the danger of government encroachment on their school system.

Louisiana's legislature was the first in the South to meet since the Supreme Court handed down its historic decision that reversed a century of southern racial traditions.

The heart of Louisiana's attempt to preserve that tradition is contained in the constitutional amendment and legislative act declaring that segregation is a matter of health and morals and subject to control by the state's inherent police power.

"Nowhere in its decision," Sen. Rainach explained, "does the court say segregation on any basis other than race is unconstitutional."

Rainach headed a committee of 10 lawmakers who masterminded Louisiana's plan and termed it the "smartest in Dixie."

Both police power proposals passed by identical 35-2 votes. Two New Orleans senators opposed the measures. One senator was absent and another refrained from voting.

Bills Called 'Impractical'

One opponent, Sen. Laurance Eustis, called the bills impractical.

"The Supreme Court will throw this out in five minutes," he warned. "I don't agree with what the court did, but we won't get anywhere defying them. What are you going to do, secede again?"

Rainach admitted the bills were not "perfect," but warned that "the consequences of inaction is disaster.

Louisiana School Bars Admission

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS) — An Attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People reportedly took 39 Negro children to a small white elementary school in North Baton Rouge Friday, but the woman principal refused to register the students.

The principal, who's identity was not made known by the NAACP, said she was not authorized to accept the students.

The unidentified attorney politely indicated to the principal that the move was a test case, but a G. A. Smalling of the NAACP said there were no plans for such a move at present, although it was believed to be part of a statewide move being launched by the NAACP yesterday in Louisiana.

SCHOOL PROGRAM BILLS PROPOSED

Series of 18 Put Before House at Session

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 12 — A series of 18 bills to finance and plug loopholes in the brand new Negro-white minimum education program outlined in the pre-Christmas special session were proposed Tuesday in the House.

Heading the list of measures were four tax proposals which would produce $17,750,000 in new revenue to finance the school program and also provide a margin of funds for the state treasury.

The tax measures have already been introduced in the current regular session in the Senate.

The Legislature had outlined the new school equalization program in a 55-day special session, but failed to finance it.

Rep. Ney Gore, Quitman county, led a list of about 12 other House members in sponsoring the education measures submitted at Tuesday's session.

One of the measures proposed would heal the controversy created by an enabling act passed at the special session which could require school teachers to work for nine months on eight months pay.

The special session act provided that school districts could pay teachers any amount for the ninth month they desired. Under the program the state guarantees funds for only eight months.

The new proposal would make it mandatory that teachers be paid for the ninth month of work at the same rate they are paid for other months. Gov. Hugh White had recommended correction of the act in his message to the Legislature last week.

Meanwhile Tuesday in the Senate, the first proposals to carry out the economy wave in the Legislature were dropped into the hopper.

Sen. W. B. Lucas, Macon, who heads the 13-member economy committee which is combining the state budget, proposed three measures to cut down on the cost of state government.

His bills were: Repeal the 1952 livestock and poultry loan act which was sponsored by Gov. White; abolish state microfilming division; repeal the $8000 biennial expense fund for the lieutenant governor's office and to dispense with keeping the Senate secretary's office open between sessions of the Legislature.

Gov. White meanwhile Tuesday made no comment on the proposal by Lucas to abolish the livestock loan act, for which $2 million was appropriated at the 1952 session.

Since its enactment loans totaling $225,000 have been made from the fund.

In another measure aimed at economy, Sen. L. B. Porter, Union, joined by Sen. Lucas proposed the abolition of the state marketing commission, which was cut off from funds in the 1952 session of the Legislature.

Rep. Joel Blass, Stone county, who had opposed in the special session the proposed amendment to abolish the public school system in the event the US supreme court ruled out segregation, Tuesday presented in the House the measure he said he believed was "an alternative" if segregation is outlawed.

His measure vests the state with authority under its police powers to prohibit the comingling of races within the public schools of the state, in order to preserve the "personal safety, security and tranquillity of all the citizens of the state of all races."

Blass said that he feared the abolition of segregation in schools "would lead to bloodshed in many counties" if Negroes attempted to enter white schools.

He said that adoption of his measure prior to the ruling of the US supreme court on pending cases attacking the constitutionality of segregation "would not mean we are circumventing any decree of the supreme court."

Blass' bill would make it a misdemeanor for any parent or school official to permit the attendance of any Negro child in any school assigned to white children.

In other major new legislation proposed Tuesday, Rep. John Farese, Benton-Tippah counties, joined by five other lawmakers, proposed a constitutional amendment to permit sheriffs to immediately succeed themselves in office. The present constitutional provision bars sheriffs from succession.

Rep. John Tackett, Monroe county, submitted a measure placing a five-cent limit on telephone calls from hotels and similar establishments.

Another Tackett measure would place a 10 per cent ceiling on the amount of interest and fees which could be charged by small loan brokers. The present limit is 15 per cent.

A proposal changing the due date of local and state ad valorem taxes on motor vehicles from Feb. 1 to Oct. 1, and provide that ad valorem taxes must be paid before a license tag can be issued to the vehicle owner was proposed by four House members, headed by Rep. Blass and Rep. Bennett Smith, Choctaw county.

The Senate finance committee Wednesday will open hearings at 1:30 p. m. on the proposed 2 per cent increase in the state oil and natural gas severance taxes as part of the school finance program, marking the first action of the session on the tax measures.

The Senate resumes work at 10 a. m. Wednesday and the House goes back into session at 2 p. m.

SCHOOL BLAZES BEING CHECKED

Fire Marshal Probing Two Possible Arson Cases

The state fire marshal's office Tuesday launched an investigation into fires which caused extensive damages to two Negro public schools Monday night and early Tuesday.

Deputy state fire marshal E. Jack Hoffstadt described the fires —one at the Booker T. Washington High school, Euphrosine and S. Claiborne, about 1:15 a. m. Tuesday and the other at the John W. Hoffman school, 2939 Third, about 6:45 p. m. Monday —as the work of arsonists.

The fire at the Washington school broke out in three places in two adjoining rooms on the second floor across from the principal's office and in a room on the third floor in which four beds were set ablaze. An estimated $10,000 in damage was caused to the building and contents.

Entrance Forced

Police and fire marshal investigators said entrance was forced to the building and several windows were broken. Bloodstains were found on part of a broken window and investigators expressed the opinion that one of the intruders had cut himself. A part of a brickbat was found in the building.

Samuel S. Lewis Sr., 45, 3138 Calliope, janitor at the school, told police that he and his son, Samuel Jr., left the building at 12:30 a. m. Tuesday after cleaning up. He said all doors and windows were locked.

After inspecting the school, Harold Porter, Orleans parish public school board business manager, said two classrooms were destroyed and two others made unusable.

To Ask More Police

The fire at the Hoffman school caused damage estimated at $3000. One four-classroom building was destroyed, forcing an additional 200 children to attend classes on a platoon basis. The school's 490 students are now attending half days.

Dr. James F. Redmond, public school superintendent, said he would ask the city police department for increased patrolling of schools, which, he said, have been plagued by vandals at least once a week for the past two years.

It was also disclosed by school officials that vandals smashed a plate glass window valued at $99 at the Sophie B. Wright Junior school, 1426 Napoleon, recently for the second time in two weeks.

SCHOOL IS ONE OF TWO BELIEVED ARSONIST'S TARGETS

First In Thirteen Years

New Thomy Lafon School Opens For Classes, Platooning Ended

The new Thomy Lafon school—first new Negro public school in New Orleans in 13 years—opened for classes today (Wednesday), Dr. James F. Redmond, school superintendent, said today.

The 14-classroom building will provide facilities for 643 children.

"Opening of the Lafon school is a great step forward," Dr. Redmond said, "chiefly because it will enable us to provide a full day of schooling for the 643 youngsters who have been on platoon. (Under the platoon system, children attend school only a half day.)

"However, it also points up the need for additional schools because we will still have 6619 children on platoon. We cannot provide the kind of schooling these children need and deserve until we have enough schools to eliminate platooning entirely."

The Lafon School was originally planned to replace the old frame building in the Magnolia Housing Project at 2916 S. Robertson St. However, increases in school attendance made it necessary to continue use of the old school, Dr. Redmond explained.

The new building, constructed for approximately $450,000, was designed by Curtis and Davis, architects. In addition to the 14 classrooms, it contains a library, multi-purpose classroom clinic, combination cafeteria-auditorium, teachers' work room, conference room and administrative suite.

Because the school site was unusually small and additional ground could not be bought, the architects increased the playground area of the school by building the classroom units on a second-floor level. The area underneath serves as a play area, particularly desirable in bad weather, and also eliminates the need for expensive corridors in the building. There is a separate stairway leading to each two classrooms. In addition, there is a wide ramp leading to the kindergarten rooms.

This plan also made it possible to provide cross-ventilation and bilateral lighting in each classroom. Glare-proof and heat-resistant glass has been used at the windows to control the light in each room. As a result, expensive wide overhangs were not needed at the windows.

The classroom units were built of reinforced concrete, the cafeteria-auditorium and other areas have a light steel frame.

All community facilities have been placed on the ground level and can be opened for after-school and holiday activities without opening the classrooms, Dr. Redmond explained. "All of our new schools have been planned for community use," he said. "This building will serve a real need in an area where so few community facilities are available."

The library, cafeteria-auditorium and other public facilities will be used by students in the old, frame Lafon building, which contains 34 classrooms, as well as those in the new building.

O. Perry Walker, first assistant superintendent, explained that 643 children are expected to eat lunch in the new cafeteria. Until now, 400 children have been eating lunch in the makeshift cafeteria in the basement of the old school. The old cafeteria will be converted to classroom use.

Mr. Walker added that the new cafeteria will not open with the rest of the school because all kitchen equipment has not yet been delivered and installed. Until then, the old cafeteria will be used.

Dan S. Martin, director of the Office of Planning and Construction, pointed out that Lafon is one of three new Negro schools which will be opened this year. Others are a replacement of the dilapidated Hoffman School at Third and Roman Sts., and a replacement of the old, frame McDonogh No. 36 School at 2401 Jackson Ave.

Construction of these two schools is nearly completed.

However, increases in school enrollment have been so great that the dilapidated old buildings cannot be completely abandoned, Mr. Martin added. Classrooms will continue to be used in part of the old Hoffman School and in the McDonogh No. 36 building.

The ultra modernistic Thomy Lafon public grade school, 2916 S. Robertson, doors opened for the first time Wednesday morning, at 8 o'clock, to the delight of more than 600 pupils and teachers. The smiling, cheery faces of the pupils was further evidence that they realize the significance and necessitation of the new school. The teachers were pleased because they have laboriously worked countless years under the most unusual handicaps. To the left is the new Lafon built on stilts to provide more play space on the small site. The new structure affords adequate space for the children to romp freely despite the limited space. The other photograph is an interior shot of the 'new look' in classroom styles. The new arrangement is conducive for the very best of teacher-pupil attention. Numerous parents and friends were on hand to observe the opening day ceremonies.

Louisiana School Bars 30 Negroes

By UNITED PRESS

Baton Rouge, La., officials refused Friday to admit 30 Negro children to an all-white school located a block from Negro homes as an apparent southwide drive began to break down public school segregation.

It was the second march in two days by Negroes on a segregated school. Formal petitions also have been filed in Texas, North Carolina and Mississippi for admission of Negro children to all-white schools.

The Supreme Court banned segregation May 17 but announced it would hear arguments this fall on just how the ruling should be implemented.

With the opening of Southern schools this week, however, Negro leaders apparently are seeking immediate obedience to the court ruling.

School authorities told the children at Baton Rouge that "the registration hours are over" as they sought to enroll in the Lemer Wright School, located in a school district where both whites and Negroes live.

Atty. Alex Pitcher, who accompanied the group, said that in the past, "Negro children have had to bypass the school to find equal facilities in other parts of the city."

Pitcher said the orderly attempt to gain admittance served as a "test" case.

A group of Negro school children sought yesterday to enroll in a white school at Montgomery, Ala. They also were turned down.

SCHOOL OF THE WEEK:

Another new plant dedicated in Maryland

WASHINGTON

Another link was forged in the neighboring Maryland educational chain with the recent dedication of the new ultra-modern $250,000 Brooks Rod Elementary School at Seat Pleasant, Md.

With seven teachers and an enrollment of 235 pupils, the new school is headed by Mrs. Grace B. Cabaniss, principal.

The idea of the new Brooks Road consolidated elementary school was a part of the overall planning of the Board of Eucation of Prince George county since 1943. The war years temporarily held up the planning.

Started After War

Immediately after the war, the late G. Gardner Shugart former county superintendent; Dr. Paul D. Cooper former director of school planning; and Doswell E. Brooks, supervisor of schools; continued planning the proposed consolidation of schools.

Planned by 3 Men

The plans for the present building were executed by William S. Schmidt, county superintendent; Thomas S. Gwynn Jr., assistant superintendent; and Doswell E. Brooks, supervisor of schools.

The completed plans for the building were presented to the local Parent-Teacher association by Arthur J. Kelsey, the architect at the request of the association. Construction began in the late summer of 1952. Classes began Sept. 8, 1953.

Mrs. Cabaniss Presides

At the dedication Mrs. Grace B. Cabaniss, principal, was mistress of ceremonies and the Rev. Charles B. Ashton, pastor of Jackson Methodist church, Forestville, Md., gave the invocation.

William Littleton, president of the PTA welcomed the audience; William J. Griffith, member of the board of education, brought greetings from the board; and from the county staff.

William S. Schmidt, county superintendent, presented the building and Vincent Boone, vice-president of the P-TA, accepted on behalf of the parents.

Miss Shirley Young, fifth grade student, accepted for the students: and Mrs. Mary S. Burrell fifth grade teacher, accepted for the faculty.

Dr. Knox Speaker

William W. Hall, assistant supervisor, introduced the guest speaker, Dr. Ellis O. Knox, professor of education, Howard University. Dr. Knox called the Brooks Road School one of the most modern and well-equipped schools in the nation.

Doswell E. Brooks, county supervisor, who was to appear on the program was ill and unable to attend.

Music was rendered by the Glee Club and the Rhythm Band under the direction of Miss Marian R. King, assisted by Mrs. Veryl T. Floyd.

George Robinson, assistant superintendent, and Mrs. Cabaniss introduced other platform guests not on the program, including:

Other Guests

George Crawford, Maryland State Supervisor of Curriculum; Joseph C. Parks, supervisor of schools in Charles County, Md.; Mrs. Louise D. Youill, member of the board of education; Mr. Milestead, associated architect; Mrs. C. L. Pinkney, president of the county-wide PTA.

Other guests were present from Washington, D. C., Baltimore City, New Jersey and New York. Benediction was given by the Rev. Chester C. Ball, pastor of D.C.

After the program the guests toured the building. Each classroom displayed exhibits of work done by the pupils. Student guides explained the exhibits to the visitors. Refreshments were served in the cafeteria.

ANOTHER FIRST — Miss Carrie A. Johnson, mathematics teacher, was recently rewarded for her long years of association with Carver Vocational high school with an appointment as its first vice-principal. She lives at 2011 N. Fulton ave. She joined the faculty in 1927.

Baltimore schools to end segregation

BALTIMORE, June 4—(AP)—Segregation in Baltimore city public schools will end with the start of classes in September, but will continue in the state's 23 counties until the Supreme Court clarifies its historic edit.

praised the Fair management for calling the meeting and reviewing the situation well in advance of Fair time.

Everyone agreed that the 1954 Alabama State Fair will be a "bigger, better and cleaner Fair that will appeal to all the people of Alabama."

The conflicting situation developed yesterday when the Baltimore Board of School Commissioners voted unanimously to open public schools on a non-segregated basis next September.

Just last week, the State Board of Education voted to continue segregation in the public schools throughout Maryland's 23 counties until such time as the Supreme Court rules how its edict ending segregation in the nation's public schools should be carried out.

Baltimore Lifts School Segregation

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7 (AP)—Negro and white children began attending classes together today in public schools in Baltimore, Md., at two Army post schools in Virginia and at several Catholic schools in Virginia.

But Negro pupils who tried to register at a white elementary school in Hutchins, Tex., in a test case were politely refused admission.

There were no reported incidents as public schools in Baltimore, long separated on a racial basis, quietly bowed to the Supreme Court's edict last spring that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

FEW PROTESTS

School officials said only three protests were received from parents. Only about a dozen schools have mixed classes thus far, however, and only two Negro teachers will give instructions to white pupils this fall.

Public schools throughout the rest of Maryland, on advice of State Atty. Gen. Edward D. E. Rollins, are waiting for the Supreme Court to hand down enforcement orders before taking steps to "integrate" Negro and white classes.

Maryland's parochial schools have been taking in Negro children previously, and continued to do so with the opening of the fall term today.

ARMY POST CLASSES

Parochial (Catholic) schools likewise began admitting Negro children in the Catholic diocese of Richmond, Va., and in northern Virginia adjacent to Washington.

Public schools throughout Virginia remained segregated, but elementary schools at Fts. Myer and Belvoir near here opened racially mixed classes under military operation in line with President Eisenhower's anti-segregation policies.

MAKING PLANS FOR INTEGRATION OF COUNTY SCHOOLS—Members of the State Board of Education clockwise around table are J. Jerome Frampton Jr., Dr. Thomas G. Pullen Jr., state superintendent of schools; Wendell D. Allen, president; Mrs. Helen C. Walker, Richard Marcus, Mrs. Garvin Tankersley, Miss Merle S. Bateman, William A. Gunter and Dr. D. O. W. Holmes.

Negro Pupils Are Enrolled In Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Sept. 1 (AP). Negroes have started formally registering for the first time in schools formerly restricted to whites in Baltimore.

The city is the only one in Maryland which will open all its schools to everybody next month. County schools have been advised by the attorney general to wait for the Supreme Court to make final its ruling against segregation.

The court handed down its opinion in April, but a formal decree was delayed. Baltimore's school board announced in June that it would end segregation when the schools reopened September 8.

Last year, there were 51,827 Negro students and 86,206 white in Baltimore's 180 public schools.

Formal registration is being held today and tomorrow. Several hundred Negroes registered for white schools throughout the summer, Dr. John Fischer, superintendent said.

BALTIMORE SCHOOL ENDS RACE BAN

FOR THE FIRT TIME in the history of Baltimore, a white and a Negro student are registered together at a public school as the result of the U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation. Shown at the Clifton Park Junior High School, they are Lillian Hobbs, 13, and Thomas Mason, 13. A teacher helps them to register. (International)

Baltimore Pupils Calm As Schools Mix Races

BALTIMORE, Sept. 7 (AP). About 143,000 Baltimore children quietly began a new era in race relations today as the city opened its schools for the first time to Negro and white children alike.

At least 16 public schools had mixed classes on the first day of school.

Sun 9-8-54

Registration was not tallied according to race so it was not possible to determine the exact number of schools with both white and colored children.

The only school disturbance reported today was over the condition of one of the school buildings. About a third of the school body at School No. 200 remained home in protest.

A huge open cesspool, closed off with a broken fence, was one of the main issues at the primary school. Parents claim it was dangerous and pointed also to a number of eroded gullies about 2 feet deep on the property.

The school was formerly a Negro school, but is now primarily white.

Elementary schools with mixed enrollments were mainly located in neighborhoods composed of both races.

There was proportionately more integration on the secondary school level and it appeared all but one or two of the city's high schools would have Negro students.

Some had only a few. At Eastern High, where the enrollment is about 2000, there were only seven Negro students today.

At Baltimore Polytechnic High School, Negro students were no novelty. They were admitted last year to accelerated courses because there was nothing equal to it in any of the Negro schools.

In the counties, segregation continued. The difference in policy between Baltimore and the counties stems from differing interpretations of the United States Supreme Court ruling banning race segregation in public schools.

Baltimore City Solicitor Thomas N. Biddison viewed the ruling as rendering the city ordinances providing for segregation as unconstitutional. Acting on Biddison's interpretation, the Board of School Commissioners ended segregation.

Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins had another interpretation for the state. He said segregation was still in effect under state law until the Supreme Court implents its decision, an action expected after methods of carrying out the ruling are discussed before the Supreme Court in October.

However, parochial schools were taking in Negro students.

47 Baltimore schools mixed; D. C. to follow

All over the nation, last week, the impetus of the U.S. Supreme Court's unanimous ruling of May 17 on the five school cases that racial segregation is unconstitutional has led to the breakdown or imminent collapse of the dual public school systems.

Most of the border states, following the lead of Washington, the nation's capital, and Baltimore have bowed to the inevitable conclusion that waiting for the Supreme Court's decree on the manner in which to implement its decision is a waste of time in attaining full integration and have begun, this semester, to build one school system comprising children, teachers and staff members regardless of race.

Only in the Deep South and in scattered communities elsewhere where hot beds of racism smoulder ingloriously is there found real defiance of the high court's mandate.

EVEN A CONFERENCE of school officials from 11 southern states, assembled in Atlanta, Ga., had to assent to the prediction of a Tennessee lawyer that segregation in the nation is to be brought to an end. He was Cecil Sims, attorney for the Nashville (Tenn.) Board of Education.

Going into the fall term, here is a roundup of how various cities and states have reacted to the court's ruling:

Baltimore, Md.

Approximately 1,200 classes in Baltimore schools were integrated as the first week of the fall term neared an end on Thursday.

At week's end there were 47 schools scattered throughout the city having mixed enrolment. The majority of the new pupils have registered in elementary schools.

Official figures showing the total enrollment and the break down of colored and white students, and the complete list of integrated schools will be presented at the Sept. 16 meeting of the School Board.

At present it is known that there are at least 143,690 pupils enrolled this fall, which is a record school registration for the city.

THE HISTORICAL ending of school segregation, here, came about as results of the June 3 ruling of the School Board. Its action was in line with the Supreme Court's May 17th decision which outlawed separation of races in public education.

This integration marks the first time in Baltimore that pupils have been able to attend schools nearest their homes. In previous years, youngsters had been forced to travel 12 and 13 blocks, crossing busy thorofares to get to school.

Also benefitting from integration are the 20 kindergarten children enrolled at Arlington School No. 131, Rogers and Magnolia Ave.

Under a segregated setup, they would not have been able to attend school because the previous all-colored Braxton School No. 157 has no kindergarten facilities.

SCHOOL OFFICIALS have noted that teachers, parents and pupils have readily adjusted to the new situation with no problem.

At the Junior High School No. 72, Hanover and Lee Sts., where two colored mathematics teachers were assigned, the all-white student body had little concern for their color.

The new teachers are Mrs. Enolia P. McMillan, a former teacher at Booker T. Washington Junior High tnd Miss Ruth Green, a former teacher at Dunbar High School.

— o O o —

THE SCHOOL reported to have the largest enrollment of new pupils is the Oliver Cromwell School No. 74, 22nd St. and Homewood Aves., where approximately 275 colored pupils registered this week.

Other schools where the enrollment of new pupils has been heavy include:

Columbus School No. 99, North Ave. and Washington St., 110; Sidney Lanier School No. 14, Linden Ave. and Wilson St., 60; Margaret Brent School, 26th St. and St. Paul St., 32; Elementary School No. 60, Gwynns Falls Pkwy. and Warwick Ave., 95, and Sir Robert Eden School No. 20, Edenand Federal, 125.

— o O o —

THIS SCHOOL term also marks the end of separate office facilities for colored school supervisors.

All have been housed together at 3 E. 25th St., for the past three months.

The former headquarters of colored school officials at Madison Ave. near Lafayette Ave., behind Booker T. Washington Junior High, have been converted into classrooms, thus eliminating part-time classes at the main building.

Mixed registration of about 12,000 new pupils in Washington's grade schools and kindergartens was being completed yesterday afternoon in the city's first major step toward a desegregated school system.

The registration proceeded smoothly and normally, school officials reported. Youngsters enrolled were assigned without regard to race in accordance with the new school boundaries which will prevail throughout the whole system.

A total of 106,000 pupils are expected to attend opening classes in public schools Monday.

Meanwhile half day classes were held Thursday at Catholic schools in the city, many of which are integrated.

Catholic officials stated that final statistics would not be available until Oct. 3, but it was estimated that about 37,000 pupils would be enrolled, an increase of about 2,000 over last year. No figures were available on the number of colored pupils.

Half day classes will continue today (Friday) in the Catholic schools with full time sessions starting Monday.

"It's been wonderful. We haven't met a disgruntled person in the entire registration," Mrs. Bessie H. Lacy, principal of Petworth School, said Wednesday in describing the first desegregated enrollment at her building.

Mrs. Lacy said from 90 to 100 pupils had been registered, but she had no idea of the racial identity of the children.

The school, located at 8th and Shepherd Sts., NW, is one of several elementary schools which will have mixed pupil populations this year for the first time. Registration ended Thursday and regular classes start Monday.

— o O o —

A MAJORITY of the children observed entering the District system for the first time at Petworth were colored, with one 16 year-old girl registering her five brothers and sisters.

The five members of this family, who will attend grades one through six, according to Miss Dorothy Cohen, clerk, are Meridith, 8, Gertha, 12, Reginald, 9, Cora, 6, and Rhoda Woolfolk, 10,

ANOTHER YOUNGSTER who was being brought to the school for the first time by his parents was 4½-year-old Harrison J. White II, of 4200 Third St. NW.

Mr. White said he and his wife and family had just returned from Atlantic City and were rushing to enroll their child before going back to work the next day.

WHEN TOLD THE former controversial Petworth School would probably be a fully integrated school this year, Mr. White said, "That's progress isn't it?"

One colored teacher, Mrs. Emily Cornish, formerly of the John F. Cook school was observed in the Petworth building straightening her second grade class - room.

"I think there will be four or five of us here this year," Mrs. Cornish said. But, Mrs. Lacy refused to give any information on her teachers' racial identity, saying, "all I know is their names."

Two white parents assisted the principal and her clerk in the registration, but said they only represented the afternoon shift.

"Everything was fine — just as it should be" one of the volunteers said. Mrs. Lacy said she did not think it was necessary forthem to give their names.

Richmond, Va.

Color bars fell in three Roman Catholic High Schools here Tuesday when 11 colored pupils enrolled in what had formerly been lily-white classes.

The Catholic high schools here were ordered integrated by Bishop Peter L. Ireton a few weeks before the May 17 ruling outlawing public school segregation.

Bishop Ireton said that graduates of Richmond's parochial elementary school—Van de Vyver — were entitled to enroll in Catholic high schools since no colored Catholic high school exists here.

As Richmond had its first taste of integrated schools, two boys were enrolled at Benedictine High School, three girls at St. Patricks High and four girls and two boys at Cathedral High School.

White and colored youngsters also attended classes together Tuesday in two military schools (Fort Belvoir and Fort Meyer) and three Catholic parochia schools in northern Virginia, near Washington.

— o O o —

ALTHOUGH NOT classed as public schools, Catholic schools in Virginia and most other southern areas have followed the traditional pattern of separate facilities for the races.

One of the Fort Meyer pupils, Brenda Hines, 8, had attended both segregated and integrated schools in the past.

Breda, daughter of M/Sgt. George and Mrs. Hines first attended an integrated school for U.S. Army personnel in Germany.

Last year she was segregated in a Fairfax County School. Tuesday, she entered the third grade at the recently integrated Fort Meyer Elementary School.

— o O o —

MEANWHILE, PUBLIC schools in Virginia opened this week on a segregated basis. An estimated 36,000 pupils returned on Wednesday.

The State plans to continue racial segregation in public schools until a final decree is issued by the U. S. Supreme Court.

In the meantime, a 32-man legislative commission appointed by Governor Stanley last week is studying the school integration issue. The NAACP plans to go ahead with its program of petitioning local school boards to integrate schools, Oliver W. Hill, attorney disclosed.

THIS POLICY was established at a meeting early this year in Atlanta. Mr. Hill said a number of school boards will be petitioned in the fall months.

Integration of the races in public schools is getting underway in West Virginia, Maryland, Missouri, Kansas, New Mexico, Arkansas and the District of Columbia. No unpleasant incidents have been reported.

Charleston, W. Va.

Public school integration continues to be affected in this state without incident, as some 41 colored pupils reported for classes in white schools in Brooke county as the new term opened.

Colored children were already mingling with white ones in other schools which opened earlier. However, it was reported that some counties will continue to maintain segregated schools this term.

Parents are picketing unsegregated school in two West Virginia counties, however.

Little Rock, Ark.

Ed McCuistion, state director of colored education, last week offered the opinion that "desegregation will test how grand is the human spirit" and went on to say that integration depends to a large extent on the ability of colored and whites to work together in solving it.

Stating that Arkansas has a "running start" over the rest of the segregated areas, McCuistion, explained to representatives of the Christian Science Monitor how local cooperation had been attained between white and colored people in efforts to building a dual school system.

But he later showed them figures which listed expenditures on colored and white education under the segregated pattern.

— o O o —

AMONG OTHER things the figures revealed that during 1952-53 school year, there were 324,475 white children and young people in the state between ages of 6 and 21, compared to 109,342 colored ones in the same age brackets.

There were 1,450 white schools and 634 colored schools. There were also 816 white schools in districts having no colored schools.

There were 11,164 white teachers with an average salary of $2,064 a year, compared to 2,858 colored teachers, with salary averages of $1,669.

Out of an operating budget of $49,574,207, whites received $40,822,732 and colored ones $8,751,475. Of school property valued at $139,891,306, white property was valued at $122,442,547, and colored, at $17,448,759.

DECLARING THAT more money is needed throughout the state, McCuistion estimated that $21,000,000 is needed to provide colored children and teachers with facilities equal to whites.

McCuistion also said the greatest impact on integration will be in the elementary grades. For the 1952-53 school year, he said out of 100,322 colored pupils enrolled in school, only 14,052 were above the eighth grade.

Meanwhile high white officials have taken a concilliatory attitude toward the ban on segregation.

Gov. Francis Cherry has said the state will abide with the high court's ruling when it knows what it is. On the other hand, House Speaker Carroll Hollensworth summed it up:

"We've got to live with it. We might as well do what we have to do with as little fuss and as much thought as possible."

Public school segregation in Arkansas is only statutory and not required by the constitution.

Chester, Pa.

CHESTER—The local branch of the NAACP has requested the Chester Board of Education to completely integrate the public school system, with the beginning of the current term on Thursday, Sept. 9.

The request was contained in a letter to A. H. Showalter, superintendent of schools.

The NAACP congratulated the board for voting, Aug. 23, to integrate the school system.

— o O o —

IT WAS pointed out, however, that the board failed to adopt a program by which integration would be implemented.

The NAACP's letter further pointed out that the proposals previously made by Mr. Showalter are unacceptable to the parents and the NAACP's executive board.

— o O o —

THE FOLLOWING recommendations were made to the board of education:

1. All children be directed to attend schools within the districts where they reside.

Transfers should be restricted to children who change residence.

2. Retarded children be assigned to the Graham and Hoskins Schools, irrespective of race.

All children residing south of Seventh St., to the river, be assigned to the Hoskins School. All north of this line be assigned to the Graham School.

3. A master roster of all school personnel be prepared, according to professional qualifications training and seniority.

Assignments be made from this roster, irrespective of race. Also, that professional personnel be qualified and assigned to schools as teachers, principals and technical personnel.

— o O o —

4. HIGH SCHOOL pupils now attending Dewey-Mann School be assigned to Douglass Junior High School.

Upon completion of the new Central Junior High School, boundaries for the three schools be established following a public hearing.

Children now attending Douglass, from Chester Township, be transferred to the Franklin School.

5. Plans to transfer the second grade from Washington Elementary to Lomokin Village Center be discontinued.

The board establish a cafeteria, auditorium and gymnasium for the Washington School.

The NAACP's letter was over the signatures of George Raymond, president; Rufus S. Watson, counsel, and Elaine Hackett, board member.

Englewood, N.J.

ENGLEWOOD, N.J.—The Division Against Discrimination has called a public hearing in Trenton on Sept. 28 on the refusal of the local Board of Education to desegregate its schools in compliance with the Supreme Court's historic ruling.

The scheduled hearing climaxes years of fruitless efforts by the Bergen County NAACP Branch and numerous racial and interracial organizations to get the Board to end segregation at the Lincoln School and to integrate its teaching staff.

The NAACP of Bergen County and the parents involved will be represented at the hearing by Mrs. Constance Motley of the national office, and Leonard Williams of Trenton, a member of the legal redress committee of the State Conference of NAACP Branches.

THE MAJOR ISSUES involved in the fight to bring about complete integration at the pupil and teacher levels, were discussed at an overflow public meeting at Galilee Meohodist Church last Thursday night.

The principal speaker, Mrs. Motley, interpreted the Supreme Court's desegregation decision as it related to the local school system.

She was introduced by the host pastor, the Rev. Walter S. Taylor, who is also the militant president of the Bergen County NAACP Branch.

THE RALLY was called by the NAACP to protest the adoption by the Board of Education last June 28 of new school zone lines, effective Sept. 1, that would continue Lincoln as a segregated school.

Other Communities

A former all-white high school in Fayetteville, Ark., admitted five colored girls yesterday—the first high school in the Confederate South to break the color line.

But in Louisiana and Mississippi steps were taken to continue non-compliance with the United States Supreme Court decision against public school segregation.

Fayetteville School Superintendent Wayne White said the school board's decision to integrate the high school received almost unanimous approval from school patrons.

The five colored girls already registered are sophomores. When juniors and seniors register Monday at least three other colored pupils are expected.

IN HAMMOND, La., the Southeastern Louisiana College turned away twelve colored persons who attempted to register for the fall term. President Luther Dyson cited Louisiana's segregation laws, which have not yet been subjected to surveillance by the courts.

Dean J. B. Wooley said" of course, we had to turn them down."

Southeastern Louisiana is one of eight colleges under supervision of the State Board of Education. Colored people have already attempted to register at Southwestern Louisiana Institute at Lafayette and McNeese College at Lake Charles. Southwestern was ordered to admit our colored applicants this fall by a three-man Federal court. The court ruled that there are "no equal accommodations for white and colored races" in the vicinity of Lafayette.

IN JACKSON, the Mississippi House of Representatives by a vote of 105-14 passed a bill empowering the Legislature to abolish public schools as a last resort in the State's fight to maintain segregation.

The measure will be considered in the Senate next, where it is practically assured of approval. Thirty-three senators, more than the necessary two thirds, signed the bill as co-authors.

IN MONTGOMERY, ALA., School Superintendent C. M. Dannelly canceled a meeting with parents of colored children. He had scheduled the meeting for Thursday, but said he canceled it after he learned that newspaper men had found out about it.

"It was a friendly gesture to understand everything," Dannelly said. "Publicity would have defeated the purpose of the meeting."

Atlanta, Ga.

Georgia's new Governor-designate, a protege of Governor Herman Talmadge, declared Thursday that he will campaign for passage of the Talmadge-sponsored "private school" amendment, similar to Mississippi's measure.

Lieutenant - Governor Marvin Griffin, nominated Wednesday in a landslide, said he will plug for passage of the amendment as "insurance" to "private" schools if necessary to help preserve school segregation to maintain segregation. Behind the plan is a proposal to convert public schools

Oklahomans Visit School In Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Oct. 26 (AP).—A dozen Oklahoma High School students and their principal arrived Monday for a week's visit at Baltimore's Southern High School.

Principal Harry West of Oklahoma City's John Marshall Junior-Senior High said the visit is aimed at helping students better understand other communities.

Last week Southern High sent 10 students to the Oklahoma school.

West and John H. Schwatka, Southern's principal, met at a school administrator's meeting in 1953 and the student exchange is a result.

The Oklahoma students will tour historical sites in the ara in addition to attending classes.

State Sends 15 Negroes To Rosewood

CROWNSVILLE, Md., Dec. 27 (AP).—The State today moved 15 Negro children from the mental hospital here to the Rosewood Training School, a transfer first proposed two years ago.

Dr. Clifton T. Perkins, commissioner of mental hygiene, said the 15 children from 2 to 6 years old comprise a test group. A study of their integration will determine how many more will be transferred.

Dr. Arnold Eichert, superintendent at Crownsville, said hospital vehicles transported the 15 with a nurse and attendants. He said they had been picked because of physical defects in addition to mental which could be treated better at Rosewood than Crownsville.

The transfer first was proposed by Dr. Perkins and approved by the General Assembly to relieve crowding at the Anne Arundel institution.

Parents of white patients at Rosewood in Owings Mills, Baltimore County, objected and sought a court injunction.

Dr. Perkins was under the impression this pending court action prevented the transfer and made no move to go through with it.

Recently, however, Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin personally inspected Crownsville after conditions were criticized by an Anne Arundel grand jury. On the advice of W. Giles Parker, assistant attorney general, the Governor directed Perkins to go ahead with the transfers.

Parker advised that since the injunction has not been granted there is no legal block to it.

The state was given 30 days after December 9 to give reasons why Circuit Judge J. Howard Murray should not grant the injunction by default. The judge also asked the state to show cause why it shouldn't bring up to date answers to a list of questions raised by the Rosewood parents on February 10, 1953.

Mixed classes in 52 schools, board reports

BALTIMORE

Fifty-two schools now have mixed enrollment and four formerly all-white schools now have colored teachers.

Official figures were released on Thursday by the Board of School Commissioners.

A total of 1,575 colored pupils are now enrolled in formerly all-white schools, with the largest number concentrated in the elementary grades.

The figures also revealed that one colored pupil has been admitted to the Montob School, No. 44, the elementary demonstration school at Hartford Rd. and 32nd St., and the heaviest concentration of colored pupils is at the Oliver Cromwell School, No. 74, 22nd and Homewood, where 321 are enrolled.

The new teachers are Mrs. Enolia P. McMillan, a former teacher at Booker T. Washington Junior High, and Miss Ruth Green, a former teacher at Dunbar. Both are teaching mathematics at Junior High School No. 72, Hanover and Lee Sts.

At the Joseph Lockerman School, No. 100, Mount and Saratoga Sts., a white student is enrolled, and there are three at School No. 109, Broadway and Ashland Ave., and two at School No. 139, Central Ave near Lexington.

Mrs. Maude Johnson has been transferred from the home economics staff of the Douglass High School to that of the Garrison High School.

Miss Lela Cox has been appointed to teach home economics at Southern High School and Marcel W. Couze of Washington to teach French at the Benjamin Franklin Junior High School, No. 239, Cambria and 12th Sts., Curtis Bay.

These are the latest official figures on the number of colored students now attending integrated schools.

FIRST DAY—This was an often repeated scene in Baltimore on Tuesday as public schools opened on an integrated basis for the first time. This group is entering Oliver Cromwell School No. 74 at 22nd St. and Homewood Ave., which formerly had only white pupils.

BRIEF RIOT FLARES IN BALTIMORE

BY EDWARD FREEMAN

BALTIMORE — More than 400 white students rioted at a Baltimore High School, attacking two Negro boys and attempting to upset a police cruiser.

The disturbance resulted when several police and a white minister attempted to escort three Negro boys and one Negro girl from the Southern High School.

White students, who have been picketing in protest against an end to segregation in Baltimore public schools, attacked two of the Negro youths, beating them over the head, slapping them, and hurling curses at the quartet.

The police finally rescued the two boys and arrested one white student. They drove away to a police station with the three in a ponce car, but not before the milling white students almost overturned the vehicle.

At last reports, the other two Negro students had not been molested. It was not known whether there were any injuries.

Appeal Two Cases Challenging Maryland Segregation Policies

RICHMOND, Va. — Two cases questioning the validity of Maryland's segregation policy were filed here last week with the U. S. Court of Appeals by NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund lawyers on behalf of Negroes who had been denied the use of recreational facilities in Baltimore.

The cases are the results of lower courts' decisions which upheld a Jim Crow policy in the segregation of Negroes at two public beaches and sought injunctions restraining the operators from segregating users of the beaches because of race.

One of the Dawson case, brought against the City of Baltimore and the corporation operating the city-owned public beach at Fort Smallwood Park, in 1950. Robert Dawson and other Negroes were denied the use of the beach and facilities solely because of their race. No such facilities were available to Negroes in Baltimore. On March 2, 1951, the court ordered the operator of the beach to cease its discrimination against Negroes, but certain days were set aside by the operators for the beach to be used by each racial group.

However, in 1952, the construction of a segregated beach for Negroes was authorized. The Negroes petitioned the court to order Fort Smallwood Park be open to all persons without regard to race or color. While the defendants, which included the Mayor and City Director of the Department of Recreation and Parks, the Board of Recreation and Parks, and the corporation which operated the facilities, acknowledged the demand, the beach was completed and has been operated as a Jim Crow set up since.

Negroes have been refused admittance to the other beach since the completion of the one set aside for the exclusive use of Negroes. The operator claimed that segregation was consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment which called for the equality of physical facilities.

On May 27, 1954, 10 days after the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the School Segregation Cases, a motion for judgment was filed based on the fact that segregation is a violation of the Federal Constitution. On July 27 the court denied the motion on the ground that the May 17th decision did not outlaw segregation in recreational facilities, and on Aug. 25, entered final judgment and dismissed the complaint with costs.

The other suit is the Lonesome case which sought an injunction against the State Commissioners of Forrests and Parks and the Superintendent of Sandy Point State Park and Beach on the ground that the maintenance of segregated beaches and bathing facilities constitute a violation of the Federal Constitution.

All facilities in the Sandy Point State Park and Beach, a public recreation center owned and operated by the state, are open to all persons on a non-discriminatory basis except the beach and bathing facilities. The state operates the South Beach for the exclusive use of white persons and the East Beach for Negroes.

On July 4, 1952, Milton Lonesome and several Negroes sought admission to the South Beach but were personally escorted to the East Beach by employees of the beach. They refused to use the Jim Crow beach on the ground that the facilities did not and would not "afford complete and wholesome recreation."

Baltimore Schools Integrated

HISTORIC DAY A little bit of history is being written here as for the first time Negro and white students are registered together in Baltimore public school — Clifton Park Junior High—as a result of the momentous ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court outlawing segregation in public schools.

THE MORNING AFTER—This is how the interior of the former elementary school on the Governor Ritchie Highway, near Furnace Branch Rd., looked on Monday after it had been gutted by a fire. Blaze was reported at 4 a.m. Sunday. Firemen believe the fire was set deliberately. Building was discontinued as a school in June and 60 pupils transferred to a consolidated school at Pumphrey, Md.

Probe continues in school blaze

Arson suspected in county fire

BALTIMORE

An investigation into a fire that gutted a former colored school on the Governor Ritchie Highway, near Furnace Branch Rd., was still in progress last week end with no indication of when or if an arrest will be made.

A preliminary probe disclosed that the two-room frame building had been deliberately set on fire early Sunday morning. The full scale investigation is being handled by Capt. Wilbur Wade of the Anne Arundel County police.

—o O o—

SEVERAL RESIDENTS of the area, which is close to Glen Burnie, have linked the fire to the recent series of meetings held at the nearby Ritchie Raceway by Bryant Bowles, leader of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

The building was abandoned as a school last June when the pupils were moved to the consolidated school at Pumphrey. The building was sold for $300 to the adjacent John Wesley ME Church, which intended to use the structure for a recreation center.

McKeldin Praises Justice Plan to End School Segregation

By the Associated Press

BALTIMORE, Nov. 25.—The Justice Department's plan for desegregation of public schools is a "serious and thoughtful effort to assist in arriving at a rational solution," Gov. McKeldin said last night.

The department proposed to the Supreme Court that local school authorities be directed to desegregate the schools under supervision of the lower Federal courts.

"I have confidence," Gov. McKeldin said, "that the Supreme Court will deal with this question with wisdom and statesmanship.

"I am equally confident that the disposition of all responsible people of both races will be to act with moderation and in obedience to the court's decree, whatever that may be."

Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins declined comment on the Justice Department proposal. He said he would have to study the entire brief before expressing his reactions.

Md. For Gradual De-Segregation Of The Schools

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—The Attorney General of Maryland Monday urged the United States Supreme Court to so frame its final decree in the school segregation cases as to leave the determination of how and when its decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools at the lowest possible level, administratively, if possible, and judicially if necessary.

In a brief filed as a friend of the court, Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins of Maryland proposed:

1. That the court should not attempt to engage in the administration of any public school system. That as soon as it decrees 'an effective, 'gradual adjustment,'' the timetable and the methods to be used become a matter of school admisistration.

2. The courts should intervene only when it is shown that school administrators on the local level have failed to exercise good faith and reasonalbe diligence.

3. That the lower courts, upon remand of the cases, be guided by the following principles:

Segregation is Maryland issue

BALTIMORE

When the Baltimore School Board, backed by the police commissioner and the courts stamped out attempts to revive public school segregation, a squawking minority thrust the issue into the current Maryland gubernatorial campaign.

Facing each other in a fight that grows more bitter as election day approaches are H. C. (Curly) Byrd, former president of the University of Maryland, Democrat, and Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin, former Baltimore mayor, Republican.

Strangely enough, it was Byrd, the ex-college president, who has injected the race issue in Maryland politics for the first time since the mid-1930's.

Speaking in the more backward counties along the Eastern Shore, he has told his hearers that, if elected, he would leave the question of school segregation up to the local authorities.

Byrd forces have also printed 250,000 poison pen leaflets, seeking to attack Governor McKeldin because he was the first governor to appoint colored citizens to the positions of assistant state's attorney general, police magistrate and as members of the state health and education boards.

The last time such tactics were used in the Free State was in 1935 when the Democrats filled the mails with scurrilous race literature in a successful effort to beat former Gov. Harry Nice.

Governor McKeldin, queried on the segregation issue, has bluntly replied, "I represent the law."

The governor pleaded with Byrd not to distribute the racial pamphlets. He was joined in this appeal by Philip Perlman, former U.S. solicitor-general, who is one of Byrd's chief advisors.

Thus far, Byrd has refused to comment.

The general feeling is that Byrd will not get away with it this year. Political observers have pointed out that gubernatorial candidates who raised the segregation issue in both Tennessee and North Carolina this year were soundly beaten.

In a puzzling move, Dr. Byrd, after telling voters in rural areas that he favored segregation, came back to Baltimore Sunday night of last week and talked 31 colored Democrat leaders into continuing support of his candidacy.

The secret conference, which lasted for two and one-half hours, was held in the York Hotel.

Byrd told his colored hearers that he made anti-colored speeches in the rural counties purely as a matter of expediency, explaining that what he said on the Eastern Shore should not be taken seriously.

He reiterated a previous pledge that, if elected, he would be the best governor the colored people of Maryland ever had.

Further he solemnly promised that he would name two colored Democrats as police magistrates; he would place one of them a number on the traffic court bench; and he would completely abolish the color line in the matter of civil service appointments to State jobs.

At the same time Byrd was making speeches urging the public to look with favor upon retaining segregated schools, the Baltimore Sun has been carrying a series of articles on race prejudice.

The best one was by Walter Reuther, president of the CIO, who told how his unions have accepted colored memsute oiwrtbh cepted colored members without discrimination.

In some locals, the majority of whose members are white, have elected colored officers to the top posts, he said.

Asserting that employment discrimination is practiced chiefly at the hiring gate, Mr. Reuther pointed to the urgent need for a Federal FEPC law.

Taking issue with those who say education alone will do the job, Mr. Reuther said:

"We believe the answer must be legislation. I'm for education, but you've got to have legislation, too.

"On holiday weekends, there are big safety campaigns in the papers and on the radio. This is education.

"But no one would remotely suggest that's all we need for highway safety. If education hasn't done the job and you go through a red light or do 90 miles an hour, you get a ticket.

"That ticket does more to accelerate the education process than all the radio talks.

"Without laws, traffic would be chaos. If you apply that to highway safety, why not apply it to a much more fundamental human relation?" he asks.

Integration In Md. Seen Issue In County

School Supt. William S. Schmidt told a meeting of the Prince Georges County Board of Education in Hyattsville last night that any discussion of integration must await Supreme Court amplification of its earlier order this fall.

"We have two radical extremes in Maryland," said Superintendent Schmidt, who is also chairman of the State committee of school superintendents studying integration in Maryland.

"Garrett County has no Negro students, while Calvert has more Negroes than whites," he said.

The Reverend Joseph E. Haskins of the Queens Chapel Methodist Church, chairman of a committee representing 10 organizations composed of 1200 people, appeared before the board to ask what action had been taken toward integration.

"Each county will have to work out its own problem," Schmidt said, "and our first concern must be the children, Negro and white, who will be attending the same schools for the first time."

The board approved a bid of $261,510 by the Segreti Construction Co. of Washington for building an elementary school at Shadyside ave. at Bradbury Park to relieve congestion at the Bradbury Park elementary school. It is expected the new school will be completed by spring of 1955.

Integation pattern widening in nation

BALTIMORE

Catholic parochial schools in Baltimore, heeding the admonition of the U. S. Supreme Court that school segregation is unconstitutional, like this city's public schools, and schools throughout the border states of the nation, opened their doors to all pupils, regardless of their color.

The Rev. Leo J. McCormick, superintendent of schools, declined on Wednesday to comment on the new policy as he has repeatedly refused to do before.

However, last May when the Supreme Court decision opened public schools to all, Father McCormick was quoted as saying that the Catholic schools would follow suit.

One of the schools open to all is St. Cecelia's at 3333 Windsor Ave., which has six colored pupils.

This school was in the news last month because a parent who sought to enroll his daughter there was told, "This is a white school. We have never had in most of the states where the dual system had been in effect prior to the May 17 unamimous decision of the Supreme Court great progress toward integration has been made, despite the fact that the court has not spelled out exactly the manner in which desegregation was to be accomplished.

A roundup of the action being taken at the opening of the fall term in the various communities follows:

Associated Press

A Baltimore kindergarten opens on an inter-racial basis. Baltimore chose to end segregation now rather than await a second Supreme Court ruling. Washington did likewise. Georgia and Mississippi laid plans to amend their constitutions so as to permit abolition of the public school systems rather than accept desegregation; state or local funds would go to private schools.

12 States Defy School Order, Adopt Wait-See Policy Five Others Comply

Within the next few weeks the opening of school will test the strength of the Supreme court decision that wiped out the legality of segregated public schools on May 17.

Some schools, however, have already opened and have made no effort to bar Negro students from entering. Other white schools have still closed the door in their faces.

There is trouble expected in some Dixie states when Negroes attempt to enter whie schools, but in other states, especially along the borderlines of the South, school boards have already bowed to the power of the Supreme Court.

While Southerners in the Deep South are sulkily marking time, waiting for the Supreme Court's next move, five border states and the District of Columbia will admit Negro and white students to the same classrooms at the very opening of school. These states are Arkansas, West Virginia, Delaware, Maryland and Missouri.

Schools in the remaining 12 states effected by the non-segregation ruling are waiting for the Supreme Court to outline how and by when they must desegregate their schools. Those 12 are Kentucky, Tennessee, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Texas.

School desegregation at first will be spotty. There is no clear pattern of desegregation actions. Some districts will take the plunge this fall, others will hold off for another year or more. Some school districts like those of Kansas City and Columbia, Mo., and Wilmington, Del., became integrated this summer.

Of the five states ready to integrate Negro and white students, Missouri is somewhat ahead of the rest. In St. Louis, for example, its two teachers' colleges (Harris and Stowe) and all handicapped childrens' schools will be integrated this month. No later than January all high schools will be integrated and by September 1955, so will its elementary schools.

And St. Louis has, for the time being, the second largest segregated school system in the country. Baltimore ranks first.

Both New Mexico and Arizona, which have laws permitting segregation, have taken steps to integrate existing white and Negro schools. In Hobbs, N. M., for example, white and Negro students went to the same schools in harmony on Aug. 30, despite predictions of expected violence. There are approximately 400 Negro children in Hobbs.

In Montgomery, Ala., however, a group of 23 Negro children last week sought unsuccessfully to enroll in an all-white elementary school. Leading the Negro pupils into the school was Aubrey Williams, jr., white son of the publisher of a Montgomery farm newspaper.

In Jackson, Miss., Gov. Hugh White disclosed a plank in his platform to keep racial segregation in Mississippi schools. White said last week he would ask the special session of the legislature, which opened Tuesday, to consider a bill forbidding anyone from stirring up race trouble by filing law suits.

Tennessee has under consideration a 12-year plan that calls for gradual desegregation of public schools.

The anti-segregation ruling by the Supreme Court has caused no change in formula for the state of South Carolina. For the term just beginning the schools will operate on the same basis as before.

The district in Clarendon County, S. C., from which the high court's primary case arose, has been advised to close down for the remainder of the term should the court specifically order that segregation in the district be abolished.

None of the 17 Southern states are, at this time, however, compelled to integrate their schools. They have the alternative of waiting for further orders from the Supreme Court this fall before taking any steps towards desegregation.

End of dual schools asked in Mich. city

NAACP urges state officials to act in Grand Rapids

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — An appeal seeking to prevent the Grand Rapids Board of Education from continuing its practice of maintaining segregation in public schools and the discriminatory practices in the assignments of teachers was filed last week.

The NAACP Legal Defense attorneys filed the appeal with the Michigan State Department of Public Instruction in behalf of colored children, their parents and the Grand Rapids branch NAACP.

It followed the refusal of the Grand Rapids Board of Education and the superintendent of schools to act on a petition filed by the parents and the NAACP branch.

Integration Asked

The petition requested the school board to adopt a citizens' recommended plan which would integrate the predominantly colored schools.

Legal Defense attorneys ask the State Department of Instruction to direct the local school board to correct the school zone lines so that more white children would attend the now predominantly colored schools, and throughout the public school system.

The committee which made the recommendation to eliminate the city's present segregation and discriminatory practices in the schools was composed of leading colored and white citizens. It was appointed at the suggestion of the superintendent of schools.

System Harmful

In its report to the Board of Education, the committee concluded that segregation is harmful to colored children.

NAACP Legal Defense attorneys for the children are Thurgood Marshall and Constance Baker Motley, both of New York, and Alphonse Lewis Jr. and Kloyd H. Skinner of Grand Rapids.

In public schools—

Mississippi to vote Tuesday on way to keep segregation

BY SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18—(AP)—A battle which stoked the fire of racial prejudice ends Tuesday when Mississippians decide whether to give their Legislature standby power to abolish public schools.

"Is segregation worth the danger of destruction of the public school system?" is the question asked by sponsors of the constitutional amendment facing a vote of the people.

"Yes" is the answer of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, which wrote the amendment designed to keep segregated schools despite the U. S. Supreme Court decision declaring segregated schools unconstitutional.

"You and I know it is impossible to mix the races together in the public schools of the state," Gov Hugh White declared Thursday night in a state radio broadcast.

"You and I know this situation must never come about."

The LEAC contends the loss of public schools won't be too high a price for segregated schools, if it costs that much.

AT THE SAME time, the LEAC argues the price probably won't be necessary and the amendment would be used only as a "last resort."

The opposition replies that the price absolutely isn't necessary; that segregation can be maintained without endangering public schools.

And why provide the "last resort" when other weapons are lying idle and ready for use? opponents ask.

The amendment is similar to those adopted by South Carolina and Georgia.

The purpose is to "legally" dodge the Supreme Court decision.

The voting turn-out for Tuesday's special election is uncertain.

The amendment needs only a majority votes to pass.

MISSISSIPPI'S VERSION provides:

1. The state may (instead of the mandatory "shall") provide, support and maintain public schools statewide.

2. The Legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish schools statewide.

3. The Legislature could, by a majority vote, set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.

4. Public school buildings and facilities could be rented, leased or sold to private corporations or individuals.

5. The state could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

SPONSORS CONTEND the first provision is necessary to keep public schools, since sections of Mississippi's constitution providing for segregated schools will fall as soon as they come under attack in federal court. It would authorize the state to keep public schools without mentioning segregation.

The amendment is the center of a complex school situation which involves the sectional line-up of legislative leadership, a shortage of money for public schools next year, and opposition charges that the "last resort" actually will be the "first and only resort."

"Other means . . . have not and will not be employed," declared opposition leader, State Rep. Joel Blass.

Blass contends the amendment actually will hasten the death of public schools by making it easier for Negroes to get into white schools.

And "the threat of integration would be followed at once by the frenzied haste of the legislators to kill the public schools," Blass declared.

On both sides the drums are beating for white supremacy.

Both sides are determined to keep segregation—the only question is the method.

'Anti-Integration' Amendment Set for Miss. Decision Tuesday

Opposition to Proposal Strong, Vote Is Expected To Be Close

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18—A major decision confronts Mississippi voters in a special election Tuesday: Whether to continue public schools as a constitutional "must" or make them legislatively optional.

It will be given on a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to abolish public schools if it takes that to prevent integration of the racially segregated system as mandated by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Under the present constitution, the legislature has no choice in the matter—it must provide free public schools. However, there is a "catch" in that they must be segregated.

Gov. Hugh White and other state leaders contend that the United States Supreme Court has invalidated the "segregated" constitutional provision, and if the legislature is to vote funds for public schools, new authority must be given it. On that premise, the two-pronged amendment is being submitted to the voters for ratification or rejection.

Provisions of Proposal

The amendment authorizes the legislature to continue to support public schools without reference to segregation, and also to abolish the tax-supported system and vote funds directly to students for attendance in schools, private or otherwise, of their choice. The plan is to continue public schools on some sort of statutory segregated standard, and failing in that, to wipe out the whole system.

Despite absence from the amendment of its use as a "last resort" step to prevent integration, Gov. White and legislative leaders have pledged not to entertain abolition unless other planned bypass maneuvers are unsuccessful.

Backers of the amendment are confident that Negroes will accept a voluntary segregation plan provided their schools are immediately equalized with the whites. To carry out all phases of equalization, the plan is to issue $60,000,000 in bonds for immediate lunching of a Negro school building program to fit in with the previously provided equal salaries, transportation and administration program.

Should they be mistaken in that belief, a series of delaying actions have been blueprinted for use before bringing into play the abolition feature. They include use of the state's police power, gerrymandering of school districts, assignment of pupils and other possible legal maneuvers.

Opponents to the amendment, while claiming equal support for segregation with the proponents, take the position the other delaying steps should be taken before the legislature is clothed with the authority to abolish public schools.

Added strength has been shown by the opposition, chiefly in the rural sections where the voters feel that once given the authority to abolish public schools, the legislature will do that without testing other avenues.

The amendment has two methods of abolition: (1) the legislature by a two-thirds vote may abolish the statewide system; or (2) it may by a majority vote authorize a county or school district to do that on the local level.

Close Vote Expected

Proponents admit that the vote will be close. They have found that rural areas do not understand the many sides of the amendment and are against it.

Other than the top state officials favoring the amendment, it also has the backing of the two United States senators, five of the six congressmen and all five of the candidates for governor in next summer's elections. Only 27 of the 189 legislators opposed submission of the amendment to the voters.

Considerable resentment has been stirred up over a statement by Gov. White that unless the amendment is ratified he will not convene a special legislative session next year to vote needed funds for operation of public schools in the 1955-56 session, The 1954 regular biennial assembly shorted the next school year by $18,000,000 of the needed $34,000,000.

Without next year's special session, schools cannot open next September. The next regular session does not meet until January, 1956, and a special session can be called only by the governor.

Advised of the resentment, Gov. White explained that it will be useless to call a special session since the present authority for voting funds is for a segregated system, and it has been voided by the Supreme Court. He has set Jan. 11 for the session if the amendment is ratified.

Heading up the strongest opposition group under the banner of "Friends of Segregated Public Schools" are Miss Alma Hickman, retired college profesosr of Hattiesburg; Sen. George Owens of Pontotoc, and Rep. Joel Blass of Stone County.

The FSPS recently challenged the opposition expressed by the Mississippi Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, stating it was taken in order to help pass the amendment.

On the other hand, proponents said the NAACP action would strengthen their side and pointed to the consistent position of the organization for immediate integration.

Since slightly in excess of one-fifth of the state's estimated voting strength of 500,000 voted in the November general election in which a new voter qualification amendment was ratified to curb Negro registration, the vote Tuesday is not expected to be high.

Even though all the opposition, except the NAACP, favors continuance of segregation, defeat of the amendment will likely be heralded outside Mississippi as a willingness to accept integration. However, that will not be the case, although few admit that Mississippi can forever keep up its bars against integration.

Mississippi Votes 2-1 for Authority To Abolish Schools

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 22.—Mississippi gave its Legislature life-or-death power over its public schools, voting 2 to 1 yesterday for a constitutional amendment to permit legislators to abolish State-supported schools if necessary to retain racial segregation.

Gov. Hugh White, one of the amendment's strongest backers, said he expected to call today for a special legislative session January 11 to provide funds for bringing separate Negro schools up to the level of white schools.

State officials believe Negroes would rather have good segregated schools than no schools at all.

Returns from 1,140 of the State's 1,825 precincts showed 81,940 votes for the amendment and 36,008 against it.

Because passage seemed assured, the turnout was light and the total vote was not expected to exceed 140,000. Registration is about 450,000.

Called Last Resort.

Gov. White said schools would be abolished under the amendment only as a last resort. The amendment would permit the Legislature to turn school facilities over the private groups and to subsidize private schools.

State Representative Joel Blass, who led opposition to the amendment although favoring segregation, challenged Gov. White's statement that the measure would be used only as a last resort.

"I think that an attempt will be made to use it in January of next year on the local level," he said. "I expect to see the (school fund) appropriation made contingent upon the Legislature allowing abolition of schools on a local level.

"Then I expect within less than a year's time there will be certain counties or districts in which the schools will be abolished."

Favor Louisiana Plan.

Opponents of the amendment favored a plan used in Louisiana to fight integration.

They recommended a constitutional change placing segregated schools under the State's "police powers" and said the abolition amendment was boosted for economic reasons by counties with heavy Negro populations.

Under the abolition amendment:

1. The State may provide, support and maintain public schools.

2. The legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish schools Statewide.

3. The legislature by a majority vote could set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.

4. Public school buildings and facilities could be sold, rented or leased to private corporations or individuals.

5. The State could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

The amendment is similar to those approved by Georgia and South Carolina in efforts to circumvent the Supreme Court ban on public school segregation.

In The Nation

The Sparse School Vote in Mississippi

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23—The analysts of political action in this country occupy safer ground than the prophets because their deductions are after the fact and can be proved or disproved, whereas the soundness of prophecy must undergo the test of the event. But the American people, who steadily confound predictions of what they will do at the polls, also have the fixed habit of making trouble for the analysts. And that was demonstrated again this week in Mississippi.

The question before the people was whether to change the Mississippi Constitution to permit the Legislature to abolish the public school system and subsidize private, segregated schools throughout the state or in selected communities as it might elect. The issue grew out of the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that racial segregation in the public schools violates the federal charter. Ever since then the politicians of Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana and South Carolina have been busy with plans to prevent the enforcement of this decision. All these states have now changed their Constitutions, without waiting to discover whether the Supreme Court, in issuing its decree of enforcement, will also prescribe a gradual rather than an instant compliance with the ruling.

In Mississippi particularly, where the Negroes outnumber the whites and emotional attacks on the decision were made by nearly all the leading politicians, these circumstances were expected to bring out a heavy vote for the amendment. But the stay-at-homes amounted to many more than half of those qualified to vote, and the turnout of Negro citizens was light. This poses an unusually interesting "Question Why."

The answer most favored in Mississippi is that adoption of the amendment was a foregone conclusion—so certain that odds of 1,000 to 1 would not have been excessive. But in the belief that closer examination was due to the sparcity of the vote on an issue represented as the most emotional one that could have arisen in Mississippi, this correspondent sought it by telephone from local sources. The analyst who seemed most objective was the leading opponent of the amendment—Hodding Carter, the distinguished editor of The Delta Democrat-Times, published at Greenville. These are his answers to the question "Why?"

¶The "foregone conclusion" point is sound as far as it goes. But an organized attempt was made to evoke a pitch of high emotion, and it succeeded in only eighteen counties (of a total of eighty-two) where the preponderance of Negroes, two-thirds of the qualified voters, creates an acute social and economic problem. In this area the amendment carried 10 to 1, but the large majority of those who went to the polls was white.

¶Elsewhere in the state the vote was close, and "nobody seemed excited." In Washington County, where Carter's newspaper opposed the amendment, the vote was only 2 to 1 in favor. And though a bond issue proposal to modernize the port of Greenville was up for decision, and a 60 per cent affirmation was required for its adoption, the city vote was light and the proposal barely won. This was strange for the further reason that the county interest was arrayed against that of the city, and the modernizing of the port is of vital concern to Greenville.

¶The impulse to neglect chores which is engendered by the spirit of Christmas played a part in this public attitude, but how much no analyst would attempt to estimate.

¶The most active organization in the eighteen-county area was the new, aggressive and pro-amendment white supremacy group known as Citizens' Councils. One of its leaflets was particularly effective. On one side was listed virtually every white leader in the state as supporting the constitutional change. On the other was a meager roster of opponents carefully selected for their provocative qualities—two editors, of whom Carter was one, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor ("Northern Branch.").

¶Without this activity the voting turnout would probably have been even smaller, and—though Carter did not say this—perhaps the effort influenced many Negroes to stay at home.

"The Delta Democrat-Times opposed the amendment," said Carter, "on these grounds: a surrender of the basic right to a public school education, an irrational method to meet a grave problem, a threat to the rating by out-state colleges of Mississippi high school diplomas, an invitation to a ban of the State University by national educators and an invitation also to a taxpayer's suit against the use of his money for private schools—a suit the Supreme Court might well sustain."

In this framework it seems very sensible for the state to proceed as indicated—apply the amendment locally, which is the least sweeping of the alternate authorities newly vested in the Legislature.

EDITOR JOINS FOES OF SCHOOL ABOLITION

Arrington To Handle Publicity For Mississippians

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Oct. 26. — (UP) — Jimmy Arrington, editor of the Collins News Commercial and candidate for lieutenant governor in 1951, has joined forces opposing the school abolition amendment, it was announced Tuesday.

Miss Alma Hickman of Hattiesburg, chairman of the "Committee of Friends of a Segregated Public School System, said, Mr. Arrington will be publicity chairman for the new organization.

Miss Hickman said State Representative Joel Blass of Stone County has been named secretary of the group which will establish headquarters in Wiggins. An office also will be maintained in Jackson.

County organizations will be set up throughout the state, said Miss Hickman, former president of the Mississippi Education Association and an instructor at William Carey College.

Duncan Davis, superintendent of Forrest County Schools, will head the county group here.

The constitutional amendment, up for public vote Dec. 21, would permit the legislature to abolish public schools as a means of maintaining segregation.

State Shaken by 'Fear'

White Says Miss. Will Defy Court

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

JACKSON, Miss.—"We're not going to pay any attention to the Supreme Court's decision," Gov. Hugh White defiantly declared in an interview with the Courier.

The Mississippi chief executive said, "We don't think it (the decision) will have any effect on us down here at all." The feverish action, however, of virtually all organized white groups, from top state officials to peasants to erect barriers against integration, is regarded as indicative of the fear which has shaken the entire state.

Governor White denied that there were even a remote possibility that Mississippi would eventually integrate the public schools.

WE ASKED the Governor if he agreed with the speculation of the state's top legal brain that integration could be held for no more than eight or ten years.

Obviously a little peeved with our efforts to wring a confession out of him that integration would come to his state, Governor White said, "It will not come to Mississippi under twenty-five years, if ever."

Pressed for a preview of the methods he proposes to use to circumvent the Supreme Court ruling, he replied, "That remains to be seen." Then with a little show of confidence, he asserted, "We've got numerous ways." When asked to enumerate some of them, he refused saying, "I don't care to at this time."

A spokesman close to the Governor said that he and a group of state officials are depending upon a variety of anti-Negro devices, the passage of an amendment giving the Legislature the power to abolish the schools, and a $120,000,000 equalization fund to make the Negro schools "adequate."

THE AMENDMENT will be voted on Dec. 21 and Governor White told the Courior that he is confident that the amendment will be passed by an overwhelming majority.

Negro leaders point out that Mississippi, unlike many Southern states, never has adopted a state-wide school building program, and therefore does not have too much to abolish.

They express the belief that it might be better to let the amendment pass and then attact its constitutionality.

IN ANY EVENT, the lawyers in the state claim that they can hold integration back for from ten to twenty years without resorting to the abolition of the schools.

Hugh White leaves the capitol in 1956 and in all probability he will resign from the political arena to act as a sort of elder statesman. It is generally believed that Fielding Wright will succeed him.

Negroes and whites have marked him as a sure winner for the governorship.

They point to the fact that "he is the biggest reactionary in the state and he is from the most reactionary county in the state."

'Dixie's Separate School System Doomed'-Current

Columbus, Miss.—This state, Georgia, Louisiana and South Carolina will "fail in their objective of preserving separate schools for Negroes and whites," it was forecast here today by an NAACP national officer.

Addressing the NAACP's Southeast Regional Advisory Board, Gloster B. Current, the association's director of branches, predicted a "weakened financial condition" for the schools of any state attempting to circumvent the Supreme Court decision banning segregated schools.

Mr. Current asserted: "School systems which are financed through out-of-state bonds and long-term investments will find that these securities will be unmarketable throughout the nation.

"Georgia has already experienced difficulty in that its school revenue certificates offered for sale in Ohio have been declared ineligible investments."

He said Mississippi schools are already in a weakened financial condition." Mr. Current noted that he referred to "amendments to state constitutions adopted in Georgia, Louisiana and South Carolina and the amendment to be voted on in Mississippi on Dec. 21, including the proposal of the Georgia Education Commission to preserve separate schools by special assignment of pupils, educational grants, prohibition of state and local funds to mixed schools, (and) creation of special attendance districts . . ."

He urged southern citizens, school administrators and religious leaders "not to allow politicians and bigots to influence them to sacrifice their schools on the altar of race prejudice."

Pointing up the positive side of the southern public school situation, the NAACP official declared that "integration will work in Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina and other states in this region if the public officials, including the governors and members of the state legislatures . . . adopt law-abiding, progressive attitudes" on the school issue.

"The majority of the citizens in the South are law-abiding," he maintained.

Integration is working successfully in the schools of several southern states, including Missouri, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware, he reported.

Commenting on the organization of so-called citizens' councils and "other hate groups" in this state for the purpose of bringing economic and other forms of pressure upon Negro leaders, Mr. Current asserted that the NAACP "will use every legal means at its disposal to combat these tactics by bigots and others resorting to . . . frantic efforts to circumvent the court's ruling."

He said the NAACP also "will continue to oppose" all state constitutional amendments designed to deprive Negroes of the ballot, in this state as well as others.

The Regional Advisory Board meeting was attended by NAACP state presidents and other officers from Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, North Carolina and South Carolina, representing 50,000 members in the area.

Miss. Votes To Scrap Public Schools As 'Last Resort' To Keep Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 21 (AP)—Mississippi voters today ratified a "last resort" constitutional amendment permitting abolition of public schools if necessary to maintain school segregation.

Gov. Hugh White said he will issue a call tomorrow summoning the Legislature into special session Jan. 11 to enact a school equalization program and appropriate school operating funds for next year.

With 1,140 of the state's 1,825 precincts reporting tonight, the vote was 81,940 for the amendment to 36,008 against, more than a 2 to 1 margin.

The amendment would permit the Legislature to abolish public schools on a state-wide basis by two-thirds vote of its members or by districts on a simple majority vote.

Similar to constitutional provisions in Georgia and South Carolina, the amendment would permit the Legislature to set up a private, state-supported system in place of the present dual, public system.

Segregation Under Another Name

(From The New York Herald Tribune)

Mississippi, like Georgia and South Carolina, has adopted an amendment to its state constitution which would authorize legislative abilition of the public school system. It is not so much that Mississippi is prepared to get along without education, but rather that a way is being sought to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation.

What is proposed is that the Legislature could at any time end all the traditional provisions for public education and then in the next breath allow the sale or lease of the schools to private operators. That way, it is reasoned, everything could remain about as is on the separation of children by color. The state, having at least theoretically divorced itself from the function of education, would consider that the Supreme Court's edicts had no applicability.

Of course this is purely an exercise in evasion. It also puts a rather low value on education. Presumably the sponsors are indifferent to any standards of teaching or even whether school attendance should be required at all, because the scheme calls for the state getting completely out of the educational picture. But such nonsense, if it should ever be attempted, will hardly deceive the Supreme Court for this is a crude attempt to bypass the spirit of the law.

As a lot of people in Mississippi realize, judging from the substantial size of the opposition vote to the amendment, the "private" school notion is strictly a trick. Segregation practiced under any other name is still just as unconstitutional.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH PUBLIC SCHOOLS TO PREVENT INTEGRATION GETS APPROVAL STATE VOTERS

Governor Calls Special Session Of Legislature To Provide Funds For Equalization Program In Mississippi

Negroes Provide Only A Small Percentage Of Votes In Tuesday Election

JACKSON, Miss. Dec. 22 (DSN)—The Legislature of the state of Mississippi, present and future, now has the power to abolish the state's public school system, a power it was given by the voters of the state who went to the polls Tuesday in a statewide election to vote on the proposed amendment approved by the last session of the legislature.

Some 125,000 electors out of a total potential of 450,000 took part in the voting with some 70,000 voting for, while some 35,000 voted against the amendment.

The chief purpose of the amendment is to prevent the integration of the public schools of the state, but its proponents say that the power will not be used except as a last resort to present mixing of the races in the public schools.

Only an estimated 25,000 Negro citizens are qualified to vote in the state and with most of them not too much concerned one way or the other, in regard to the outcome of the voting, in the face of what most saw as inevitable, only a small percentage of the Negro electorate took the trouble of going to the polls.

Meanwhile, Governor Hugh White, a staunch supporter of the amendment, announced Wednesday following the voting, that he had called a special session of the state legislature, as a last resort against mixing the races, to abolish public schools."

If the people of Mississippi read Mr. Brownell's position as stated in Sunday's issue of The Commercial Appeal in a story from Washington, there will be no question of them ratifying the amendment on Dec. 21," the governor said.

Governor White said Attorney General Brownell's position calls for Supreme Court nullification of all segregation laws; giving public school segregated states 90 days to submit a feasible plan, and if they fail, for a court decree calling for integration with commencement of the next school term."

Governor Backs Segregation Bill In Mississippi

Jackson, Miss., Dec. 16 (AP)—Governor Hugh White tonight urged voters to approve a constitutional amendment granting stand-by power to abolish public schools to keep segregation. He said, "It is impossible to mix the races together in the public schools" of Mississippi.

The Governor speech was broadcast throughout the state.

He was one of a series of speakers who have debated the public-schools issue. State Representative Joel Blass will oppose the Governor's views in a broadcast tomorrow night.

Mississippi Voting On Segregation

By the Associated Press.

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 20.—Mississippi will vote tomorrow on a proposed constitutional amendment designed to continue public school segregation and called by opponents "the most crucial issue to confront us in this century."

It would give the legislature stand-by authority to abolish public schools if necessary to continue segregation. The amendment, authored by the legal educational advisory committee and approved by the legislature in special session, is an attempt to by-pass the U.S. Supreme Court ruling banning public school segregation.

ABOLITION MOVE URGED

White Cites Brownell Stand As Reason For School Bill

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 29.—Gov. Hugh White said Monday that United States Attorney General Herbert Brownell's insistence for immediate integration of public schools "points to the necessity of Mississippi's ratification of a constitutional amendment permitting the legislature to abolish public schools to keep segregation.

Gov. White said Attorney General Brownell's position calls for Supreme Court nullification of all segregation laws; giving public school segregated states 90 days to submit a feasible plan, and if they fail, for a court decree calling for integration with commencement of the next school term."

NEGRO SCHOOL GIVEN $500,000 IN TV PLEA

Earlier Figure Wrong—Million Asked For Piney Wood

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 27.—(AP)—Television viewers have sent an estimated $500,000 to the Piney Woods Vocational School for Negroes, the result of a plea for money made over a national television show.

A bank official, where bags of mail are being opened, said the total though Friday was $358,552, with another 44 mail bags on hand Monday and another 10 expected Tuesday. The bags contain an average of betweenu $3,000-$3,500 each.

An earlier report that the total had passed $1700,000 was an erroneous doubling of figures, the official said.

The founder and president of the Negro school near Jackson, Dr. Laurence Jones, appeared on a national television show (This Is Your Life) about two weeks ago. The master of ceremonies asked one million viewers to send $1 each to Jones' private school.

The mail began flooding in immediately and is still continuing although the peak is past.

Mississippi Votes School Bias Dodge

By the Associated Press.

JACKSON, Dec. 22.—Mississippi gave its legislature life-or-death power over its public schools, voting 2 to 1 yesterday for a constitutional amendment to permit legislators to abolish state-supported schools if necessary to retain racial segregation.

Gov. Hugh White, one of the amendment's strongest backers, said he expected to call today for a special legislative session for Jan. 11 to provide funds for bringing separate Negro schools up to the level of white schools.

State officials believe Negroes would rather have good segregated schools than no schools at all.

Returns from 1140 of the state's 1825 precincts showed 81,940 votes for the amendment and 36,008 against it.

Because passage seemed assured, the turnout was light and the total vote was not expected to exceed 140,000. Registration is about 450,000.

Gov. White said schools would be abolished under the amendment only as a last resort. The amendment would permit the legislature to turn school facilities over to private groups and to subsidize private schools.

Mississippi School Plan Vote Is 2-1

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 22 (AP)—Mississippi joined South Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana today in a states' rights movement to maintain school segregation as voters overwhelmingly approved legislative power to abolish public schools if necessary.

Complete but unofficial returns from yesterday's election from 1,269 of the state's 1,820 precincts gave 89,434 votes favoring the proposed constitutional amendment and 38,341 against.

LAST RESORT

Gov. Hugh White, staunchest backer of the amendment, said the abolition of the state's public school system would be made only as a last resort to maintain segregation. White said he expected to call a special legislative session Jan. 11 to provide funds for equalizing school facilities for Negro students.

The amendment, approved during a session of the Legislature earlier this year, would permit the Legislature to turn school facilities over to private groups and to subsidize private schools.

The turnout for the election was light because passage of the amendment was assured since White and other leading legislators had advocated approval. The total vote represented less than one-half of the state's 450,000 registered voters. Negroes could vote, but only a small percentage of registered Negro voters turned out.

FEARS EARLY USE

State Rep. Joel Blass, who led the opposition to adoption of the amendment, said he thought "an attempt will be made to use it in January of next year on the local level. I expect to see the (school fund) appropriation made contingent upon the Legislature allowing abolition of schools on a local level."

Blass said he then expects "within less than a year's time there will be certain counties or districts in which the schools will be abolished."

Mississippi Fourth State To Abolish Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 23 (AP)—Mississippi joined South Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana yesterday in a states' rights movement to maintain school segregation as voters overwhelmingly approved legislative power to abolish public schools if necessary.

Complete but unofficial returns from yesterday's election from 1,269 of the state's 1,820 precincts gave 89,434 votes favoring the proposed constitutional amendment and 38,341 against.

Gov. Hugh White, staunchest backer of the amendment, said the abolition of the state's public school system would be made only as a last resort to maintain segregation. Subsidize Schools

The amendment, approved during a session of the Legislature earlier this year, would permit the Legislature to turn school facilities over to private groups and to subsidize private schools.

I expect to see the (school fund) appropriation made contingent upon the Legislature allowing abolition of schools on a local level."

Blass said he then expects "within less than a year's time there will be certain counties or districts in which the schools will be abolished."

Opponents of the amendment recommended a constitutional change placing segregated schools under the state's police powers, a system used in Louisiana. They said the abolition amendment was boosted for economic reasons by counties with large Negro populations.

Amendment Provisions

The amendment provides that:

1. The state may provide, support and maintain public schools.
2. The Legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish schools statewide.
3. The Legislature by a majority vote could set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.
4. Public school buildings and facilities could be sold, rented or leased to private corporations or individuals.
5. The state could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

The amenment parallels those approved by Georgia and South Carolina as a means of circumventing the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation last May 17.

White said he expected quick approval of funds for equalizing school facilities. The school equalization plan was set up a year ago during a special session, but financing was delayed pending the Supreme Court decision on segregation.

Completion of the school equalization program requires an additional 18 million dollars.

Segregation Stand Termed Un-Biblical

WIGGINS, Miss., Oct. 23. — (UP) — The Mississippi State Baptist Association has termed the Supreme Court's decision against segregation in public schools as "un-Biblical" and "socialistic," the Rev. H. L. Gardner, moderator, said Saturday.

A resolution criticizing the decision was adopted unanimously at a state convention Wednesday at Lucedale. The association is made up of about 300 old-line missionary churches.

The resolution said "God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to separate the people and form the various races . . . and has never set aside that decree, but has taught in His word the segregation of the races, Israel herself being a notable example.

"We express our regrets and disappointments concerning that decision as being un-Biblical, socialistic and a departure from previous decisions of that body."

Mississippi Votes Yes on Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., (AP) — Mississippi voters apparently gave a more than two to one stamp of approval Tuesday to a consitutional amendment designed to continue school segregation.

Returns from 1,067 of 1,825 precincts gave 74,572 votes for the amendment and 30,236 against.

The precincts counted were from all over the state and included both city and rural areas.

The amendment, similar to those approved already by Georgia and South Carolina, gives the legislature standby authority to abolish the public school system and subsidize private schools to continue separate Negro and White school systems.

It was designed to bypass the United States Supreme court ruling banning segregation in public schools.

Voter interest in Mississippi was light over most of the state except where the few local elections sparked the voting.

Miss. Teachers Veto School Plan

JACKSON, Miss. — Mississippi teachers last week voted almost 2 to 1 against the proposed amendment to give the state legislature power to abolish public schools in the state if integration was made mandatory.

In what is believed to be the largest such poll ever taken among teachers in this state, almost a third of the white teachers voted. The poll was conducted by Dr. Charles G. Hamilton of Aberdeen.

Only 888 teachers voted in favor of abolishing public schools, while 1,808 voted against the proposal, caused by the May 17 Supreme Court decision that ruled public school segregation unconstitutional.

A majority of the teachers, 1,808 to 627, indicated they would not teach in integrated schools. But in contrast, a larger proportion of those favoring the abolition on public schools in favor of private schools, declared they were willing to teach in unsegregated schools.

Most ballots were against the abolition of public schools and against teaching in integrated schools, with both white and colored teachers voting. It is known that some teachers were warned not to vote by those who "do not believe in democracy" and who did not want the people more informed about the schools to express themselves.

The state legislature has set Dec. 21 as the day for special balloting, to let the public determine whether public schools shall be abolished in an effort to maintain segregation.

Seven counties in East Mississippi, from the Tennessee line to the Gulf, were in favor of the amendment. Only 24 of the state's 82 counties had majorities against public schools but these counties so small that only a handful voted. The major cities of the state opposed the amendment and supported public schools, and voting in cities with large Negro populations like Clarksdale, Columbus, Greenville, Natchez, and Vicksburg was close.

Among counties opposing the amendment were the counties of every former governor except one, from the late Bilbo's first term until now.

Mississippi Takes Step Toward School Abolition

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 21 (UP) — A constitutional amendment to permit abolition of public schools if needed to maintain segregation was ratified by Mississippi voters, returns from a special referendum showed tonight.

Gov. Hugh White said he will issue a call tomorrow summoning the Legislature into special session Jan. 11 to enact a school building program and appropriate school operating funds for next year. White's call had been conditioned on passage of the amendment.

With 791 of the state's 1,865 precincts reporting, the vote was 58,028 for the amendment to 25,701 against, more than a two to one margin.

Covington County was the first county to report a complete tabulation, 16 of 16 precincts favoring the amendment, 542 to 417. LeFlore County, in the heart of the Delta, followed with 16 of 16 boxes voting 2,661 to 127 in favor of the proposal.

Although the vote was generally light, the turnout came up to expectations for an election in which there were no candidates for office and during the peak of the Christmas rush. The polls closed at 6 p.m. (CST).

Favorable Weather.

Cool, clear weather favored the voting on the amendment which would permit the Legislature to abolish public schools on a statewide basis by two-thirds vote of its members or, by districts on a simple majority vote. Many voters waded through shopping crowds and gay Christmas decorations to get to booths set up in stores and shops.

The amendment was presented as an emergency measure to hold for use only in the event Negroes attempt to enter white schools under the U. S. Supreme Court decision. Similar to constitutional provisions in Georgia and South Carolina, the amendment would permit the Legislature to set up a private, state-supported system in place of the present dual, public system.

The measure was supported by Gov. Hugh White and virtually all of the state's big political figures. Opponents were led by a few legislators, school teachers and parent-teacher groups.

The South Faces Desegregation Facts

WASHINGTON—Mississippi brings to a final total of four the number of Southern states which have, in a manner, "seceded" again from the Union—this time over the issue of nonsegregated public schools. This they did by adopting constitutional amendments through which they could try later to evade the Supreme Court's momentous May 17 decision.

Hardly a formidable "Confederacy" this time, however. Two states, South Carolina and Georgia, in the eastern end of the old Confederacy—which embraced 11 states—and two in the Southern tier, Louisiana and Mississippi. The other seven states of the 1861-65 confederacy are holding plans in abeyance awaiting hearings before the Supreme Court for which no date has been set since recent postponement from the Dec. 6 date.

Also the four states which adopted "loophole" constitutional amendments are withholding legislation to implement them for the present.

We could look at these four states and the headlines about them, and listen to some of the hot and intemperate language also dramatized in the headlines and get a very discouraging picture of what is going on down South. But we can, on the other side, add it all up in another way and come out with a very encouraging commentary on our democracy in what, against the background of history, was and is nothing less than a major crisis for us.

For the Supreme Court decision was a revolutionary step affecting ancient customs and manners in one large section of our nation. Dire predictions were made as a result of it. Screaming was the order of the day by a few demagogues in a land that happily is not now plagued by as many of that noxious breed as it suffered periodically in the past.

Generally, after sober second thought, responsible leaders in the South recognized that they must face the facts and try to adjust to the realities. What they asked was time to try to work out solutions down at the local, neighborhood, community level, solutions with which, though there might be some compromises and some delays, they could live amicably and peaceably in an interval of transition.

This was the burden of briefs filed with the Supreme Court by a number of Southern states preliminary to the hearings here. More important, perhaps, this was the attitude taken also by the Department of Justice in its brief which, like those of the states, suggested that lower federal courts be designated to supervise implementation of the broad May 17 decision. Local school boards would be given 90 days to submit desegregation plans after formal request from the federal district court, under the Justice Department recommendation in its brief. If no such plan is forthcoming, then the court, itself, would order desegregation beginning at the next school term.

Mississippi Farm Federation Supports Segregated Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 11 (AP)—The Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation today resolved to support segregated public schools as a prerequisite to improving existing facilities.

Delegates attending the 33rd annual convention of the Bureau voted overwhelmingly to insist that no building program for equalizing schools begin "until reasonable assurance can be given that segregated schools will continue."

The group agreed to support the proposed constitutional amendment, to be voted Dec. 21, empowering the legislature to abolish public schools "in the event it is the only way to maintain segregation."

The Farm Bureau Federation boasts no active Negro membership. Negroes may belong only as associates.

The resolution urged equalization of facilities and opportunities not only between Negroes and whites but also between rural and urban schools.

"Actual need rather than 'equal facilities,'" should be the main factor in determining size, location, etc. of schools, the resolution states, and financing "should come from increases in sales, tobacco, income and severance taxes in that order insofar as is necessary to meet the needs."

The education equalization program was enacted by the 1953 special session of the legislature and partially financed by the 1954 regular session.

Mississippi School Bias In Vote Test

Pro-Segregation Plan Up Tuesday

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18 (AP)—A battle which stoked the fire of racial prejudice ends Tuesday when Mississippians decide whether to give their Legislature stand-by power to abolish public schools.

"Is segregation worth the danger of destruction of the public school system?" is the question asked by sponsors of the constitutional amendment facing a vote of the people.

"Yes" is the answer of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, which wrote the amendment designed to keep segregated schools despite the United States Supreme Court decision declaring segregated schools unconstitutional.

Governor Opposes Change

"You and I know that it is impossible to mix the races together in the public schools of this state," Gov. Hugh White declared Thursday night in a state radio broadcast. "You and I know that this situation must never come about."

The L. E. A. C. contends the loss of public schools won't be too high a price for segregated schools, if it costs that much. At the same time, it argues that the price probably won't be necessary and the amendment would be used only as a "last resort."

The opposition replies that the price absolutely isn't necessary; that segregation can be maintained without endangering public schools. And why provide the "last resort" when other weapons are lying idle and ready for use? opponents ask..

A Legal Dodge

The amendment is similar to those adopted by South Carolina and Georgia. The purpose is to "legally" dodge the Supreme Court decision.

The voting turn-out for Tuesday's special election is uncertain. The amendment needs only a majority vote to pass.

Mississippi's version provides that the state may (instead of the mandatory "shall") provide, support and maintain public schools; that the Legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish schools statewide; that the Legislature could, by a majority vote, set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools; that public school buildings and facilities could be rented, leased or sold to private corporations or individuals, and that the state could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

Call Clause Necessary

Sponsors contend the first profusion is necessary to keep public schools, since sections of Mississippi's constitution providing for segregated schools will fall as soon as they come under attack in Federal Court. It would authorize the state to keep public schools without mentioning segregation.

The amendment is the center of a complex school situation which involves the sectional line-up of legislative leadership, a shortage of money for jublic schools next year, and opposition charges that the "last resort" actually will be the "first and only resort."

On both sides the drums are beating for white supremacy. Both sides are determined to keep segregation—the only question is the method.

Mississippi Votes Private School Plan

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 21 (AP). Early returns gave 2-to-1 support tonight to a proposed constitutional amendment giving the Legislature standby authority to abolish the public schools as a means of continuing segregation.

Returns from 834 of 1825 precincts showed 59,291 for the amendment and 31,728 against.

Voter interest was light in the balloting on an amendment designed to keep segregated schools despite a United States Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation.

The amendment, provides public subsidies for private schools if the public system is abandoned. It is similar to those approved already by Georgia and South Carolina.

Christmas shopping apparently occupied the citizens' minds instead of the amendment affecting the state's educational future. Only five counties had local elections to add interest.

It appeared no more than 125,000 ballots would be cast in the special election. The state has an estimated voter strength of 450,000.

MISSISSIPPI WAITS ON SCHOOL ACTION

Governor Says Amendment to Beat Segregation Ban Will Only Be Last Resort

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 22 (AP)—Mississippi joined South Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana today in a states' rights movement to maintain school segregation.

Voters yesterday overwhelmingly approved legislative power to abolish public schools if necessary. Complete but unofficial returns showed 89,434 votes favoring a constitutional amendment and 38,341 against.

Gov. Hugh White, stanchest backer of the amendment, said abolition of the state's public school system would occur only as a last resort to maintain segregation. He said he expected to call a special legislative session Jan. 11 to arrange for funds to equalize school facilities for Negroes.

The amendment, approved by the Legislature earlier this year, would permit that body to turn over school facilities to private groups and to subsidize private schools.

Voting Is Light

Voting was light because passage of the amendment had been assured, with Mr. White and other leading legislators having advocated approval. The total represented less than half of the state's 450,000 registered voters. Only a small of percentage of Negroes turned out.

State Representative Joel Blass, who led the opposition, said he thought "an attempt will be made to use it [the amendment] in January of next year on the local level."

"I expect to see the [school fund] appropriation made contingent upon the Legislature allowing abolition of schools on a local level," he declared. "Within less than a year's time, there will be certain counties or districts in which the schools will be abolished."

Opponents of the amendment had recommended a constitutional change placing segregated schools under the state's police powers, a system used in Louisiana. They said the amendment had been backed for economic reasons by counties with large Negro populations.

Provisions Listed

This is what the amendment provides:

¶The state may provide, support and maintain public schools.

¶The Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, may abolish schools.

¶The Legislature, by a majority vote, may set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.

¶Public school buildings and facilities may be sold, rented or leased to private corporations or individuals.

¶The state may provide tuition money for students in private schools.

The amendment parallels those approved by Georgia and South Carolina as a means of circumventing the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation last May 17.

Governor White said he expected quick approval of funds for equalizing school facilities.

Completion of the equalization program requires an additional $18,000,000.

Mississippi's version provides:

1. The state may (instead of the mandatory "shall") provide, support and maintain public schools.
2. The legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish schools statewide.
3. The Legislature could, by a majority vote, set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.
4. Public school buildings and facilities could be rented, leased or sold to private corporations or individuals.
5. The state could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

Provision Necessary

Sponsors contend the first provision is necessary to keep public schools, since sections of Mississippi's constitution providing for segregated schools will fall as soon as they come under attack in federal court. It would authorize the state to keep public schools without mentioning segregation.

Mississippi To Vote Tuesday On Power To Abolish Schools

By SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18 (AP)—A battle which stoked the fire of racial prejudice ends Tuesday when Mississippians decide whether to give their legislature standby power to abolish public schools.

"Is segregation worth the danger of destruction of the public school system?" is the question asked by sponsors of the constitutional amendment facing a vote of the people.

"Yes" is the answer of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee which wrote the amendment designed to keep segregated schools despite the U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring segregated schools unconstitutional.

"You and I know that it is impossible to mix the races together in the public schools of this state," Gov. Hugh White declared Thursday night in a state radio broadcast.

Impossible To Mix

"You and I know that this situation must never come about."

The LEAC contends the loss of public schools won't be too high a price for segregated schools, if it costs that much.

At the same time, the LEAC argues the price probably won't be necessary and the amendment would be used only as a "last resort."

The opposition replies that the price absolutely isn't necessary: that segregation can be maintained without endangering public schools.

And why provide the "last resort" when other weapons are lying idle and ready for use? opponents ask.

The amendment is similar to those adopted by South Carolina and Georgia.

The purpose is to "legally" dodge the Supreme Court decision.

Turnout Uncertain

The voting turnout for Tuesday's special election is uncertain.

The amendment needs only a majority vote to pass.

On both sides the drums are beating for white supremacy. Both sides are determined to keep segregation—the only question is the method.

The amendment is the center of a complex school situation which involves the sectional lineup of legislative leadership, a shortage of money for public schools next year and opposition charges that the "last resort" actually will be the "first and only resort."

"Other means . . . have not and will not be employed," declared an opposition leader, State Rep. Joel Blass.

Blass contends the amendment is actually will hasten the death of public schools by making it easier for Negroes to get into white schools.

And "the threat of integration would be followed at once by the frenzied haste of the legislators to kill the public schools," Blass declared.

This Is A

PLAN AND PROGRAM

Proposed By The Jackson Advocate For Inter-racial Harmony And Good Will In The State As A Result Of The U. S. Supreme Court Decision In The School Cases And Other Cases In Regard To Racial Segregation And Discrimination.

1. Equal Public Schools, including teachers salaries, books and courses offered, for Negro Students with Negro Teachers, from the First thru the Twelfth Grade.
2. Alcorn College, Jackson College, and Mississippi Vocational College to be brought up to the highest standards and to be maintained primarily for Negro Students, but with no bars against other students.
3. The admission of Negro Students to the University of Mississippi and Mississippi A & M College for professional studies and graduate work.
4. The permission of athletic competition between Negro and White High School and College teams in order to bring about increasing understanding and goodwill between the races in the state.
5. The election and or appointment of Negroes on all policy making Boards and Committees, both local and state, concerned with the maintenance and operation of the State Public School System.
6. The elimination of all jimcrow signs and segregation in all types of buses, trains, and other forms of public transportation, and in bus and railway stations.
7. The immediate removal of all restrictions against Negro voting in the state as a means to securing greater cooperation between Negro and White Citizens in developing and carrying out this program.

N. Y. Newspapers Rap Mississippi For Voting to Abolish Public Schools

NEW YORK. — (NNPA) — Editorial comment in the two leading New York newspapers on the vote in Mississippi on a proposed amendment to the state constitution which would authorize legislative abolition of the public school system was unfavorable.

The New York Times Friday, under the heading "Mississippi Votes in Part," said:

"Mississippi this week joined Georgia, South Carolina and Louisiana in an effort to evade the Supreme Court decision against segregation in the schools. Under an amendment to the State Constitution Mississippi would authorize the Legislature to abolish public schools and pay tuition for students attending private schools.

"The amendment which would make this possible was carried by a vote of 89,434 to 38,341. Mississippi has a population of over three million, of whom 450,000 are registered as voters. Few Negroes, it is reported, voted. This is not democracy, though the vote may reflect a dominant opinion within the white race."

The New York Herald Tribune, in an editorial headed "Segregation Under Another Name," Friday called the proposed amendment "an exercise in evasion." It added:

"It also puts a rather low value on education. Presumably the sponsors are indifferent to any standards of teaching or even whether school attendance should be required at all, because the scheme calls for the state getting completely out of the educational picture.

New York Newspapers-

"But such nonsense, if it should ever be attempted, will hardly deceive the Supreme Court for this is a crude attempt to bypass the spirit of the law.

"As a lot of people in Mississippi realize, judging from the substantial size of the opposition vote to the amendment, the 'private' school notion is strictly a trick. Segregation practiced under any name is still just as unconstitutional."

Arthur Krock, New York Times' columnist, Friday noted that the stay-at-homes amounted to many more than half of those qualified to vote, and the turnout of Negro citizens was light.

To get an answer to the question of "Why?" Krock telephoned Hodding Carter, editor of The Delta Democrat-Times, published at Greenville, Mississippi.

One of the answers given by Carter, Krock said, was "an organized attempt was made to evoke a pitch of high emotion, and it succeeded in only eighteen counties (of a total of 82) where the preponderance of Negroes, two-thirds of the qualified voters, creates an acute social and economic problem. In this area the amendment carried 10 to 1, but the large majority of those who went to the polls were white.

"Elsewhere in the state the vote was close, and 'nobody seemed excited.' In Washington county, where Carter's newspaper opposed the amendment, the vote was only 2 to 1 in favor. And though a bond issue proposal to modernize the port of Greensville was up for decision, and a 60 per cent affirmation was required for its adoption, the city vote was light and the proposal barely won."

Another answer given by Carter, Krock said, was that "The most active organization in the eighteen-county area was the new, aggressive and pro-amendment white supremacy group known as Citizens' Councils. One of the leaflets was particularly effective.

"On one side was listed virtually every white leader in the state as supporting the constitutional change. On the other was a meager roster of opponents carefully selected for their provocative qualities—two editors, of whom Carter was one, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor ('Northern Branch')."

AMENDMENT IS TOPIC OF FORUM AT CORINTH

Turman, McClain Debate Merits Of Proposal

From The Commercial Appeal Corinth, Miss. Bureau

CORINTH, Miss., Dec. 4. — About 250 Mississippians, who do not want integration and yet do not want to abolish the public school system, attended a public forum held Friday night at Corinth to hear Senator Frank Turman of DeSoto County and George McClain of Tupelo explain the proposed amendment to the Constitution which would give the Legislature the power to abolish public schools.

Senator Turman, speaking in favor of the amendment and substituting for Senator William Burgin, said he had taught school 21 years and at one time served as county superintendent in a county that did not have a high school for Negroes.

He added he believed something should be done for them but that they should not attend white schools. He explained the amendment means public schools would be abolished only as a last resort.

Before that step is taken, Senator Turman said, other measures such as assignment of pupils, gerrymandering of school districts and application of police and military power will probably be tried. It is believed, he said, that we can keep Negroes out of the school 10 or 20 years with these things. He also said details of a private school system had not been worked out.

George McClain, publisher of the Tupelo, Miss., Journal speaking against the amendment, drew a round of applause from the audience when he said he was for segregation because to end it might cause civil strife, but he did not believe in anything that would eliminate one of the most important institutions in our state.

He said he believed the amendment was the most dangerous thing ever proposed for the children of Mississippi. He added he believed individuals could work out the problems in each county without interference from Jackson politicians and that we must teach both black and white to have character and pride in their own race.

Legislature gets power, if necessary

Mississippi OKs plan to abolish schools

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 22—(AP)—Mississippi gave its Legislature life-or-death power over its public schools, voting 2 to 1 yesterday for a Constitutional amendment to permit legislators to abolish state-supported schools if necessary to retain racial segregation.

Gov. Hugh White, one of the amendment's strongest backers, said he expected to call today for a special legislative session for Jan. 11 to provide funds for bringing separate Negro schools up to the level of white schools.

State officials believe Negroes would rather have good segregated schools than no schools at all.

Returns from 1140 of the state's 1825 precincts showed 81,940 votes for the amendment and 36,008 against it.

Because passage seemed assured, the turnout was light and the total vote was not expected to exceed 140,000. Registration is about 450,000.

Gov. White said schools would be abolished under the amendment only as a last resort. The amendment would permit the Legislature to turn school facilities over to private groups and to subsidize private schools.

STATE REP. JOEL BLASS, who led opposition to the amendment although favoring segregation, challenged White's statement that the measure would be used only as a last resort.

"I think that an attempt will be made to use it in January of next year on the local level," he said. "I expect to see the (school fund) appropriation made contingent upon the Legislature allowing abolition of schools on a local level."

"Then I expect within less than a year's time there will be certain counties or districts in which the schools will be abolished."

Opponents of the amendment favored a plan used in Louisiana to fight integration.

They recommended a constitutional change placing segregated schools under the state's "police powers" and said the abolition amendment was boosted for pas-

Gov. White predicted quick passage of measures providing funds for equalized separate school facilities.

SCHOOL EQUALIZATION was set up at a special session a year ago, but financing was delayed pending the Supreme Court decision, which had not come down then. The 1954 regular session of the Legislature balked at financing the entire program until some means were enacted to insure segregation.

An additional $18 million is required to complete the program.

The abolition amendment was drafted by the legal educational advisory committee, composed of high state officials.

GULFPORT, Miss., Dec. 22—(AP)—A proposed $12 million bond issue to aid in the financing of a causeway program to join Ship and Deer Islands with the coast was defeated by Harrison County voters yesterday.

Unofficial returns from 38 of the county's 42 precincts gave 4939 votes for the project and 6768 against.

The legislation, which also would have authorized the county board of supervisors to issue an additional $4 million of bonds if necessary, needed 60 per cent of the votes cast to be approved.

The proposal called for the linking of Ship Island, 12 miles away, and Deer Island, one mile away, with the coast and their development as tourist attractions.

Voters Decide School Future In Mississippi

Measure Proposes Public System End To Keep Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 20 (AP) — Mississippi faces the question of giving its Legislature power to abolish public schools in tomorrow's special election.

The "last resort" constitutional amendment facing the people's vote was designed to keep Negroes out of white schools despite the U. S. Supreme Court ruling that segregation in public education is unconstitutional.

The loss of public schools would not be too great a price to pay, amendment sponsors contend.

Opposition Hopeful

An opposition leader, state Rep. Joel Blass, said, "An overwhelming sentiment has developed in the past few days against giving the Legislature life and death power over our public schools. . ."

Opponents argue the amendment isn't necessary. Both sides insist segregation must remain in Mississippi.

Gov. Hugh White predicted a light voting turnout.

Polls open at 7-8 a.m. and close at 6 p.m.

Majority Enough

The amendment needs only a majority vote to pass.

Blass and his supporters charge that the power to abolish public schools would be the "first and only resort" pushed by "black" counties with heavy Negro populations.

These counties, mostly in the rich, agricultural delta, would rather abolish public schools than pay the cost of equalizing Negro and white schools as present laws require, he said.

'Last Resort Only'

The Legal Educational Advisory Committee, which wrote the amendment, declares it would be used only after all other methods of keeping segregated schools had failed.

And the LEAC insists the amendment is needed now as a weapon to hang over Negroes' heads, threatening them with the loss of public schools if they try to enter white schools.

Negroes will have virtually nothing to say about the decision. They total only about five per cent of Mississippi's voters, although making up 45 per cent of the state's population.

Citizens Councils' Strength Demonstrated in Miss. Vote

Anti-Integration Amendment Support 10-1 in Some Areas

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 25—The voters of Mississippi have called the politicians' hands on their asserted ability to continue segregated public schools short of their abolition.

It came on ratification of a constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to abolish public education if it takes that to get around the integration decision of the United States Supreme Court.

The politicians in sponsoring the amendment, assured citizens it would be used only as a "last resort," and expressed doubt of the necessity of ever employing it in view of other delaying maneuvers they have blue-printed to preserve segregation, as they claim, "for years to come at least."

'Additional Weapon'

Sponsors said the amendment was needed as an "additional weapon" to use in forcing Negroes to accept voluntary segregation conditioned on immediate equalization of their schools with those of the whites.

Taking the politicians at their word, the voters ratified the far-reaching proposal by more than a two to one vote in last Tuesday's special election. Fifteen of the 82 counties refused to go along on the proposition, mostly northeast hill counties predominately white populated and recipients of more state funds for their schools than they put up locally.

No single politician can claim credit for approval of the amendment, because all of them were in on it. Their major support came from the newly formed "citizens councils of white males dedicated to preservation of segregation" which campaigned state-wide for it.

Big Labor Vote

In the more than 30 counties with "citizens councils," the vote was in some instances as much as 10 to one for the amendment. Potency of the council's efforts was demonstrated in Adams County with a big labor vote. Labor opposed the amendment, but was unable to carry the river county, although in Jackson county, another labor stronghold without a council, the vote was overwhelmingly against the amendment.

Gov. Hugh White, who headed the proponents, promised to call an immediate special session to enact an over-all equalization program if the amendment was ratified. With its approval, the Governor has issued a call for a special assembly on Jan. 11 to consider the school issue.

Opponents made much of the governor's position, asserting it was tantamount to a "threat" since without the special session sufficient funds would not be available for opening of schools next September. That situation arose through failure of the 1954 regular session to follow the customary plan of voting funds for two years in approving only for the current year, and lacking 18 million dollars for next year of the required 34 millions a year for public schools.

Deal Was Made

When the proponents became worried over the statewide campaign against the amendment, a more or less "deal" was made with the strong county supervisors and municipal officers associations to gain their backing. Governor White agreed to include in the special session call state aid for municipalities, a plan backed by the supervisors since it released pressure from some of their tax sources for the cities.

Governor White has agreed to recommend that the cities get one-fourth of the new revenue anticipated from a 1-cent increase in the 2 per cent sales tax. Strong rural county opposition can be expected to the plan, since its enactment will raise the "new" money needs at the approaching session from 18 million dollars to 22 million dollars annually.

Chairmen of the legislative revenue-raising committees have drafted a tax increase program sufficient to raise the 18 million needed for schools, at the time of the blueprinting, the cities were not in the picture.

When the cities "cut" an estimated four million dollars of the added 15 million annually from the sales tax, that means enlargement of the new tax plan if schools and municipalities are to be taken care of next month.

The other planned tax increases are 1 cent in the 4 cents a pack on cigarettes, and "across the board" increases in income, beer and wine, amusement, oil-gas severance, timber severance, inheritance, and other excise items.

Figured in the school finance needs is sufficient revenues to retire 60 million dollars of bonds to immediately launch a Negro school building program to close the gap estimated by the State Department of Education at 118 million dollars.

An earlier session equalized teachers' salaries, transportation and administration at an annual cost bill of 34 million dollars, or nine millions over prior allocations.

Legislative leaders who blocked full financing of schools at the 1954 regular session are on record to support the new program. Their earlier opposition stemmed from a "wait and see" position on the then pending Supreme Court decision in the segregation cases.

School Segregation Vote

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18 (UP)—Mississippi voters decide Tuesday whether to risk giving up their public schools or face what many fear to be the ultimate end of racial segregation in education.

Overwhelmingly white, the voters are asked by top state leaders to approve a constitutional amendment which would permit the Legislature, at some future date, to abolish the public school system.

The amendment, similar to ones approved in Georgia and South Carolina, is called by its backers a "last resort" method of preserving separation of the races.

It would authorize the Legislature to set up private schools but nowhere does it provide the machinery for a private system. Public schools could be closed down statewide by two-thirds of the votes in the Legislature or in local districts on simple majority votes in each House.

In return for its ratification, the state's most powerful legislative leaders and politicians, including Gov. Hugh White, have promised a special session of the Legislature early next month to complete an ambitious school building program. They also promised to provide additional revenue which schools need to operate next year.

If the amendment is not approved, Governor White has served warning he will not call a special session, leaving the state's equalization program half finished and schools without some 18 million dollars they need for operating in 1955-56.

Opponents, composed of a few legislators and great numbers of educators and parent-teacher group, bitterly claim White's statement amounts to "blackmail." They also accuse some lawmakers from Delta counties which have large Negro populations of fomenting the abolition movement to avoid paying for decent Negro schools.

White claims the amendment is simply a protection against an "all federal autocracy" attempting to "cram integration down our throats."

He has promised that public schools will not be abolished during his administration. He claims there is no need to plan a private school program because "there is no idea in anyone's mind that public schools will be abolished."

The amendment, he said, is "a safety valve for future use in case the need arises."

Opponents accuse the first sponsors of the amendment, largely from the "black" counties, of holding White and the state superintendent of education "captive" and "duping them to help destroy an institution they both love."

State Rep. Joel Blass, major spokesman for the group opposing the amendment, said its supporters admit the U. S. Supreme Court probably will declare the proposal unconstitutional.

"They admit they have nothing to offer in place of our present school system and that other methods will maintain segregation," Blass said.

Instead, Blass suggests a Mississippi law permitting school officials to assign pupils to schools on factors other than color.

A constitutional amendment authorizing continued segregation in public schools under the state police powers, he said, also would maintain separation for years to come.

Mississippi Teachers Hear Report On Controversial School Program

JACKSON, Miss. — State Sen. George Owen of Pontotoc county, speaking to an estimated 6,000 teachers here Friday, said he would work to shut off a delay in the program to equalize both white and Negro schools in Mississippi.

The senator was one of four state officials appearing on a fact finding forum to answer questions on the controversial school program for the Mississippi Negro Teachers Association in session last week.

He said the program faces only the financial test.

CALLED A BURDEN

"Our problem in the legislature now is on whose shoulders we will place the tax burden."

Also speaking on the forum were Dr. P. H. Eason, head of the Negro Education Division of the State Department of Education; C. T. Coleman, supervisor of teacher certification for the state; and J. M. Tubb, state superintendent of education.

Eason said money spent on the equalization program "will not improve the state, but will enrich it." He predicted that a new compulsory attendance law will force greater attendance of students as school facilities improve.

Coleman explained the effects of the new school program on teacher certificates and licenses. The new certificates become effective Nov. 1, 1954.

The teachers applauded Tubb who called them the best educators in the nation.

Dr. Arenia C. Mallory of Lexington, vice-president of the association, presided over the session.

Equal School Bill Delay Loses in Mississippi

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., April 2.—The Mississippi House yesterday defeated the final effort to postpone the school equalization bill and started the program on its way for a one-year term beginning July 1.

The House defeated a motion to reconsider the vote on which the bill passed Wednesday. The bill, designed to equalize facilities at both white and Negro schools, was sent to the Senate, where its future is still uncertain.

The bill, in its present form, appropriates $50 million for two years of the program under a compromise plan.

Jackson Daily News calls for referendum on segregation issue

JACKSON, Miss., June 16—(AP)—The Jackson Daily News, in a front-page editorial, called for a referendum to let the people decide whether segregation would be maintained over the U. S. Supreme Court's unanimous decision outlawing it.

In unity there is strength, the newspaper said yesterday, and called for haste in offering the proposal to the people in every state that practices segregation.

The will of the people is the ultimate authority, the editorial said.

Any legal subterfuge set up as a roadblock can be overturned, the editorial continued, if the court finds that it is a device for preventing intermingling of the races.

Mississippi Roundup—

School Equalization Dealt Shattering Blow

JACKSON, Miss., April 21 (U.P.)—What may have been the death blow to the school equalization program was dealt in the Senate today by a one-vote defeat of the House bill outlining powers of levying local school taxes.

The final vote was 27-20, two votes less than the three-fifths majority needed for a revenue measure but that was after Harvey Pennington of Stover changed his vote from yes to no in order to hold the bill on a motion to reconsider.

Supporters said they would make a final effort, probably tomorrow, to swing the one vote needed to pass the bill that had barely cleared the House. It is said to be "heart" of the school equalization program.

School leaders picked up two votes since the bill was passed out of committee of the whole last week.

An amendment put in the bill in committee to raise from 15 to 20 mills the amount municipal separate school districts would receive as a refund from the state was defeated today after opponents explained it would cost the state $1,600,000 a biennium.

Senators accepted an amendment by Havis Sartor of Pachuta to allow school districts to receive full state allocations under the program if they levied the maximum 25 mills tax but were unable to realize the full amount required in local effort under a law passed in the special session.

Supporters of the Negro-white school equalization program insist it cannot be put into effect this July unless the bill passes.

Citizens Must Speak To Maintain Rights

Indianola, Miss.—Are we to lose our racial and national integrity and become dukes in the mass of a one race, one creed, Communistic world? I pray that the average American will not surrender the right to govern himself and will remain loyal to his children, his home and his nation.

We fail in our duty to make our stand as citizens. Silence is consent. We must express ourselves by all available means and especially by backing our elected representatives and voicing the convictions in our hearts.

We must not be told how we feel by misguided committees, individuals, and delegations. We must stand fast, no matter what, as our forefathers have done.

Coleman Outlines 3 School Moves

JACKSON, Miss., June 1 (U.P.)—Satte Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman tonight listed three positive courses of action Mississippi can take to forestall the "school crisis that was forced upon us" by a United States Supreme Court ruling outlawing racial segregation.

Coleman pledged in a television address that the state "will not shrink from the challenge. Our public school system and separate education for the races will be preserved."

Lengthy litigation was given as one solution by Coleman. He explained that the Supreme Court ruling involved four school districts, all in other states, and other cases would have to be brought from countless other districts.

"Our school system cannot be stricken down by judicial decree except as a result of a separate suit against each and every one of the thousands of school districts situated in the state," Coleman said.

A "classification" of students such as provided in a bill passed at a recent session of the State Legislature was described by the attorney general as a "legally unassailable answer to this problem for many years to come."

And he noted a third solution to block integraiton would be the provision of buildings and classrooms for combined white and Negro student bodies, who would likely swell present facilities.

Miss. Faces Deficit Financing After 22 Years in the 'Black'

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., April 24—Mississippi has turned to "deficit financing" after 22 years operation in the "black."

That results from current legislative approval of increased expenditures for ordinary governmental functions in the new biennium and defeat of added taxes to keep the state out of the "red."

The lawmakers have also refused to cut the spending pattern to fit revenues anticipated on the present tax base.

Fiscal experts estimate the deficit in the new two-year period commencing July 1 will be in excess of $10,000,000. That is without provision for financing a new Negro-white public school equalization program which will take an added $35,000,000 to the current $50,000,000 voted biennially for common schools.

When the Legislature convened last January, Gov. Hugh White presented a balanced budget. It necessitated the clipping of $8,000,000 from the current biennium, or from $145,000,000 to $137,000,000—the amount anticipated in taxes for the period July 1, 1954-June 30, 1956.

The Legislature felt that additional cuts to those proposed by the governor could be made, so it created a special budget study committee to make its own inquiry—the first time in legislative history. That committee, however, came up with the same recommended budget presented by Gov. White.

There was a lot of talk and plans to abolish some of the 106 state departments, agencies, bureaus and commissions. The "water" was to be taken out of state government without affecting its efficient operation.

Major reason for all the economy talk was the fact that tax collections have leveled off and a $27,000,000 surplus on hand when the current administration took office in January of 1952 was all spent at the 1952 legislative session.

MISSISSIPPI

Some of the surplus was used for ordinary government functions, and the rest for new buildings and equipment at the various state institutions.

With the General Assembly heading for anticipated sine die adjournment May 5, the plans have gone astray, along with the asserted good intentions of all officials to guarantee a balanced budget in the new biennium.

Governor White has warned he may veto some of the appropriations, but that action is not contemplated. At least, to the extent necessary to reduce the authorized expenditures within the $137,000,000 revenue anticipated during the next biennial period.

It was in January of 1932 when the late Gov. Mike Conner took office that a deficit of some $14,000,000 was left by the late Gov. Theodore G. Bilbo. To square things away, Gov. Conner had expenditures cut "to the bone" and the 2 per cent sales tax enacted.

At the end of the Conner administration's first two years, the state had paid off the deficit and ended the biennium with the first surplus in many administrations. The surplus was nearly $2,000,000. When the late Gov. Conner stepped from office, the surplus had been built to $4,000,000 and all accounts paid in full.

Gov. White then came in office for his first term, and after four years had built the surplus to an estimated $12,000,000.

Then the war came.

Four years later when the late Gov. Paul B. Johnson ended his tenure, he left an estimated $28,000,000 surplus with a recommendation that some of it be "salted away" for retirement of the then $22,000,000 outstanding—and uncallable—full faith and credit bonds.

The late Gov. Thomas L. Bailey came in office and the money was "salted away." Like his predecessors, the late Gov. Bailey saw to it that a cushion was left in the state treasury for that certain "rainy" day ahead.

The succeeding administration of former Gov. Fielding Wright stepped from office with all debts paid, the agencies operating on stepped-up funds and a surplus of 27 million dollars.

With the war over and taxes leveling off, the present officials took office and rather than cut expenditures, increased them and paid a lot of the excess out of the surplus.

Today, the state faces "red" operations for the first time since 1932. The lawmakers have refused to consider the leveling off of revenues and the liquidated surplus and have gone ahead with increased spending and no added taxes.

Governor White plans a later special session to seek an increase in taxes to square away his administration's obligations. Unless he does that, he will leave to his successor a lot of "tabs" to be picked up.

The "no-tax-increase" movement began in the current Legislature when opponents to the new school program, designed to close the gap between Negroes and whites in public schools, said the program was "too rich" for Mississippi's economy. They managed to keep a sufficient bloc to defeat increased taxes which require a three-fifths favorable vote.

It then developed that the school forces joined hands against any tax increases for ordinary governmental operations since they were unsuccessful in getting the neded "new money" for schools.

ADVISORY GROUP STUDIES SCHOOLS

Members Differ on Plan to Keep Segregation

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., June [illegible]—Mississippi's 25-member legal [illegible] tional advisory committee organized Wednesday with unaminous determination to prevent integration of races in state schools, but with apparent sharp disagreement on methods.

Guardedly, the special group adopted a policy statement that it had the "duty . . . to devise means and methods by which separate schools shall be maintained." And that such a plan would be submitted to the legislature.

Without determining any definite course of action, the group voted to send observers with Gov. Hugh White to attend the conference of southern governors next Thursday in Richmond, Va. Called by Gov. Thomas Stanley of Virginia to discuss the effects of the supreme court segregation ruling.

The legal advisory committee had been created by the 1954 legislature to map a plan to keep segregation in the event the US supreme court outlawed racially segregated schools.

Opinions Heard

In both a morning and afternoon session Wednesday, the committee, headed by Gov. White and including top state legal and educational and legislative officials, heard a wide range of opinions from members on how the state should proceed to keep segregated schools.

Sharpest division appeared over the question of whether or not the committee should set its goal toward abolishing the public school system—now required by the state constitution—and give state legislature freedom to make private tuition payments.

Attorney Gen. J. P. Coleman charged that he would strongly oppose any move to abolish public schools throughout the state, but that he may agree to a "local option" provision which would let individual school districts vote to abolish their public schools.

Repeal of Provisions

Coleman also recommended that the comittee seek immediate repeal of state constitutional provisions for the races which were in effect declared unconstitutional by the United States supreme court ruling.

Coleman said that he believed the state legislature should also do away with the present compulsory education law. This was supported by several other members of the committee.

[illegible] speaker Walter Sillers, Rosedale, who was elected vice-chairman of the committee, told the body flatly that he "did not see how we can maintain a system of public schools and have them segregated under the supreme court ruling."

Sillers indicated that he will urge the committee to consider the plan he offered during the special session of the Legislature last December to give the Legislature power to abolish the public school system and provide funds to children to obtain an education.

Under his plan, the schools would be sold to private "corporations," which would operate them along the same segregated lines as the present school system.

But Sillers, ruffled by statements of several members of the committee Wednesday, charged that he would not serve on the committee if it intended "to solve the problem on a temporary basis."

He said he believed that the committee was directed to make recommendations "for a permanent solution to this problem."

Chief Justice Harvey McGehee of the state supreme court said he believed that "95 per cent of the problem can be solved on a voluntary basis."

The chief justice said he favored maintaining segregated schools "and to do everything possible to see it is legally done."

But he told the committee that he felt "we ought to consider at the outset without antagonizing the 95 per cent of the Negroes who are with us what can be worked out on a voluntary basis."

McGehee said he "refused to believe that more than five per cent of the Negro students want to go to white schools."

He said that Negroes must consider that if they were integrated into white schools it would eliminate the 7000 Negro teachers in this state.

State Superintendent of Education J. M. "Jack" Tubb supported Judge McGehee's suggestion of proceeding with voluntary segregation in the schools.

"I feel that we should not let the 95 per cent of the Negroes who want to maintain segregation think that we are trying to penalize them, because if we do then the problem will be more difficult."

Tubb urged continuation of construction of equal schools for Negroes to encourage them to attend their own schools."

"If a Negro doesn't have a school, the only place he has to go is the white school," Tubb asserted.

Gov. White charged that he did not favor the idea of launching a broad construction program of Negro schools "until we see if segregation is going to continue to work."

White indicated that he feared voluntary segregation may not provide areas in which the white people are badly out-numbered by Negroes with enough protection against an attempt on the part of Negroes to go to white schools.

Rep. Russell Fox, Claiborne county, said that he did not rely on voluntary segregation to keep segregated schools in his county, which has 70 per cent Negroes.

"We are going to have to depend on the white people of Mississippi to help us maintain the schools of Claiborne county."

The tersely worded policy statement adopted by the committee that its only job will be to consider "ways and means" of keeping segregated schools was made upon the recommendation of Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin.

Gartin said that he believed the committee "ought to go on record as being determined to maintain segregation and that it is not our intention to integrate the schools of Mississippi."

When both Gartin and Sillers were nominated for the post of vice-chairman of the committee, Gartin withdrew with the statement that he was "in a political campaign" and did not desire to inject the race in the committee's deliberations. Gartin is a candidate for the United States Senate against Sen. James O. Eastland.

The committee voted to set up subgroups on constitutional, statutory, finance and advisory relations with Negro leaders. The body also voted to proceed to employ technical assistance in developing its program.

Named from the committee to accompany Gov. White on his trip to the southern governors meeting were Sillers, Coleman and Rep. Ney Gore, Quitman county, who was elected secretary of the 25-member group.

Equal Negro Schools To Cost Mississippi 120-160 Millions, Official Survey Discloses

Legislators Agreed To Building Program In Hope Race Would Be Satisfied With Separate Facilities — State Would Have To Issue Bonds

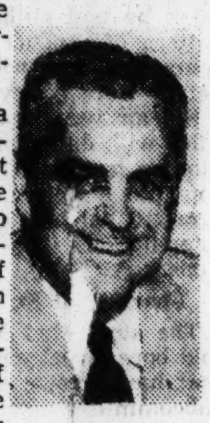
By KENNETH TOLER

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 2.—Taxpayers of Mississippi are in for a terrific jolt when the cost of equalizing facilities in the racially-segregated public school system is released in an official survey.

The survey, being worked from three sources—two state and one Federal—is expected to be ready for publication shortly.

Fact is, one of the reports has been compiled, except for a few minor adjustments.

A "peep" at one of the reports shows the school building equalization cost to be in the neighborhood of 160 million dollars.



Mr. Toler

However, a note on the report states that figure can be scaled down to around 120 million dollars if construction costs can be held to the present figure of $7.50 a square foot paid thus far by the state.

However, with the national average per square foot construction cost averaging $11, those preparing the survey are fearful that Mississippi may be forced to a higher figure, and as a result the larger amount billed to the taxpayers if segregation is to be continued on an overall equalized basis.

Those figures face legislators who went on record at the recent special session to support a building program if the school abolition constitutional amendment is ratified by the voters on presentation to them in a special election Dec. 21.

Sponsors of the assertedly "stand-by" amendment believe with its ratification, Negroes will be willing to continue segregation provided their schools are immediately equalized with the whites. Even with the amendment placed in the constitution, the gamble is great and costly.

The estimated cost of school building equalization would not come at one time.

The plan is to launch the program over a period of years on the assumption that Negroes will not attempt integration during the time.

With such a cost-bill facing them, the lawmakers can be expected to take but one position—issuance of bonds.

Millions Already Expended

And since the other equalization features of the dual system which went in effect last July, are costing an additional nine million dollars a year, it is doubtful whether the taxpayers will be in a position to stand too much increase at the moment.

The teacher salary, transportation and administration equalization program now in effect is costing 34 million dollars annually for that phase of equalization.

On top of that, provision would have to be made for the annual retirement of the construction bonds, unless the program is launched on a smaller pay as you go scale.

Even with that sort of program, at least six million dollars in addition to the nine million dollars now needed would be required through new or increased taxes.

These figures show the tremendous problem facing a scheduled special legislative session early next year.

Consolidations Included

Adding to the enormity of the construction costs is the fact the estimated money needs take into consideration consolidation among the present schools.

Despite the estimated 120 to 160 million dollars said to be needed to bring Negro schools up to an equal with the whites, and at the same time improve some of the poorer types of white schools, the taxpayers have since 1946 spent in excess of 65 million dollars for new school buildings. Most of that construction, however, was in the municipalities and not the rural areas where the needed are greater.

Of the 65 million dollars already spent, an estimated 45 million dollars went for white schools, and approximately 20 million dollars for Negroes. The state, incidentally, put up only nine million dollars of the expenditures, the rest coming from locally levied taxes.

Biggest need for new Negro schools are said to be in the counties along the Mississippi River, where that race has its heaviest population. The area extends from Tunica County southward down the river to Wilkinson County on the Louisiana line. The cost-needs in those counties range from one million dollars up to the high of $2,500,000 in Bolivar County.

20-Year Expense: 840 Millions

Considerable expenditures are outlined also for Clay, Noxubee and Marshall Counties under the "equalization table," those counties are said to be in the "over one million dollar group."

De Soto County, just south of Memphis, is shown with a disparity in excess of one million dollars.

Projecting the school cost into the next 20 years, the expenditure in that period on the present level and using the construction high of 160 million dollars, will amount to 840 million dollars.

It figures this way: 34 million dollars a year for operational costs or 680 million dollars in the next 20 years, plus the 160 million dollars for new buildings.

In the meantime, other building needs and repairs will enter the scene, along with long overdue salary raises for teachers. Then there are increases other departments and agencies, along with the colleges, will be seeking in the years ahead.

Agencies Want Still More

With over 106 state agencies, and one added at the recent special session, such a thing as abolishments seem out of the question.

While the administrative savings through abolition would be a small per cent, however when other expenses which go along with them are likewise eliminated, the taxpayer squeeze will be minimized to a larger degree than those who face abolishment are wont to admit along the percentage line.

All in all, the picture, from a financial standpoint, is more tax dollars from the state as well as local levels. It would seem there is a big job cut out for the recently formed Mississippi Taxpayers Protective League, not to mention the demands that could come from the electors in next year's elections

Gov. White orders newsmen from office over story used

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 18 —(AP)— Gov. Hugh White brandished his walking cane in an Associated Press newsman's face and furiously ordered him to "get the hell out of this office" for what the governor termed a breach of faith in a news story.

In the same outburst, the 73-year-old governor said a Jackson Daily News reporter who had not yet arrived at the press conference yesterday could "stay the hell out of here."

The governor accused AP Correspondent Sam Johnson and Daily News Reporter Phil Stroupe of reporting what White called an "off-the-record" statement he had made Tuesday during an open meeting of the legal educational advisory committee.

WHEN JOHNSON walked into the governor's press conference, White turned on him, saying, "Why did you report what I told you not to report?"

Johnson answered the statement had been made in an open meeting and was fair comment.

But the governor shook his cane and shouted, "open meeting or no open meeting, I told you that was off the record."

After Johnson left the governor's office, W. F. Minor, Jackson correspondent for the New Orleans Times-Picayune, told Gov. White, "I don't think any of us are welcome here this afternoon" and got up to leave.

"That's right," the governor said, "you can get the hell out too."

THE ALTERCATION began with Gov. White's refusal to retract a previous statement that he would not call a special session of the legislature to finance public schools if the proposed constitutional amendment empowering the legislature to abolish public schools were not ratified in the Dec. 21 election.

White interrupted Dean Robert Farley of the University of Mississippi law school during discussion from the floor at the meeting and continued on the subject with heated statements. Then, he shouted to newsmen in the rear of the room, "that's off the record."

SILLERS ALSO AGREES ON SEGREGATION ISSUE

Backs Eastland, White On Plan To Keep Status Quo

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 10.—(UP)—Speaker Walter Sillers of the Mississippi House of Representatives said Tuesday he "heartily approves" the stand of Senator James O. Eastland on segregation "and his amendment to the Constitution revesting in the states exclusive jurisdiction over schools unlawfully usurped by the Supreme Court."

"I am in full accord with his proposal that a national organization be established to carry on an aggressive and unrelenting fight to maintain segregation," Mr. Sillers said in a formal statement.

The Delta lawmaker said the decision "will become as unpopular as was the 18th Amendment (prohibition) to the Constitution and will be more honored in its violation than in its observance."

Mr. Sillers commended Gov. Huh White for saying he would use his police powers if necessary to maintain segregation and former Gov. Fielding L. Wright "for the support which he is giving the Governor."

NAACP leader appeals to South on school problem

COLUMBUS, Miss., Dec. 13—(AP)—A national officer of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said integration will work in Southern states if public officials "adopt law-abiding, progressive attitudes."

Gloster B. Current urged Southern cities "not to allow politicians and bigots to influence them to sacrifice their schools on the altar of race prejudice. Current spoke to a meeting of the NAACP's Southeast regional advisory board yesterday.

Current said Mississippi and other Southern states, including Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina, will fail "in their objective of preserving separate schools for Negroes and whites."

CURRENT SAID the NAACP "will use every legal means at its disposal to combat . . . tactics by bigots and others resorting to frantic efforts to circumvent the court's ruling."

He specifically attacked the "citizens councils" formed in Mississippi to prevent integration and "other hate groups" seeking a method of dodging the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling that segregation in public education is unconstitutional.

Current predicted financial collapse of school systems where states maintain separate Negro and white schools.

"School systems which are financed through out-of-state bonds and long-term investments will find that these securities will be unmarketable throughout the nation.

"Georgia has already experienced difficulty (because) its school revenue certificates offered for sale in Ohio have been declared ineligible investments," he said.

Current told the NAACP's Southeat Regional Board that Georgia has "already experienced difficulty" in offering school revenue certificates for sale in Ohio. Mississippi schools were termed "already in a weakened financial condition."

He said Southern states which have adopted measures to circumvent the Supreme Court's anti-segregation school ruling would find their actions detrimental.

NAACP Sees Money Trouble For Schools

COLUMBUS, Miss., Dec. 13 (U.P.) — A leader of a national Negro group predicted financial troubles yesterday for Southern states which try to fight integration of the races in their public schools.

Gloster B. Current, director of the branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said such states will find that out-of-state securities necessary to help finance schools will be "unmarketable throughout the nation."

Youth Congress Blasts Proposal To Shut Schools

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 4—College and high school students forming the seventh annual Mississippi Youth Congress Saturday voted overwhelmingly against a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to abolish public schools to prevent racial integration.

The action was in sharp contrast to the one-sided vote by which the Legislature approved the amendment. Mississippi citizens will vote on the amendment Dec. 21.

Robert Bradley of Millsaps College (Methodist) in Jackson offered a resolution against the proposed amendment. He was a member of the Senate, made up of 70 college students.

The Senate unanimously adopted the resolution, and it was also approved by 52 of the 55 high school students who made up the House assembly.

No student in either chamber spoke in favor of the proposed amendment.

Another action of the Congress was a recommendation that telephone rates be based on the "minute-message-mile" basis as proposed by the Federal Communications Commission for the present "time-used" factor.

Ernest Pinson of Mississippi College, who offered the proposal, pointed out that FCC had said a 1 per cent reduction in telephone rates in the nation would result from the new charge basis.

The delegates named Bob Harris of Millsaps as president pro tem of the Senate, and Betty Jane Cleveland of Central High in Jackson, as speaker of the House.

Mrs. H. B. Todd of Mississippi College is director of the Congress participated in by 13 high schools and 10 colleges.

ssippi Now Facing Greatest Problems, Senator Tells Group

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

KOSCIUSKO, Miss., Oct. 23.

"Mississippi is now facing some of its greatest problems since reconstruction days," emphasized Stokes Sanders, Attala county senator and editor-publisher of the Kosciusko Star-Herald, who was guest speaker at a dinner meeting of the Kosciusko Business and Professional Women's club.

"Two of these are the school problem and taxation," he pointed out.

For the first time in over 20 years, the state has the prospect of deficit spending, he said. "The legislature is faced with the task of keeping Mississippi on a sound financial footing and at the same time providing better educational opportunities."

As a solution to the school problem, Senator Sanders revealed that the legislature has established a minimum foundation program of education for all boys and girls, regardless of race or place of residence.

Disclosed as a second phase was the program of equal facilities for all children which will be proposed at a special session of the legislature in January.

The speaker voiced the opinion that inauguration of this program depended upon whether or not the proposed amendments to the constitution are adopted.

Stressing the costliness of the program, the Kosciusko editor said that the money would be spent in vain if the state is not given every legal weapon to continue segregation.

"A constitutional amendment authorizing abolition of public schools is needed as a last resort," he said.

"Our present constitution provides for separate public schools for white and Negro children, which is defiance of the supreme court ruling."

He stressed the fact that for the first time since Mississippi has had a constitutional system of public schools, the new proposal would delete the color line as a standard for the legislature.

He urged adoption of the school amendment to be voted on, Dec. 21, so as to unite the hands of the legislature.

Miss. Voting. Controversion On Private p. 8 School Plan allowed

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 20 (AP). Mississippi faces the question of giving its Legislature power to abolish public schools in tomorrow's special election.

The "last resort" constitutional amendment facing the people's vote was designed to keep Negroes out of white schools despite the U.S. Supreme Court ruling that segregation in public education is unconstitutional.

The loss of public schools would not be too great a price to pay, amendment sponsors contend.

An opposition leader, state Rep. Joel Blass, said, "An overwhelming sentiment has developed in the past few days against giving the Legislature life and death power over our public schools . . ."

Opponents argue the amendment isn't necessary.

MISSISSIPPI SHUNNED SCHOOL ISSUE VOTING

Only One-Third Of Electors Voted On Abolition

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 30.—Official returns in the recent public school abolition constitutional amendment, released Thursday by Secretary of State Heber Ladner, show less than one-third of the estimated 500,000 qualified electors ratified the proposal by a two to one vote.

Of the 152,927 votes cast, 106,832 were for ratification of the standby amendment, with 46,095 against it.

Fifteen of the 82 counties cast more votes against than for; nine were in the heavily white populated northeast section, and the other six along the Gulf Coast in South Mississippi. They were Alcorn, Benton, George, Hancock, Harrison, Itawamba, Jackson, Lee, Pearl River, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Stone, Tippah, Tishomingo and Union. Those counties voted two to one against ratification, or 23,791 to 11,412.

The 27 counties known to have "citizens councils of white males dedicated to preservation of segregation," voted eight to one for ratification, or 43,562 to 5,576. The councils campaigned for ratification.

Proponents are on record not to use the amendment unless that last resort step is necessary to prevent mixing the races in public schools as ordered by the United States Supreme Court.

Gov. Hugh White has called a special legislative session for Jan. 11 to enact a full equalization program as an inducement to Negroes to not seek integration under the court decision.

WHITE TAILORS CALL FOR MISSISSIPPIANS

Legislators To Work Ou Tax, School, Voter Issues

SESSION BEGINS JAN. 1

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 28. — Gov. Hugh White Tuesday pu the finishing touches to his proc lamation for a Jan. 11 specia public school equalization-municipal aid session of the Legislature.

The proclamation was signed by the Governor and Secretary of State Heber Ladner and sent to a printer for copies for mailing to the 189 legislators.

Governor White said the proclamation will be issued as of Wednesday and mailed when the copies are completed.

New Money Sought

The Governor announced the call after last week's ratification of a constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to abolish public schools if it takes that to preserve segregation. The vote was about two to one with less than one third of the estimated 500,000 qualified electors participating in the Dec. 21 special election.

Governor White said the call will set out the following purposes of the special session:

A provision increasing the educational requirements of applicants for voter status. The amendment is expected to sharply curtail registration of Negroes.

Insert another amendment ratified in the November general election permitting corporations to issue preferred stock without voting rights. It is designed to attract new capital to the state for promotion of the state's "Balance Agriculture with Industry" program.

Insert the school abolition amendment in the constitution.

Tax increases for sufficient new money to finance the 1954 teacher salary - transportation - administration equalization program and issuance of bonds to launch a Negro school building program to bring them nearer a par with those of the whites.

Legislation to give state aid to financially distressed municipalities.

Other matters may be submitted by the Governor as the session gets under way. Only matters submitted by the Governor, except resolutions and investigations, may be considered at special sessions.

Governor White does not anticipate efforts at the session to implement the school abolition amendment except increased taxes for its financing. He said it is planned as a "last resort" and nothing has developed for its use or for legislation providing for its employment to preserve segregation.

The plan is to use the amendment as an "additional weapon" to influence Negroes to accept segregation, despite the Supreme Court decision, conditioned on their schools being immediately equalized with the whites.

Municipal Aid Program

The municipal aid program calls for earmarking 25 per cent of the added revenue anticipated from a one cent increase in the state's two per cent sales tax. If that is provided, an additional four million dollars a year must be programmed, as the tentative schedule calling for 18 million dollars in new revenue does not provide for municipal aid.

Final draft of the tax increase program is expected next week by the Legal Educational Advisory Committee. Other proposed increases include upping the cigaret tax from four to five cents a pack and "across the board" increases in income, privilege, amusement, beer and wine, franchise and oil-gas-timber severance taxes.

Although Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin said the session can complete its work in several weeks, others are less optimistic. Chairman Hilton Waits of the House Ways and Means Committee believes it will take longer than two months to work out the overall school equalization financing program.

Representative Waits, of Washington County, does not anticipate any effort to implement the school abolition amendment at next month's session. That belief is held by Chairman Earl Evans Jr., of Canton, of the Senate Finance Committee.

MISSISSIPPI TO VOTE ON ABOLITION TODAY; SEE SMALL TURNOUT

Less Than Half The State's 500,000 Legal Electors May Ballot On Schools

FACTORS ARE VARIED

Lack Of Personalities And Christmas Shopping Rush Given As Reasons — Tally Of 200,000 Predicted

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 20. — Less than half the state's estimated 500,000 qualified electors are expected to vote Tuesday on a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to abolish public schools as the last in a series of planned maneuvers to get by the Supreme Court's integration decision.

Lack of personalities and the voting coming midst the Christmas shopping rush figure in the anticipated small vote. Some observers estimated the t[urnout] will hardly reach 200,000.

No White Prediction

Gov. Hugh White, chairman of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee sponsoring the amendment as an "additional weapon" for continuance of segregation, would not predict the vote. He said from reports, however, the amendment will gain ratification.

On the other hand, Miss Alma Hickman, retired college professor of Hattiesburg and onetime president of the Mississippi Education Association, said a "big silent" vote will turn the tide.

Governor White's group, which includes the entire congressional delegation, except one, all state officials, leaders in the Mississippi education and administrators associations and other strong groups, insist the amendment will be a "standby" for use only as a last resort.

To Call Special Meeting

If it is ratified, Governor White plans to call a special legislative session Jan. 11 to vote funds for schools next year and for launching a 60-million-dollar Negro school building program.

Miss Hickman, who heads the opposition group under the banner of "Friends of Segregated Public Schools," insists the amendment should not be authorized until other delaying steps have been exhausted. She is afraid legislators from the so called "black" counties will attempt to withdraw from public education and set up private schools and not assume financial responsibility for public schools in other areas.

J. J. Tubb, state superintendent of education, favors the amendment and has assured citizens he will oppose its use before it becomes a "last resort" to prevent integration.

In Two Sections

The amendment is divided into two abolition sections:

It will take a two-thirds vote of the Legislature to abolish the statewide tax-supported public schools, and only a majority vote to authorize a county or separate school district to take that action.

At the same time, the amendment permits the Legislature to continue to support public education without reference to "separate, but equal." Proponents contend the Supreme Court has stricken the segregated provision, and the amendment is necessary to authorize the Legislature to continue to support public schools.

A heavy vote in favor of the amendment is expected in the 54 of the 82 counties with citizens councils composed of "white males dedicated to preservation of segregation." The councils have been waging a statewide campaign in support of the amendment, and have urged a big vote turnout.

Special elections will be held in Lafayette and Montgomery Counties where legislative vacancies are to be filled, while in Harrison County the issue is a 12-million-dollar bond issue for construction of causeways to outlying islands, and a countywide stock law in Forest County.

The polls open at 7 a.m. and close at 6 p.m.

oVters will not be required to present their poll tax receipts.

Mississippians Approve Anti-Integration Move

Vote To Let Legislature End Public Schools If Necessary To Preserve Segregation

From Wire Dispatches

Jackson, Miss., Dec. 21.—Mississippi voters today ratified a "last-resort" constitutional amendment permitting abolition of public schools if necessary to maintain school segregation.

Governor Hugh White said he would issue a call tomorrow summoning the Legislature in session January 11 to enact a school equalization program and appropriate school operating funds for next year. White's call had been conditioned on passage of the amendment.

Returns from 1,067 of 1,825 precincts gave 74,572 votes for the amendment and 30,236 against.

The precincts counted were from all areas of the state and included both city and rural areas.

Few Bother To Vote

The amendment, similar to those approved already by Georgia and South Carolina, gives the Legislature standby authority to abolish the public-school system and subsidize private schools to continue separate Negro and White school systems.

It was designed to bypass the United States Supreme Court ruling banning segregation in public schools.

Voter interest was light.

Christmas shopping apparently occupied the citizens' minds instead of the amendment affecting the state's educational future, despite the hot arguments between sponsors and opponents of the amendment.

It appeared no more than 125,000 ballots would be cast in the special election. The state has an estimated voter strength of 450,000.

Other Methods Urged

The Legal Educational Advisory Committee, which wrote the "last-resort" amendment, contended it was needed now as a weapon to fight desegregation.

Opponents argued that the amendment absolutely was not necessary now; that other methods could prevent mixing of Negro and white children for 10 to 20 years.

They recommended a constitutional change placing segregated schools under the State's "police powers," as Louisiana did.

An opposition leader, State Representative Joel Blass, declared the amendment was boosted by legislators from counties with heavy Negro populations for economic reasons.

Charges Cost Shirked

He charged they want a private school system to avoid the cost of equalizing Negro and white schools as required by present laws.

The amendment provides:

1. The state may provide, support, and maintain public schools.
2. The Legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish schools state-wide.
3. By a majority vote, the Legislature could set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.
4. Public school buildings and facilities could be sold, rented, or leased to private corporations or individuals.
5. The State could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

LEGISLATORS ENDORSE ABOLITION PROPOSAL

Mississippi's Delegation Al In Favor Of It With One Exception

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 19.—Mississippi's entire congressional delegation, with one exception, has endorsed the proposed public school abolition constitutional amendment and will vote for its ratification in Tuesday's special election.

Announcement of their support for the amendment, which is designed as a "last resort" step to preserve segregation, was made Sunday by the Legal Educational Advisory Committee headed by Gov. Hugh White.

Endorsing the amendment were Senators James O. Eastland and John Stennis, and Representatives Thomas Abernethy, Jamie Whitten, Frank Smith, John Bell Williams and Arthur Winstead.

Only As Last Resort

Previously, the five aspirants for Governor in the 1955 election endorsed the amendment as the "best assurance of preserving segregation through equalization of the dual system to encourage Negroes to agree to continuance of the present segregated public schools." All proponents have pledged that the amendment would be used only as a last resort to preserve segregation.

Here is what some of the congressional leaders said with reference to the amendment:

Senator Eastland: "I shall cast my vote in favor of the school amendment. It is my considered judgment that if the amendment is not adopted the day will be hastened when we have interracial schools in Mississippi. The defeat of the amendment will lend aid and comfort to those who are attempting to force the mixture of the races in our schools. Southern people must resist by every legal and honorable means the attempt to destroy our civilization. . . . An overwhelming victory for the amendment will have a very favorable reaction on public sentiment over the entire country and will greatly aid the South and decide which lies ahead. As I see the matter the choice in the election is between segregation and integrated schools. I shall cast my vote for what I believe will continue segregation."

Comment By Stennis

Senator Stennis: "I look upon the proposed amendment as a desirable and necessary tool for possible use in our effort to retain the highest possible measure of control over our educational system. In supporting the amendment I am also expressing a firm faith in future legislators and in the people that they would not abolish our public schools except as a very last resort in preserving the separation of the races which we believe is necessary in order to preserve the integrity of our blood stream. In voting for the amendment I certainly do not feel that I am voting to abolish the public schools, and I would vigorously oppose their abolition except as a very last resort and as a necessary step in preserving our racial integrity."

Representative Abernethy, First District: "After the most careful study and consideration I have concluded that the proposed amendment to the state constitution affords us a method of maintaining the segregated public school system which we now enjoy and all wish to maintain. I am interested in this important question as a citizen of our state. But my interest goes deeper than that. As the father of three children of school age, naturally my interest has been intensified. With due respect for the views and opinions of those to the contrary, I shall vote for the amendment, firmly believing when I do that its adoption will help us save and perpetuate our segregated public school system."

Representative Whitten, Second District: "I am certain we can and will retain segregated public schools in Mississippi with the question up for repeal of constitutional requirements only. I believe it will be a mistake not to pass it."

No Stand By Colmer

Representative Smith, Third District: "I support the proposed constitutional amendment because I believe it will be an important step in a united fight to preserve our dual school system in Mississippi. I believe that passage of the amendment will do much to clear the air of many mistaken assumptions and make possible continuation of a program which will enable us to keep our separate schools and at the same time provide better education for all the children of our state."

Representative Winstead, Fifth District: "Am voting for and supporting the proposed constitutional amendment. Feel this will strengthen our hand in maintaining segregated public schools in Mississippi."

Representative W. M. Colmer of the Sixth District has not taken a public stand on the issue.

Miss. Majority Vote to Decide School Abolition Plan's Fate

Final Verdict on Amendment Due in Dec. 21 Special Election

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 18—The final decision on whether Mississippi's constitution will be amended to permit abolition of its public schools as a "last resort" against their desegregation is now up to the people.

It was handed them this week by the legislature in a special session called by Gov. Hugh White solely to determine whether that history-making step will be authorized as a bypass to the decision of the supreme court of the United States that the segregated schools be integrated.

Ratification or rejection of the amendment will be voted in a special election called for Dec. 21.

Assembly's Action

Although it will require only a majority vote of those participating to ratify the amendment, its submission was not as easily obtained at the hands of the lawmakers. To gain submission of the amendment it required a two-thirds vote of each branch on three separate days in each. However, even that large vote was more than subscribed by the 189 legislators.

Sponsors are confident it will be many years before it may develop that the abolition step will be necessary, if at all. They feel there are sufficient other "delaying" laws already on the statute books to insure continuation of the dual system for many years. They include a law for "assignment" of pupils; necessity that suits be filed in each of the more than 2,000 separate school districts; use of the state's police power to prevent violence should integration be attempted; gerrymandering of school districts, and last, but not least, the application of "economic pressure" by Citizens Councils to gain Negro consent to voluntary segregation.

2 Negative Votes

Strongest support for the amendment was given in the 49-member Senate where only 2 negative votes were cast against its submission. On the House side, the final tally showed only 14 of the 140 representatives against it.

The amendment was drafted by a 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee composed of leading officials and citizens, headed by Governor White, and created at the 1954 regular session in anticipation of the adverse supreme court ruling. It was mandated to draft a plan to get around the decision which would preserve the dual system notwithstanding.

Briefly, here is what the amendment, which would wipe out all laws guaranteeing separate, but equal, public schools for all children, will do:

1. Authorize the legislature, on a two-thirds vote, to abolish public schools statewide.

2. Or authorize the legislature, by a majority vote, to empower local school districts to abolish their schools (local option).

3. Authorize the legislature to make funds available directly to children to attend schools of their choice, private or otherwise.

4. Authorize the legislature to sell or lease existing school buildings, obviously to private groups for operation of private institutions.

Option Clause Opposed

Major opposition centered around the "local option" provision due to its authorization taking only a majority vote of the legislature. The assumption is that a county could abolish its schools and not interfere with similar operations in counties able to "handle the situation."

Big point raised by the opposition was the fear that if the state vacated the public school field the federal government would step in and set up integrated schools.

A hidden factor in gaining easy legislative approval of the amendment was a statement by Governor White. He said he will not call a needed special session next year to vote funds for operation of schools in the 1955-56 term "under existing laws."

Funds for 1 Year

Since the 1954 regular session set precedent by voting funds for only one year's operation of schools instead of the usual two years, many of those opposed to the amendment "strung along" for it. That was particularly true of school authorities over the state.

The next regular session is not until January of 1956, and unless a special assembly is called by the governor before that there will be no funds for common schools next year.

Those against the amendment, but voting for it, realized that was necessary in order to gain a special session next year. They are confident it will be almost impossible in the near future to get two-thirds of the legislators to vote for abolition of the system statewide.

Another controlling factor was a pledge of the LEAC that if the amendment is ratified and next year's special session called. that its members would support an appropriation for new Negro school buildings. Many Negro leaders have expressed themselves as being willing to continue segregation on a voluntary basis provided their schools are immediately equalized with those of the whites.

Governor White and other leaders are confident that the Negro leadership will "go along" on the present basis if their opportunities are at long last equalized.

ABOLITION PROPOSAL TOPS SECOND HURDLE IN MISSISSIPPI HOUSE

'Last Resort' Move To Save Segregation Is Up For Third Vote Today

SENATE OK IS ASSURED

Legislators Again Beat Down Amendment To Increase Majority Required For Local District Use

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 9.—With sufficient strength to make their objective secure, backers of a constitutional amendment authorizing abolition of public schools as a "last resort" blockade against desegregation gained its adoption Thursday on the second of three required approvals in the House of Representatives.

In order to complete House consideration, that branch of the Legislature returns Friday for final adoption to have the way for Senate consideration next week and possible adjournment then of the current special session. Each branch must approve the amendment by a two-thirds vote on three separate days.

Referendum Dec. 21

After the amendment clears the Senate—assured in view of its endorsement by more than the required vote—it goes to the voters in a special election Dec. 21 for acceptance or rejection. Ratification will require a majority vote of the electors.

House approval Thursday was by a vote of 108 to 22, compared to the first favorable tally Wednesday of 109 to 24. Sponsors hope for a bigger favorable vote on final adoption.

Proponents of the amendment, the state's answer to the Supreme Court's May 17 integration mandate, insist it will not be employed until every other legal avenue to bypass the decision has been used. They feel sufficient laws are on the books to assure continuation of the dual system for at least 10 years.

A second effort by a group headed by Representative John Farese of Benton-Tippah Counties, to change the amendment recommended by a 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee, was unsuccessful Thursday as on Wednesday.

Defeated 75 To 54

Representative Farese sought to change from a majority vote of the Legislature if it is called on to use the amendment to a two-thirds tally the necessary vote to authorize local school districts to abolish their schools. The higher vote is now required in event the Legislature is asked to abolish public schools on a statewide basis.

The Farese amendment was downed 75 to 54.

When Representative Joel Blass of Stone County asked how anyone could suffer by requiring the higher legislative vote. Representative Hilton Waits of Washington County, who originally favored that vote, said he had agreed tot he majority as a compromise with other members of the Advisory Committee.

Two members spoke against second adoption of the proposal. They were Representatives Sam Johnson of Tippah County and Delos Burks of Pearl River County.

Representative Johnson argued the amendment is not needed "until we have exhausted every other effort to preserve segregation." He quoted Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman as saying that a student "assignment" law sponsored by Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County "was enough to keep the courts busy considering the state's fight for many years to come."

Motion Tabled

Answering Representative Burks' position that the substitute plan should be presented before the abolition proposal is considered, Representative Pettis Wtlley of Perry County said there is no danger of the Legislature not providing adequate funds for schools "so long as they are segregated."

After completing consideration of the amendment, the House tabled a motion to reconsider its previous adoption of a resolution giving them $7 a day for living expenses during the current special session. Opponents were unable to gain a roll call on the resolution, which had been adcpted 61 to 54.

Approval was also given by the House to a bill permitting issuance of medical scholarship loans to Negroes for out-of-state study. The measure was said to be necessary in order to discourage efofrts of Negroes to gain admission to the four year college new under construction in Jackson.

A previously passed scholarship bill provided that no loans would be made to students except those attending the state medical school.. That left the way open for state Negroes to seek entrance to the all-white college.

Other Action

House approval was also given a bill correcting a 1954 regular session statute which had failed to include refunds to local political subdivisions for tax exemptions on school levies under the Homestead Exemption Law.

Four bills affecting particular counties were passed by the Senate before it adjourned until afternoon. They will, if later approved by the House, authorize:

Webster County to transfer $162 from the "Topshaw drainage bond fund" to the county road fund, and the town of Eupora to transfer $1,902 from th[illegible] fund" to the general fun[illegible]

uthorize Clay County super sors to issue $400,000 in gene obligation bonds for hard-surf ing Highways 46 and 47.

The other measure would mit Monroe County farmer gain refunds for agricultural poses from an additional one in the gasoline tax to be on there next week.

School Amendment Passed in Mississippi

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 17.—A State constitutional amendment allowing the Legislature to abolish public schools if necessary to maintain racial segregation received final legislative approval yesterday.

Sponsors said the amendment is necessary in Mississippi's fight to keep segregated schools despite the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in public education.

They insist the stand-by power would be used only as a "last resort" after other methods failed.

The amendment will be voted on by the people December 21.

The abolition amendment sped through the Senate on three required readings with only two dissenting votes.

The House of Representatives passed the amendment almost as easily last week.

If the people ratify the amendment, it will be inserted in the State constitution at the next Legislature.

Mississippi Roundup—

New Segregation Policy Decided Upon

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 19 (U.P.)—What appears to be one of Mississippi's most efficient boards also is one of the most secretative—the college board, officially called the Board of Trustees of Institutions of Hi[illegible]ning.

As is the practice of any number of state agencies and boards handling public business, the college board always meets in closed session and hands out what it wants the public to know afterwards. A good example of how that works came up this week.

The board met to consider the application of a Negro to the University of Mississippi law school, a touchy issue but one of wide public interest because Mississippi has been successful so far in maintaining segregation on all levels of public schools and because this was known to be a move blessed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

After an all-day meeting, the board issued a statement saying the Negro, Medgar Evers of Bayou, had been refused admission, at least for the Fall term, because he failed to comply with "the rules and regulations of the law school" by not submitting two letters of recommendation from prominent citizens of his community.

Although members were questioned after the meeting, they refused to give out any further information. The next day it was learned from roundabout sources that the board had established a far-reaching policy to prevent integration of the state's undergraduate and graduate schools. The board voted to accept a proposal by Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman to require character recommendations from five alumni "who have been personally acquainted with the applicant for two years."

When reporters called for minutes of the meeting, which are supposed to be public, they were told that they would not be available "until next week" because they had not been transcribed and Board Chairman H. M. Ivey of Meridian and Secretary E. R. Jobe were in Houston, Tex., attending a regional educatioal meeting.

Had it not been for unofficial "leaks" only board members and a handful of state officials would know that the board had a new segregation policy, which in no way differs from the state's announced intention of keeping all schools segregated by every legal means at hand.

There are, however, members on the board who have advocated being more open with the state's business. So far they are in the minority.

If legislators remain in special session past next week it probably will be because of the rhubarb over where, if at all, to put the proposed lethal gas execution chamber.

It now appears that a majority of the Senate would put it at Parchman State Penitentiary, but it looks like a divided House will have first shot at that proposal, which is set for special order at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Mrs. Wilma Sledge of Sunflower County is leading a bloc against the penitentiary site—people in Sunflower County don't want it—and she has declared flatly that Parchman will never see it.

If the Legislature can't decide the State Building Commission will be right back where it was left after the regular 1954 session—with a law requiring it to locate the chamber on state-owned land in Hinds County, where it also is not wanted.

Mississippi House Acts To Bar Desegregation

By The Associated Press

The Mississippi House of Representatives jammed through a constitutional amendment yesterday allowing the State to abolish public schools, and Alabama legislators took the first step toward erecting a similar last-ditch segregation dam.

Approving the measure on the first reading, Mississipi lawmakers voted 109-24 for the "private-school" amendment at a special session called by Governor Hugh White.

Senate passage seemed certain, because enough senators signed the resolution containing the amendment to assure its passage in the upper house. It would then be submitted to the people.

Special Session Asked

In Birmingham a group of legislators and lawyers proposed that Governor Gordon Persons call a special session of the Legislature and ask it to abolish the section of the State Constitution requiring the State to support public schools.

Senator Albert Boutwell said the group "has arived at what we believe to be a basically sound formula" for maintaining school segregation. One spokesman said it would involve removing the word "public" from the constitutional school requirements. Another change, he said, would designate school officials as judicial officers in order to make them immune from damage suits.

The superintendent of a white rural school near Dallas rejected moves by a group of Negro parents to enrol their children. Superintendent Mark Hitt said he would follow directions from the State Board of Education to continue segregation this year.

Court Order Sought

Parents of five white school children in Baltimore joined the officers of two organizations seeking a court order which would force the City to maintain segregated schools.

About 1,000 delegates to the North Alabama Methodist Conference, meeting in Birmingham, adopted a resolution supporting school segregation.

Gov. White Pledges Last-Ditch Legal Warfare To Keep Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7 (AP) — Gov. Hugh White—vowing last-ditch legal warfare in support of segregation today urged the Mississippi Legislature to approve a constitutional amendment giving itself power to abolish public schools.

The governor urged the amendment to "meet a crisis we did not seek" in a speech to a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives two hours after the Legislature opened a special session.

"We shall resist . . . by every legal means at our command," said White, referring to the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

But state leaders emphasized abolition of Mississippi's public schools would be a "last resort."

Even if adopted by the Legislature, the amendment would have to be approved by a vote of the state's race-conscious citizens.

This is the way the amendment would work:

1. The Legislature by a two thirds vote could abolish public schools throughout the state, or

2. Individual counties and school districts could abolish their public schools and set up private school systems, if local option received legislative approval by a simple majority vote.

Actually, details of the local option method have not been worked out. Neither have details of a private school system.

"We have explored every possible solution," said White in his 20-minute speech, broadcast over a Mississippi radio network. "May we never yield and may success crown our united efforts is my humble prayer."

Mississippi House votes to submit school abolishment plan to voters

BY DOUGLAS STARR

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 9—(AP)—The foundation for Mississippi's fight to keep Negroes out of white schools today was assured final passage by a 109-24 vote in the House of Representatives.

The vote yesterday came on the amendment to the state constitution empowering the Legislature to abolish public schools. The vote was the first of three required for constitutional amendments. The top-heavy victory margin made it obvious it will pass the House twice more.

The amendment was assured of Senate passage when 33 senators, more than the required two thirds, signed the measure as co-authors.

Representatives described the amendment as a "last resort" weapon to keep segregation, to be kept handy in case it is needed.

The House will consider the amendment the second time today. The Senate will not consider it until the House gives its final approval.

After the amendment is adopted three times by both Houses and signed by the governor, it must be submitted to the people for a vote scheduled for Dec. 21.

IT IS THE FIRST step in retaining segregation in public schools.

The next steps will include another special session to enact statutes designed to maintain separate schools. The "abolition amendment" will be used as a club to help prevent Negroes from integrating with white pupils.

The amendment would permit the Legislature to abolish public schools by a two-thirds vote and set up methods whereby counties and school districts could abolish their schools.

The Legislature would have the power to lease, rent or sell state-owned school property for use as private schools if public schools are abolished. In addition, state funds could be appropriated to pay for tuition in a private system.

The House also beat down four attempts to amend the resolution, by making it more difficult to abolish schools.

REP. PAUL MEASELL of Newton County, chairman of the constitution committee, told the House in calling up the measure, "I know that no Legislature will ever come to abolish public schools except in the last resort."

Urging passage, he said, "you are faced with one of the biggest problems you'll ever be faced with in your lifetime. We owe it to the people of Mississippi to pass this amendment overwhelmingly and submit it to a vote of the people."

Rep. Joel Blass of Stone County, opposition leader, realized the battle was lost when he faced the chamber.

But he said the Negro "doesn't fear what you are about to do. . . he's going to encourage it.

"When the federal government sees fit to enter public education . . . those federal buildings will be open to everybody."

THE WHITES STAND to lose almost everything, he said, "the Negroes, nothing."

He said in some poor counties the choice would be: "Public schools or no schools at all."

If Mississippi ever is forced into a private school system, he said, it would be well to have some idea now of what type is necessary.

He said the private system would have to be completely private with the state out of it entirely "or it will be a subterfuge and the court will strike it down."

The choice is not between abolition and integration, he said, "there's no necessity for either one."

REP. DENSON LOTT of Covington County, speaking for the amendment, said, "you are facing the darkest hour you have ever faced. If I cannot keep it (public schools) segregated, I want to go all the way and abolish the public schools."

Rep. John Southward of Tishomingo County, wanted more restrictions on abolishing public schools.

"I want to make sure this is a last report," he said.

But he added, "we're going to keep segregation in our county. The first time a Negro goes to school up there (with whites), that's the time we'll have a funeral."

Rep. Icey Day of Attala County was vigorous in his stand to keep his children out of integrated schools.

"As long as I live," he said amid applause, "my children will never go to an integrated school. And if I don't have a dime for private schools, They'll go through life with as much ignorance as I have."

NAACP Petition To School Board Gets No Action

TYLERTOWN, Miss. — (ANP) —An NAACP position filed recently with the Walthall County Board of Education requesting county level boards to carry out the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling, was tabled "without action," it was reported last week.

County Supt. of Education, Ed Duncan said the petition, signed by 30 Negroes, did not request the admittance of Negro students to any particular white school in the county. He gave no explanation for the board's failure to deal with the matter.

However, he stated that the five man county board "felt pretty well armed" to prevent integration with a 1954 law assigning students to certain schools without mention of race. He did not elaborate.

Defer Integration Fight

MOUNT BAYOU, Miss., Sept 27 (UP)—Delegates claiming to represent 500,000 Mississippi Negroes have agreed to hold off attempts to enter white schools until the United States Supreme Court issues desegregation decrees.

But some 2,000 members of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership, meeting here yesterday, warned that organized efforts to prevent Negro voting and ultimate integration of schools would be "disastrous" to Mississippi white business men.

Delegates called for "immediate opening" of the state's graduate and professional schools to all races, and urged all Negroes to register and vote.

They voted two to one, however, against seeking to break down school segregation until the Supreme Court had outlined methods by which desegregation was to be achieved. The court will begin its study Dec. 6.

Mississippi Acts To Block Bias Ban

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 8 (UP).—A proposed state constitutional amendment to permit Mississippi to abolish its public schools in favor of "private" institutions in order to maintain segregation easily passed its first test today. The House of Representatives passed the proposal, 109-24, on first reading. It must be approved on two more separate votes, however. Thirty-three of the state's forty-nine Senators already have indorsed the measure.

The resolution would authorize legislative dissolution of the state-wide school system by a two-thirds vote and permit abolishment of local districts on a simple majority.

On final legislative adoption the measure is to be put to the people for ratification Dec. 21.

MISSISSIPPI NEGROES GIRD FOR CHALLENGE

2,000 Meet At Mound Bayou, Hit White Obstructions At Polls, Schools

Special to The Commercial Appeal

MOUND BAYOU, Miss., Sept. 26.—Two thousand delegates claiming to represent nearly a half-million Mississippi Negroes took a united stand Sunday against efforts to keep them from voting and entering white schools.

Their spokesmen predicted that "Citizens Councils" of white people in Mississippi counties, recently organized to keep Negroes out of white schools through economic pressure, would be disastrous to white businessmen.

Await Court Action

However, the delegates voted 2 to 1 against any concerted effort to end school segregation until after the Supreme Court hands down a decision outlining the method by which segregation is to be erased.

The two thousand delegates attended a special meeting of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership. The RCNL president, Dr. T. R. M. Howard, Mound Bayou physician, said the delegates represented 100 state Negro civic and religious organizations which in turn represent nearly half the state's Negro population.

They met in a large tent specially erected for the meeting because no place in Mound Bayou, an all Negro Delta community, was big enough to hold the crowd.

Dr. Howard said the delegates unanimously adopted three resolutions.

Negro Vote Urged

The first was a cal lto Mississippi Negroes to register, pay poll taxes regularly and vote.

The second demanded that Mississippi colleges open their doors immediately to Negro students.

The third predicted white businessmen would suffer more than Negroes if "Citizens Councils" objectives are carried out. The "Citizens Councils" were organized after the Supreme Court abolished racial segregation in schools, with the idea of keeping school segregation by economic pressure against Negroes who advocated abolition of segregation.

Such pressure would take the form of firing Negroes from their jobs, refusing to gin their cotton and refusing to extend them credit.

Dr. Howard described the meeting as "the most enthusiastic of its type, and the delegates the most determined, of any such meeting I ever attended."

40 Counties Represented

He said 40 Mississippi counties, some of them as far away as the Gulf Coast and the southeastern tip of the state, were represented. All Delta counties, which usually have the largest percentage of Negro population, were represented, he said.

Other speakers with Dr. Howard at the meeting included Percy Green, editor of the Jackson Advocate, Negro newspaper in Jackson, Miss.; Grand Master James C. Gillam of the Negro Masonic Lodge at Clarksdale; A. W. Wells of Jackson, president of the Progressive Voters League of Mississippi; Dr. E. T. Stringer of Columbus, president of the Mississippi Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Dr. A. M. Mackel, Natchez dentist and chairman of the resolutions committee, and Prof. J. B. Boyd, former president of the Mississippi Colored Teachers Association and president of the Utica Institute at Utica.

Steps Are Suggested

They suggested that Negroes could bank at the Negro-controlled Tri-State Bank in Memphis if white-owned banks in Mississippi refuse them loans; order their supplies from out-of-state mail-order houses "and start the biggest mail-order boom in the history of the South" if white merchants refuse them credit, and concentrate their purchases in establishments inside the state which are owned by Negroes.

Here is the full text of the three resolutions:

1. "We believe that all citizens are entitled to the use of the ballot, and further believe that no state, county or city should enact any statutes or ordinances that would in any way prevent any citizen from exercising his right as it is not only a privilege but a duty. We recommend and urge that all citizens regardless of race or color or creed pay their poll tax, register and vote in their respective counties.

Hail Court Verdict

2. "We further recommend that the decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in the public schools is a just and a humane decision. We believe that the decision should be implemented as quickly as possible. We, the Negro citizens of the state of Mississippi, are anxious and willing to work with any group toward implementing this decision. We are unalterably opposed to any effort of either white or Negro citizens to attempt to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, outlawing segregation in the public schools. We recommend that all the graduate and professional schools of higher learning in Mississippi be open to all races immediately.

3. "We believe that the stabilization of the economy of the state of Mississippi depends upon the working together of all citizens for the general good of all, and the economic sanction against any segment of the citizenry will be as reactionary and harmful to the parties starting the sanctions as to the people who are the objectives."

Legislature Ends Historic Session

But Not One Of 189 Members Present —Amendment To Protect Segregated Schools Major Enactment Of Term

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 30.—Mississippi's history-making special session of the Legislature, which convened Sept. 7, was officially adjourned at 6 p.m. Thursday without a single one of the 189 members on hand for the finale.

Actually, the Legislature has been in adjournment since last Friday, when it quit work to leave the interim for Gov. Hugh White to consider the last minute enactments.

As has been custom since 1928, the final gavels were dropped by Kenneth Toler, chief of The Commercial Appeal's Jackson Bureau, in the presence of the House and Senate staff members.

The major enactment at the session was submission of a constitutional amendment to the voters for a special election Dec. 21 on the question of abolishing public schools as a "last step" to prevent integration. A plan to preserve segregation, notwithstanding the Supreme Court's integration decision, was the purpose for which Governor White called the special session.

Equalization Favored

Along with submission of the amendment, leaders in both branches went on record as favoring funds for new school buildings if the amendment is ratified by the voters. They feel that with the dual system equalized as to facilities, attempts to integrate by Negroes will be lessened.

The 1954 regular session equalized salaries, transportation and administration in the racially segrated schools.

A total of 96 new laws were approved at the session. Not a single measure was vetoed by the Governor despite opinions from the attorney general's department that several of those affecting local political subdivisions were unconstitutional. In approving the questioned measures, Governor White said he would leave their challenge to the courts.

Of the new laws, 59 originated in the House and 37 in the Senate.

A total of 163 bills were introduced in the two branches, although some of them were duplications. Ninety-nine of them originated in the House, and 64 in the Senate.

Another Scheduled

A second special session is scheduled early net year if the constitutional amendment is ratified in the special election. It will consider increased taxes for operation of schools in the 1955-56 session, along with funds for inauguration of a school building equalization program.

Since the 1954 regular session voted operational funds for only the current school year, provision must be made for an additional 18 million dollars if the 1955-56 term is to be financed prior to the January of 1956 regular session.

Among the special session enactments were:

Voted additional $1,500,000 to restore cuts in old age pensions; transferred $1,850,000 from special fund for loans for livestock and poultry development to general fund; corrected 1954 act to permit refunds under homestead exemption law for school levies; authorized back taxing of properties transferred after the original assessment date to new school districts.

Created a Water Resources Policy Commission to study underground reserves and to recommend legislation for their conservation; placed lethal gas chamber in new maximum security cell block at State Penitentiary.

Salaries Increased

Increased salaries of chancery and circuit judges from $7,500 to $9,000 a year, gave Hinds, Madison and Yazoo Counties an additional circuit judge, and upped pay of county judges in Madison, Forrest and Leflore Counties.

Shortened appeal period in death sentence cases before Supreme Court, and added to the conspiracy statute efforts to overthrown the state's segregation laws.

Allowed appeals to new state Education Finance Commission from county school board rulings relative to assignment of pupils; added four sergeants to the State Penitentiary for duty at the new maximum security cell-block.

Created new Chancery Court district of Adams, Jefferson, Wilkinson and Claiborne Counties; authorized county supervisors to spend $50 monthly for vital statistics registrars; created an industrial district in Prentiss County, and created two recess committees to study absentee ownership of land and the building needs at the state colleges.

Mississippi Segregation Plan Passed

Move To Publicize Amendment Loses

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 16 (AP)—Standby authority to abolish public schools to keep Negroes and whites separated cleared Mississippi's Legislature today.

The amendment to the state constitution goes to a vote of the people on Dec. 21.

RATIFY PLAN

Gov. Hugh White predicted the people would ratify the amendment. But state leaders admit there is a strong undercurrent of opposition.

The House of Representatives yesterday whipped a move to use state funds "to fully inform the people of this state of the provisions and purposes of the proposed amendment."

The amendment's opponents, joined by some supporters, shouted rejection of "being propagandized with state funds" to get the people's support at the polls.

GIVEN POWERS

Under the amendment, the Legislature could:

1. Abolish schools throughout Mississippi by a two-thirds vote.

2. By a majority vote, set up a local option plan whereby individual counties and school districts could abolish their schools.

3. Sell, lease or rent state-owned school property.

4. Pay tuition for students to attend private schools.

LABEL RIDER

Sponsors labeled the amendment a "last resort" measure to be used only if other methods fail to keep segregated schools despite the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

The state Senate gave the amendment the last of three required approvals today, one week after the House overwhelmingly passed it.

The amendment is the first product of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, created by the 1954 Legislature to find ways of getting around the Supreme Court decision. Later, the LEAC will recommend specific laws it hopes will make the "last resort" unnecessary.

SCHOOL BOOST

LEAC members promised to support a public school building program to improve Mississippi's schools if the amendment is ratified.

They agreed that better Negro facilities would help keep segregated schools on a voluntary basis. But some LEAC members, holding decisive legislative posts, have refused to support appropriations for school buildings unless the amendment is ratified.

If the people ratify the amendment, it will be inserted in the state constitution by the next legislature.

SCHOOL MEASURE LAST VOTE NEAR

Times-Picayune

Proposal Passes Second Senate Reading

New Orleans

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 — The proposed "last resort" constitutional amendment to abolish public schools Wednesday moved within one step of final legislative approval in the Mississippi Senate.

Without debate, the Senate voted 41 to 2 for the proposed amendment Wednesday in its second consideration on the floor. If the measure is given its third passage by the Senate Thursday it then will be cleared for submission to a statewide vote Dec. 21.

Under the board new power sought in the amendment, the Legislature would have authority to abolish public schools throughout the state or permit local districts to abolish their schools and go to a system of private endowment of students.

But as the amendment progressed through the Senate Wednesday, the House beat down a move to allow use of a $100,000 fund for the state legal educational advisory committee to promote the passage of the amendment.

The House approved provisions of a resolution to give the LEAC the $100,000 fund, but struck out another provision which would have allowed the committee to hire speakers, distribute pamphlets and conduct an informal campaign out of the fund.

Rep. Joel Blass, Stone county, charged that it was "improper to take state funds and advocate ratification of this amendent."

Rep. Walter Phillips, Hancock county, said: "I don't think we have the right to vote funds to propagandize any amendment submitted to the people."

An amendment offer to the proposal by Rep. Sam Johnson, Tippah county, to require that the LEAC provide speakers for and against the amendment was rejected by a vote of 86 to 31.

Rep. Ney Gore, Quitman county, who handled the resolution on the floor, told the House that the LEAC, given the job of planning the state's strategy to maintain segregated schools "has the responsibility to see that it is ratified."

The amendment striking out the authority of the LEAC to use the funds for speakers and an information campaign was authored by Rep. Tom Garrott, Tunica county.

He said that it was "unfair to take taxpayers money to go out and pass a resolution, bill or an amendment." His amendment was adopted 64 to 50.

The House turned down another change in the $100,000 fund measure proposed by Rep. Delos Burks, Pearl River county, which would have required the LEAC to prepare and make public in 45 days the blueprint of how a private school plan would be operated and financed if public schools were abolished.

"I think the people ought to have these answers before they vote on the amendment Dec. 21," Burks declared.

The Senate's second approval of the constitutional proposal for abolishing the schools came immediately after Sen. Willis Matthews, Magee, chairman of the Senate constitutions committee, called it up.

Sens. George Owens, Pontotoc, and Howard McDonnell, Biloxi, again were the only members to vote against the proposal.

McDonnell said in a statement that he could not vote for the amendment because it permits demolishing the public school system which he said "has been the bulwark of our American way of life."

The Biloxi senator said that he was "not unmindful of the situation confronting us," but that he did not believe the amendment "will secure the purpose at which it is aimed."

He added that the people "have no information on its far-reaching effects upon the future of our children and state."

Meanwhile Wednesday hopes of adjournment of the week-old special session by Friday dimmed as a bitter fight loomed in the background over whether or not the state is to have a lethal gas chamber for execution of criminals and where it will go.

The question had been thrown into the special session by Gov. Hugh White who first asked the Legislature to designate a site for the lethal gas chamber which it authorized in the 1954 regular session and directed to be placed in Jackson.

Gov. White and the state building commission have been unable to find a location in Jackson for the chamber.

Meantime Wednesday, the governor sent an additional message to the Legislature permitting legislation to be introduced at the session to restore the portable electric chair as the means of execution. The gas chamber was to replace the chair on Jan. 1, 1955.

White said he had received a request signed by 17 members of the House to submit the issue.

He said Wednesday that his message "is not a recommendation" that the portable electric chair be restored.

In the Senate, a number of lawmakers had other ideas. A bill putting the gas chamber in the new maximum security cell block at Parchman came out of the Senate judiciary committee and appeared to have substantial support on the floor.

The bill may be called up in the Senate Thursday.

On the House side, the move to reinstate the portable electric chair was being spearheaded by Mrs. Wilma Sledge, Sunflower county representatiye, in whose county Parchman penitentiary is located.

Most lawmakers in the Delta section surrounding the penitentiary object to having the gas chamber placed in their region.

The Senate passed unanimously a bill making revisions in 1954 act for the development of the river ports of Natchez, Vicksburg and Greenville.

Sen. Lawrence Adams, Natchez author of the port measure said that bond authorities had demanded changes in the measure which would give the county boards of supervisors stronger control over the port commissions and pledging the full faith and credit of the counties behind bonds issued.

Under his bill, in the counties where the port is located inside or within one mile of the city, the county boards of supervisors will appoint two members of the commission, the city two and the governor, one.

In the counties where the port is more than a mile outside the city, the supervisors will appoint four members of the commission and the governor the fifth. In any case, Adams said, the county boards of supervisors will be ex-officio members of the port bodies.

Mississippi Governor Blames Negroes for Ban

By the United Press.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7.—Gov. Hugh White opened a special segregation session of the Mississippi Legislature today by blaming Negroes for a proposed Constitutional amendment that would abolish public schools in the state.

The session was called to consider steps—foremost of which was a private school bill—to preserve the color barrier in Mississippi schools.

The governor said that after the U.S. Supreme Court outlawed public school segregation last May 17, Negroes of the state refused to pledge themselves to voluntary segregation. They now must suffer the responsibility, he told the legislature.

In so doing, he said, Negroes "not only repudiated what they had told us in private conference but demanded things that even the Supreme Court decision had not pretended to try to give them."

The proposed amendment, which would have to be ratified by the voters in November, would empower the legislature by two-thirds vote to abolish public schools state-wide or by a majority vote authorize local option. State money would be appropriated for students to attend private schools.

"There is no intention of abolishing the schools," Gov. White said, but "there likewise is no intention of being unjustifiably forced to mix the races in our schools."

Segregation Fight Gives Russia Delight, Mississippian Thinks

To The Commercial Appeal,

In their efforts to find scriptural justification in the Bible for racial segregation, pious persons up and down the land are quoting, "and . . . hath determined the bounds of their habitation." There's one thing they seem to have overlooked: If we had stayed within the bounds of our habitation where do they think we would be? Certainly not here in America. When they look at these words where was the Aryan race — our race that is so superior to others it can tolerate another color only "in its place"?

At that time not even the Indian was here. Later this was his "bound of habitation," but we changed that—according to God's will, yes, but there is no scriptural base for our arrogant assumption that we can keep another race forever on its knees to us.

The Kremlin must be having a field day with the propaganda furnished it by our Mississippi legislature! And you may be sure every newspaper in Russia has used it. All that was necessary for them to publish was a report of our first week's legislative session alongside our Bill of Rights, and the teachings of the Christ whom we profess to follow. Each Russian will wonder why, if we are sincere in our Christianity, we do not follow Christ's instructions when he said "Love your neighbor as yourself." (And if He had been telling the parable of the "Good Samaritan" to Southerners He would have substituted the word "Negro.")

With regret I ask you to withhold my name because of the embarrassment it would cause some of my relatives who think supremacy of the Master Race is more important than the precepts laid down in the Bill of Rights and the Sermon on the Mount.

Mississippi Senate Approves Private School Proposal

JACKSON, Miss.—(INS)—The Mississippi Senate, following similar action in the house last week, has approved a proposed Constitutional Amendment which would allow the legislature to abolish public schools in order to maintain segregation.

The vote was 42-2 for the resolution. It must now be voted upon two more times in the upper chamber.

Following approval by the Senate, Gov. Hugh White, who called the special session, will sign the bill and it will then go to the State's voters for ratification in a election, Dec. 20.

White called the lawmakers into session to seek a means of skirting the U. S. Supreme Court decision last May which outlawed segregation in the nation's public schools.

Mississippi Roundup—

White Plans No Segregation Session

JACKSON, Miss., June 7 (U.P.)—Gov. Hugh White indicated today that a special Summer session of the Legislature might not be necessary to tackle the school segregation problem.

White said he has made no definite plans for a special session that would deal primarily with constitutional changes to avoid stumbling blocks in the state's fight to maintain segregation in its schools.

There had been speculation that a Summer session might be called to speed the constitutional changes to the voters in the November general election but White said he had been advised by State Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman that a special election could be set.

Ninety days notive by the Legislature is required before constitutional amendments are submitted to the people.

White said the progress of a 25-man advisory committee would determine largely when the session will convene. The committee of top legal and legislative leaders meets here again June 22.

The chief executive called an organizational meeting of the six-member Educational Finance Commission. The group that is charged with administering the state's new school equalization program will meet for the first time tomorrow morning but White said he doubted they could do little outside routine business.

White leaves here Wednesday morning to attend the Southern Governors Conference Thursday at Richmond, Va., which will start mapping plans to maintain segregated schools in Dixie.

Mississippi Schools To Stay Segregated, Stennis Asserts

WASHINGTON, June 6 (AP)—Sen. J. C. Stennis (D., Miss.) said today that there are natural differences between whites and Negroes in capacity and morality and and they will not go to school together in Mississippi.

Interviewed on a television program, Senator Stennis was asked whether his state would comply with the U. S. Supreme Court ruling that separate schools for whites and Negroes are illegal.

"We have separate schools and those schools will continue to be separate," he said.

Asked what was "so horrible to contemplate" about white and Negro children going to school together, Stennis replied:

"There are certain natural differences according to natural laws. Their general social habits are different.

Asked if some of the defferences did not result from differences in education, Stennis replied: "Not near altogether."

He said through education the differences might be lost over a long period of time, adding:

"And when they are lost you have neither a white race or a black race—they're both lost."

SEGREGATION TO STAY
—Sen. J. C. Stennis.

He said he believed that despite the Supreme Court order, which he said merely prevented a state from setting up separate schools by law, the white and Negro people of Mississippi would co-operate in keeping the schools separate.

Proposes Plan To Keep Bias

WASHINGTON — Still fuming over the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools, Senator Eastland (D.-Miss.) last Monday proposed a constitutional amendment which would permit racial segregation in any state which wants it.

Eastland introduced a resolution calling for a referendum on a proposed change in the Constitution "to prevent interference" by the Federal government with the rights of the separate states to regulate health, morals, education and marriage within their boundaries.

News Blackout Is Clamped On School Segregation Talks

BY JOHN HERBERS
United Press Staff Correspondent

JACKSON, Miss., June 27—A news blackout has been thrown around Mississippi's powerful Legal Advisory Committee which is seeking means of maintaining segregation in public schools.

At the first meeting of the 25-man group, which includes the state's top officials and legislators, reporters were permitted to sit in and the proceedings were reported to the public.

Press Barred

But at the second meeting held last week, members voted to bar the press and newsmen had to sit outside the governor's chamber while [illegible] went on. What available record" over.

The Mississippi Press Assn. has been attempting, without success to get open public meetings to the public, and as Association President Joe Ellis of Clarksdale recently brought out, not in the interest of the news media but in the interest of the public.

Ban Is Sudden

Why the sudden news ban by the advisory committee? Since officials gave no reason it was reasonable to assume that there were conflicting opinions on proposed constitutional amendments being discussed and members had rather meet behind closed doors and present a united front when they make recommendations.

Issue Speculated

Probably one of the most vital questions to come up, it was learned from a member who didn't want his name used, was a proposal to set up mechanics of letting more than a dozen counties with heavy Negro populations hold elections to determine whether they want to set up private school systems.

It was thought that in most counties segregation could be maintained without any trouble. But some members believe that a private school system may be the only answer in certain counties in the long run. Others are opposed with doing away with the public school system in any degree.

STENNIS SCORES SCHOOLS RULING

Opinion on Segregation Is Given by Senator

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

MERIDIAN, Miss., May 31—Sen. John C. Stennis of Mississippi, speaking at the Rotary meeting in the Lamar hotel Monday, plead for immediate action on the local level to maintain separate schools for white and Negro children in this state, and then sharply denounced any plan which would embroil the US into the Indo-China war.

"I do not approved of one single sentence in the opinion handed down by the supreme court on segregation in the nation's schools," declared Senator Stennis. "I think they went far afield, abandoned their roles as justices and set themselves up as social engineers. Because of this, there is the possibility of a terrific setback for education in Mississippi for both the whites and the Negroes."

"We will be making a grave mistake if we sit back and no nothing. Abolishing the public schools would only lead us to an even greater problem.

"But there is an alternative. We can take a constructive view and build at the local level, a program based on public opinion . . . the opinion that we must continue to have separate schools. We must now lead the thinking of both groups—white and colored—along that line. And, we must begin now, before other pressure groups are brought to bear, and we have lost the opportunity," said the senator.

"Our schools are not supported by federal funds, but by local and state taxes. Let's make this plain to all groups. Much can be accomplished by a program satisfactory to both sides. We must plan for better, but separate schools. Our colored leaders are looking to the whites for leadership. In the end, the minority who don't agree, will be forced by public opinion to go along," he declared.

He then urged: "Solve it yourself rather than depend on the politicians to work it out for you."

Sen. Stennis then changed abruptly to the Indi-China affair . . . "and the steadily growing trend toward American intervention in that war."

The Associated Press in New Orleans said Monday they were advised that a statement by Sen. John Stennis saying that the US was recently within 48 hours of "directly entering the war in Indochina," was part of a prepared speech and was not included in his address to the graduating class Sunday at Mississippi Southern college, Hattiesburg.

Segregation Ruling Not Reason Based, Bar Chief Says

BILOXI, Miss., June 18 (AP)—Jerome S. Hafter, president of Mississippi Bar Assn., said here today it was his opinion the Supreme Court's decision banning segregation in public schools was "not based on sound legal reasoning."

The Greenville attorney told members of the association at the annual convention "it is my opinion that the personnel of the U. S. Supreme Court has been influenced by newspapers, periodicals and pressure groups which have permeated the press."

"Many of these groups," he continued, "have argued that it is better to change our way of life in the South, and by so doing, our diplomats can say to the colored nations of the world that we welcome as our allies and consider them our social equals."

Hafter said the decision would aggravate racial conditions in Mississippi and "set progress back many years."

"The white and colored races in Mississippi have for many years established and lived under a very harmonious relationship," he said.

"It is sincerely hoped that the cool judgment of both races will co-operate to see that we do not revert to racial hatred and prejudice by the striking down of customs which have been acquiesced in the satisfactory to all Mississippians, white and colored."

Another speaker, William J. Jameson of Billings, Mont., president of the American Bar Assn., said "we must recognize and protect the constitutional right of all, including Communists."

At the same time, he said, "We must not be blinded by the fact that if the Communist philosophy should prevail these constitutional rights would be lost forever."

Two Segregation Steps Are Cited

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

WATER VALLEY, Miss., June 28—U. S. Sen. James O. Eastland said here Monday night that there are "two definite steps" which can assure segregation in the public schools.

Eastland, carrying his campaign for re-election into Northeast Mississippi, said that he has proposed an amendment to the federal constitution which if passed, "would restore to the states exclusive jurisdiction over schools, health, morals and marriage."

Eastland said that many are already underway for a national organization of "both Northerners and Southerners" to fight for continued segregation in the schools.

"I will be one of the leaders in this movement," he declared. "We are going to win this fight."

He was introduced to the Yalobusha county audience by Herman White, Water Valley businessman.

Petitions Signed To Enter Schools

COLUMBUS, Miss.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's claim that Negroes desire equal rights was backed up this week by Mississippi Negroes who signed petitions to enter white schools.

The petitioners planned to file the petitions in about 30 days, the state president reported. Dr. E. J. Stringer, Columbus dentist, said the NAACP was working on the petitions. The Association, which met in Jackson shortly after the Supreme Court decision, filed petitions with school boards asking that segregation be abolished voluntarily.

However, Dr. Stringer said, no white school is expected to abolish segregation voluntarily. He said they expected the petitions to be rejected and form the basis of court cases.

Mississippi Plans Vote On Schools

JACKSON, Miss., July 12 (AP)—A constitutional amendment allowing public schools to be abolished if necessary to maintain segregation was adopted today by Mississippi's Legal Education Advisory Committee.

A two-thirds vote of the Legislature could wipe out public schools, either statewide or on a county option basis by allowing individual elections in each county.

BUILDING PROGRAM

The committee also recommended to the Legislature that a school building program be started to supply better Negro schools, but only if the constitutional amendment is adopted giving the Legislature a free hand to fight any move to commingle the races.

Gov. Hugh White said he would call the Legislature into special session, probably early in September, to consider the proposed constitutional change.

In another highlight, Chief Justice Harvey McGehee of the Mississippi Supreme Court resigned his committee post today.

EXPLAINS CONFLICT

The chief justice said the conflict of wanting to provide whatever help he could to the committee and his duty as a justice was "becoming increasingly embarrassing."

Since he may have to sit as judge on segregation cases, he said he felt it better if he took no part in further work.

The committee was created to find ways of dodging the U. S. Supreme Court decision that outlawed racial segregation in public schools.

PROPOSAL ON PUBLIC SCHOOLS IS ADOPTED

LEAC Agrees to Abolishment If Necessary

By SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., July 12 (AP)—A constitutional amendment allowing public schools to be abolished if necessary to maintain segregation was adopted Monday by Mississippi's legal education advisory committee.

A two-thirds vote of the Legislature could wipe out public schools, either statewide or on a county option basis by allowing individual elections in each county.

The committee also recommended to the Legislature that a school building program be started to supply better Negro schools, but only if the constitutional amendment is adopted giving the Legislature a free hand to fight any move to commingle the races.

Gov. Hugh White said he would call the Legislature into special session, probably early in September, to consider the proposed constitutional change.

Chief Justice Resigns

In another high light, Chief Justice Harvey McGehee of the Mississippi supreme court resigned his committee post Monday.

The chief justice said the conflict of wanting to provide whatever help he could to the committee and his duty as a justice were "becoming increasingly embarrassing."

Since he may have to sit as judge on segregation cases, he said he felt it better if he took no part in further work.

The committee was created to find ways of dodging the US supreme court decision that outlawed racial segregation in public schools.

The advisory committee adopted the report of its constitutional subcommittee in approving the proposed change to the Mississippi constitution of 1890.

Private Schools Plan

The amendment would allow the Legislature to set up a system of private schools with state aid going to the pupils.

The advisory committee excluded the press from its discussions.

"We're going to run you out as soon as we start," Gov. White told newsmen before the day-long meeting started.

"They said they don't want the press," he said, indicating other committee members.

If the Legislature approves the amendment, the people then would vote on it. If approved by a majority of voters in the election, the Legislature would insert it into the state constitution.

If the Legislature meets in September, it would be December before the people could vote. A 90-day waiting period is required after legislative approval before a vote can be taken.

Contradictory Provisions

The constitutional amendment also would abolish any contradictory provisions of the constitution.

The main section provides, in part:

"It shall be the duty of the Legislature . . . by establishing a uniform system of free public schools . . ."

Gov. White said all members of the committee were "determined to go on with the building program if the constitutional amendment is adopted."

But the building program probably will not be the same set up by the 1953 special legislative session but not financed by the 1954 regular session.

"I doubt very seriously that it will," the governor commented.

He said the committee made no decision on what kind of building program it would be. "They just agreed to recommend a building program," he said.

On Smaller Scale

The governor indicated it would be on a smaller scale than provided in the equalization program.

That program provided $12 per student per year for school construction. "That's about as ambitious a program as you could have," he said, while indicating the recommended program would not be that big.

The advisory committee did not discuss ways of financing the building program, he added.

Tax boosts almost certainly would be needed.

The 1954 Legislature provided only one year's financing for the watered-down equalization program—$34 million. With only $16 million left for the second year, an additional $18 million is needed to provide schools for the second year of the 1954-56 biennium, without any increased building costs.

Last Resort

Gov. White commented that the proposed constitutional amendment "places the Legislature in a position to act" without the present constitutional restrictions.

Committee members agreed that abolishing public schools would be a last resort after other attempts to maintain school segregation had failed, he said.

If no other way were found, the amendment would set up two ways of abolishing schools:

1. Statewide.
2. Local option.

Both methods would require a two-thirds vote of the Legislature.

Committee members have said that no problem exists in some sections of the state and Negroes would agree to segregated schools. The local option plan seems to fit their objections.

Abolishing of Schools

Those counties where Negroes were attempting to enter white schools could ask the Legislature to abolish schools there. Or the Legislature could provide in advance ways in which counties could abolish their schools.

If any public schools are abolished, the proposed amendment would allow the Legislature to dispose of school buildings, land and other properties as it sees fit.

Under a private school system, the state property probably would be leased to private firms or individuals for schools.

Text of Proposed Amendment Given

JACKSON, Miss., July 12 (AP)—Text of the proposed constitutional amendment approved Monday by the Mississippi Legal Education Advisory Committee:

Section 213—(A) Regardless of any provision of Article 8, or any other provisions of this constitution to the contrary, the Legislature shall be and is hereby authorized and empowered by a two-thirds vote of those present and voting in each House, to abolish and may authorize the counties and school districts to abolish, the public schools in this state and enact suitable legislation to effect the same.

(B) In the event the Legislature may appropriate state funds to aid educable children of any and all acts and things necessary for the purpose of this section, and this section is declared to be, and is, supplemental to all other provisions of this constitution, and legislation enacted under authority hereof shall prevail over any provisions of this constitution to the contrary, the Legislature shall be and is hereby authorized to enact suitable laws providing for the disposition of school buildings, land and other school properties by lease, sale or otherwise.

(C) The Legislature may appropriate state funds to aid counties, municipalities and school districts in which the public schools are abolished, and authorize the levy of ad valorem taxes by the counties and municipalities for the operation of schools, in addition to the ad valorem taxes and 16th section funds and other appropriate state funds, including poll taxes or not.

New Mississippi School Laws Guarantee Education 'Equality'

State to Retain 'Separate' Facilities; Costly Program Slated to Start July 1

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial-Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., May 1—After 64 years of admitted inequities in its racially segregated public school system and facing a showdown on its validity, Mississippi is taking definite steps to carry out a constitutional mandate for "equal" educational opportunities for all children.

Main provision in an equalization program which goes in effect July 1 is that monies allocated to Negro children will be spent on them and not diverted to the whites as has been officially documented by a legislative school study committee.

Final legislative action was taken during the week on bills to inaugurate the "separate, but equal" program. It took the lawmakers 15 weeks to come to terms on its financing, and then the deadlock was broken only by compromise. As finally approved the financing is on a one year's trial of the equalization formula.

Come July 1, the public schools will begin operating under brand-new laws designed for the first time in state history to carry out that constitutional guaranty of "separate, but equal" school opportunities, regardless of race.

Costliness Admitted

More than 200 existing statutes, under which the disparities have been manipulated, automatically go off the law books July 1. In their place will go statutes setting up a new Negro - white equalized school system.

Gov. Hugh White and other leaders who backed the equalization movement, admit it will be costly.

The movement was spurred no little by the pending cases in the United States Supreme Court challenging constitutionality of the dual school system.

Cost of equalization under the biennial operation of state government has been estimated at 85 million dollars. That's 50 million more than now voted for public schools. Of the added 35 million dollars biennial cost, 12 million is for equalizing facilities.

Pending the Supreme Court ruling, however, the facility phase is being delayed. Its overall long-range cost has been estimated by school authorities between 75 and 144 million dollars.

Before end of the first year's operation of the new program the legislature is to be called in special session to provide the additional financing. By that time, the facility issue may be settled by the Supreme Court. Since present revenue sources are 10 million dollars "short" of balancing the ordinary operations of state government, the special session will be a "tax - raising assembly."

How New Law Works

The final two bills in the equalization program passed during the week provide 34 million dollars for the one-year trial run and authority to counties and municipalities to levy up to 25 mills local taxes to provide the 10 million dollars matching funds required of them.

Authority is vested in the local political subdivisions for added taxes for "enrichment" of the state's minimum equalization formula. Some officials fear the "enrichment" feature may result in continued disparities, but feel that if any challenges result, they must come against the particular subdivisions and not the state which is providing state - level minimum equalization.

Under the new law, a fund from which the state made up for tax deficiencies in 63, so-called "poorer counties" through allocation of "equalizing" monies, is no more. Those counties will be required to put up whatever is determined in a new economic index. What they fail to provide will cut their state allocation proportionately.

Come July 1, the state funds will go directly to "where the children are in school," regardless of race. Those allocations will be made on the basis of average daily attendance "in" the particular schools.

Another change to improve opportunities for all children is the abolition of the more than 2,000 local school districts. However, pending a recheck of them by a newly created State Educational Finance Commission, the present districts will continue to operate. Later, a far-reaching consolidation is planned.

MISSISSIPPI

For the first time in state history, a teacher salary schedule based on training and experience, rather than the "whims" of local school boards, is set up. It will gauge the state allocations to the schools, and will be made regardless of race—solely on the type certificate held.

Can Supplement Pay

The salary schedule ranges from $700 for high school graduates teaching school, up to $2,200 for holders of master's degrees. Annual increments up to five years' experience will provide a maxium salary scale from $900 to $2,600.

However, the districts are authorized to use local funds to bolster those salaries. The state has no control beyond the minimum scale, but is safe from challenge to that extent. Any tests would be made on the local levels.

Two other new provisions are aimed at giving additional state aid in the maintenance of local schools, such as supplies, heat, janitor service and additional school material and in supplementing salaries of superintendents and principals. The state is to put up $270 per teacher unit of 30 students in average daily attendance, regardless of race, for maintenance, and $200 on that basis for salary supplements.

It Can Happen in Miss.

FEW AMERICANS would have dreamed ten years ago that in the year 1954 the Legislature of the State of Mississippi would adopt a public school equalization program providing for expenditure of $34,000,000 annually above the normal budget of $25,000,000; and yet that is what happened last week.

Such long and frequent strides toward racial equality have taken place in this country since the end of World War II, that this revolutionary news scarcely caused a ripple of surprise, and yet the "impossible" has been accomplished.

In anticipation of a U. S. Supreme Court decision abolishing segregated racial schools, the Legislature completely revised the present system of education in the state's primary and high schools, will consolidate hundreds of the old, ramshackle, little local schools, will equalize Negro and white teachers' salaries, and begin equalizing transportation facilities.

Mississippi's officials are hoping and praying that the high court will uphold the "separate but equal doctrine," and if so the Legislature plans to extend the present equalization program and expand it to involve the expenditure of $66,000,000 yearly; but they are preparing for what they regard as the "worst" eventuality.

Many people who are unfamiliar with public opinion in Mississippi expected bloody shirt-waving, Negrophobic speeches on the hustings and fiery defiance of the trend of the times—but their expectations were not realized.

Instead, the elected representatives of the people calmly proceeded to prepare for the inevitable and unavoidable in a statesmanlike manner which is a credit to their sanity.

To be sure the victories won in the courts by NAACP lawyers speeded Mississippi's change of mind, but the alacrity with which that mind was changed indicates that it was in a state of readiness for change.

This should indicate to the august justices of the U. S. Supreme Court that there is very unlikely to be the violent Dixie opposition to an anti-segregation decision that some of them fear.

White Says Backbone Stiffer On Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., May 2 (U.P.)—Gov. Hugh White returned from President Eisenhower's governor's conference with a "stiffer backbone" on the school segregation issue.

White said he was not enlightened in Washington on how the U. S. Supreme Court would rule on segregation, but he said he was encouraged by opinion that the court might not be empowered to enforce a ruling abolishing a dual but equal school system, should such a decision be reached.

"I came back with a stiffer backbone as to just what the court can make us do and I think other Southern states are feeling the same way," White said.

He said a number of officials in Washington said the states may not have to follow a ruling abolishing segregation, indicating that Southern states may win in their efforts to keep separate classrooms for Negroes and whites by standing behind rights guaranteed the states under the constitution.

White said he was confident that should the court render an "unfavorable" decision a committee authorized by the Legislature for just such an occurance could come up with an answer for maintaining segregation that would stand up in court.

The governor said he was "entirely satisfied" with the work of the 1954 Legislature which adjourned yesterday "except for their refusal to complete the school program' by putting off raising new revenue until a special session. He said he was disappointed that legislators did not enact governmental reorganization laws which he had recommended for saving money.

were mixed with the one exception that everyone looked up with surprise and regret when the Approval of the appropriations bill assured the program of going into effect this July, with $34,000,000 of the allocation slated for the one-year test of the program to overhaul the state's school system.

Both branches buckled down to the last minute rush of trying to clear as many bills as possible from their calendars before final adjournment, expected tomorrow or Saturday after six months in session, including a special session last Fall.

Representatives ignored a warning by House Speaker Walter Sillers that they may be forced to return next week for one or two days of work. Sillers said it was doubtful whether business could be completed by Saturday and he suggested, the Senate willing, to move the sine die adjournment from May 6 to 3 in order to allow work next week.

Representatives spent their morning session debating a Senate bill regulating the expenditure of Vicksburg toll bridge funds for Warren County operations. It finally failed.

Russell Fox of Claiborne objected to any toll revenue being diverted to Vicksburg and Warren County, arguing the money 'should be used to retire bonds and free the bridge (over the Mississippi River) from tolls."

STATE NEGRO CITIZENS HAIL ENACTMENT OF LEGISLATION FINANCING OF THE SCHOOL EQUALIZATION PROGRAM

See Complete Reorganization In Operation Of Negro Schools

TEACHER GROUP PREPARES FOR ADOPTION OF NEW PROGRAM

Jackson, Miss. April 27, —(DSN) —In spite of the anxious and prolonged waiting for a decision from the United States supreme court in the school segregation cases responsible Negro citizens throughout the state hailed with expectations of early improvement in the school for their children, the final enactment by the state legislature of measures financing the school equalization program.

It was evident throughout the state that most Negro parents have become committed to the fact that Negro schools will remain in the state because of the existing community patterns, regardless of any action of the nation's high court and that the best hope for better Negro schools in the state lay in the equalization program.

From well informed sources it has being freely stated that the adoption of the program, which will go into effect with the beginning of the next school term, will mean a complete reorganization in the operation of Negro schools in the state.

for in the general education appropriation.

However the principal of the Meridian High School did point out in a telephone conversation with

Mississippi's School Plan

The Mississippi Legislature has come to the end, at least temporarily, of a tortured way. After months of discussion and argument, it has finally adopted a plan for financing the proposed equal facilities program for its white and Negro schools. That is, it has partly done so.

The Mississippi Legislature in the beginning apparently had sincere intentions of equalizing in all respects the educational opportunities offered the two races. But the costs of doing that, it was seen, would be tremendous.

Consequently, the original proposal to raise the state's educational appropriations from about $25,000,000 to $43,000,000 was trimmed considerably. The measure as finally passed calls for spending $34,000,000 next year on schools.

This sum will permit equalizing salaries for white and Negro teachers and make a start toward equal transportation facilities. But equalizing school buildings and facilities must wait for a proposed special session to finance the second year of the program.

But financing even the reduced program will be a burden upon Mississippi's taxpayers. Mississippi has the lowest per capita income among the 48 states. But its state tax burden is, relatively, already one of the highest, being more than 50 per cent above the national average. Only four states outranked Mississippi in that regard in 1952.

The legislators got around part of that difficulty by passing on to local school systems, counties and cities, some of the burden of raising the additional money. Of course, only the state government is relieved by that provision. The taxpayers will not escape.

The Legislature's work is not done, however. There is the financing of the rest of the program. And over all there is the shadow of a Supreme Court decision that could alter the situation profoundly.

Any way you view it, Mississippi's predicament is difficult. It has the largest percentage of Negro population. Only a bare majority is white. It is a poor state, and has been poor for a long time. It has, roundly speaking, more of a task in equalizing school facilities and less means to do it with. Moreover, and this is a factor which has to be considered, it has strong feelings about managing its own affairs. The suggestion that more federal educational funds be sought finds little sympathy in the Magnolia State. But give its people credit for willingness to increase their already heavy tax burden in order to maintain their traditional school pattern.

Mississippi Roundup—

School Deadlock Ends As Senate OKs Bill

JACKSON, Miss., April 29 (U.P.)—A six-month lekislative wrangle over Negro-white school equalization ended today when the Senate gave in on an amendment that was holding up the money needed for the program.

Senators voted 29-6 to back down fro mtheir stand on distribution of money under the $50,000,000 appropriation for schools during the next two years. They agreed to accept the conference report calling for withdrawal of the amendment by Ed Simmons of Tylertown.

It would have taken $2,500,000 of the amount alloted for sup-

It was also pointed out that certain features in the new program will eleminate what has been termed by well informed sources as large scale, a big money racket existing in connection with the operation of Negro schools as a result of which Negro parents have been paying numerous fees in order to attend schools which the parents of the state have not been required to pay.

There has been no denial that Negro students have been paying certain fees not required of white students, such as registration and transfer, and maintenance fee.

While at the same time money for these purposes were provided

White Approves Using Police In Segregation

Gov. Hugh White declared Mississippi's "police power" will be used if necessary to keep Negroes out of white schools. He said the "police power" of state, allowing it to preserve law and order, never has been touched by the United States Supreme Court. The Governor's statement followed the suggestion by former Gov. Fielding L. Wright that the "police powers" be invoked to prevent racial mixing in public schools.

Public Schools' Abolition Urged

JACKSON, Miss., July 13 (AP).—A constitutional ammendment opening the way for abolishing public schools has been recommended by a Mississippi advisory committee seeking ways to dodge the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public education.

Gov. Hugh White said yesterday he would call the legislature into special session early in September to consider the proposed amendment to the state constitution. It would authorize the legislature by a two-thirds vote to abolish public schools, statewide or on a local option basis, if necessary, to maintain segregation.

Members of Mississippi's Legal Education Advisory Committee declared it would be used only as a last resort. The amendment is viewed as a safeguard if Negroes try to force school intergration. Private, segregated schools with state aid could be set up under the amendment.

Mississippi Has New Plan to Bar Integration

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27.—Gov. Hugh White has revealed another plank in the program to keep racial segregation in Mississippi schools.

Gov. White said yesterday he would ask the special session of the legislatiure opening September 7 to consider a bill forbidding any one from stirring up race trouble by filing law suits.

The law would prohibit any one except relatives of children attending schools from filing suits against school districts. It apparently means to strike at the National Associtaion for the Advancement of Colored People and its efforts to obtain integrated schools.

GREENVILLE TO DEFY ONTEGRATION RULING

School Board Says Both Races To Be Treated Fairly

From The Commercial Appeal Greenville, Miss., Bureau

GREENVILLE, Miss., Aug. 21.—The Greenville school board announced Saturday that "although both the Negro and white child will be treated fairly, integration of the races will not be undertaken in Greenville schools."

The five-member board pointed out school integration cannot be accomplished by laws or court decisions which conflict with the general sentiment of the community upon which they are designed to operate.

The statement cited segregation legislation enacted by the Southern states years ago.

"This legislation was harmonious with the established usages, customs, traditions and the general sentiment of the people of both races, and was enacted with a view to the promotion of public comfort and the preservation of public peace and good order," the board stated.

The statement asserted the progress in education must continue and the children of the South of both races must be educated.

"But integration of the schools will not be undertaken in Greenville as it would not work," the board said.

Mississippi Calls Special Session on School Segregation

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., July 31.—Gov. Hugh White, disappointed over Negroes' rejection of "segregation by consent," said the Legislature would convene September 7 to consider abolishing public schools to preserve segregation in Mississippi.

In announcing the special session, Gov. White told the Legal Educational Advisory Committee yesterday that until the last few days, he believed a certain element of Negroes would support separate but equal schools.

"I have come to the definite conclusion you couldn't put your faith and trust in them," he added. "They're all just as wound up together as they could be. I have lost confidence."

The committee, which was created by the 1954 regular session to find a method to avoid the United States Supreme Court decision against segregation, indorsed a proposed constitutional amendment which the Legislature will consider.

The Legislature must approve the amendment by a two-thirds vote and it must be ratified by the people in the general election.

Schools could be abolished on a State-wide or local basis. The committee said that if the public schools were abolished there probably would be a system of private schools with State aid.

The amendment was considered as a threat for the Negroes to co-operate or lose public schools. So far, no State has abolished public schools to maintain segregation.

Approximately half of Mississipp'is population is composed of Negroes.

A majority of the 95 Negroes invited to a meeting with the committee by Gov. White said they wanted no part of the voluntary segregation idea.

LONG OPPOSES PLAN TO ABOLISH SCHOOLS

Tupelo Legislator Gives Views Before Civitans

FINAL RESORT, HE SAYS

By JAMES KINGSLEY

From The Commercial Appeal Tupelo, Miss. Bureau

TUPELO, Miss., Aug. 12.—Byron Long Jr., floaterial Representative of Lee-Itawamba counties said Thursday he opposes proposals to abolish the Mississippi Public Schools.

Speaking before the Tupelo Civitan Club, Mr. Long maintained that abolishing the schools should be the last step to keep the schools segregated.

Traditions Competing

"There are two traditions in the South," he said, "the public school system and segregation. Because of competition among the two Southern traditions they are now in jeopardy.

"However," he said, "I believe we can maintain the segregated system and still have public schools. If the schools should be abolished, I do not know how we could ever get them back," he said.

Mr. Long, a practicing Tupelo attorney declared, "The United States Supreme Court has ruled that segregation is unconstitutional. It is also possible they could rule private schools are unconstitutional in Mississippi.

The Supreme Court ruling of the Texas Jaybird cases is a "warning" to us if we should try to set up a private school system in Mississippi.

In Texas they tried to get away from the state in the voting of Negroes, by using private clubs. In Mississippi we would be getting away from public schools by setting up private schools.

Schools Would Need Aid

"But we would have to help the private schools financially and also would probably have other rulings. Possibly the only difference would be that the buildings and land would either be sold or leased to some private organization or individual," Mr. Long said.

"As of now, Mississippi's segregation laws still stand on the books and have not been outlawed by the Supreme Court. There have been no law suits filed challenging Mississippi's laws," he said.

Representative Long referred to the two proposed bills he had mailed to Gov. Hugh White in July.

One bill would prohibit fomenting and agitation of litigation by any person or organization to stir up feelings among the Negroes and would create an obstacle to those who might try to stir up discontent and animosity between the races.

Proposals Outlined

"This proposal," he said, "would prohibit any person or organization from assisting others as an inducement to the commencement or continuation of proceedings in any court or before any administrative agency in Mississippi. Violation of the proposed act would be a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment," he said.

The other bill which he called the "preference act" would require a parent to designate an attendance center within the school district for their children. If they did not have a preference they would waive their choice of the attendance center and it would be up to the board of trustees to choose one, he said.

SEGREGATION GROWS AS CAMPAIGN ISSUE

Negro Demand Stirs Action In Mississippi Politics

EASTLAND, GARTIN TALK

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., July 31.—The demand of Negro leaders for adherence to the Supreme Court's public school integration decision in refusing to accept a voluntary segregation plan Saturday entered the Aug. 24 Democratic Primary for the United States Senate.

Senior Senator James O. Eastland declared in stump speeches "There can be no compromise" in announcing his readiness "to fight to retain segregation." He referred to Friday's bi-racial meeting called by Gov. Hugh White to seek agreement on a voluntary segregation program conditioned on Negro schools being immediately equalized with the whites.

Gartin Takes Stand

Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin, the lone opponent of the senator's third term bid, attended Friday's bi-racial meeting and later joined with oGvernor White and a legal educational advisory committee in rejecting the integration demand and calling for a special legislative session Sept. 7 to consider a constitutional amendment looking to abolish of public schools if integration is attempted.

In his Saturday speeches at Wiggins, Poplarville, Bay St. Louis and Collins, Mr. Gartin stressed his support for expansion of veterans' hospital facilities and pension benefits. He is a veteran of World War II.

It was in his address at Carthage that Senator Eastland took cognizance of the failure of the bi-racial meeting to agree on a plan agreeable to whites and Negroes.

"The Negro leaders made it clear to everybody they are going to insist on integration in the schools," the senior senator and Delta planter said. "There can be No compromise, and I am ready to fight to retain segregation."

Stresses Leadership

"Whether we win this victory or not against a tyrannical United States high court will depend on the ability and determination of Southern leadership," he said.

Soon after the May 17 decision of the court, Senator Eastland delivered a blistering denunciation of the members of the Supreme Court on the Senate floor.

During the day ,the senior senator also spoke at De Kalb, where he was presented by Roy K. Knapp, World War II veteran and athletic director of East Mississippi Junior College; at Philadelphia, where Dees Stribling, attorney, was in charge, and at Louisville, where Mayor Gene Stringer presented him.

In his other speeches, Senator Eastland stressed his work for agriculture, asserting that "high support prices are the only safeguards of guaranteed income on the farm."

He plans to return to Washington Tuesday for a floor fight for continuation of 90 per cent parity supports on cotton and basic commodities and 85 per cent supports on dairy products. He was one of the eight members of the 15-member Senate Agriculture Committee who held out against the Eisenhower Administration's flexible price plan.

"If we lose this fight farmers can take one long, lingering look at their cotton crop this year," he said. "It will be the last one they harvest at high support prices."

Referring to his membership on the Agricultural Committee, Senator Eastland said "If Mississippi loses its representation on that committee you won't see in your lifetime another man appointed who is in favor of fixed support prices."

Gartin Tells Views

Lieutenant Governor Gartin in his stump appearances said he favors a pension for veterans of the World War 1 before they reach 65.

"The veterans of the Spanish-American War were provided with such pensions, and I believe that any nation that can give away as much money trying to buy the friendship of foreign countries as the United States has can surely provide a pension for men who bear the scars of battle," he said. "We veterans of World War II are grateful to the American people for the benefits realized under the GI Bill of Rights, but we remember that veterans of World War I were not so bountifully provided for."

"They came home and received their mustering-out pay, which amounted to an average of $50 or $60 each, then they were thrown on the mercy of the world. Now in their declining years their ills arising from diseases and battle wounds cause them more and more trouble with the passage of time."

"They should be provided with the finest in the way of hospitalization care, and they are entitled to liberal pension benefits. As United States senator from Mississippi I will work for both," Mr. Gartin said.

The lieutenant governor stressed his "devotion to duty" theme, and said he will be "a fulltime senator for all the people and all sections of Mississippi." He cited Senator John Stennis of Mississippi and Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas as "living proof that devotion to duty and loyalty to the cause are worth more than all the seniority in the Congress."

He said he favors appropriations for farm-to-market roads, vocational rehabilitation, more adequate credit for farmers, more liberal veterans' benefits, TVA and REA, flood control and port improvements, and a balanced farm program to help farmers who have diversified.

90-Man Delegation Urges State To Follow Court

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — Negro leaders Friday dashed hopes of the state's white leaders that voluntary segregation of the races in the state's public schools was likely.

Ninety leaders of Mississippi's 3-million Negro residents told the Legal Educational Advisory Committee the state should not sidestep the historic Supreme Court decision.

E. W. Banks, Jackson undertaker, read a resolution passed by the Negro group Thursday night asking state leaders to "endorse and abide by" the segregation ruling.

Members of the state committee, set up by the legislature to find ways to preserve separate schools for the races, had declared previously that 95 per cent of Mississippi Negroes want to keep segregated schools, if they are equal.

Friday, Negro leaders said this was not a true representation of the feelings of people with whom they were in contact.

A 'HUMANE DECISION'

Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, said:

"The Negroes have not come here to help work a plan to circumvent or bypass the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court. It is a humane decision."

He said 250 residents of his town—the only all-Negro city in the state—met Thursday night and voted "we could not endorse any program of legal or voluntary segregation in Mississippi."

Only one Negro speaker at the meeting urged the state to keep segregation, and another offered a compromise, but neither got favorable reaction from members of their race at the session.

Gov. Hugh White announced then that he will call the Mississippi legislature into special session Sept. 7 to consider a constitutional amendment to abolish the state's public school system.

"As a Mississippian and as an American I know that no legislature will ever come to abolish public schools except in the last resort," Measell said.

Rep. Icey Day of Attala county, a staunch supporter of the program to equalize Negro and White schools which was enacted last year but only partially financed, supported the constitutional change.

"As long as I live," he said amid applause, "my children will never go to an integrated school. And if I don't have a dime (for private schools) they'll go through life with as much ignorance as I have.

As a lawyer, he said, "I cease to have respect for the Supreme court of the United States" when it ruled that segregation has no place in public education.

Rep. John Southward of Tishomingo county asked that it be made harder to abolish public schools.

"I want to make sure this is a last resort," he said, adding, "we're going to keep segregation in our county.

"The first time a Negro goes to school up there (with Whites), that's the time we'll have a funeral."

In the district of Columbia, new White and Negro grade school pupils registered quietly Wednesday for racially integrated classes for the first time.

Parents and children appeared to be taking the end of segregation calmly. School officials said they knew of no incidents.

Out in Texas, where the Negro population is heavy in the eastern sector, the superintendent of a White rural school near the metropolis of Dallas rejected efforts of a group of Negro parents to enroll their children. Supt. Mark Hitt said he'd abide by state board of education instructions to continue segregation this year.

J. Harold Jones II, executive secretary of the Dallas chapter of the NAACP who led the group to the school, commented: "The South Central Civic League and the NAACP firmly believe in the recent decision of the Supreme court and will stop short of nothing until the law of the land comes about in Dallas."

Addressing a conference of school officials from 11 Southern states at Atlanta, a Tennessee lawyer long associated with Southern education predicted gradual elimination of racial segregation in the schools. The forecast came from Cecil Sims, White Nashville attorney and board of education member.

At Poplar Bluff, Mo., in the southeastern corner of the state, the board of education announced Negro pupils would be eligible to attend the school of their choice. All the Negro pupils enrolled at the established all-Negro high and elementary schools without applying at the White schools.

Mississippi Roundup—

Walthall County Asked To End Segregation

Petition From NAACP Believed To Be First One Filed In State; May Be Tried All Over State

TYLERTOWN, Miss., Aug. 13 (U.P.)—A petition bearing the names of 30 Negroes has been filed with the Walthall County Board of Education, asking an end to racial segregation in public schools.

County Superintendent of Education Edd Duncan said today the petition prepared by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is being held by the county board "without action".

Duncan said the petition did not request the admittance of Negro students to any white school in the county but was the form request adopted by the NAACP calling for county level boards to carry out the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling.

State NAACP leaders, after a meeting in Jackson recently, said the petitions would be filed all over the state. The petition here was the first reported filed.

Duncan said the county board "felt pretty well armed" to prevent integration with a 1954 law which assigns students to attendance centers (schools) without mention of race.

Mississippi Starts Integration Battle

Amendment To Abolish Public Schools Launched

By The Associated Press

Mississippi's house of representatives passed on first reading Wednesday the proposed constitutional amendment empowering the legislature to abolish public schools.

The vote, 109-24, assured final passage through the legislature.

The number of senators who signed the resolution containing the amendment assured its passage in the Senate.

The amendment is the foundation for a wall Mississippi hopes will keep Negroes out of White schools. A series of statutes to erect the wall will come at another special session early next year.

Sponsors of the amendment claim it would provide a club over the Negroes' heads, threatening to destroy their schools if they try to enter White schools.

The constitutional amendment must pass each house three separate times by a two-third vote before being submitted to a vote of the people Dec. 21.

"We've faced with a very serious matter this afternoon," Rep. Paul Measell, chairman of the constitution committee, said as he called the amendment up for action. "I hope it will be passed as written."

It was. The house beat down four attempts to change the amendment. All would have made it harder to abolish schools.

All legislators speaking for the amendment emphasized they would only vote to abolish public schools as a "last resort."

Mississippi May Abolish System Of Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., July 30 (AP) — The Mississippi legislature will go into special session Sept. 7 to consider a proposed amendment to the state constitution allowing public schools to be abolished if necessary to keep segregation.

Gov. Hugh White announced the date after the Legal Educational Advisory committee closed ranks that threatened to split during a hot meeting late today.

LEAC members again approved the amendment after they were convinced that "segregation by consent" will not work in Mississippi.

The group's action was a direct slap at 90 Negroes who met with it this morning. The majority of the Negroes said they would not support any attempt to dodge the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

Many of the Negroes said they would actively fight any such attempts.

The LEAC hoped the Negores would cooperate in keeping segregation despite the Surpeme Court's decision if they were given equal schools or something near it.

They were convinced otherwise today.

The special legislative session will be limited to the one question: The constitutional amendment.

Gov. White said it probably would last two weeks.

If the amendment passes the legislature and is approved by the people, the LEAC pledged itself again today to support a building program to take away some of the Negroes' discontent.

The amendment is viewed as a club over the Negroes' heads, a threat to cooperate or lose public schools.

A two-thirds vote of the legislature would be required to end the public school system. Schools could be abolished on a statewide or local option basis.

If abolished, which the LEAC emphatically declared would be a last resort, some system of private schools with state aid probably would be set up.

The LEAC threatened to split in its approval of the amendment today as two members questioned the wisdom of it, and one expressed doubt that the people would approve it.

Gov. White and Speaker of the House Walter Sillers ended the danger in bitter speeches, saying the Negroes' attitude left no alternative.

NEGRO LEADERS, GOV. WHITE TALK

(The Times Picayune Capital Bureau)

JACKSON, Miss., June 30—Gov. Hugh White Wednesday conferred with six Negro leaders on the school segregation issue and said he believed "a large percent of the colored people want to cooperate."

The governor said that discussion with the six Negro leaders was primarily to form a list of Negroes throughout the state which he will invite to a general meeting on the segregation issue.

"We had a very fine discussion of the whole situation" White declared.

"I'm very much pleased with the matter as it stands as far as they "are concerned," he added.

White said he believed the general meeting with Ngroes, which he plans "will work out something mutually advantageous to both races."

Meeting with the governor Wednesday were Dr. J. D. White, president of Mississippi vocational college; Dr. J. R. Otis, president of Alcorn A & M college, Alcorn; Prof. J. D. Boyd, Utica, past president of the State Negro Teachers Association, Percy Greene, editor of a Jackson Negro newspaper, Rev. H. H. Mumes, Greenville, and E. S. Bishop, Corinth.

Gov. White Says School Plans 'in Talking Stage'

General Agreement Areas Reached, He Declares

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., June 22—Gov. Hugh White said Tuesday his 25-member legal educational advisory committee was still "in the talking stage" but that it had reached general areas of agreement on constitutional amendments for keeping school segregation.

The special committee, named by the Legislature to map strategy for maintaining segregation in the face of an adverse ruling by the United States supreme court, met Tuesday with the governor in a full-day session from which newspaper reporters were barred.

White would not make any comments on what specific proposals the committee considered. He said, however, that he believed the committee "will be unanimous" whenever it makes its final recomemndations.

Another session of the committee will be called in about 10 days, the governor said.

He said that there is now a probability that he will call a special session before the end of the year to consider the constitutional amendments recommended by the committee.

Quick Approval

Earlier White had indicated that he did not believe an early session of the Legislature would be necessary.

He reiterated Tuesday, however, that he would not call a special session unless there was every indication the proposals would be given quick approval by the Legislature.

Indications Tuesday were that the committee is concentrating on a proposed constitutional amendment which would permit individual school districts to abolish public schools and go to a system of private schools if the action was necessary for keeping segregation in the schools of the district.

One member said that the "restrictions" which were placed on the operation of the proposal, regarding legislative approval and approval by citizens of the district had made the measure palatable to some members who do not favor the private school idea.

Compromise Cited

The proposal is reportedly a compromise between the previous plan urged by House speaker Walter Sillers calling for legislative authority to abolish the entire state public school system and go to a system of tuition payments to individual students to attend "private" schools.

Gov. White told reporters that the measures being discussed by the committee are designed "to put the Legislature in position to act."

White had returned from the meeting with other Southern governors on the school segregation issue two weeks ago with a statement that he did not see how the state could proceed until the supreme court rendered its final decree on the segregation ruling.

"I believe that on the basis of what was discussed today, that we can proceed before the supreme court makes its final decree," White declared.

Miss. Veterans Group Votes To Keep Segregation

VICKSBURG, Miss. — Whoever said that most veterans who fought beside Negroes on the battlefields of Europe and Asia learned that prejudice was wrong probably didn't include some soldiers from Mississipi.

Last week the Mississippi department of the Veterans of Foreigns Wars adopted unanimously resolutions for maintaining segregation in all fields of social, cultural and educational life in this state.

Voting at the closing session of their 20th annual encampment, the Mississippi veterans took a positive stand against any legislative or judicial action which might destroy their long-standing mint-juliped customs and traditions of keeping the Negro a "second-class" citizen.

Mississippi to consider abolishing public schools

JACKSON, Miss., July 31—(AP)—Gov. Hugh White, disappointed over Negroes' rejection of "segregation by consent," said the Legislature would convene Sept. 7 to consider abolishing public schools to preserve segregation in Mississippi.

In announcing the special session, White told the Legal Educational Advisory Committee Friday that until the last few days he believed a certain element of Negroes would support separate but equal schools.

THE LEAC created by the 1954 regular session to find a method to avoid the United States Supreme Court decision against segregation, endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment which the Legislature will consider.

The Legislature must approve the amendment by a two-thirds vote and it must be ratified by the poeple in the general election.

Schools could be abolished on a statewide or local basis. The LEAC said if public schools are abolished, there probably will be a system of private schools with state aid.

THE AMENDMENT was considerated, as a threat for the Negroes to cooperate or lose public schools. So far, no state has abolished public schools to maintain segregation.

Approximately half of Mississippi's population are Negroes.

A majority of the 95 Negroes invited to a meeting with the LEAC by Gov. White, said they wanted no part of the voluntary segregation idea.

The LEAC had hoped to get Negroes support to keep segregation in return for a building program to improve Negro schools.

Educator Cites School Program

UTICA, Miss., July 20 (AP) — A prominent Negro educator said Tuesday a program of school construction would come closer than anything to keeping "the era of good race relations now enjoyed in Mississippi."

J. D. Boyd, superintendent of the Hinds County Agricultural High school and former president of the state Negro Teachers' Association, said the program "should be carefully worked out by men of good will of both races.

The teacher warned against any law or constitutional amendment that would allow public schools to be abolished,

"It is your white school system built up over the years that in reality would suffer," he said.

"Except in a very few instances, the Negro people have no school system that should not have been abolished long ago."

Mississippi's Legal Educational Advisory Committee has approved a proposed constitutional amendment that would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools if necessary to keep racial segregation.

QUICK SCHOOL CHANGE IS URGED BY NEGROES

Governor's Statement Denied By Leader Of Race

JACKSON, Miss., July 26. — (UP) — A group of Mississippi Negro leaders Sunday called for an end of segregation in public schools "as quickly as possible," and urged opening of the state's graduate and professional schools to all races this fall.

The meeting, called by the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, unanimously recommended a committee of Negroes be appointed by Gov. Hugh White to work with white leaders "to find ways of implementing the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public school system."

Some 200 persons, representing major Negro organizations and colleges in the state, passed a resolution "unalterably opposing" any effort of "either white or Negro citizens to attempt to circumvent the decision of the court."

Any statement or action to the contrary, it said, "are personal opinions and do not express the views of the Negro leaders of the state."

Present were 26 of the Negroes invited by Gov. White to attend a conference this Friday to discuss possible "voluntary" continuation of the separate school system.

Dr. T. R. M. Howard, president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership and one of those invited by Governor White, said the action of the group showed that "the statement that 95 per cent of the Negro leaders are in favor of continuing segregation is one of the biggest lies of our day."

The statement was made by the Governor following a meeting last month with seven Negro educators and editors. "If the Negroes of the state," Howard said, "could vote on the issue, officials would see what they really think."

NAACP Readying School Petitions In Mississippi

COLUMBUS, Miss. — (ANP) — Dr. E. J. Stringer said here last week that the Mississippi Negroes will be ready within the next 30 days to file the necessary petitions to enter the white schools of the state.

He said that he has every branch in the state working on them now and that they are busy getting the signatures on the petitions.

He stated that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its emergency meeting held in Jackson in May, decided to file the petition with the school boards throughout the state, asking them to end segregation in the schools on a voluntary basis. If and when turned down they will be used to form the basis for suits.

Dr. Stringer is one of the outstanding members of the dental profession in the state and president of the NAACP.

GARTIN BEGS NEGROES TO AID SEGREGATION

'Don't Destroy Recent Gains,' Eastland Foe Pleads

SENATOR'S INACTION HIT

GRENADA, Miss., Aug. 6.— (UP) — Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, campaigning for the United States Senate, Friday night urged "thinking and intelligent Negro leaders to co-operate with white leaders in maintaining segregation" in Mississippi.

Mr. Gartin said "there is no question about the preservation of segregation in Mississippi and in the name of common sense, I urge Negroes . . . not to destroy all the gains they have made in recent years."

Court Block Simple

The lieutenant governor said a "Simple majority act of Congress could have prevented the Supreme Court from ruling in the school segregation cases . . . the Congress has limited power of the Supreme Court several times."

"Senator James O. Eastland," Gartin said, "never introduced such a measure although he was on the Senate Judiciary Committee where such a bill would logically be expected to originate."

Mr. Gartin scheduled seven talks Saturday in his bid for the Aug. 24 primary nomination. He stumps at Carrollton, Winona, Eupora, Ackerman, Starkville, Okolona and West Point.

Farm Bill Fight Delays Eastland's Race

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—(UP) —Senator James O. Eastland called off speaking engagements at Purvis, Lucedale and Pascagoula, Miss. Friday night, saying that "pressure of the farm bill fight" prevented his returning home to campaign for re-election.

The senator's campaign headquarters at Jackson said E. B. Golding, superintendent of the Benton Consolidated School in Yazoo County, would speak in Eastland's stead at Lucedale and Purvis. The Pascagoula talk was postponed.

Senator To Stump Saturday

Senator Eastland said he would fly to New Orleans Friday night and keep his stump engagements Saturday at Wiggins, Taylorsville, Prentiss and Magee.

Earlier, at Washington, Eastland said he will start a nationwide organization in September to promote his proposed constitutional amendment giving states jurisdiction in health, education and marriage matters.

Senator Eastland said the organization will "Fight the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the CIO, the Americans for Democratic Action and other left wing groups which are attempting to destroy racial segregation in the South."

No definite plans have been made, but Eastland said the first meeting of the group will "probably be held in Georgia."

'Segregation by Consent' Debated in Mississippi

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., July 30.—A meeting today between Mississippi's Legal Educational Advisory Committee and 85 Negro leaders was expected to reveal the survival chances of "segregation by consent."

Members of the LEAC say the idea is based on the belief that 95 per cent of Mississippi's Negroes are willing to attend segregated schools provided they are equal or close to it. They think the other 5 per cent can be handled in various ways.

But a group of Negro leaders met in Jackson last Sunday and passed a resolution saying the "segregation by consent" plan is not approved by the majority of Negroes. The group renewed its pledge to fight all attempts to circumvent the Supreme Court decision.

The LEAC also is expected to reconsider the proposed constitutional amendment that would allow public schools to be abolished as a last resort.

MEA Believes in Relying on 'Segregation by Choice'

Hope Expressed for Key to School Problem

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., July 27—The Mississippi Education Association said Tuesday that the state must rely on "segregation by choice" as the best hope of preserving its dual public school system.

And, the state education group emphasized, Mississippi cannot expect Negroes to choose separate schools "while there remains the present disparity between the schools provided for each race."

In its first official statement since the U. S. Supreme Court ruling on school segregation, the MEA said that "we can no longer draw the color line in our schools unless there is justice on each side of the line."

The organization of 9000 Mississippi teachers and educators charged that immediate steps must be taken to provide state-aid to local communities under the equalized school building program enacted but not financed by the state legislature.

Legislation Cited

Without taking a direct stand on the proposed constitutional amendment to permit abolition of public schools on a statewide or district basis, the MEA said it "questioned" effectiveness of legislation which purposed to circumvent the Supreme Court ruling.

The 25-member legal educational advisory committee headed by Gov. Hugh White endorsed the amendment at a recent meeting here.

"Voluntary separation of the races in the public schools with complete endorsement of leaders of both races at the state level and worked out on a community level with adequate facilities for both races offers our best hope," the association said in an 800-word statement.

The group charged that "it is futile to talk of separate schools for the Negro unless we can talk of adequate schools for his race."

The MEA commended Gov. White for calling the statewide conference between 88 Negroes representing groups throughout the state and his legal educational advisory committee here Friday.

Disparity Removal

Removal of the disparity in building facilities between the races, the statement said, is beyond the reach of the local communities of the state as long as their revenue for capital outlay comes from local property taxes alone.

"It follows that state aid in the school building program gives the local community its only hope of meeting the need for better facilities for the Negro in time to set up the pattern of segregation by choice," the MEA said.

Integration of the races in the public schools "will wreck them beyond the possibility of restoration for years to come. It should be opposed by every effective means."

Co-operative efforts by leadership of members of both races on a local level "may well accomplish more now than can be done by law," the association said.

'State of Uncertainty'

"We would question the value of endless litigation which would keep the schools continually in a state of uncertainty," it added.

"This would probably result in stopping educational development where it is."

The MEA said that it believed "racial heritage and folkways now widely separate the two races."

It added: "Actually there is much reluctance among Negroes in the South to be integrated. If we seize on these attitudes and promote pride in race among the Negroes, they will, no doubt, gladly enough choose separate schools taught by members of their own race."

Gov. White has expressed the belief that the "overwhelming majority" of Negroes prefers a segregated school system.

Some proponents of voluntary segregation have said that 95 per cent of Negroes in Mississippi would continue segregation despite the Supreme Court ruling.

Walter White Says Mississippi Will Hurt Its Taxpayers

New York, Sept. 9.—Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, today predicted "three evil consequences' if public schools in Mississippi are abolished as a legislative maneuver to avoid compliance with the Supreme Court decision banning segregated public schools.

Declaring that "the people and taxpayers of Mississippi are to be pitied for the action of their legislature in voting to abolish public education," Mr. White anticipated these results:

1. "Many thousands of dollars of the taxpayyers' money will be wasted in futile legal and administrative actions to flout orderly government in a subcersive manner."

2. "Mississippi's educational sys tem, which is the poorest of all American states, will be further disrupted and weakened."

3. "The action of the Mississippi legislature will play directly into the hands of Communist and other enemies of American democ racy."

Elaborating on the final point, Mr. White noted: "We can be certain that headlines have been made all over the world by the Mississippi legislature's action, to the great harm of the United States."

The Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated public schools "has done more to raise American prestige than any other act of our generation," he added.

According to a United Press report, a state constitutional amendment to permit Mississippi to eliminate its public school system to preserve segregation has received such favorable response in the state legislature as to virtually insure its passage. If the bill is passed it will go to the voters for ratification in December.

SUBVERSION CHARGED BY WHITE AGAINST MISSISSIPPIANS WHO WOULD AFFRONT HIGH COURT

Southerners Decide to Further Weaken Poorest School System in Deep South

DIXIECRATS PLAY DIRECTLY INTO HANDS OF COMMUNISTS

NEW YORK. — Sept. 9—Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, today predicted "three evil consequences" if public schools in Mississippi are abolished as a legislative maneuver to avoid compliance with the Supreme Court de cision banning segregated public schools.

Declaring that "the people and taxpayers of Mississippi are to be pitied for the action of their legislature in voting to abolish public education," Mr. White anticipated these results

1. "Many thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money will be wasted in futile legal and administrative actions to flout orderly government in a subversive manner."

2. "Mississippi's educational system, which is the poorest of all American states, will be further disrupted and weakened."

3. "The action of the Mississippi legislature will play directly into the hands of Communist and other enemies of American democracy."

Flaborating on the final point, Mr. White noted: "We can be certain that headlines have been made all over the world by the Mississippi legislature's action, to the great harm of the United States.' '

The Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated public schools "has done more to raise American prestige than any other act of our generation," he added.

According to a United Press report, a state constitutional amendment to permit Mississippi to eliminate its public school system to preserve segregation has received such favorable response in the state legislature as to virtually insure its passage. If the bill is passed it will go to the voters for ratification in December.

The Supreme Court cases which resulted in the decision against segregated schools were brought to the judicial authority by the NAACP.

Mississippi House Bill Ends Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss. — (NNPA) — The Mississippi House of Representatives Friday cleared a bill aimed at abolishing the state's public school system and sent the measure to the Senate.

A similar bill sponsored by thirty-three of the forty-nine Senators is in the constitution committee awaiting the house bill.

Passage of the bill by the legislature will permit the public to vote in a referendum December 21 on whether to enable the legislature to abolish the state' public school system.

The move is aimed at getting around the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

A majority vote in referendum would place the enabling legislation in the constitution. Debate has indicated, however, that the legislature would take the drastic step of abolition only as a last resort.

For state-wide abolition a two-thirds vote in the legislature would be needed. However, the legislature under the measure would be permitted to empower local districts to sell public school property, and set up private schools.

Before passage, a futile attempt was made to amend the bill to require a two-thirds or three-fourths vote to abolish the schools by local option.

The proposed amendment would empower governmental units that abolish their public schools to sell or lease the buildings to private groups and make appropriations to "aid educable children" paying tuition to private schools.

NEW MOVE PROPOSED ON SCHOOL PROBLEM

Keep Segregation With State's Power, Blass Urges

Special to The Commercial Appeal

WIGGINS, Miss., Nov. 30.—Use of the state's police power rather than legislative authorization for abolition of public schools was proposed Tuesday by State Representative Joel Blass of Stone County, as a course for preserving the state's segregated system.

Representative Blass is a leader of the 'friends of segregated public schools' opposing ratification of "the last resort" constitutional amendment in a special election on Dec. 21.

This plan would do just as much to preserve segregation, would be legal and would avoid the danger of giving legislators the power to abolish public schools, the South Mississippi lawmaker said.

The Blass-proposed amendment would be similar to one recently ratified in Louisiana which provides for the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public healtr, morals, better education and the peace and good order in the maintenance of "all public elementary and secondary schools separately for white and colored."

Mr. Blass said under the proposed amendment to be voted on next month, the people will have no chance to decide when or how the public schools are to be abolished.

"That power will be entirely in the hands of the legislators who might be more easily swayed by emotions or personal motives than the citizens," he said.

Proponents of the amendment insist it will not be used until other planned steps to preserve segregation have been exhausted.

POWER OF U. S. SUPREME COURT TO BE CURBED BY NEW GROUP CALLED TOGETHER IN MISSISSIPPI

Speech on Senate Floor by Eastland Tells of Opposition to NAACP, CIO and ADA

WHITE AND MARSHALL "FRUSTRATED INDIVIDUALS"

(By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — An organization aimed at amending the Constitution of the United States so as to curb the power of the Supreme Court is being planned by white people of the south, according to Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi.

In a speech on the senate floor, Thursday, Eastland stated that such an organization will be set up next month to promote the amendment and to fight the NAACP, the CIO and the ADA.

He characterized these three organizations, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the Americans for Democratic Action, as "left wing groups which are attempting to destroy racial segregation in the South."

The organization which the south proposes to establish, he said, would "return to the genius of the American system of government, which is local government, by the people of the communities of their own local affairs."

This announcement was made at the time that the Mississippi senator inserted in the Congressional Record an address made recently by Hugh G. Grant, former member of the staff of the State Department and U. S. minister to Albania, before the Lions International at Birmingham.

Before inserting the address, Eastland pointed out that Grand had opposed the Supreme Court's decision on school segregation from the very day it was made public, May 17, 1954.

Grant had expressed his disapproval, on that day, in a telegram to associate justice Hugo Black, for whom he had served as secretary.

Grant worked for Black at the time that the latter was a "States' right Democrat and a southerner", said Eastland.

A way would be found to circumvent the enforcement of the Court's decree, said Grant's wire, and he would join the forces working toward that end.

An effort to carry out this threat was made by Grant when he suggested to the white people of Alabama that they should take immediately steps to organize on a countrywide basis a States rights movement "with a view to preserving their liberties under the Constitution of the United States.

In commenting on this suggestion Senator Eastland declared that a county-wide organization in Jefferson County, Ala., is inadequate, there, the South would put in motion in September a movement to establish such a nationwide organization.

In his Birmingham speech, Grant attacked the work of Walter White, executive secretary of NAACP, and Thurgood Marshall, special counsel, who argued the segregation cases before the high court.

He referred to these men as "colored men . . . who are more white than Negro."

"These men and their kind are desirous of mixing and mingling freely with members of the white race on a basis of complete social equality involving every phase of life in the United States," declared Grant. "One can understand their deep seated emotions, but the welfare of society cannot be sacrificed for a group of frustrated individuals."

The speaker said he did not believe that the rank and file "pure-blooded Negroes" regarded these men as their true representatives.

He quoted the late Dr. Robert R. Moten, former president of Tuskegee Institute as once saying that he was proud of his race and his ambition was to make a contribution toward the development of his race here in America.

The best way to accomplish this, Dr. Moton was reported as having said "is through segregation which would enable the Negro to develop his own talents and capabilities through competition with their own kind."

Grant described Dr. Moten as being "a fine looking pure-blooded Negro" who "had no desire for social equality with the white people."

The speaker charged the highest court in the land with being influenced behind the scene by Communists. He referred to the Southern Conference for Human Welfare as one of the organizations aggressively interested in opposing segregation. "This organization," he said, "has been charged with being a notorious Communist-front organization."

He also took a crack at white politicians in both the national Democratic and Republican parties who have aided Negro campaigners for the end of segregation.

He blasted such "intellectual liberals" as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Sidney Hillman, for Pres. Harry Truman, Gov. Tom Dewey and President Eisenhower for their stand against segregation.

Negro agitators for the end of segregation are boastful and defiant, declared Grant. And they have the backing of the judicial and executive departments of government.

It is time for white people of the south to stand up and be counted, he declared. There should be no pussyfooting. You are either for segregation or against it—there can be no middle ground.

Eastland To Organize For Segregation

By A. MOHAMMED ALI, V

PICAYUNE, Miss. — (ANP) — Senator James Eastland (D-Miss.) ranted and raged in a speech here last week, and promised that if reelected he would attempt to organize a national association to combat the U. S. Supreme Court decision on segregation and to secure passage of an amendment to the Constitution, giving each state power over its internal affairs, especially its schools.

The race-baiting Dixiecrat then unleashed a verbal attack on the Supreme Court, NAACP, CIO and Americans for Democratic Action.

He referred to the Supreme court as a tyrannical high court, and the NAACP, CIO and ADA as pressure groups. He also stated that the radically CIO left wingers gave the NAACP $75,000 with which to carry its fight against segregation in the court."

Earlier in another speech in another city, he took another slant.

He said that the greatest threat to the maintenance of segregation is not the people of the two races here at home but our boys who have slept in fox holes with Negroes and have been with them in the Army

SCHOOL MEASURE PASSED BY HOUSE

Proposal Clears First Test in Legislature

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 8—Mississippi's constitutional amendment to give the Legislature power to abolish public schools Wednesday easily cleared its first test on the floor of the state Legislature.

The House, after two hours of debate, approved the measure by a two-thirds majority on the first of three required passages. The vote was 109 to 24.

Action on the measure came after the House opened its session Wednesday afternoon by suspending its rules to permit the amendment to be brought to the floor.

Sponsors of the amendment easily beat down any revisions in the proposal as it was prepared for the Legislature by the state Legal Educational Advisory Committee.

The amendment was handed to the lawmakers Tuesday by Gov. Hugh White, who said that the state needed the threat of public school abolition to keep its segregated school system in the face of the United States supreme court decision outlawing school segregation.

Rep. Joel Blass, Stone county, leading the opposition to the measure, charged that the state "faces a difficult situation, but not any emergency" on the school segregation question.

He said that "the Negroes don't fear what we are about to do," and added that if public schools were abolished "the whites stand to lose everything and the Negroes little."

Blass warned that should Mississippi go out of the public school field, "then the federal government will come into public education and we will see in Mississippi, fine federally supported school buildings."

The lawmaker said that "there will be some white children going to those schools, and then you will see the beginning of the end of segregation."

Rep. Icey Day, Attala county, charged that Blass had incorrectly based his argument on the abolition of public schools.

"The whole idea is to give us one more program to keep down integration in the public schools of this state," Day asserted.

"I can't see why any man in his right mind could believe as long as it is humanly possible that we are going to abolish the public schools of Mississippi," he declared.

Another supporter of the amendment, E. Maurice Black, Carroll county, told the House:

"If you don't see fit to adopt this amendment, then the Negroes will enter the white schools."

He said that if this took place, "every person with white blood will take their children out of the schools and send them to private schools."

The lawmaker said that "I for one can't send my children to school without state assistance."

Rep. J. M. Alford, Walthall county, said that "our trouble today is with the NAACP . . . they came in here and organized right under our noses."

He said that he believed the decision of the supreme court outlawing segregation "is just as rotten as the NAACP."

Four attempts to revise the provisions of the amendment with regard to adoption of legislation which would authorize individual school districts to abolish their schools were rejected.

Under the amendment's provisions, legislation which would abolish schools on a statewide basis would require a two-thirds majority for passage, while authority for individual districts to abolish their schools could be voted by a simple majority.

Rep. John Farese, Benton county, joined by six other lawmakers, proposed an amendment which would also require a two-thirds majority for the "local option" authority to abolish schools.

This amendment was tabled on a vote of 68 to 62 on a motion by Rep. Ed White, Holmes county.

Also rejected were amendments which would have required a three-fifths majority to enact a "local option" school abolish legislation, and to require a two-thirds vote of the elected membership of the entire legislature to abolish schools on a statewide basis.

The 24 House members voting against the amendment were:

Beckett of Calhoun county, Blass of Stone county, Brown of Calhoun county, Burks of eParl River county, Cato of Jefferson and Claiborne counties, Cherry of Kemper county, Day and Gay, both of Pontotoc county, Hale of Lafayette county, Johnson of Tippah county, Lecroy of Prentiss county, Lee of Alcorn county, Long of Lee and Itawamba counties, McCarver of Itawamba county, McGehee of Marion county, Medford of Alcorn county, Owen of Union county, Smith of Choctaw county, Southward of Tishomingo county, Tackett of Monroe county, Weatherford of Lee county, Williams of Hinds county, Wroten of Washington county, and Young of Wayne county.

Absent or Not Voting (7)—Fountain of Harrison and Jackson counties, Holmes of Montgomery county, Krebs of Jackson county, Ramsey of Warren county, Roberts of Jasper county, Stephens of Union county, and Williams of Monroe county.

Rep. Delos Burks, Pearl River county, who voted against the measure, later sent up an explanation of his vote declaring that he did so "because of the failure of the House to adopt amendments which would have given sufficient safeguards by requiring more than a mere majority of those present and voting to abolish the public schools of Mississippi."

Burks added that "deliberations by the House floor during the first reading of HCR2 had the effect of a 'steamroller.' "

Under the constitution, any amendment must be approved by each branch of the legislature by a two-thirds majority on three legislative days before being submitted to the people.

The amendment will be considered for a second time Thursday by the House and possibly will be given its third reading on Friday.

Lt. governor signs measure to abolish Mississippi schools

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 17—(AP)—Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin today signed a constitutional amendment authorizing the State Legislature to abolish public schools.

Gartin's action places the amendment before the people in a Dec 21 election.

The Senate, which adjourned yesterday until Tuesday, met in a hurriedly called session so Gartin could sign the measure.

Speaker of the House Walter Sillers signed the amendment yesterday after the Senate had adjourned.

Sillers said the Legislature should "follow the book" and sign the measure in open session because Mississippi's traditional way of life with respect to segregation was at stake.

Only 33 of the Senate's 49 members were present when Gartin "called the attention of the Senate" to the signing. The Senate previously endorsed the measure by an overwhelming majority on a third reading.

Mississippi Legislature Okays Bill To Abolish Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 16 (AP)—Standby authority to abolish public schools to keep Negroes and whites separated cleared Mississippi's Legislature today.

The amendment to the state constitution goes to a vote of the people on Dec. 21.

Gov. Hugh White predicted the people would ratify the amendment. But state leaders admit there is a strong undercurrent of opposition.

The House of Representatives yesterday whipped a move to use state funds "to fully inform the people of this state of the provisions and purposes of the proposed amendment."

The amendment's opponents, joined by some supporters, shouted rejection of "being propagandized with state funds" to get the people's support at the polls.

Sponsors labeled the amendment a "last resort" measure to be used only if other methods fail to keep segregated schools despite the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

The state Senate gave the amendment the last of three required approvals today, one week after the House overwhelmingly passed it.

The amendment is the first product of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, created by the 1954 Legislature to find ways of getting around the Supreme Court decision. Later, the LEAC will recommend specific laws it hopes will make the "last resort" unnecessary.

LEAC members promised to support a public school building program to improve Mississippi's schools if the amendment is ratified.

They agreed that better Negro facilities would help keep segregated schools on a voluntary basis. But some LEAC members, holding decisive legislative posts, have refused to support appropriations for school buildings unless the amendment is ratified.

If the people ratify the amendment, it will be inserted in the state constitution by the next legislature.

Under the amendment, the Legislature could:

1. Abolish schools throughout Mississippi by a two-thirds vote.
2. By a majority vote, set up a local option plan whereby individual counties and school districts could abolish their schools.
3. Sell, lease or rent state-owned school property.
4. Pay tuition for students to attend private schools.

Schools Making Space Survey For Integration

Grades 1-9 Checked To Show Where Zones Can Apply This Semester

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

District school officials are making an inventory of space in the grade schools and junior highs to determine where the integrated boundaries might go into effect this semester.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning said in his one-year integration plan that as space and staff permitted the new zones would become effective for individual schools on these levels this term.

Many school officials believe that most of the new school zones will be in operation by February.

To date, grade school and junior high enrollments have not leveled off. The city-wide enrollment Thursday was 102,268, an increase of 2322 over the Tuesday registration. By the middle of October, officials predict, registration will have reached 106,000.

Available space already has made it possible for Corning to announce that new senior high zones will go into effect, possibly by Friday. Corning previously said these boundaries would go into operation in February.

Corning yesterday said his staff would know Monday how many 10th and 11th grade students want tto use their opstudents want to use their "option" of transferring from their present high schools to ones zoned to serve their places of residence. Old students may stay in their present buildings unless overcrowding occurs.

A declining enrollment of white high school students primarily was responsible for the excess of seats, Corning said. He added that this enrollment trend was due largely to an exodus of white persons to the suburbs. This population shift began several years ago.

"Even if everyone exercised his option to change high schools, there should be enough space," Corning said. Under a Board of Education decision, 12th graders do not have an option.

Corning said most of the requests to transfer are expected to come from Negro students who now may enroll in high schols nearer their homes. Many of these schools under segregation served white students only.

School officials estimate that about 450 Negro high school students will want to use their transfer rights. Few white high school students are expected to seek transfers.

Mississippi Governor's Plan Could End Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7 (AP).—Gov. Hugh White—vowing last-ditch legal warfare in support of segregation—today urged the Mississippi Legislature to approve a constitutional amendment giving itself power to abolish public schools.

The seventy-two-year old Governor urged the amendment to "meet a crisis we did not seek" in a speech to a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives two hours after the Legislature opened a special session.

"We shall resist . . . by every legal means at our command," said Gov. White, referring to the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

But state leaders emphasized abolition of Mississippi's public schools would be a "last resort." Even if adopted by the Legislature, the amendment would have to be approved by a vote of the state's race-conscious citizens.

This is the way the amendment would work:

(1) The Legislature by a two-thirds vote could abolish public schools throughout the state, or

(2) Individual counties and school districts could abolish their public schools and set up private school systems, if local option received legislative approval by a simple majority vote.

Actually, details of the local option method have not been worked out. Neither have details of a private school system.

"We have explored every possible solution," said Gov. White in his twenty-minute speech, broadcast over a Mississippi radio network. "May we never yield and may success crown our united efforts is my humble prayer."

Gov. White, declaring "the thinking behind this amendment, inm y opinion, is unanswerable both as to logic and merit," said there was "no present intention" of abolishing schools. He obviously meant private schools would succeed public schools under the amendment.

"The Supreme Court has deliberately proposed to tell us how we must operate our public schools," said Gov. White. "We know it cannot force us to operate schools if we do not desire to do so.

"Let me make it perfectlv clear," he continued, "that there likewise is no intention of being unjustifiably forced to mix the races in our schools."

"I want to say," he added, "that there is no intention to 'defy' the Supreme Court."

EYES ON MISSISSIPPi

Ruling Expected to Bring No Immediate Changes

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss. — The United States supreme court ruling on school segregation will make no immediate changes in the historic pattern of separate school facilities in Mississippi, Negro and white observers believe.

In fact, there is little indication, with the weight of governmental forces in Mississippi against a breakdown in past segregation policies, that the decision could be enforced in a practical way for some years to come, if ever.

From Gov. Hugh White on down, the opinion in Mississippi is that "we will continue to have segregation in our schools, the supreme court notwithstanding."

Mississippi has no single "plan" by which it expects to continue its dual system of education, but the state is equipped with several handy safeguards which could deflect any attack on the segregation pattern at least for several years.

See No Clash

The Legislature at the recent session put a new law on the books which gives school trustees in each school district the power to "assign" each student to attendance centers on the basis of health and moral factors and for the general welfare of the community.

Sponsors of the act, as well as the attorney general, hold that the law is within the police and general welfare powers of the state constitution.

Because the act has no mention of race or color as a basis of assignment of students, state legal authorities feel it does not clash with the supreme court decision in its face value.

Later, of course, if the assignment statute was consistently brought into use for segregation purposes, it probably would be subject to attack on the grounds that a systematic pattern of excluding Negro children from white schools could be charged.

Most white and Negro leaders in the education field hope that force measures will not be resorted to by either side.

Despite the fact that Mississippi has the largest percentage of Negro population — and Negro school children — of any of the 17 states affected by the segregation ruling, she has never had a suit filed by Negroes making an outright attack on school segregation policies of the state or demanding equal school opportunities.

In official educational circles, the main hope is that the public school system can be allowed to continue on a segregated basis through mutual agreement of the races.

J. M. Tubb, state superintendent of education, believes the state's new equalization program enacted by the Legislature still offers the best answer for maintaining segregation in the schools. He feels that the leaders of the Negro race will prefer equalized schools to integration.

This view is largely shared by such Negro school leaders as Prof. J. D. Boyd, Utica, who has been president of the 7000-member state Negro Teachers Association.

Boyd emphasizes that the supreme court decision "puts a tremendous responsibility on the white man."

The Negro educator says that Negroes, if given "quality" schools in their own communities, will overwhelmingly prefer to go to their own schools.

Ratio Significant

He feels that the white leaders must bring Negroes into the conference tables and make them part of the policy-making bodies which will plan education for both races.

If white leaders react violently to the supreme court decision, Boyd fears, "it would have the effect of solidifying Negroes toward breaking down segregation barriers." This would also put the more radical Negroes in a better position to overthrow the more stable and conservative leaders, he believes.

The ratio of Negro and white school attendance and facilities in Mississippi provides a significant comparison of the possible impact of the decision.

Last year there were 225,399 Negro children under public school instruction in Mississippi compared with 238,977 white children. The state spent only $8,816,670 for the instruction of the Negro children compared with $23,536,000 for instruction of the white children. This was before the new equalization program which goes into effect July 1.

Mississippi Roundup—

Meridian Pastors Favors Segregation Decision

MERIDIAN, Miss., May 25 (U.P.) —A Meridian minister was on record today as favoring the Supreme Court against school segregation which he termed "an expression of Christian faith in incarnation."

The Rev. Duncan M. Hobart, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, chose to speak against the grain of white public opinion in his Sunday sermon when he said "Society cannot declare any group to be inferior because of race or color."

Hobart urged patience and charity in meeting segregation problems.

"God made all men of eternal value," he said. "How does a Negro mother explain to her children the position in which her children will grow?"

Coleman Scorns Court Bid On Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., May 20 (U.P.)— Atty Gen. J. P. Coleman said today Mississippi would show a "complete lack of legal judgment" if it accepted a Supreme Court invitation to argue the school segregation cases and he has "no intention" of doing so.

"It is like being summoned to assist in writing a death warrant when we were not a party to the trial which resulted in the death penalty," Coleman said.

The Court declared segregation unconstitutional Monday but postponed specific decrees in the cases and invited states to file briefs and make arguments.

"I have no intention of filing any brief or making any argument before the court in October," Coleman said. "Mississippi is not a party to this litigation and the Supreme Court at present has no authority to render a decree against Mississippi."

He said he would attend the meeting of Southern attorneys general to be held in Atlanta next Wednesday. Georgia's attorney general called the meeting for a "full scale discussion of further strategy in the segregation cases."

White To Meet Advisors On School Segregation

JACKSON, July 11 (U.P.)—Gov. Hugh White meets tomorrow for the third time with his 25-man advisory committee in an effort to draft a final blueprint to maintain segregated schools in Mississippi.

The committee of state legal and legislative leaders, created by the 1954 Legislature, is charged with making recommendations to bypass the historic Supreme Court ruling against segregation.

Tomorrow's meeting will tackle constitutional amendments necessary to strengthen the state's legal fight to preserve its dual school system. Gov. White will present the recommendations to a special session of the Legislature later this year.

The committee, which held its last meeting behind closed doors, also will receive, it is believed, a report from the governor of his meeting with top Negro leaders on a "voluntary" continuance of segregation.

A five-member constitutional subcommittee has completed its final draft of changes in 1890 Constitution, but declined to reveal the recommendations. It is believed, however, there has been prepared at least two revisions authorizing abolition of the public school system in favor of a private system as a "last resort" move to block integration.

One would permit abolition on a statewide basis, subject to a two-thirds vote of the Legislature, and the second would permit the move on a local option basis, aimed primarily at heavily populated Negro areas and favored by some members of the full committee.

A larger group of Negroes will be invited to confer at a later date with the advisory committee. One Negro leader who conferred with White, Editor Percy Greene of The Jackson Advocate, said afterward state officials should concentrate on the new school equalization program and "forget about segregation" as an issue.

Mississippi Roundup—

White Sees Continued Segregation In Schools

JACKSON, Miss., July 1 (U.P.)—Continued segregation in public schools with Negro approval was predicted by Gov. Hugh White today, while his attorney general urged Mississippi lawyers to prepare immediate defenses against efforts to break down segregation through the courts.

White said he believed the state's new equalized education program, strengthened to include quick construction of equal facilities, may be the key to continued segregation in the state.

The governor said he believed that Negro leaders would approve what he called a "voluntary program" of maintaining separation providing facilities, especially in the rural areas, were equalied under the program enacted during the 1954 session.

White said he was "greatly encouraged" by a discussion with a group of Negro educators and editors today on means of maintaining separate facilities. He pointed out that the group considered the lack of equal facilities on the rural level "our problem today."

Meanwhile, Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman mailed letters to state lawyers suggesting they volunteer as assistant attorney generals to represent any school board cited for refusal to carry out the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling.

Coleman said his office is preparing a model brief which each assistant could use in the event a suit is filed against a school or district.

"We can then be ready for defense within five minutes after any case is filed," Coleman said.

some 125 Negro and white carriers are expected to attend the two-day meeting.

Speakers scheduled include John H. Sullivan, Portland, Ore., secretary of the national executive board; Howard M. Nicol of Cuyahoga Falls, O., of the Mutual Benefit Assn. Board; Postoffice Inspector Boyd L. Rhodes of Tupelo.

'Local Option' Segregation Under Study in Mississippi

Committee Reportedly Favors Plan To Bypass Supreme Court Ruling

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial-Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., June 26—Local option rather than a statewide "one for all and all for one" approach is being studied by Mississippi officials in an effort to bypass the United States Supreme Court's ruling banning public school segregation.

That was reportedly the plan a Legal Educational Advisory Committee headed by Gov. Hugh White tentatively agreed on in a closed meeting during the week. It won out over one by Walter Sillers, speaker of the House of Representatives, for state withdrawal from the public education field in favor of private schools.

Sponsor of the local option plan as a "middle" over those who would seek integration was Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman. Under it, some of the 82 counties might be able to continue segregation on a voluntarily accepted plan, while others would be forced to admit Negroes to their white schools or else let the voters determine whether to withdraw from the public education field on that level only.

Official's View

Attorney General Coleman feels that the local political subdivisions will be able to "take care of the situation" one way or the other. However, members of the committee from the so called "black" counties where Negroes outnumber the whites are opposed to local option. They take the position that all counties should stand together as long as possible to defeat integration efforts.

From the reported action o the 25 members on the committee, created at the 1954 legislative session to devise a mean for continuing segregation, th court's ruling notwithstanding there seems to be a wide difference of opinion. The members are together on the overall problem—that of maintaining segregation—but differ on how, and if, that can be accomplished.

With those members unable to agree, it is difficult to determine what the positions of the 189 legislators will be when called in special session "sometime before Christmas," the governor said, to consider the advisory group's recommendations.

Press Barred

Apparently for the sake of public reaction, the committee announced a harmonious all-day meeting at which the press was barred. At its organization meeting several weeks ago, the doors were wide open, although all statements required to be cleared through Gov. White individually, the members hinted all was not "rosy."

Indicative of the diversity of opinion on the "solution," was the fact that a lengthy report submitted by a subcommittee named to prepare proposed amendments to the constitution, was virtually "thrown out." It was offered by Chief Justice Harvey McGeHee of the state Supreme Court, who, incidentally, believes a voluntary plan can be worked out with the 95 per cent Negroes he feels want segregation continued—provided their schools are immediately brought up to the level of the whites.

Chief Justice McGeHee's subcommittee recommended that at least 10 sections of the constitution dealing with public schools be repealed, and more than 8 amended. Fact is, all references to "public education" and its support by tax monies would have been eliminated under the McGeHee report. Speaker Sillers was on the subcommittee.

Instead of accepting the report, the advisory committee instructed the subcommittee to do a redraft in line with the purported "thinking" of the majority. And, from reports, that "thinking" is along the local option line.

Extra Sessions Seen

The subcommittee is to present a revised report in about 10 days to the full membership. At that time, a definite recommendation is expected to be made, and plans announced by Gov. White for a special session for its consideration.

Gov. White said it will likely take two special sessions: One to adopt the proposed constitutional amendments, and the other to incorporate them in the document of 1890 if ratified by the voters, and to take whatever other action is determined necessary on existing statutes.

If the local option approach is presented, it is likely only two sections of the constitution will have to be repealed: 1, Providing for maintenance in each school district in the county of a public school for at least four months during each scholastic year, and 2, for separate schools for children of the white and Negro races.

Elimination of those sections, sponsors believe, will force long-drawn-out litigation if contested. The "separate, but equal" has already been stricken by the court and its removal will be more or less routine.

Under the proposed local option plan, segregated schools would be continued by voluntary agreements between the races. It would permit counties where integration is sought to submit the issue of continuing public schools to the voters, but would require a two-thirds favorable vote for enactment. Although the Negro vote in Mississippi has increased in recent years, it is not yet strong enough to block a solid white vote on such an issue.

The proposed amendments would likely be submitted in a special election with nothing else on the ballot, instead of the November 7 general election. In the latter, those who vote for candidates and "skip" the amendments are counted against since they must receive a majority of "all votes cast" in the election.

In Mississippi Legislature—

House Bill Would Allocate Funds To Practice Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 22 (U.P.)—Practice-teacher schools operated by colleges and universities would be allotted a share of school equalization funds under a bill passed in the House today.

The bill, introduced by James Baxter of Lauderdale, authorizes any state-supported institution of higher learning in the state to contract with surrounding school districts for the attendance of pupils to the practice school.

The district would transfer equalization funds received—on the basis of the number of its children attending the practice school—to the school for its operation and maintenance. The district, however, would provide for the transportation of the children, and would keep transportation funds allocated to it.

Could Set Rates

If total funds are inadequate to defray the operational costs of practice schools, the institution and district would be allowed to set tuition rates, to be paid by the pupil.

The tuition provision brought the only objection from the floor. Russel Fox of Claiborne said Negroes attending a practice school at Alcorn College "are too poor" to afford fees. He offered an amendment providing that institution would pay whatever balance needed to operate its practice school. It failed 34-65.

A bill allowing bowling alleys to operate from 1 until 6 p.m. on Sundays was lost 44-61 after representatives defeated an amendment permitting movies to remain open from 9 until 12 o'clock midnight.

Chalmers Alexander of Hinds asked for the bill's defeat, saying "I cannot in my own conscience" change the "old fashion law regarding the Sabbath." The measure was introduced by his colleague, T. E. Caldwell.

The constitutional amendment providing for the sale of 16th section lands was recommitted to the constitution committee. The House unanimously adopted another resolution memorializing Congress to make an "adequate" appropriation for completion of the Natchez Trace, the historic highway from Natchez, Miss., to Nashville, Tenn.

Other bills passed would authorize the Highway Commissi to build and improve driveways and streets on state-supported colleges and universities, and provide that the income of each divorced parent would be considered in determining the support of their children.

The Senate adopted a House resolution setting Feb. 26 as the deadline for introducing all bills except those relating to finances and local and private measures. The resolution, however, was held on a motion to reconsider.

Meeting Set To Spur School Equalization

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 21 (U.P.)—More than 35 state organizations, including the Mississippi Economic Council, will send representatives to a meeting here Monday afternoon to spur legislative atcion on financing the new school equalization program.

The meeting, sponsored by the Farm Bureau Federation, will hear Gov. Hugh White repeat his recommendations for supporting the $50,000,000 dual education system, which so far the seven-weeks-old Legislature has ignored.

Boswell Stevens, president of the Farm Bureau, said the organization substantially supports the suggestions made by the Recess Education Committee which recommended increases in petroleum severance taxes, the two per cent sales tax and the cigaret tax.

Members of both Senate and House Education Committees warned last week that the Legislature could not afford to delay much longer the job of raising some $18,000,000 additional school money. Rep. James Baxter of Lauderdale said the present appropriation is "about enough to operate the equalized program a maximum of six months."

Baxter's warning was strengthened by Sens. W. E. Tarman of Horn Lake and George Owen of Pontotoc, who predicted reduced school operations in 63 counties if additional financing is not provided.

Both houses meet tomorrow afteroon, representatives to consider a 73-item calender which includes a constitutional proposal to sell 16th Section lands to leaseholders and a bill providing for legal whisky sales in the 15 counties that voted wet in the 1952 referendum.

Mississippi Roundup—

School Equalization Deadlock May Be Ended

JACKSON, Feb. 28 (U.P.)—House Ways and Means Committee action next Tuesday on two tax increase bills was expected to end the deadlock on school equalization financing as the Mississippi Legislature prepared for its ninth week in session.

Legislative indeciion on means of providing money for the $50,-000,000 dual school system, termed "tragic" this week-end by one senator, was centered on what to do with bills proposing increases in gas and oil severance taxes from 5 to 8 cents a barrel.

Chairman Hilton Waits of Washington said his group would report out bills "one way or the other" for a floor vote. The measures were rejected in the Senate earlier int he session, and some legislators indicated they would not approve other tax proposals unless petroleum severances were raised.

Gov. Hugh White failed last week to break the stalemate on revenue bills. But House members were assured that the severance proposals would be brought out for a floor test after they threatened to recall the measures from the Ways and Means Committee.

Rep. Hudson said "Some just plain think no changes are necessary," he said. "And some say we must wait for the Supreme Court decision on segregation."

WHITE SPEAKS BEFORE SESSION

Says New Biennial Taxes Needed for Schools

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., March 10—Gov. Hugh White told a joint session of the Mississippi Legislature Wednesday that it can provide the estimated $35 million in new biennial taxes for the equalized school program without harming the state's economy.

White, who waxed sentimental as he reminded the Legislature that his address would probably be his last to the law-making body, said the Legislature "faced a fateful hour" to provide the funds to put the school program in motion.

Enacted in a 55-day special session at the end of 1953, the program spells out for the first time equal opportunities to both Negro and white school children. Cost of the program is expected to run $85 million from the state level and at least $24 million from local sources every two years.

The state-level cost compares with $50 million which the Legislature appropriated for public education during the current two-year period.

The nearly 10-week deadlock in the present session of the Legislature over adding taxes to carry the new program, has possibly already damaged the school system and could "result in disaster" if prolonged, White told the lawmakers.

Answering some legislative critics who have called the new program too ambitious and beyond the ability of the state to afford, White declared: "I want you to know that I have not advocated anything at anytime that in my considered opinion would result in harm to the economy of our state."

The school program, he said, would not endanger the economy, and in fact would "result in tremendous advantage to the economy of this state."

The 72-year-old governor pointed out that the Legislature and himself put the new program into law and that its financing "is a dilemma of our own making."

Under the new laws, most of the old school laws were wiped out, including the former bases of distributing school funds on per capita and an "equalizing" fund for alleged poorer counties.

"I am reliably informed that unless the financing contemplated in this program is provided there are many counties in this state which without the per capita fund and the equalization fund could not operate their schools for over four or five months a year during the next biennium," White said.

"What a tragedy it would be, what indefensible folly, if it should develop that we have in fact destroyed our public school system instead of improving it," he asserted.

He told the legislators that if they are unable or unwilling to provide revenues for the program to operate for all years to come, "we must at least make speedy provision for the next two years."

White, who has backed the four-mill tax program for the school program drafted by a legislative study committee, said he hoped the Legislature would finance the program "as originally intended and that the whole problem can be set at rest."

He did not make any specific recommendations on the taxes which the Legislature should increase to finance the program.

In the legislative committee's program are bills to raise the state sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent, increase the oil and gas severance taxes 2 per cent and the cigarette tax 1 cent a pack.

The governor's address, which he had told reporters would be directed "to the people," was broadcast over a statewide radio network of 22 stations, and televised locally by two stations.

Dual School Issue Splits Mississippi Into Two Factions

JACKSON, Miss., March 13 (UP) The Mississippi Legislature opens its eleventh week Monday torn between efforts to delay school equalization for two more years on one hand and a drive to compromise for immediate school financing on the other.

Both efforts gained strength this week. Gov. Hugh White called on the Legislature for the second time to provide new revenue for schools while House Speaker Walter Sillers and others got behind a move to put off the program.

Mississippi teachers will have something to say about the problems facing the state's schools when they meet here in annual convention Wednesday for three days.

The Mississippi Education Assn. has endorsed the equalization program and protested delay as long as two years ago. More than 9,000 teachers are scheduled to attend MEA meeting.

The Legislature also will turn its attention to national politics next week. Former Vice President Alben Barkley will address the House and Senate Tuesday afternoon before the annual Jefferson-Jackson Day rally at which he will be featured speaker.

Other issues which may get legislative action next week include a reorganization bill for a central purchasing agency, in the House, and increasing truck load limits, in the Senate.

Mississippi Roundup—

$35,000,000 School Appropriation Offered

JACKSON, Miss., March 24 (U.P.) —A $35,000,000 school appropriation for the coming year was submitted today as the answer to the 12-week deadlock on educational financing.

John Junkin, vice chairman of the Appropriations Committee said a bill increasing the regular $25,000,000 annual appropriation by $10,000,000 would be considered tomorrow morning to finance the new equalization program in all phases except construction.

Rep. J. E. Wroten of Washington withdrew his motion on the floor to create a special finance committee to handle school equalization tax bills, saying the new move "indicated a satisfactory resolving of the problem with no need for rasing taxes immediately."

Wroten said the appropriation would be for the biennium $50,000,000 with $35,000,000 slated for the first year of the biennium. "We could begin all phases of the equalization program July without delay, with the exception of new school construction," he said.

worked on the farm for about four years.

The four men will be arraigned April 5 when Federal Court convenes at Aberdeen, Sumners said.

All were out on $2500 bonds except Maxwell Hatcher who is serving in the armed forces.

Mississippi may compromise school equalization program

JACKSON, Miss., March 25—(AP) —A compromise in Mississippi's controversial school equalization program today appeared a possible solution to a 12-week legislative deadlock.

Supporters of the plan, designed to equalize white and Negro school facilities, sought a compromise which would establish the plan for one year instead of the intended two years.

Gov. Hugh White, a strong supporter of the equalization plan, gave the compromise tentative approval. He added that he thought it would settle the deadlock.

But House Speaker Walter Sillers said the program "will not Fit" since the U. S. Supreme Court now has before it five segregation cases. Sillers said five bills would be drawn up to delay the program until the Supreme Court rules on the cases.

The proposed compromise would require no new taxes, the use of the deadlock in the legislature. Tax bills to support the plan have withered because of lack of support.

School consolidation would go forward under the new proposal and teachers' salaries and transportation would be equalized between the races. But no construction of new facilities would begin during the period, pending the decision on the segregation cases.

The program, passed during a special legislative session last December, is scheduled to take effect July 1.

School Finance Measure Goes on Senate Calendar

Bill Bypasses Committee to Gain Approval

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., April 5—The Senate Monday virtually assured passage of the House compromise bill providing $50 million for the new school equalization plan by putting the measure on the calendar after by-passing the hostile finance committee.

School forces, spearheaded by Sen. George Owens, Pontotoc, pounced on the bill as it was received at the opening of the Senate session Monday, and immediately moved to take up the measure in "committee of the whole."

This maneuver, approved by a vote of 26 to 21, kept the bill from being sent through the usual standing committee route, which would have sent it to the finance committee, where crippling changes were anticipated.

"The $50 million appropriation measure had passed the House last week by a vote of 90 to 34, as a move for breaking the prolonged deadlock over the school program which has plagued the 13-week-old session of the state Legislature.

Under the bill, $34 million of the amount will be earmarked to carry out the Negro-white education equalization plan which the Legislature outlined in a 1953 special session for one year, beginning July 1.

Estimates are that upwards of $80 million would be needed to put the new school plan into full operation for the next two years, but the Legislature has been unable to agree on raising taxes to finance the program. The most Mississippi has spent for education in the past is $50 million for a two-year period.

After steering the measure through the "committee of the whole" with only one amendment, Owens then moved to have the bill put out on the calendar, probably for final action on Wednesday. A two-thirds vote to suspend the rules would have been required in order to take up the measure immediately on final passage.

The Senate school forces, holding a steady 25 to 27 votes, succeeded in beating down a series of amendments from the floor to postpone the operation of the new school equalization program for two years.

Heading the opposition from the floor were Sens. Kenneth Stewart, Gillsburg, and L. B. Porter, Union.

The one amendment adopted to the bill sets a ceiling of $500,000 per year for supplements to salaries of superintendents' and principals' salaries, and $3 million per year for maintenance and other costs.

This proposal was offered by Sen. Ed Simmons, Tylertown, who said that the change would take care $2,500,000 a year from the new program which can be used to boost the salary schedules for teachers.

The Simmons amendment was approved by a vote of 28 to 20 despite opposition from Owens and his close associates.

Prior to adoption of the ceiling which Simmons provided, the Senate had turned down another amendment by the Tylertown lawmaker to reduce the per teacher unit allocation for supplementing superintendents' and principals' salaries from $200 to $100 and also the unit allocation for maintenance and other costs from $270 to $100.

His first amendment, Simmons ..., would have taken $4 million year from the cost of the pro..ram which could go to salaries for classroom teachers.

Equalization Bill Passed In Miss. Senate

JACKSON, Miss.—(INS)—A tie-breaking Senate vote by Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin Thursday blocked a last-ditch effort to kill the school equalization program in the Mississippi legislature.

The bill gives local school districts power to levy taxes necessary to put the program into effect beginning July 1.

The Senate had passed the measure earlier in the session, but it had been held on a motion to reconsider. Meanwhile, a similar bill had been approved by a close vote in the House.

A strong Senate block opposing the equalization plan went all out to defeat the measure earlier when Sen. Royce White of Fulton denied unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mississippi to Act On Segregation

By the Associated Press.

JACKSON, July 31.—The Mississippi legislature will go into special session Sept. 7 to consider a proposed constitutional amendment abolishing public schools if necessary to keep segregation.

Gov. Hugh White announced the date after the Legal Education Advisory Committee again approved the amendment after it was convinced that "segregation by consent", will not work in Mississippi.

The group action was a direct slap at 90 Negroes who met with it yesterday. The majority of the Nogroes said they would not support any attempt to dodge the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

The LEAC had hoped the Negroes would cooperate in keeping segregation despite the Supreme Court's decision if they were given equal schools or something near it.

Statement of Negro Leaders To Miss. Committee on Schools

The spotlight of our nation and of the world of free Democratic peoples is upon the State of Mississippi today They are looking to see what we are going to do. Even the Kremlin enemies of Democracy are watching for an opportunity to catch us in a moment of weakness and to ridicule our institutions. Facing such a challenge we pray God that we may not fail in our duty toward our State, toward Democracy and toward our people. In this hour of destiny and for the sake of our posterity we cannot do otherwise than take our stand for the ideals of our American and the whole free world...for justice, human brotherhood and equality of opportunity for all.

1. Respect for law is the foundation of a free democratic society. Therefore, because of the obligations of citizenship and because any effort of circumvent the law would be "in derogation of the paramount allegiance of the citizens of the state to the government of the United States," and therefore, in violation of Article 6, Section 7, of the Constitution of the State of Mississippi, we can do no other than to endorse and abide by the decision of May 17, 1954 of the Supreme Court of the United States.
2. We call to the attention of all the citizens of Mississippi the urgent need to provide at once the additional desperately needed classrooms for the education of the children of the state. We invite all citizens to join hands to work for this common goal of more and better schools for every school child in Mississippi.
3. As an aid to preparation and to help create that spiritual climate of understanding and mutual respect so necessary to the helpful achievement of these goals we propose the following considered action: That legislature hereafter . . . ."
4. As a representation committee we respectfully request that our state leaders and agencies will not ask us to do those things which will destroy our influence with our own people. It is our declared aim to continue to do all in our power to preserve the present good relationship between the races that we have in Mississippi and to be worthy of the respect of citizens of both races.

Let us, therefore, rally to one standard to remove as soon as possible from the lives of our children, both Negro and white, those severe penalties which they now suffer because of an inadequate and segregated system of education. The time has come to strike our tents of apathy, fear and reaction and to move forward together toward a bright future of greater opportunity for all. This we can do if we face this issue in the light of Christain vision and with faith in our fellowmen.

6. The satisfactory solution of the school problem is the keystone for the solution of many of the other vital problems in the state of Mississippi. The only solution to the school problem that Mississippi can morally and financially afford, and at the same time will meet the approval of the United States Supreme Court, is to consolidate and integrate the present schools on all levels and then equalize and expand within the framework of Consolidated and integrated, equalization can then take place rapidly throughout the State and within the ability of the State to pay. The principal requirement under the consolidation and integrated program is that each child must attend the school nearest his or her home. In a State where the population of the two principal racial groups is approximately equal, it is not commendable but nevertheless true, that even under a consolidated and integrated program in Mississippi, the attendance in these schools will be largely white or largely colored, for the present at least, inasmuch as equalization within the framework of consolidation and integration will be a more enlightened, courageous and economically secure populace and thereby a better State, County and World.

T. R. M. Howard, of Mound Bayou told the white group, "It is wrong to abolish the public schools of Mississippi. Your white children would be the ones who suffered because they are the ones who have the schools now. The Negroes don't have them."

Only one Negro took the stand for segregation.

J. W. Jones of Union County, disputed the plea for integration asserting, "Negroes do not want to go to white schools."

He also said that a white child in the fourth grade and a Negro child in the same grade would not be practical because the white child would forge ahead of the Negro child and embarrass the Negro.

Gov. Surprised; Negroes Want Full Integration!

JACKSON, Miss — Governor Hugh L. White, was shocked and expressed disappointed here last week when 100 Negro leaders who had been expected to go along with the Mississippi white man's plan of continued segregation, staunchly voiced opposition to any form of voluntary school segregation.

In a prepared statement, E. W. Banks, of Jackson, speaking for the Negro delegation before a 25 member, all white Legal Advisory Committee to Education, declared:

"As a representative committee we respectfully request that our state leaders and agencies will not ask us to do those things which will destroy our influence with our own people.

"The only solution to the school problem is to consolidate and integrate the present schools on all levels. The principal requirement under (this) program is that each child must attend the school nearest his or her home".

... We can do no other than to endorse and abide by the decision of May 17, 1954 of the Supreme Court of the United States...."

Governor White, who had expressed the hope that Mississippi Negroes would approve of the voluntary segregation plan, said that he was disappointed in the Negro delegation's stand.

According to reliable sources, the governor said, "I have completely lost confidence in the Negroes and will deal with the

Columbia, Miss., Principal Speaks For Negro School

COLUMBIA, Miss., Aug. 30.—C. D. Duckworth, new principal of the Marion County Training School for Negroes, said today "I will not advocate mixing races in either schools or churches."

Duckworth, who holds a masters degree for Tuskegee Institute, made the statement when introduced to the 300 students and 14 teachers.

"How any court or foreign group can take it upon themselves to untangle a web which doesn't exist . . . is far beyond my comprehension," he said.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27—Mississippi took steps Friday to block any attempt by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to stir up lawsuits against the state's segregated school system.

Representative Byron Long of Lee County proposed a bill that would prohibit any person or organization outside of Mississippi from "fomenting or inciting" lawsuits against local school districts in the touchy segregation issue in public schools.

Gov. Hugh White and Attorney General J. P. Coleman have both studied the Long proposal and agree that it "has considerable merit."

Miss. Leaders Upset Plan To Keep Jim Crow Schools

JACKSON, Miss. — Like the best laid plans of mice and men, the plans of Mississippians, too, often explode all over the place —as happened here last week.

Up until July 30, Gov. Hugh White, his 25-member legal educational advisory committee and the Mississippi Educational association had convinced themselves they had a way to get around the Supreme court decision against segregation in public schools.

They had assured themselves and the public that a system of "voluntary segregation" was an unbeatable way out. What's more, they were convinced that 95 per cent of the state's Negro population would endorse the scheme.

To establish this "fact" they called together 85 Negro leaders fully expecting them to fall in line. They didn't.

WANT PARTICIPATION

They not only didn't go along with the program, they demanded participation in organizing desegregation of Mississippi schools.

Dr. T. M. Howard of Mound Bayou said "we have not come here to work out any plan to circumvent the decision of the Supreme court."

He also said Negroes should be appointed to policy-making boards.

"We are demanding a chance to help shape our own destiny,"

"The day is past and gone forever when one race can work out all the problems affecting another and bring it to them as a "take it or leave it' proposition."

WHITE SHAKEN

When the conference broke up, a visibly shaken Gov. White called the legislature in order to run through proposed amendments abolishing the public school system of Mississisippi.

House Speaker Walter Sillers joined Gov. White in a statement that some of the Negroes had reversed their positions at earlier conferences.

Sillers added disconslately that the meeting had started with 95 per cent of Negroes in favor of voluntary segregation and now "we have 99 per cent against it."

'NO FAITH'

The Governor openly expressed disappointment in the result of the meeting. He said in the future he would place no faith in Negroes on the segregation issue.

Only one of the 85 leaders attending the conference openly advocated continued segregation. He is J. W. Jones, Union County Negro school leader.

Jones said he didn't believe integration would fit in Mississippi and added "if we get the legislature mad it will do away with program we already have."

Mrs. Ruby Lyles, a former Jackson librarian, called Jones "an example of the tragedy of segregation."

With the bubble of their voluntary plan exploded, the legislature will now meet Sept. 7 to work out a new plan or abolish the school system. Informed observers are of the opinion that while many white Mississippians do not feel ready for integration, the legislature will find they are even further from ready to give up their schools.

'CLOSE ALL SCHOOLS'

Gov. White has already said he will block any move to appropriate funds to improve Negro schools without a guarantee of segregation.

He has gone so far as to hint he will block an appropriation for any schools, thus closing white and Negro schools. Later he said he would use the militia to enforce segregation, if necessary.

"The answer is either integration or private schools," he said, and went back to his drawing board.

MISSISSIPPI TO ACT ON BIAS QUESTION

Special Session That Opens Tomorrow Will Consider Ban on 'Public' Schools

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 5—The Mississippi Legislature meets in special session here Tuesday to act primarily on the question posed by the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

The all-white Legislature will have before it an amendment to the State Constitution that would maintain segregated schools, even if it means the abolition of public schools.

Mississippi always kept Negroes and whites socially and politically segregated. Its constitution requires separate schools for the two races. Its population is 45 per cent Negro and on the same day that the Legislature meets an estimated 550,000 children will answer the ringing of school bells for segregated classes.

Gov. Hugh White will address a joint assembly of the Legislature at 2 P. M. Tuesday and from his message the lawmakers will take their cue. He is an advocate of the proposed amendment and has declared himself "confident" it will be passed without much opposition, if any.

The Speaker of the State House of Representatives, Walter Sillers, long-time proponent of "white supremacy," is the author of the proposed amendment and has powerful house influence to swing behind it.

Scope of Support

Also backing the measure are other legislative leaders who, at the last biennial session, forced defeat of a school equalization program for negroes and whites because they preferred to wait for the Supreme Court decision. These leaders include Senator Earl Evans of Canton, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee; Representative Hilton Waits of Washington County, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and Representatives Ed White of Holmes County and Russell Fox of Claiborne County, areas with heavy Negro populations.

The 1954 legislature, at its regular session, appropriated only $50,000,000,000 for school operations in the next biennium and earmarked $34,000,000,000 of the money for the 1954-55 school year alone. No money was provided for new school buildings because of the segregation issue.

Several other questions to come before the special session may stir sharp debate. One involves the site for a gas chamber to be used in the execution of convicted criminals instead of the electric chair. The law providing for the gas chamber was passed at the regular session, but disagreement has arisen over the site.

Other proposals to be presented to the Legislature include creation of a water resources commission to study water uses. Drought has hit the state hard in the last three years, reducing farm income.

Anti-Bias Campaign Urged

Special to The New York Times.

HOPEWELL JUNCTION, N. Y., Sept. 5—Thurgood Marshall, special counsel to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called here today for the establishment of a national organization to help carry forward the Supreme Court ban on public school segregation.

Such an organization, he said, should be composed of fraternal, labor and civic groups and it should work with the communities.

Mr. Marshall, who argued the case for the ban on segregation before the Supreme Court, and Charles B. Zimmerman, vice president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, A. F. L., received the first Human Rights Awards made by the Workmen's Circle, the largest Jewish labor fraternal order in the world.

The citations were read before a gathering of 1,500 by Jacob T. Zukerman, president of the Workmen's Circle.

Mr. Marshall was cited for his "brilliant defense of the fundamentals of American democracy and human dignity in forging the legal weapon which successfully won the battle against segregation in education before the Supreme Court on May 17, 1954."

Mr. Zimmerman was cited for his efforts as chairman of the Anti-Discrimination Committee of the Jewish Labor Committee.

Mr. Marshall discussed the test cases before the Interstate Commerce Commission aimed at ending segregation in all forms of transformation. He urged an end to segregation in public and private housing and said that test cases have been prepared in connection with this aim.

Linking his pleas to the world scene, he declared that the State Department would not "make any inroads with our allies until we can show good faith in the implementation of anti-segregation laws."

SPECIAL SESSION TO HEAR WHITE

Legislature Will Convene at Jackson Tuesday

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 1—Mississippi's Legislature convenes at 12 o'clock noon next Tuesday in special session and will hear Gov. Hugh White outline the work of the session at a joint session of both houses at 2 p. m. of the opening day.

"My message will be short, not taking over 20 minutes to deliver," the governor said Wednesday.

The governor has called the special meeting to consider a proposed constitutional amendment which would give the Legislature power to abolish by law public schools on a district or statewide basis and provide tuition funds to children to get a private education.

Drafted by the governor's 25-member legal educational advisory committee created by the 1954 Legislature, the amendment is regarded as a "protective measure" for keeping the state's historic segregated school system in the face of the supreme court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

Governor White said Wednesday he feels the opposition in the Legislature to adoption of the proposal will be minimum.

If approved by the Legislature, the amendment must be submitted to the people for ratification. The election is expected to be in December.

"A good many of the legislators who were with me when we passed the school equalization program are with me now on this proposition," White said.

Opposition to a similar amendment proposed in the special session of the Legislature last December had come largely from sponsors of the school equalization program which was then before the lawmakers.

Legislature Acts Quickly On Plan

JACKSON, Miss.—Pledging "last ditch" legal warfare in support of segregation, Mississippi's Gov. Hugh White blamed the state's "stubborn" Negro population for the necessity of the present amendment abolishing public schools.

Governor White said that after the Supreme Court's May 17 decision outlawed public school segregation, Negroes in the state flatly refused to "voluntarily" segregate themselves. "They must now suffer the responsibility for their action."

Making the statement before the state legislature, Gov. White was pleading for passage of his constitutional amendment empowering the legislature to abolish public schools or making it possible for local counties, municipalities and school boards to take identical action.

The bill passed on first reading in the House Thursday, Sept. 9, by a vote of 109 to 24. The following day it was passed on second reading by a vote of 108 to 22. Passage on the third reading was expected Friday.

Governor White told the legislature Negroes not only repudiated what they had told us in private conference but even demanded things that the Supreme Court decision had not pretended to try to give them.

As a result, Gov. Williams said, "we shall resist by every legal means at our command, public school integration and we know that the Supreme Court cannot force us to operate schools if we do not desire to do so."

If the amendment is passed on third reading by the House, it would then have to be ratified by the voters in the November general election.

lar action in the House last week, has approved a proposed Constitutional Amendment which would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools in order to maintain segregation.

The vote was 42-2 for the resolution. It must now be voted upon two more times in the upper chamber.

Following approval by the Senate, Gov. Hugh White, who called the special session, will sign the bill and it will then go to the State's voters for ratification in a election, Dec. 21.

White called the lawmakers into session to seek a means of skirting the U. S. Supreme Court decision last May which outlawed segregation in the nation's public schools.

Proposal Would Finance Drive For Voter Approval Of Segregation Move

SENATE BACKS ABOLITION

'Last Resort' Amendment For Racial Separation Will Go To Ladner To Be Placed On Special Ballot

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15.—The House of Representatives Wednesday refused to vote funds to finance a campaign to gain voter ratification of a constitutional amendment under which public schools could be abolished as a "last resort" against their racial integration.

Earlier, the Senate without debate adopted on the second of three required readings the House-approved abolition amendment when it was called up by Senator Willis Matthews of Magee, chairman of the Constitution Committee. The vote was 41 to 2.

Same Negative Votes

The same two senators who opposed the amendment Tuesday cast the negative tallies—George Owens of Pontotoc and Howard McDonnell of Biloxi.

Senator W. B. Lucas of Macon, a proponent who was present, paired with absent Senator Booth Simpson of Blue Mountain, an opponent of the amendment, which faces the voters in a special election on Dec. 21. The third and final Senate adoption Thursday is a formality.

With final legislative action, the amendment goes to the Secretary of State Heber Ladner for placement on the special election ballot. It does not require any further action on the part of Gov. Hugh White, who submitted it to the current special legislative session for its consideration as an additional "delaying effort" against enforcement of the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

Proposed By Baxter

When the House convened in the afternoon, Representative James Baxter of Lauderdale County, member of a 25-man Legal Educational Advisory Committee, which drafted the amendment, proposed that the committee be authorized to spend tax monies in presenting the proposal to the voters. It also provided for continuance of the committee which was created at the 1954 regular session to devise means of bypassing the Supreme Court mandate.

The Baxter resolution would have authorized the LEAC to "take such action and measures deemed necessary" to inform the people of the provisions and purposes of the amendment through pamphlets, public meetings in each of the 82 counties and with paid speakers. These costs would be paid from an appropriation of $100,000.

First attack on the resolution was by Representative Sam Johnson of Tippah County, to provide that speakers "for" and "against" the amendment be used. He opposed the amendment when it was before the House, but lost his proposal by a vote of 86 to 31.

Another opponent of the amendment then proposed that the section for the state-financed campaign be stricken which was voted, 69 to 50.

Plea Disregarded

Representative Joe Wroten of Washington County, offered the amendment prohibiting the use of taxpayers' money to seek adoption of the constitutional amendment.

Despite the plea of Representative Baxter that "if the amendment is to be ratified a lot more work must be done," the House refused to vote the campaign funds.

Representative Joel Blass of Stone County, who has opopsed the proposal throughout, asserted it would be "improper to take state founds in advocating ratification of the amendment."

"If we are going to advertise the proposal, we should present both sides and give the opponents half the money," he said.

Supporting the Wroten amendment, Representative Tom Garrott of Tunica County said "it is not fair to take the taxpayers' money and try to get a bill or resolution approved by the people."

"We are about to do something wrong," he said.

Representative Darwin Maples of George County questioned whether the proponents "are afraid if we don't propagandize the amendment that the people will not ratify it."

However, Representative Charles Jacobs of Bolivar County contended that the resolution did not call for presentation of "just one side."

'Just To InForm'

"It is just to inform the people as to what it proposes and why it is considered necessary," he said.

Speaking for the original Baxter resolution, Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County said unless the amendment is ratified there will be no later building program to bring Negro schools to an equal with the whites. Governor White has said he will not call another special session next year for that purpose unless the amendment is ratified by the people.

The plan is to use the abolition amendment as a "weapon" to gain Negro acceptance of a voluntary segregation plan conditioned on their schools being equalized.

Representative Gore also opposed a proposal by Representative Delos Burks of Pearl River County seeking to force the Advisory Committee to submit what type of substitute plan would be recommended in event public schools are abolished. The Burks proposal was rejected, 79 to 36.

Representative Burks said he wanted the people to have "the other side" of the issue before they are called on to vote on the abolition constitutional amendment. He said they are entitled to know the plan "if" and "when" the Legislature is called on to determine whether to abolish public schools.

Representative Gore said, "No one plans to abolish public schools except as a last resort," and that the matter presented by Representative Burks is premature.

Present Status

After deleting the section for the state-financed campaign in favor of the amendment, the House adopted the amended Baxter resolution by a vote of 95 to 29. As it stands, the Advisory Committee is continued and $100,000 set aside for its expenses.

The two branches took action on a proposal to set a final adjournment date for the session.

The Senate, under steerage of Senator J. O. Clark of Iuka, voted to adjourn Sept. 23 and sent the resolution to the House. However, that branch took its own resolution, setting Sept. 30, from the calendar and sent it to the Rules Committee.

Meanwhile, the Senate also sent to the House its resolution calling for a full-scale investigation of the State Welfare Department when a reconsideration motion was tabled with the support of Senator Royce White of Fulton, its author.

When the investigation proposal reached the House, Representative Eck Windham of Prentiss County sought immediate consideration in committee of the whole. However, he was voted down, 65 to 50, and Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County refered it to the judiciary En Banc Committee, headed by Joe Hopkins of Coahoma County.

A previously passed Senate bill authorizing the state Building Commission to sell government lands in Jackson, on which 99-year leases expire in 20 years, was reconsidered on motion of Senator Ed Demoville of Okolona, and defeated, 23 to 22.

Senator Brinkley Morton of eSnatobia said it is "a bad bill," and "designed to benefit special interests at the expense of the people." He said the properties, in the business district of Jackson, will bring the state "more when the leases expire than if sacrificed at this time."

The Senate meets at 10 Thursday morning, with the House returning in session at 2 p.m.

MISSISSIPPI SENATE PERILS AMENDMENT ABOLISHING SCHOOLS

Lawmakers Vote To Recess Until Tuesday—Signing Must Be Tomorrow

MEASURE ADOPTED 37-0

Quorum Is Needed For Today When Lt. Gov. Carrol Gartin Completes Historic Action

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss. Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 16. — Two weeks legislative work in adopting a constitutional amendment permitting abolition of public schools as a last step against their integration Thursday was almost nullified when the Senate quit until next Tuesday afternoon.

The mix-up came after the Senate had adopted the House-approved amendment on third and final reading without debate and with no negative votes, 37 to 0.

Major Purpose Gained

With the major purpose for which the current special session was convened Sept. 7 accomplished, Senator L. B. Porter of Union, moved that the Senate recess until 10 Friday morning with the understanding that no member would return then and that the journal show adjournment until 2 Tuesday afternoon was ordered.

After the Porter motion was adopted, Senator George Owens of Pontotoc, opponent of the school desolution, moved that the Senate recess, which was voted. The senators then headed homeward for the week end.

It was then ascertained that the first advertisement of a special election on Dec. 21 for voter consideration of the abolition amendment had to be published Saturday morning in order to come within the constitutional three months advance notice.

Secretary of State Heber Ladner could not advertise the election until the resolution embodying the constitutional amendment reached him and that was impossible since the resolution must be signed in open session and the senate was out of pocket until next Tuesday.

Feared Court Challenge

Although Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin could have returned Friday morning and signed the enrolled resolution embodying the amendment since the journal shows the session still to be "open," some members feared a court challenge in the absence of a quorum of the 49 members. They pointed out that although state courts cannot go behind the legislative journals, that restriction does not apply to Federal courts.

Calls went out immediately to the senators to be on hand Friday morning for the signing in order that the issue could complete its legislative rounds and be filed with Secretary of State Ladner for its advertisement Saturday.

A quorum is anticipated Friday morning when Lt. Gov. Gartin sings the resolution.

During the afternoon House session, Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, signed the resolution, leaving only the signature of the presiding officer of the senate to wind it up in the legislature.

Roll Call Vote

Senator Willis Matthews of Magee, chairman of the Constitution Committee, called up the House-approved amendment Thursday morning for its final adoption. A roll call was ordered and 37 members voted for it with none recorded in the opposition.

Senator George Owens of Pontotoc, opponent of the amendment, was present, but paired with absent Senator Ray Price of Brookhaven, a proponent. Senator Pat Bridges of Belzoni, a proponent and present, paired with absent Senator Howard McDonnell of Biloxi, an opponent.

That was the only Senate action during its brief session.

On the House side, consideration of a Senate resolution for final adjournment Sept. 23 was blocked when that branch voted 57 to 52 to adjourn until 2 Monday afternoon. The resolution will be first order of business when the session resumes over the week end.

Gas Chamber Issue

Before quitting however, the House set for special order at 2:30 Tuesday afternoon the highly controversial issue of designating a site for the state's new lethal gas chamber which replaces the portable electric chair in death sentence executions.

A bill designating the new maximum security cell-block at the State Penitentiary at Parchman as the site for the gas chamber was called up by Representative Joe Hopkins of Coahoma County, chairman of the Judiciary Committee which reported it favorably over a measure to go back to the electric chair.

Before the House voted to suspend the rules for consideration of the measure, Mrs. Wilma Sledge of Sunflower County, who is leading a figh tagainst location of the chamber at Parchman, which is in her county, mofed that it be set for special ordere next Tuesday. That was voted 69 to 51 over protests of some members that it was out of order since the rules had not been suspended for its consideration.

Speaker Sillers, however, ruled that the issue had been settled.

Unless some action is taken at the current session, the State Building Commission will be forced to place the gas chamber in the new Highway Patrol Building in North Jackson. He had asked for a new site designation after officials of Jackson objected to its location in the city.

Gas Chamber Fight Due

The Senate has on its calendar a bill similar to the one reported by the House Judiciary Committee placing the gas chamber at Parchman.

In view of the anticipated fight on the gas chamber issue, final adjournment is not expected next week.

A repercussion from the recent jail break at Jackson of two prisoners awaiting Supreme Court action on their appeals from death sentence for murder, stirred the House. If voted a bill by Representative John Farese of Benton-Tippah Counties, shortening the period in which such appeals may be considered by the Supreme Court.

Under the Farese bill, the appeals must be heard within 60 days after they are filed with Supreme Court Clerk Tom Ellis, unless an extension to prevent an injustice is ordered by the court. At present, cases are docketed on receipt, but heard in the order of filing.

One of the condemned murderers was convicted in September, 1953, and because of the routine consideration, the court will not argue the case until November.

Board Loses Power

The House also approved a bill removing from the Board of Public Contracts the authority to make printing contracts for all state departments and agencies. The measure named the departments which must file their printing and similar supply needs with the board which makes the contracts.

Two amendments to the original Senate bill were voted by the House.

Representative James Robertshaw of Washington County had the time extended from five to 15 days between the asking for bids and their receipt, while Representative Don Colmer of Forrest County, removed a section which permitted the board to authorize departments to make their own purchases if that course is determined to be "more convenient and economical."

Representative Hilton Waits of Washington County, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee which reported the printing bill, entered a motion for its reconsideration.

Mississippi School Plan Is Now Up to Voters

Legislature Passes Amendment Giving Power To Abolish System Any Time

By The Associated Press

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 16.—Stand-by authority to abolish public schools to keep Negroes and whites separated cleared Mississippi's Legislature today.

The amendment to the State Constitution faces a vote of the people December 21.

Governor Hugh White predicted the people would ratify the amendment, but State leaders admit there is a strong undercurrent of opposition.

The House of Representatives yesterday defeated a move to use State funds "to fully inform the people of this state of the provisions and purposes of the proposed amendment."

'State Propaganda' Opposed

The amendment's opponents, joined by some supporters, protested against "being propagandized with State funds" to get the people's support at the polls.

Sponsors labeled the amendment a last-resort measure to be used only if other metheds fail to keep segregated schools despite the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing public-school segregation.

The State Senate gave the amendment the last of three required approvals today, one week after the House overwhelmingly passed it.

The amendment is the first product of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, created by the 1954 Legislature to find ways of getting around the Supreme Court decision. Later, the L.E.A.C. will recommend specific laws it hopes will make the amendment unnecessary.

L.E.A.C. members promised to support a public-school-building program to improve Mississippi's schools if the amendment is ratified.

They agreed that better facilities for Negroes would help keep segregated schools on a voluntary basis. But some L.E.A.C. members, holding decisive legislative posts, have refused to support appropriations for school buildings unless the amendment is ratified.

If the people ratify the amendment, it will be inserted in the State Constitution at the next legislature.

Under the amendment, the legislature could:

1. Abolish schools throughout Mississippi by a two-thirds vote.
2. By a majority vote, set up a local-option plan whereby individual counties and school districts could abolish their schools.
3. Sell, lease, or rent State-owned property to private individuals or corporations.
4. Pay tuition for students to attend private schools.

Mississippi Develops Formula For Equalization of Schools

Spends 8 Weeks on Program Which Repeals 361 Statutes

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 2—It took 21 bills, repeal of an estimated 361 statutes and eight weeks' work by the legislature in special session to develop an equalization formula for Mississippi's racially segregated public schools. Its financing remains to be worked out in the regular biennial assembly which convenes Tuesday.

The program is so arranged that a decision by the United States supreme court adverse to the segregated setup would force the discarding of only one phase —equalization of facilities. That's not due to performance of any miracles by the lawmakers, but to steps to close a "gap" that has existed in the other segments of the Negro-white system in the face of a constitutional guarantee in 1890 of "equal, but separate" opportunities for all children, regardless of race, color or creed.

MISSISSIPPI

Session Protested

Gov. Hugh White, who called a special session Nov. 3 over protests of legislative leaders, said the state faced an equalization of teachers salaries, transportation and administration regardless of a supreme court ruling. The leaders wanted equalization tackled "after" the court decision.

As enacted at the session which officially adjourned Monday, statutes are on the books setting the machinery for all phases of equalization in advance of a court ruling. However, "strings" were tied to the facility equalization measure which holds it in abeyance until the question of segregation is decided, and then more or less automatically repeals it in event it is outlawed.

The plan is a state-level minimum equalization applicable to schools in both systems. It guarantees the "equal, but separate" opportunities from that level, but still leaves "loop-holes" for continued disparities on the local levels. That results from authorizations given the 82 counties and municipal separate school districts to put up their own funds to "enrich" the state minimum plan. That is where inequities could be continued.

Minimum Guaranty

The state feels it has taken care of itself in the matter of litigation by setting up the state-level minimum equalization guaranty. If tests should develop, they would be against whichever of the 2,139 local school districts that continue disparities between Negroes and whites. That many suits would naturally take quite some time for settlement.

Over-all cost of the teacher salary - transportation - administration phases is $46,500,000 a year. That's 18 million dollars more than now spent for public schools.

As to the facility equalization, its cost has been estimated between 57 million dollars and 80 million dollars. The plan is to inaugurate it on a stagger system with about six million dollars a year. To speed up construction, the legislature authorized issuance of 10 million dollars in bonds, but provided they could not be sold until the Supreme Court disposes of all five pending anti-segregation cases.

Of the total salary cost, the state would put up 35 million dollars, which is 10 million dollars more than it votes annually at the present for common schools. The counties and municipal separate districts would supply the other $11,500,000 from local ad valorem (property) taxes and poll taxes. The local subdivisions now cash in with an estimated $3,500,000.

With proper financing at the approaching session, teachers' the state's first salary schedule ranging from $700 for high school graduates up to $2,200 for holders of Master's degrees. An annual increment of $80 for five years is provided for MA and BA degree holders, and $40 for the others. Local districts may add to the salaries with local taxes.

With five years' experience, the holder of an MA degree would draw $2,600 from the state; BA, $2,400; three years college, $2,000; two years college, $1,600; one year college, $1,400, and high school or less, $900. The average white salary is now about $2,000, and the Negro less than $1,500.

In one of the bills five "auditor-investigators" were authorized to check on school records. They developed from disclosure of the "padding" of the educable census rolls by 244,000 more children between six and 21 than shown in the federal census. While allocations to that "excess" were not squandered, it meant that many schools received more than they were entitled to, and those which did not "pad" got reductions equal to the added funds drain on the over-all available monies for the per capita disbursement.

Additional Bills

Other bills in the over-all equalization provide:

A six-member gubernatorial-appointed State Educational Finance Commission to handle funds for buildings and to force consolidations among the more than 2,000 local school districts in order for them to qualify for state aid. A reduction in districts will eliminate many one-teacher schools and improve educational opportunities to those in the rural areas.

Provide for three types of school districts: county-wide, consolidated and municipal separate. All must be reorganized by 1957 and approved as such by the educational finance commission.

Prescribe strict budgets to prevent use of white funds for Negroes, and vice versa (the latter has never existed).

Permit disposition of school properites not needed when districts are consolidated or abolished.

Provide for election by voters in each of the 410 supervisors' districts of county school board members now selected by school trustees.

Permit principals to select faculties subject to approval of school trustees rather than their selection by the trustees.

Permit uniform curriculum, and eight-month-terms throughout the state.

Mississ nor Urges Equal Plan For Equalized Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 6 (AP)—Gov. Hugh White called today for an early answer to the liquor question, and urged the Mississippi legislature to enact the money measures in the state's program to equalize Negro and white schools.

White also urged the lawmakers to give aid to the state's money-short cities and to cut state employes' work to five days, eliminating the half day of work on Saturday.

In his message to a joint meeting of the House and Senate on the second day of the 1954 regular session, the governor also recommended that the legislators study ways to reorganize the state government, and suggested that they establish a central purchasing agency.

Both houses adjourned immediately after his speech. The Senate will return tomorrow at 10 a.m.; the House, at 2 p.m., Monday.

White Signs Miss. Equal School Bills

JACKSON, Miss. (ANP)—Gov. Hugh White last week stamped his approval on legislature designed to bring about Mississippi's version of equal but separate schools in the state.

The chief executive signed 17 bills calling for a $50,000,000-a-year program to equalize Negro and white schools. The bills were enacted during a special eight-week session of the legislature.

Legislators hope the bills will prevent any breakdown in the dual school system. The state senate during the special session refused to pass a bill calling for a constitutional amendment to empower the legislature to abolish public schools in the event the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation. (Cases involving the constitutionality of segregation now are pending before the nation's high tribunal).

Signing the bills along with White were Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin and Speaker of the House Walter Sillers.

No tax-increasing measures are included in the 17 bills enacted, but that portion of the program will be a major part of the regular session business. Remaining to be enacted are three proposed tax increases totaling $17,000,000 a year to finance a part of the cost of raising Negro schools to the level of white schools.

The program which completely rewrote Mississippi's education laws is in line with a mandate incorporated in an 1890 constitutional amendment calling for equal but separate school facilities for the two races.

The program will involve the construction of new schools, the consolidating of others, the paying of higher salaries to teachers and improving transportation systems.

One of the features of the equalization project was the creation of a six-member education finance committee, which will have most of the over-all responsibility and will have final authority to make consolidations and to administer the multi-million dollar program.

Meanwhile, dedication ceremonies for a new $800,000 school at Natchez, Miss., was announced. It is the Sadie V. Thompson, named in honor of the principal emeritus of that name to be dedicated January 2.

Also announced was the near completion of the first consolidated school near the Village of Washington.

Mississippi rejects bill to close public schools

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—The Mississippi State Senate last week rejected an amendment which would allow the state to abolish public schools in the event the U.S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation.

Sitting as a committee of the whole, the senate refused to approve the amendment already passed by the house. The vote was a tie, 24-24. Final action came after more than three hours of debate.

Since the senate was in committee of the whole, the lieutenant governor was not allowed to vote.

Fears 'Mongrel Race'

In rejecting the amendment, legislators said the time was not ripe for such drastic action. This was countered by supporters of the measure who maintained that if such action were not taken and integration comes, the white race would be "mongrelized."

Sen. Brinkley Morton, speaking against the amendment, said in part:

"The time may come when we will have to resort to such action, but that day is not here now.

"You are creating a Frankenstein monster and just as sure as this becomes a part of the constitution, the legislature is going to be called here to destroy public education — the cornerstone of our democracy."

But Sen. Earl Evans saw in the measure the only means of preserving segregation and the white race. He warned that if white and colored children went to school together for 12 years "you would mongrelize the white race."

of discussion. The resolution is stronger than the one passed in the special session in December since it inserts the "Resist by all means" phrase that was left out of the earlier resolution.

The House also pushed through three resolutions after warm debate: Two urging Congress to refuse Hawaii and Alaska admittance to the United States, and the third asking Congress to outlaw the Communist Party and other groups advocating violent overthrow or change of the government.

SEGREGATION AID BILL IS PASSED

Trustees Would Set Power to Assign Pupils

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 25—A bill giving trustees of school districts power to assign school children to schools or attendance for "health and moral" reasons Monday was passed 98 to 6 by the Mississippi house.

Sponsors said that the measure would provide a weapon to prevent breaking down of segregation in the state's public school for "five, six or 10 years," if the United States supreme court ruled in pending cases that school segregation is unconstitutional.

Rep. Ney Gore, Quitman county, author of the measure, debated briefly on the floor with House Speaker Walter Sillers, Rosedale, who had sponsored a constitutional proposal in the recent special session of the Legislature which would have had given the Legislature power to abolish the public school system and go to private endowment of schools for children if segregation is outlawed.

Help Keep System

The Sillers proposal had cleared the House but failed to get the support of the Senate.

"Does the gentleman feel that if the United States supreme court holds segregation unconstitutional this will permit us to have segregation?" Sillers asked.

"I think this can go as far as any proposal that has been presented in helping us to keep segregation," Gore declared.

The Quitman county lawmaker said that the measure would be carried out under the police powers and the general welfare clauses of the state constitution.

Assignment of pupils he pointed out would be done on an individual basis for each child and not by class or group.

Under the act, the school trustees must take into consideration "the educational needs and welfare of the child involved, the availability of school facilities, sanitary conditions and facilities at the school involved, and all other factors which the board of trustees may consider pertinent, revelant or material."

Appeal Allowed

The bill gives the trustees the right to disregard boundary lines which may have been established by the board in making the assignments.

Right of appeal from the decision of the board of trustees to the county board of education is provided in the measure. If the person involved in further dissatisfied with the assignment, the bill provides for the right of appeal to the circuit court with a trial by jury.

Meanwhile, the Senate, meeting only 15 minutes Monday, went into committee sessions.

When it resumes work Tuesday morning, the Senate will take up its first major bill of the session when it considers the proposal to create a joint legislative council as the permanent investigating, bill-drafting and fact-finding arm of the Legislature.

Sen. Stanton Hall, Hattiesburg, author of the measure, said that he will call the measure at the beginning of Tuesday's session.

School Land Bill

Meanwhile, the House Tuesday tackles the sticky question of what to do about the state's 600,000 acres of 16th section school lands.

In the morning a public hearing will be held before the House constitutions committee on a proposed constitutional amendment to permit the sale of the school lands to lease-holders.

But shortly after the House goes into session at 2 p. m. Tuesday, it will have up for special order of business a bill to tighten the leasing procedure for the lands and put them under the administration of the county boards of education.

The tougher leasing measure is backed by several statewide organizations, including the Mississippi economic council, but faces a tough fight.

Mississippi Wages Battle To Retain School Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 18. (AP) —The Mississippi House today reaffirmed its determination to keep racial segregation, vowing to "Resist by all lawful means" any attempt to abolish segregation in schools.

The house resolution putting "Mississippi on record as to what this state believes in" passed 93-3.

Rep. Bill Ramsey of Warren County introduced the resolution. There was only a flicker

Mississippi Roundup—

House Passes School Segregation Measure

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 25(U.P.)— A school segregation bill which representatives hoped would not be labeled a subterfuge by the courts passed the House today.

The bill, introduced by Ney Gore of Quitman, authorizes school district boards of trustees to assign pupils to schools or attendance centers.

In making assignments, the boards would take into consideration "the educational needs and welfare of the child involved . . . the availability of school facilities, sanitary conditions and facilities at the school . . . health and moral factors . . . and other factors which the board of trustees may consider pertinent."

Gore readily admitted the bill is a means of at least delaying integration of Negro and white school children should the U. S. Supreme Court rule segregation unconstitutional. He successfully opposed, however, an amendment to the bill by S. T. Johnson of Tippah to provide for enactment of the law only when and if the court makes an adverse ruling.

Gore said he was against "making the bill appear to be an attempt to evade the ruling of the court any more than it is."

The bill provides right of appeal of any assignment through the boards of trustees, county boards of deucation and the Sircuit Courts. Appeals could be carried to the State Supreme Court, and Gore said the provision "in itself is an effective technique for delaying action."

The measure passed 9 8to 6 and was held on a motion to reconsider. Voting against the bill were Harry Applebaum of Yazoo; Mrs. Annie Bonds of Marshall; Hervey Hicks of Yazoo; Thomas Montgomery of Jefferson; T. G. Roberts of Jasper, and Mrs. Wilma Sledge of Sunflower.

Miss. Senate Fails To Vote Equal Education Funds

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)— The Mississippi Senate last week refused to pass two tax increase bills designed to provide further funds for the state's huge school equalization program.

The bills would have provided $5,000,000 of the needed $35,000,000 to present biennial allocations.

Rejected bills called for boosting the crude oil severance tax from six to eight per cent and for raising the cigaret tax from four to five cents a pack.

A special session of the Mississippi legislature approved plans for a $85,000,000 school equalization program, but did not provide funds for it. That was left to the regular session of the legislative body, which now is in session. The action of the Senate last week was seen as a severe jolt to the program.

There Is No Reason To Justify Putting Off The School Equalization Program

The state legislature having been in session now for almost three months without finding the ways and means of financing the program for equalization of schools enacted into law by the preceeding extra-ordinary Session of the state Legislature, despite the evident desires of the majority of Negro and white citizens of the state, although the desires of Negro citizens carrys little weight with members of the legislature because of their general disfranchisement and denial of the right to vote, is now looking about for some reasons or excuses for putting off the whole program until 1956, and mayhaps to some still further date into the future.

Such being the case it is well to here examine some of the reasons and/ or excuses already being discussed together with some facts and opinions in rebuttal.

The first and most weighty reason for delaying the equalization program in the eyes of the proponents of delay is that, for the most part, we conceed, honest desire to await the verdict of the U. S. Supreme Court on the abolition of racial segregation in the public school system of the nation. The more hasty rebuttal here being to simply point out that in some vitally similiar cases, like the right of the Negro to vote in the Democratic Primaries in the South, the court took from 1890, the year of the end of the Reconstruction Era, until 1946, a period of around 50 years, before reaching a conclusive opinion in that matter. Is it conceiveable that the court might take a really long time before reaching a conclusive opinion in regard to the abolition of segregation in the public schools? The question that naturally follows is, is it true that the citizens of this state must be made to wait such a possible long time before the adoption of a program of education equalization in the state?

We recognize of course that there is the more touchy matter, which have provoked some timely concealed calls for violence by those who see white people resorting to violence should such a condition be the result of a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court outlawing segregation in the schools. This touchy matter gives another reason. The fear that the court action would mean the immediate mixing-up of Negro and white children in the same schools.

The first rebuttal to this reason for delaying the adoption of the program is this. Every honest and intelligent white person and every intelligent Negro in the state of Mississippi knows now that the first thing that the Mississippi state Legislature is going to do, if and when the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation in the schools is gerrymander the school districts so as to put all Negro children and white children in separate school district, and by law force each child to attend the school in his district. Here is the reason why most intelligent Negro citizens in the state support the equalization program as a practical matter, despite the more idealistic calls for integration, this reason being the already sharply defined dividing line between the Negro and white neighborhoods throughout the state which makes for easy gerrymandering.

As additional rebuttal to this last mentioned reason it can be pointed out that white people have been as much affected by the psycological effects of racial segregation and the philosophy of white supremacy as Negroes, which may in a large measure account for the existing quarters of unremitting belief among white people that mixing and mingling with white folks, as the saying goes, is the sole and only desire of Negroes; and for the existing quarters of unremitting belief among Negroes, that the only time that an American Negro is NOT being segregated, is when he is mixing and mingling with white folks.

From the unremitting quarters of belief among white people comes the fear of amalgamation or mongrelization of the white race that the exponents of segregation contend will result if white people and Negroes start "FREELY" mixing and mingling. This is a view totally at variance with the findings of modern ethnologists, who point to the fact based on scientific study and investigation, that people of different ethnic backgrounds are drawn together in a non-segregated society, where they are relieved of the force and compelments that exist in a segregated society.

As a final rebuttal to this last mentioned reason, supported by the findings and the facts of modern ethnologist the Mississippi Legislature should be the first to abolish racial segregation by law in order to prevent further amalgamation and/ or mongrelization of the races in the state.

The concluding reason to be considered here is the reason often heard, especially from those who don't want to see the Negroes of the state have much of any kind of an educational opportunity, is the reason that white folks pay all the taxes. Or put another way, that Negroes don't bear an equal share of the tax burden of the state.

This concluding reason being the weakest of all we would simply point out that a lot of white folks are paying big taxes as the custodians, so to speak, on big wealth produced and still being produced by the labors of Negroes in the state, it is held that the producers of the wealth are as much the tax payer as are the custodians of the wealth.

The foregoing premises considered there can be no valid reason or excuse for putting off the School Equalization Program.

BILL ON SCHOOL FUNDS IS PASSED

House Okays $50 Million Appropriation 90-43

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., March 31—The House Wednesday passed, 90 to 43, the "compromise" $50 million appropriation to put the new school equalization program into effect for one year without any tax increases.

In approving the education appropriation, the House took the longest stride of the 12-week-old biennial session of the Legislature toward financing the Negro-white minimum school plan enacted during a 1953 special session.

Under the compromise plan, the $50 million keeps the school appropriation at the same figure when they provided for public schools during the present two-year period which ends July 1.

The bill earmarks $34 million of the amount to carry the new equalization program the first year to put into effect a minimum teachers' salary schedule for teachers of both races and equalize school transportation.

Year's 'Trial Run'

Since only $16 million would be available under the appropriation to run the school the second year of the biennium, the Legislature would have to meet in the meantime to decide on a course to follow.

The one-year "trial run" for the minimum program was brought forward to meet the demands of a sizeable segment of legislators who want to defer any action until after the US supreme court rules on pending cases attacking the constitutionality of segregated schools.

One of the advocates—Rep. Ed White, Holmes county—spoke out against the $50 million appropriation because it would put the new program into effect.

"If we pass this bill we will be out on the longest limb we have ever gotten out on," White asserted.

He charged that most Mississippians "fully believe" that the US supreme court will strike down school segregation.

'Special Session' Cited

White said that the proponents of letting the new equalization program into effect have not yet been able to pass the bill which will require the local school districts to levy the amount of taxes to provide funds for the program.

Rep. Icey Day, Attala county, a sponsor of the school equalization program, said that since the Legislature could not agree on taxes to finance "anything we do here will require a special session."

The full cost of the new school equalization plan—to cover salaries, transportation and launch an equal school building program—is estimated at $85 million every two years from the state level.

The "compromise" bill adopted by the House Tuesday carries no funds for the building program, which the program anticipates at a cost of $6 million a year. Hence this phase of the program will be deferred.

A program of $17,750,000 in new taxes to finance the added state cost of the equal education program had been presented to the Legislature, but all the bills have hit a legislative deadlock.

Proposed in the tax program were a 1-cent increase in the sales tax, 1-cent increase in cigarette tax and 2 per cent in oil and gas severance taxes.

Before taking up the school appropriation measure, the House approved $18,150,000 in other budget items, including $16 million for old age assistance for the next two years.

The old age appropriation, kept in the grant

Other appropriations approved at the same figure as the Legislature appropriated in 1952, survived four attempts to raise the amount from $1 to $4 million.

Reduction Feared

Some sponsors of the amendments to raise the welfare appropriation charged that unless additional funds are provided for Jackson.

During its session Wednesday morning the Senate voted to raise the salaries of district attorneys from $5000 to $6000, but ordered a bill raising the state forester from $6000 to $7500 back tc the finance committee. Neither bill been considered by the House.

Thigpen Salary Hike

The Senate passed a House-approved bill granting state welfare commissioner J. A. Thigpen an included $1,6 park board; $205,400 for the state forestry commission; $115,000 for the state library commission; $150,000 for the veterans' affairs board, and $30,000 to move the US bureau of agricultural economics from Gulfport to increase in salary from $6000 to $8000. Supporters of the measure said that the position had not been increased in salary two years ago along with most other state department heads because Thigpen at the time was a member of the Legislature.

A bill designating a highway running diagonally across the state from the Tennessee line to the Louisiana line as the "Governor's Highway" was approved by the Senate without a dissenting vote. The bill has already passed the House.

Under the measure, the highway would follow the route of the present Highway 25 from the Tennessee line to Carthage, then to Jackson. From Jackson it will follow the line of present Highway 27 to Monticello, Tylertown, and end at the Louisiana line south of Tylertown.

The state highway department is directed under the bill to build and maintain the highway route "as rapidly as funds are available" and to place markers on it in honor of all Mississippi governors.

School Future In Mississippi Up To Senators

JACKSON, Miss., April 3 (UP)—The fate of Mississippi's school equalization program rests next week in the Senate where the age-old prohibition issue also will get another airing.

The Senate now has the compromise appropriation bill to put into effect in July the major phases of white-Negro equalization plan with 34 million of the 50-million-dollar education fund earmarked for schools for the coming year.

The most pressing question as to its passage depends on whether school opponents can be able to by-pass the Finance Committee where Chairman Earl Evans said it probably would be amended to change it completely—that is, delay the program for two years but appropriate 60 million dollars with the extra 10 million earmarked for teacher salary raises.

Expected to come up first, however, is Sen. Lawrence Adams' bill to legalize liquor in cities voting wet in the 1952 referendum. That measure came out of the Finance Committee and Evans said he would call it up Monday or Tuesday.

Whether it passes or is defeated likely will have some bearing on the fate of the school appropriation bill. If passed by both houses the state would realize 21 million dollars in new revenue in liquor taxes, which would be almost enough to put the school equalization program into effect without need to give the equalization program a one-year test.

Legislators have been hoping to get a decision from the U. S. Supreme Court on school segregation before finally deciding what to do with the knotty school problem that has kept them in a tug-of-war since Jan. 5. There has been a growing feeling that the high court will abolish segregation.

If a decision of that nature comes before the appropriation compromise clears, legislators may start from scratch on school plans and probably revive the move to abolish public schools in favor of a private system.

SEGREGATION BAN PREDICTED BY LEE

Utah Governor Speaker at Jackson Session

JACKSON, Miss., April 2 (AP)—Gov. J. Bracken Lee of Utah today predicted the U. S. Supreme Court would outlaw segregation in public schools.

He told newsmen in a press conference that "segregation must be handled through education rather than through the force of law."

The 55-year-old Utah chief executive, an outspoken opponent of centralized government and socialism, was in Jackson today to address the annual convention of the Association of Physicians and Surgeons.

He told newsmen that Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis) was a "sincere symbol against communism." He said people were "making a mountain out of a molehill in the fight against McCarthy" who is waging a sincere fight against left wingers, Communists and Socialists.

Lee, the first Republican governor of Utah in 24 years, said he believes in the things Thomas Jefferson stood for.

He said he planned to tell the association tonight that the United States is leaning "dangerously toward socialism" and "slowly and surely we are being sold a bill of socialistic goods that will destroy the freedom of our people."

He disagreed with the claim that the federal government can provide cheaper federal power through TVA and other federally operated electrical power plants.

"Don't forget," he said, "we in Utah are paying for your power sold down here by TVA and I don't like it. It's socialistic and I'm sure you would feel the same if you were living in Utah."

FLORIDA ENDS BAN ON MIGRANT PUPILS

Officials Promise to Permit Latin Laborers' Children to Return to School

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MIAMI, March 28 — Dade County school officials have promised conditionally to send some of the Puerto Rican and Mexican farm workers' children back to classes at the Redland School in Homestead.

They had been denied admission there since last Thursday.

A suit threatened by Puerto Rican parents to force the school board to readmit their children was averted Friday by a promise from Dr. W. R. Thomas, county school superintendent.

The children of Puerto Ricans and Mexicans were barred from the school after almost half of the 1,021 students were absent Wednesday in a boycott organized by parents. Joseph L. Logan, the principal, said 152 pupils were still missing Friday, but believed most of those were absent because of a mild wave of measles and chicken pox in the area.

Some of the parents charged the Spanish-speaking children went to school dirty, were potential disease carriers, practiced bad sanitary habits at school and slowed down the progress of other children because they spoke little or no English.

Dr. Thomas agreed to study the cases of some fifty laborers' children and recommend a school board order to reinstate those whose families met certain requirements for length of residence.

The school superintendent agreed to recommend the return to the school of all the laborers' children except those whose parents were declared to be transient workers, and to provide "adequate" school facilities for the transient children.

Mississippi House Seeks To Sidestep Court Race Ruling

JACKSON, Miss., April 7 (AP)—The Mississippi House voted overwhelmingly today to set up a committee composed of 25 leaders in state government to devise a way to dodge any Supreme Court decision that segregation is unconstitutional.

A series of amendments was defeated and the resolution passed 129-4.

It requires senate approval before becoming effective.

Staunch supporters of Mississippi's school program, although supporting the resolution, tried to amend it so that public schools would be abolished only as a last resort.

They failed, as legislators argued it may be necessary to set up a system of private schools to maintain segregation.

The legislature left no doubt that it is determined to maintain segregated schools regardless of what the supreme court rules.

The special committee would study the problem and draw up legislation to protect segregation, as most legislators said they felt the court will outlaw it in five school cases now before the court.

RACIAL SCHOOL BILL GAINS IN MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., April 6 (AP)—The Mississippi Senate took decisive action today on a controversial bill to finance a school equalization program.

The $50,000,000 compromise plan to equalize Negro and white schools was passed by a vote of 29-19. The bill, which was passed by the House 90 to 43, must return to the lower chamber for concurrence in one Senate amendment, which prevents any reduction of teachers' salaries in the program.

Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County, education leader in the House, foresaw a House rejection of the Senate amendment and said it would delay the bill's reaching the Governor by at least one week. A rejection would necessitate a conference to iron out the differences.

The equalization program was enacted last year. The financing bill permits $34,000,000 of the $50,000,000 to be spent the first year on equalization of teachers' salaries and improvement of transportation, leaving $16,000,000 for the second year.

The plan is to uphold racial segregation in the schools by making the facilities equal. A Supreme Court decision is impending on the issue of school segregation.

Mississippi Roundup—

Equal School Tax Levy Bill Confronts Senate

JACKSON, Miss., April 20 (U.P.)—A vital bill outlining the methods of collecting local taxes necessary to launch Mississippi's Negro-white school equalization program was set for a showdown tomorrow as the Senate quickened the pace today toward final adjournment.

The bill, outlining local tax levying methods, was placed on the calendar after a four-hour debate last week that brought forth a promise that it would be fought by an upper House block in a final effort to delay the school program from going into effect this July.

George Owens of Pontotoc, a leader in the equalization fight, asked that the bill be set for special order at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow. "We might as well get through wit hit as soon as possible," he said and the opposition block agreed to his suggestion.

Amendments to let cities levy up to 25 mills without public petition and to raise from 15 to 20 mills city levies to be refunded under homestead exemption were accepted by the Senate in committee.

The bill and appropriations to run state government for the next two years are the last big "must" items left for the regular session.

Twenty-six appropriation bills totaling more than $21,000,000 cleared the Senate in a two-hour session that was interrupted only once by an argument over one small allocation that was linked with the legalized liquor issue.

It would appropriate $25,000 to be used by the governor and attorney general in state litigations and L. B. Porter of Union sought to amend it to prohibit the fund from being used for prohibition enforcement or liquor selling investigations by the state.

Senators, faced with running the state in the red by as much as $6,00,000 for the next two years, accepted only one significant cut in funds. A proposed $550,000 for loans to medical students who promise to practice in the state was trimmed to $300,000 after Evans explained the program would be abandoned upon completion of the state's new medical school and teaching hospital under construction here.

State, Negro Leaders Meet Today

White Believes Voluntary Plan Only Solution

By SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., July 29 (AP) — A meeting unique in Mississippi's history opens tomorrow when state leaders confer with 85 Negro leaders to seek a way out of the tangled school situation.

The meeting may determine how far the "segregation by consent" idea will work.

It will shape the thinking of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee which is seeking Negroes' cooperation in keeping segregation. Several LEAC members believe that segregation enforced by law ultimately will topple under legal attack. Others disagree.

Only Solution

Gov. Hugh White, who called the meeting, said today voluntary segregation seems to be the only solution, and predicted that if the Negroes don't agree to it, there probably won't be anything done on school improvement "for two or three years."

"We may just have to prop them up and let them rot," he said gloomily at today's news conference.

The future of the proposed constitutional amendment that would allow public schools to be abolished as a last resort, may be changed at the meeting.

Objection Cited

"There's so darn much objection to (it) because they (the people) don't understand it," Gov. White said today.

And one LEAC member said he will ask the LEAC to withdraw its endorsement of the amendment.

Negroes who will attend the meeting represent widely different and conflicting viewpoints.

More than 20 of the Negro delegates already have pledged themselves to fight any effort — including the constitutional amendment —to side-step the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

Proposals on Hand

A Negro spokesman said they would have proposals to present. Other Negro leaders are certain to present ideas.

The white leaders who make up the LEAC seek ways to keep segregation.

The conflict of Negro viewpoints; the LEAC's duty placed upon it by the Legislature; the threat of abolishing public schools; the search for Negroes' cooperation in keeping segregation — all in one package — make the meeting unique in the state's history.

Gov. White said he believes tomorrow's meeting will be open to the press.

Previous meetings, with the exception of the first organizational session, have been closed.

Pledge Renewed

The "segregation by consent" idea is founded on the belief of most LEAC members that 95 per cent of Mississippi's Negroes are willing to stay in segregated schools if they are equal, or close to it. They believe the other five per cent can be handled in various ways.

But a meeting of Negro leaders in Jackson last Sunday said in a resolution that the "segregation by consent" plan is not approved by the majority of Negroes and renewed its pledge to fight any circling movement around the Supreme Court decision.

The Mississippi Education Association, representing some 9,000 white school officials and teachers, entered the controversy Tuesday for the first time.

Giving its support to the voluntary segregation idea, the MEA said cooperation "may well accomplish more now than can be done by law."

Prospects Dim

The MEA also emphasized that it opposes integration.

"The immediate effect of enforced integration in the public school program would bring disaster to both races," it said.

Prospects for non-legal settlement of the problem should take some definite form during the meeting.

The prospects seem dim at the moment. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People already is circulating petitions to be presented to local school boards and asking a voluntary end to segregated schools.

NAACP officials indicated the petitions will form the basis for court action, since the NAACP doesn't expect school boards to admit Negro children to white schools.

The NAACP sponsored the meeting in Jackson last Sunday. The meeting, composed of non-NAACP members as well as members, pledged a fight against attempts to evade the Supreme Court decision.

Legal Battles

Since the LEAC is determined to keep segregation, legal battles seem assured.

Even if the NAACP represents only five per cent of Negroes —as many white leaders believe — it is the five per cent that is worrying LEAC members. They fear the group could upset any voluntary segregation plan.

In an effort to stall off trouble, the LEAC approved the proposed constitutional amendment that would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools.

If passed by the Legislature, expected to meet in special session early in September, the amendment would be voted upon by the people in a special election this winter.

They Told Governor White

The St. Louis Argus salutes with pride those staunch Negro citizens of Mississippi who last weekend told Governor Hugh White's Educational Advisory Committee, in very clear terms, they wish to abide by the U. S. Supreme Court's public school ruling of May 17.

A group of 100 Negro leaders from every area of Mississippi had received an invitation from Gov. White to visit Jackson, Mississippi and discuss their views before the 25-member, all white, committtee.

In a prepared statement which was read to the Committee at the start of the meeting the Negro citizens declared, "We can do no other than to endorse and abide by the decision of May 17, 1954 of the Supreme Court of the United States."

According to a news report Governor White declared later:

"I have completely lost confidance in the Negroes and will deal with the legislature hereafter. . . .I am not willing to launch a building program for a group of Negro leaders who will say one thing to me and do another unless I can have some stick to hold over their heads."

The St. Louis Argus heartily commends the Negro leaders of Mississippi for several reasons.

1) The spirit of the Supreme Court ruling, reaffirming as it does the dignity of man, must be supported unequivocally in all sections of this land, particularly in the deep south.

2) Any time a man like Governor White announces he has lost confidence in a Negro citizen, the statement itself signals a victory over the bigoted forces that have brought shame to our country.

3) When a public official feels he must have a stick to hold over the heads of a group of citizens whose only crime is demanding respect and justice for their person, that official should be made to know that his plans will be opposed on every hand and are doomed to destruction.

To Negro citizens over the United States, to all minority groups and subjugated peoples of the world we commend the following statement which Mississippi heard from its Negro citizens last weekend:

"In this hour of destiny and for the sake of our posterity we cannot do otherwise than take our stand for the ideals of our America and the whole free world. . . for justice, human brotherhood and equality of opportunity for all."

Mississippians Show Courage

Negro leaders in Mississippi dashed hopes of the state's official leaders that voluntary segregation of the races in the state's public schools was likely.

Some ninety leaders of Mississippi's million Negro residents, told the Legal Educational Advisory Committee the state should not side-step the historic Supreme Court decision.

Counterwise, a resolution was read by E. W. Banks, an undertaker, passed by the Negro group asking state leaders "to endorse and abide by" the segregation ruling.

Said Dr. T. R. M. Howard: "The Negroes have not come here to help work out a plan to circumvent or bypass the decision of the United States Supreme Court. He told the commission that 250 residents of his home town (Mound Bayou) the only all-Negro city in the state, voted: we could not endorse any program of legal or voluntary segregation in Mississippi.

Only one Negro speaker urged the state to keep segregation, another offered a compromise, but neither got favorable reaction.

Thus, it will be seen that the first blood drawn in a compromise meeting of the states to effect some sort of voluntary acceptance of what the court has outlawed, fell flat upon its face.

There is no compromise with wrong; it is seriously doubtful that the court would countenance citizens going out seeking compromises with what it has thought un-American and detrimental to the good offices of the country, in its all out reach for a democracy in fact.

Compromises usually lose their effectiveness and finally fal to pieces to deliver what it sought to remedy, to be done all over again.

It appears that the citizens of Mississippi are on at leas safe ground; that they harbor no fears as to the power of the courts to effect the results sought through its mandate and hav that unshakable confidence that the court knew what it wa doing.

In the parlance of good procedure, a man who goes out an compromises his case after the court has given him a verdic does so at his own risk.

Says Segregation Preferred By All

Mississippian Thinks Happy Solution Is Possible

To The Commercial Appeal:

Having been "raised" (as we in the South like to say) on a farm where my playmates frequently were Negro boys with whom I ran and jumped and "rastled";

And having served as Superintendent of Education in my county for eight years and as a trustee of the Sardis Separate School District for sixteen years;

And having sold land to more Negro farmers than any man who ever lived in this county (the records in the office of the Chancery Court Clerk of Panola County will bear out this statement);

And having been connected for many years with a banking institution which has loaned money to hundreds of Negro farmers for the financing of crop activities and the buying of homes both in the country and in towns; and having studied the characteristics of the Negro and tried to talk his language as evidenced by many squibs which have been published from time to time on the editorial pages of your good paper, I honestly believe that I know our Negro people better than Northern or Eastern "do-gooders" or members of any alphabetical organization which weeps crocodile tears over conditions in the South.

In view of this knowledge, I make these confident statements: First, these people do not wish to attend our church services. Our services are too formal and too short and are entirely foreign to their ideas of worship. They do not want to get to church until about the time that we are going home, and, having finally gotten there, they do not wish to go home until 'long 'bout sundown.

Second, the cold truth is that, in the main, their children have no real desire to attend the white schools or any other school. The truth of this statement is attested by the fact that at the present time "cotton chopping" is over in Mississippi but a check of Negro schools, which are now in session, will reveal that not half of the educable Negro children have enrolled. The same condition will prevail next Fall after all the cotton has been picked.

If the substantial white citizens of our state will assure the substantial Negro citizens that they stand ready and willing to provide adequate educational facilities for the children of their race just as fast as they are ready and willing to take advantage of such facilities, then the school problem can be worked out in a manner satisfactory to both races without any threatening on the one side or any lawsuits on the other.

Letters To The Editor

Reasons Why Mississippians Want Segregation Told By Legislator

To The Commercial Appeal:

In no state of the American Union has there been more real kindness and friendship between the white and colored people than in Mississippi.

Neither the white nor the colored people asked for the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court which declared unconstitutional our separate system of public schools for the races. Therefore, we should not let this court decision come between us, or turn back the progress which we have all worked hard to bring about.

The Mississippi Legislature has been interested in and has greatly helped the colored people of this state.

They receive the larger part of the millions of dollars which the state spends for old age pensions and public health service.

They receive a major part of the millions spent by Mississippi for homestead exemption, free school books, and hospital service.

It is money appropriated by the Legislature that largely pays for the experiment stations and demonstration agents which have helped the colored farmer make more money than he has ever made before.

At Whitfield and at the Tubercular Sanatorium at Magee, the buildings and medical treatment for the colored are of the best and are paid for out of the treasury of this state. Likewise, great improvements have recently been made at Jackson College, Alcorn College, and at Mississippi Vocational College.

Before the Supreme Court decision the salaries of the colored teachers were sharply raised and a new bus transportation system provided.

The question then might be asked: If the white man is a true friend to the colored man, then why is he not willing to abide by the above court decision?

The answer is plain and simple: There is only one thing in the whole situation the white man asks for, and that is, the privilege of his children, and his childrens' children, continuing to be white people. From this position he cannot and will not yield because it is God's Law. Genesis 1: 11, 24, 25. Genesis VI: 19, 20. Genesis VII: 14. Numbers 36: 5, 6. Jeremiah 13: 23.

The white man feels that the colored man should also be anxious to preserve the integrity of his race, and just as willing to abide by God's Law.

The reason why it is so hard for some people in other parts of this country to understand the position of the Southern white people is that it is only in a few states in the South where each of the two races comprises about one-half of the population.

The history of the world teaches that where two separate races are in close contact with each other through the centuries they cannot retain their identity.

Now the Supreme Court decision says that in public schools the races must not be separated. If this were carried out here in the South then, from the lesson of history, in a few centuries the races would become amalgamated.

Thus to put this Supreme Court decision into effect would operate to violate God's Creation and Law, and when any court decision violates His Law, it is sinful, unholy and unworthy of obedience.

At the meeting before Governor White's Committee in Jackson on July 30, one of the more conservative colored speakers made this statement: "90 per cent of the colored people of Mississippi do want better schools for their children, and if they can get them, then 90 per cent of our problems will be solved." It is my experience and opinion that this is a correct statement.

To discourage from law suits the radicals and trouble makers who would bring so much harm to the children of Mississippi, the Legislature at its special session in September will in all probability submit to the people a Constitutional Amendment which will authorize the Legislature, in its solemn discretion, to discontinue the public school system in Mississippi and to enact legislation for the encouragement of private schools.

If the above amendment is adopted by the people it will prove our best safeguard to a continuance of our system of separate public schools.

Moreover, if the amendment is adopted, it is my firm opinion that the Legislature, through a spirit of friendship for and confidence in the colored people of this state, will promptly proceed to build and equip, for the colored children of Mississippi, good schools in all localities in which such schools have not already been built.

That all of the people in Mississippi may go forward under God's Law in peace, friendship and prosperity should be the prayer of every one of us.

Member of the Mississippi House of Representatives from Holmes County.

Segregated Schools of South Doomed--NAACP

COLUMBUS, Miss. — This state, Georgia, Louisiana and South Carolina will "fail in their objective of preserving separate schools for Negroes and whites," it was forecast here Sunday, Dec. 12, by an NAACP national officer.

Addressing the NAACP's Southeast Regional Advisory board, Gloster B. Current, the association's director of branches predicted a "weakened financial condition" for the schools of any state attempting to circumvent the Supreme court decision banning segregated schools.

Mr. Current asserted: "School systems which are financed through out-of-state bonds and long-term investments will find that these securities will be unmarketable throughout the nation.

"Georgia has already experienced difficulty in that its school revenue certificates offered for sale in Ohio have been declared ineligible investments.'

He said Mississippi schools "are already in a weakened financial condition." Mr. Current noted that he referred to "amendments to state constitutions adopted in Georgia, Louisiana and South Carolina and the amendment to be voted on in Mississippi on Dec. 21, including the proposal of the Georgia Education commission to preserve separate schools by special assignment of pupils, educational grants, prohibition of state and local funds to mixed schools, and creation of special attendance districts . . ."

He urged southern citizens, school administrators and religious leaders "not to allow politicians and bigots to influence them to sacrifice their schools on the altar of race prejudice."

Pointing up the positive side of the southern public school situation, the NAACP official declared that "integration will work in Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina and other states in this region if the public officials, including the governors and members of the state legislatures . . . adopt law-abiding, progressive attitudes" on the school issue.

"The majority of the citizens in the South are law-abiding," he maintained.

Integration is working successfully in the schools of several southern states, including Missouri, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware, he reported.

Commenting on the organization of so-called citizens councils and "other hate groups" in this state for the purpose of bringing economic and other forms of pressure upon Negro leaders, Mr. Current asserted that the NAACP "will use every legal means at its disposal to combat these tactics by bigots and others resorting to . . . frantic efforts to circumvent the Court's ruling."

He said the NAACP also "will continue to oppose" all state constitutional amendments designed to deprive Negroes of the ballot, in this state as well as others.

The regional advisory board meeting was attended by NAACP state presidents and other officers from Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, North Carolina and South Carolina, representing 50,000 members in the area.

Mississippian Asks Questions About Proposed Amendment

To The Commercial Appeal:

Recently I wrote the Legal Education Advisory Committee of Mississippi this letter:

The following topics have not been fully explained to the voters of Mississippi. Please inform us further by any means at your command.

1. Why you propose through an amendment to give a simple majority of legislators present and voting the power to abolish schools while retaining a provision in the Constitution requiring two-thirds of the elected membership for the appropriation of school money.

2. Why sufficient money could not be found during the past session of the Legislature to finance the minimum program while it is now claimed that this can be done and 60 millions additional provided for a building program if the amendment is adopted.

3. Why your committee incorporated a provision in the amendment giving the Legislature authority over the sale of local school property that local taxpayers have paid for with local money.

4. Why your committee accepts support from the so-called "highly legal" but secret organizations located principally in the Delta and in the black belt.

5. Why the committee has so completely fallen in line with the thinking of some of the leading legislators from the Delta who have repeatedly fought school improvements for both races.

6. Why the report is being circulated that it would be unconstitutional to appropriate money for schools next year unless this amendment is adopted when it is generally known that the striking down of one section of a state constitution by the court does not invalidate the entire document.

7. Why the chief proponents of this amendment are concentrated in the area where the per capita fund was diverted from the Negro schools to the white schools in such large amounts.

8. Why the committee did not define "educable children" in the proposed amendment.

9. Why a detailed proposal for private schools was not presented to the voters.

10. Why promise to sell millions in school building bonds if the amendment passes when bond buyers are refusing to buy school bonds in the only state that has adopted such an amendment as you propose?

11. Why keep telling the people "You must have faith" when they ask you for facts and future plans?

HISTORY-MAKING VOTE TO STALL INTEGRATION IS ONLY 2 DAYS AWAY

Mississippians Will Decide Abolition Amendment In Election Tuesday

'LAST RESORT' MEASURE

Governor Urges Approval As An 'Additional Weapon' In Legal Campaign To Protect Segregated Schools

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18. — Mississippi voters face a history-making decision in Tuesday's special election. Whether to continue public schools as a constitutional "must" or make them legislatively optional.

The decision will come on a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to abolish public schools if it takes that to prevent integration as mandated by the United States Supreme Court last May.

The Constitution of 1890 gives the Legislature no choice in the matter of providing free public schools for children between the ages of 6 and 21. However, they must be segregated.

White Cites Need

Gov. Hugh White, chief proponent of the amendment, insists it will not be used except as a "last resort" to prevent integration, and for that reason no fear should exist in supporting its ratification. He said it is needed as an "additional weapon" in a series of planned legal maneuvers to gain Negro support for a voluntary segregation plan conditioned on full equalization of the dual system.

Opponents led by Miss Alma Hickman, retired state college professor of Hattiesburg and one-time president of the Mississippi Education Association, express fear the amendment will be immediately used as a "first resort" rather than a standby until the other planned bypasses have been exhausted in seeking to preserve segregation. Miss Hickman's forces, bannered as "Friends of Segregated Public Schools," claim equal support for segregation, but feel that the abolition authority should not be voted until all other efforts have proved unsuccessful.

Solid Backing

As important as the issue is, it is unlikely that many more than one-fourth of the state's estimated 500,000 qualified electors will participate in the balloting. Heaviest voting is expected in counties where Citizens Councils of "white males dedicated to preservation of segregation" have been organized and which group is solidly backing the proposal.

And although there are more Negro children of school age than white, less than 10,000 of the 22,107 qualified Negro electors are expected to vote in the election. That voting strength of Negroes will remain somewhat stationary for years as the result of ratification last November of a constitutional amendment raising qualifications of electors and designed to curb widespread registration of Negroes. Incidentally, counties where the Citizens Councils are in existence carried that amendment by a vote of 10 to 1.

Mississippi's top officials and powerful organizations are lined up behind Governor White and the Legal Educational Advisory Committee, sponsors of the amendment. They include the two United States senators, five of the six United States representatives, all state officials and such organizations as the Mississippi School Administrators, State Farm Bureau, Mississippi Economic Council, county supervisors, municipal officers and others. The five candidates for governor next year are also supporting the amendment.

Opposing the amendment on an entirely different basis than the "Friends of Segregated Public Schools" is the Mississippi Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which favors immediate integration, and the two big labor unions.

Silent Opposition

Major citizen opposition is ir

the rural areas and among "silent" voters. Many teachers, especially those in the colleges, are opposed to the amendment, along with some ministerial associations and civic groups.

Although only 27 of the 189 legislators voted against submiting the amendment to the voters, Miss Hickman's group claims many were "intimidated" to support it "by the accusation that a vote against it was a vote for integration." They charge that "an atmosphere of unreasoning, frenzied, hysterical fear was created by the legislative bosses, their lieutenants, henchmen, hirelings and dupes."

In the face of outside efforts to seek speedy federal enforcement of the supreme court's integration decision, one of the points raised in support of the amendment by proponents, Miss Hickman's group claims "we are not faced today with immediate danger in Mississippi, nor are we likely to be faced with any danger for a time."

Proponents contend the decision invalidated the "segregated" constitutional provision, and if the Legislature is to vote funds for public schools, new authority must be voted it in the amendment.

Under the amendment, the Legislature is also permitted to continue to support public schools without reference to them being segregated, and also to abolish the tax-supported system and vote funds directly to the students. Proponents contend the plan is to continue public schools on some sort of statutory segregated standard, and failing to carry it out, to then wipe out the whole system rather than have it integrated.

Proponents claim that the amendment and other planned legal bypasses will preserve segregation for "from 10 to 20 years" during which time a permanent plan "is hoped to be developed."

That is the "key" in the opposition's efforts—that the other steps be tested before the abolition authority is vested in the Legislature. They also charge that the "black" counties—31 of the 82 have more Negroes than whites—want to abolish their public schools and turn to private institutions at the first sign of an integration movement.

Governor White denies that purpose by stating that "there is no desire on my part and no thought among the members of the Legisiature to abolish public schools or to take the state out of the business of helping every boy and girl to obtain the benefit of an education."

"The whole thought, effort and purpose is to place our state government in position to cope with any problem that may arise by virtue of any unfavorable Federal court rulings," he said.

However, Miss Hickman's group, which includes State Senator George Owens of Pontotoc, and Representative Joel Blass of Stone county, warns that ratification will be a "surrender by the people of their power over schools to a body which ought not to want it, nor dare ask for it."

"If this amendment is passed, the people will never be allowed to vote not to abolish public schools," the opposition said.

Cited As Threat

The opposition has used to advantage Governor White's statement he will not convene a special legislative session next year to vote the needed $18,000,000 for operation of schools in the 1955-56 session without ratification of the amendment. That statement is characterized as a "threat that unless we bow our necks and accept the yoke of political bondage for our schools we will have no schools next year."

A proposal to issue $60,000,000 bonds if the amendment is ratified for immediate launching of a Negro school buildings has been called a "bribe" by the opposition. Legislative leaders who opposed adequate financing of the overall public school program at the 1954 regular session have pledged to vote sufficient funds at a contemplated Jan. 11 special session on condition the amendment is ratified.

House Speaker Walter Sillers has borne the brunt of the opposition because of his residence in the heavily Negro-populated Delta and opposition to full financing at the 1954 regular session pending the then contemplated Supreme Court decision. He has refuted opposition claims that the "black" counties want to turn to private schools so they will not be taxed for public schools.

"The amendment does not affect taxes paid by corporations and school funds paid in by the larger counties," he said. "Neither does it reduce school funds received from the state by the smaller counties."

Speaker Sillers said the amendment "does not affect teachers employment, salaries or retirement fund." He said it grants authority to the Legislature to "take any action necessary to maintain and operate free public schools" which he contends it does not have since the Supreme Court ruling.

'Can Be Trusted'

The veteran Delta lawmaker insisted the Legislature "can be trusted to keep faith with the people and not abolish public schools for ulterior purposes."

"They can be trusted to do everything in their power to promote the educational opportunities and save our free public schools far more so than those who cast aspersions on their honor," he said.

Here is what the amendment, which needs only a majority vote for ratification, provides:

1. The Legislature may authorize the establishment, support, maintenance and operation of public schools. (This would supplant the separate, but equal, mandate in the present Constitution and the avenue proponents are hopeful will gain Negro backing for continuance of segregation conditioned on their schools being equalized).

2. The Legislature is authorized and empowered, by a two-thirds vote of those present and voting in each house, to abolish the public schools of this state, and enact suitable legislation to effect the same.

3. The Legislature is authorized and empowered, by a majority vote of those present and voting in each house, to authorize the counties and school districts to abolish their public schools and enact suitable legislation to effect the same.

Disposal Provided

4. In event the Legislature shall abolish, or authorize the abolition of the public schools, it is authorized to enact legislation to dispose of school buildings, land and other school property by lease, sale or otherwise.

5. The Legislature may appropriate state funds and authorize counties, municipalities and other governmental subdivisions to appropriate funds, including poll tax and 16th Section funds, to aid educable children of this state to obtain an education.

6. The Legislature may do any and all acts and things necessary for the purposes of this section, and this section is declared to be, and is, supplemental to all other provisions of this Constitution, and legislation enacted under authority hereof shall prevail, whether in conflict with other sections or not.

The proponents of the amendment claim that its rejection will be heralded outside the state as a willingness of Mississippi to accept integration.

On the other hand [illegible] man's group says "Nothing could be further from the truth because those of us who oppose the adoption of this amendment still oppose integration in our public schools."

Mississippi Votes To Continue Segregation in State Schools

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — Mississippi voters by a margin of more than two to one Tuesday approved a constitutional amendment providing for segregation in the state's schools.

Returns from all but 700 of the states 1,825 precincts gave 80,900 for the amendment and 36,200 against it.

Gov. Hugh White had urged voters to ratify the measure.

The amendment, similar to those approved by Georgia and South Carolina, gives the legislature stand-by authority to abolish the public school system and subsidize private schools to continue separate Negro and white school systems.

It was designed to by-pass the United States supreme court ruling banning segregation in public schools.

The amendment provides:

1 — The state may provide, support and maintain public schools.

2 — The legislature by a two thirds vote could abolish schools in the state.

3 — By a majority vote, the legislature could set up a plan for counties or local school districts to abolish their schools.

4 — Public school buildings and facilities could be sold, rented, or leased to private corporations or individuals.

5 — The state could provide tuition money for students in private schools.

POLICE POWER URGED IN MISSISSIPPI FIGHT TO KEEP SEGREGATION

Ex-Governor Wright Calls On White For Order As Final Resort

SUPPORTS AMENDMENT

States' Rights Leader Rips High Court Ruling — Asks Citizens To 'Take Stand, Be Counted' On Issue

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 1.—Use of the state's police power by the Governor to preserve public school segregation in Mississippi was urged Sunday by former Gov. Fielding L. Wright in his first public statement since leaving office in January of 1952.

The suggestion was made by the 1948 States' Rights candidate for vice president of the United States in a statement throwing his support behind a proposed constitutional amendment permitting abolition of public schools as a last resort against enforcement of the Supreme Court's integration decision.

Meeting Failed

Gov. Hugh White has called a special legislative session Sept. 7 to consider the amendment for submission to the people. That course was recommended by a Legal Education Advisory Committee following failure of last Friday's bi-racial meeting called by the Governor to seek agreement on a voluntary segregation plan conditioned on immediate equalization of Negro schools with the whites.

Asserting that "steadily but surely, slowly but doggedly, the advocates of a strong centralized government have whittled away our rights to govern the internal affairs of the several states," former Governor Wright said. "The last and perhaps most important state right guaranteed by the Constitution is the right to control the police power of the state."

"I respectfully suggest therefore that before we take the final step (abolition of schools), the Governor of the state, who under the Constitution is the chief law enforcement officer, may protect our school system by an executive order . . . to preserve law and order, requiring segregation of the races and ordering all school authorities to abide thereby," Mr. Wright said.

"Supposedly, the Governor is not subject to arrest nor is he subject to be held in contempt of any court," he said. "His position as the head of a state government and as chief law enforcement officer has never been challenged to my knowledge."

"I feel certain the United States Supreme Court will find some way to circumvent this action, but at least, even if it fails, it will accomplish some good purpose since if the states are deprived of the police power the last vestige of sovereignty will have been usurped," Mr. Wright said. "I am sure our present Governor, being a firm believer in states' rights, is willing to expose himself as I would be if in a position to do so."

'No Middle Ground'

Former Governor Wright said if the Governor loses in that effort, "it may serve to awaken some complacent Americans to the inevitable result—that this nation is no longer a confederation of sovereign states, but a patchwork of vassal subdivisions subservient to the will of a central government in Washington."

"As for me, I take my stand with those willing to fight to maintain state rights and for continued segregation in the schools of this state," he said. "It is now the time for all Mississippians to take a stand and be counted—there is no middle ground, there can be no straddling."

"The question now is segregation or complete integration," he declared. "Every Mississippian is free to choose a position. I choose to take my stand for segregation for reasons too numerous to mention here."

Former Governor Wright said he has refrained from making a public statement "on the burning issue confronting the people of our state—segregation—because first, I am just one private citizen among two million and second, my opinion has not been solicited."

He said further: "I am not a member of any committee or commission charged with the responsibility of solving the problem and it was my thought that those shouldering this burden should not be hampered with unsolicited advice and opinions.

"Reports from the meeting held last Friday show co ly that any program [illegible] untary basis designed [illegible] tinue segregation in the public schools of our state is hopeless and that drastic action is necessary.

"In my judgement, Governor White and the committee working with him have performed well, have shown courage, fortitude, patience and wisdom in the manner in which this more difficult problem has been handled and they deserve the full co-operation and support of all Mississippians who are in accord with the purpose and objective for which the committee is working.

"I will support the constitutional amendment proposed by the committee with the hope that it may never be used to abolish the public school system but because I know it is necessary to remove the present constitutional mandate for public schools if need require this drastic step," he said.

If Need Arises

Mississippi's Wright Supports Move To End Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 1 (AP)—Former Gov. Fielding Wright today backed the move to amend the state constitution to empower the legislature to abolish public schools, if needed, as a weapon in the fight to keep segregation.

He also urged Gov. Hugh White to declare that any attempt to mix the races would bring the state's "police power" into play to prevent trouble.

The former governor who preceded White in the governor's mansion, said he hoped the need would never come to abolish public schools, and that he still favors "equal opportunities for both races and equal school facilities and pay for school teachers of both races."

But, he emphasized, "as for me, I take my stand with those willing to fight to maintain states' rights and for continued segregation in the schools of this state.

'Time To Take Stand'

"It is now the time for all Mississippians to take a stand and be counted — there is no middle ground.

"There can be no straddling—the question now is segregation or complete integration. Every Mississippian is free to choose a position," he said.

The Legal Educational Advisory Committee again approved a proposed change in Mississippi's constitution that would empower the legislature to abolish public schools. Gov. White called a special session of the legislature for Sept. 7 to consider the amendment.

People Would Vote On It

If passed by the legislature, it would go to a vote of the people.

LEAC members emphasized they recommended the change only as a weapon to hold over the Negroes' heads, and hoped it would never be needed as a "last resort."

LEAC members, especially Gov. White, showed a stiffening attitude Friday after a meeting with some 95 Negro leaders who said they would not support a voluntary segregation plan and insisted that the state put into effect the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

The LEAC had hoped to get the Negroes' cooperation in a "segregation by consent" plan.

Urges "Police Power"

Former Gov. Wright said that if the "police power" method of keeping segregation didn't work, Mississippi has lost all its power to the federal government.

He urged Gov. White to use the "police power," even if the Supreme Court eventually overrules it.

"Since if the states are deprived of the police power the last vestige of sovereignty will have been usurped, I am sure our present governor, being a firm believer in state rights, is willing to expose himself as I would be, if in a position to do so," Wright said.

The former governor was vice presidential candidate on the States' Rights Party ticket in 1948.

NATCHEZ TO DEFY SEGREGATION BAN

City and County Plans Reveal No Change Except Better Negro Facilities

Special to The New York Times.

NATCHEZ, Miss., Aug. 7—Despite the possible consequences of an open defiance of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision, school authorities here have decided to maintain segregation as long as possible.

Plans for the 1954-55 session in city and county schools reveal no disposition to make even a slight change, except in the direction of improving Negro facilities.

The local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Natchez Negro Business and Civic League, favor immediate compliance with the court decision, but authorities hope a policy of Negro school improvement will satisfy a substantial majority of the Negro population.

To make continued segregation more palatable, they have provided more money for Negro teachers and schools. The new city budget shows a 41 per cent increase in salaries of Negro teachers over last year, as compared with a 19 per cent increase for whites. Negro wages in city schools have increased 145 per cent in the last five years.

The new country school budget gives Negro teachers an over-all salary increase of 58 per cent, while white salaries will rise 21 per cent.

Last year, the city opened a new Negro elementary-high school and improved cafeteria, classroom and library facilities in older buildings. The county completed construction of the first consolidated school for Negroes and plans two more. They are being delayed because the Legislature at its last session did not provide building funds.

To maintain segregation "legally," school authorities here, as elsewhere in Mississippi, will rely on a recently passed legislative act that permits superintendents of education to assign children to schools on the basis of the welfare of the public and the students.

Legislature to Meet

Attorneys have advised school authorities that integration can be delayed many years through legal tactics. The State Legislature meets Sept. 7 to devise a plan, probably in the form of a constitutional amendment permitting abolition of public schools, to circumvent the court's decision.

Another compelling reason for attempting to maintain the status quo is the belief that the effective political and economic majority in the community wants segregation. In the city, the whites represent only 57 per cent of the population, but have 89 per cent of the total qualified vote. A tax office source estimates that 90 per cent of municipal taxes are paid by whites.

According to the last Federal census, there were only fifty-two more whites than Negroes in the county. Since then, the Negro birth rate has exceeded the white. As of March 1, 1953, the potential school population, based on a local census of educable children (from 6 to 21 years of age), was 4,659 whites and 5,733 Negroes. In rural areas of the county, the actual school population last year had Negroes outnumbering whites 2,270 to 1,319.

Integration would leave city white children with less than a two-to-one majority in school. Outside Natchez white children would become a minority group.

Champions of segregation argue that integration would produce financial as well as social problems. Since the qualifications of Negro teachers are generally below those of white teachers (in the county school system only two of forty-five colored teachers have college degrees). They contend, it might be necessary to discharge Negro instructors.

Local authorities also say they fear the impact of an immediate, sharp increase in costs as a result of integration. The effort to equalize instruction and facilities will increase taxes in the long run, they argue, but not as swiftly as desegregation this year or next.

800 SCHOOL LEADERS STAND BACK OF PLAN TO KEEP SEGREGATION

Educators In Mississippi Are Almost Unanimously For 'Last Resort'

OPPOSED BY HANDFUL

Group Hears Gov. White—Public Doors Would Shut Under Certain Conditions Provided By Amendment

By JOHN HERBERS
United Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 12. — Some 800 Mississippi school leaders offered almost unanimous support Thursday to a proposed constitutional amendment permitting the Legislature to abolish public schools "as a last resort" in maintaining segregation.

Meeting with the state's 25-man Legal Advisory Committee, county school superintnedents and school board members voted to actively support the amendment on promise of legislative leaders that an "adequate" school building program would be enacted if the amendment is accepted. Only a handful cast dissenting votes.

Special Session Sept. 7

The amendment goes before a special session of the Legislature Sept. 7 where its approval is virtually certain, and then to the public.

Gov. Hugh White said if the amendment is accepted by the public he will call the Legislature into another special session, possibly early next year, to formally accept it as part of the state Constitution.

"At that time I will recommend an adequate school building program and method of financing schools for the next year," Governor White told the group. The 1954 Legislature left financing schools for the year beginning in July, 1955, until a special session, pending trial of the new school equalization program this year.

Many Change Minds

Many of the local school leaders came to Thursday's meeting in opposition to the amendment, but changed their minds after committee members offered these explanations during the three-hour session:

1. Abolishing public schools in favor of a state-supported private system would be used only as "a last resort."

2. Negro leaders have refused to go along with a voluntary system of segregation and, according to Governor White, "want integration in compliance with the Supreme Court decisions" against segregation.

3. Abolishing public schools statewide would require a two-thirds vote of the Legislature and on a county-option basis a majority vote. "It is hard," said Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County, "to get a two-thirds vote on anything in the Legislature and would be impossible unless a majority of the people want it."

4. Leaders like Mr. Gore and State Superintendent of Education J. M. Tubb who have strongly opposed abolishing public schools swung behind the amendment.

Sillers Explains Plan

Chairman of important legislative committees who defeated a building program earlier this year, Representative Gore said "flatly agreed if this amendment is passed by the Legislature and adopted by the people they will support an adequate building program."

Several school men wanted to know if the public schools were abolished what sort of private system would be set up and whether state funds would go to support present private schools.

House Speaker Walter Sillers said a subcommittee is now at work on that but that each student probably would be given state money to attend a school approved by a special county committee set up to judge curricula.

Committee member Tom Tubb of West Point said the committee had uncovered "alarming figures" on the increasing Negro vote in the state, that in at least two counties one-third of the qualified voters are Negroes.

Opposes Commitment

"In several years Negroes may be in the majority in some counties," he said, "and some of you may be supplanted, (by Negroes) as trustees."

He urged support of a constitutional amendment already approved by the Legislaure to increase the requirements of citizens to become qualified voters.

None of the school leaders spoke in opposition to the amendment, but Meridian School Board member Otho Smith opposed "committing ourselves to formal action at this time." His motion was defeated by a large majority.

J. T. Means, a retired Methodist minister and member of the Jasper County School Board said, "I'm ready to follow our leaders. What they are fighting for above everything else is purity of the white blood."

Segregation In Mississippi To Be Costly

JACKSON, Miss. —(ANP)— A survey by the state department of education shows that the cost of new school construction under a new sweeping plan to keep segregated schools would cost Mississippi $117,477,987.

It would take at least 23,793 classrooms to adequately provide separate but equal facilities for Negro and white pupils, 6,793 more units than presently available.

T. M. Naylor, director, transportation and school buildings, reported the results of a three-year survey to the state legal advisory committee, which last week proposed a sweeping building program for both races as a means of keeping segregation.

Miss. Education Association Stands Firm for Segregation

Powerful 9,000-Member Group Says Negroes Prefer It That Way

JACKSON, Miss., July 31—The politically powerful 9,000-member Mississippi Education Assn. has committed itself "unequivocally to a continuation of public education with separate schools for the white and Negro races as a necessary means of preserving the integrity and purity of both races."

That declaration means it will be difficult — and doubtful — whether Mississippians will abolish their public school system; at least, not until every avenue has been explored to keep it.

Basis of the association's official pronouncement is the belief of its leaders that the United States Supreme Court's integration decision can be "bypassed" through voluntary segregation.

"Cooperative efforts participated in by the leadership of members of both races on a local level may well accomplish more now than can be done by law," the official policy statement said.

The directors of the association question the "value of endless litigation which would keep the schools continually in a state of uncertainty" which they said "would probably result in stopping educational development where it is."

Declaration Timed

In disclosing its policy, the education association pointed out that immediate state aid for the building of Negro schools to the standard of those long provided the whites must be voted.

"Every effort should be made to make this effective at once," the statement said.

The white educational leaders —who come from the classroom level to the top college administrative posts—timed their declaration of policy just in advance of Gov. Hugh White's bi-racial meeting. The governor's conference was called to seek a "meeting of the minds" and agreement on a plan of voluntary segregation.

Gov. White favors immediate state aid for new Negro school buildings, and plans to present that question to a scheduled special legislative session in September.

However, tied in with the state aid is a proposed constitutional amendment as an inducement for legislative approval of the building funds. The amendment would authorize the legislature to permit counties and separate school districts to abolish public education if so voted by the citizens involved.

Although the amendment is far-reaching, it is being proposed solely as a statute that could be resorted to in event an effort or attempt is made at breaking down segregation. It would be a "stick over their heads" in case, and a heavy persuasive possibility to bring about voluntary segregation on the part of Negroes.

Strive for 'Justice'

MISSISSIPPI

Gov. White, like the school leaders, feels that at least 95 per cent of the Negroes in Mississippi want to continue segregation — provided Negro opportunities are equalized with those long provided the whites.

"It is futile to talk of separate schools for the Negro unless we can talk of adequate schools for his race," the education association officials pointed out. "We can no longer draw the color line in our schools unless there is justice on each side of the line.

"We cannot expect segregation by choice while there remains the present disparity between the schools provided for each race," the association asserted.

As to the proposal to abolish public schools, the association said there might arise a situation "that could conceivably suggest legal alteration of the public school system," but that it would "certainly recommend this only as a desperate move and one that should be entertained as a very last resort."

The educators said the fundamental institutions through which racial integrity may best be preserved are the home, the church and the school.

"The immediate effect of enforced integration in the public school program would bring disaster to both races," the education association pointed out. "The differences in folkways between the two races are too great; the public would not support the integrated school, the children would not want to attend such schools."

Admitting that the court's decision when finally drafted "would result in untold harm to the public school system," the educational group recognizes it will be "the supreme law of the land."

Carries No 'Stigma'

"A complete compliance with the provisions of the decision, when it is finally put into effect, would result in untold harm to the public school system of Mississippi," the policy statement said in stating that "the recent decision was ill-advised."

Asserting that there "actually is much reluctance among Negroes in the South to be integrated," the association suggested that "if we seize on these attitudes and promote pride in the race among the Negroes, they will, no doubt gladly enough choose separate schools taught by members of their own race."

"Segregation by choice is vastly different from segregation by law. It carries no stigma.

"Planning by local leaders, white and Negro, promises the best results in each community. They know each other. Neither is afraid."

On that premise, the white educators said:

"Voluntary separation of the races in the public schools with the complete endorsement of leaders of both races at the state level and worked out on a community level with adequate facilities for both races offers our best hope."

Miss. To Propose Bill Aimed At Hindering Work Of NAACP

JACKSON, Miss. —(SNS)— The state of Mississippi in her attempt to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision on public school segregation is now proposing a bill obviously aimed at stymieing the efforts of the NAACP in pushing for integration of school in the state.

Gov. Hugh White Thursday announced he will ask the special session of the legislature, which opens Sept. 7, to consider a bill forbidding anyone from 'stirring up race trouble' by filing lawsuits.

The proposed bill, drawn up by State Representative Byron Long of Lee County, would prevent anyone except relatives of children attending schools from filing suits against school districts. Most of the suits against school districts have been filed by the NAACP in the students' behalf. If enacted into law this practice would become unlawful.

Rep. Long also proposed a bill which provides that parents will designate which school they want their children to attend and the students will then be assigned by the school boards.

Opposition Increases in Miss. To School Abolition Proposal

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special To The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 4—A special session of the Mississippi Legislature convenes Tuesday to consider an amendment to the state constitution authorizing abolition of public schools as a "last resort" to prevent integration.

Gov. Hugh White called the session after a bi-racial meeting failed to agree on continuance of the dual system on a "voluntary segregation" plan, contingent on immediate equalization of Negro schools with the whites.

Considerable opposition has already been reported to the proposed amendment. The matter before the legislature will be its adoption for submission to the people in the later special election for ratification.

School forces, at first opposed to the amendment, are now for it since Governor White has said without it he will not call another special session next year to vote funds for operation of public schools in the 1955-56 session "under the present laws." The 1954 Legislature voted funds for only the 1954-55 session rather than for two years as is custom.

Although school leaders said they will support the amendment, they said if the issue ever came before the legislature for abolition of public schools they will oppose that effort. It will require a two-thirds vote of the legislature to abolish schools, provided the amendment is approved by the lawmakers and ratified by the voters.

Meanwhile, purported organization of "secret vigilante groups to deal with the school segregation problem" in Mississippi has been disclosed by Editor Hal De-

MISSISSIPPI

Cell of the Deer Creek Pilot at Rolling Fork. He likens the movement to a form of Ku Klux Klanism.

From other sources have come reports that local "citizens committees" are being formed to work with racial leaders on a more or less "persuasive" basis to keep the schools segregated on assurances that the dual system will be equalized.

In connection with the asserted vigilante movement, Editor DeCell said:

"During the past few weeks we have been growing more and more uncomfortable with the rumors and dark-corner insinuations predicting the organization of some sort of secret vigilante groups to deal with the school segregation problem."

It is significant that Editor DeCell's weekly newspaper is published in the Delta section where the Negro population is greater than that of the whites. He also ran his editorial in a new weekly newspaper he is publishing at Greenville, in the heart of the Delta. It is the "Mississippi Pilot."

The young World War II veteran-editor said "the pitiful thing to us is that the talk of vigilante groups seems to be coming not from illiterate men from whom it would be more readily expected, but from men who have been in the past literate leaders with at least a semblance of sensibility."

"And," he added, "the dastardness of the thing they advocate is made more despicable by the fact that they have sense enough to know better."

"Secret groups which would seek to control with hooded face and bloody whip that with which their minds are incapable of dealing will blight civilization much worse than would even non-segregated schools," Editor DeCell said.

He then states that "we are firm believers in the practice of separate but equal schools but we will fight and work against any such vilgilante group as ardently and avidly as against the effort to force integrated schools upon our people."

Editor DeCell said "there is nothing human in the sacrificing of justice or justness upon the altar of vigilante mob rule."

"There are laws in the land, created and adopted by the people," he said. "It is true that at times a bad law—or interpretation of another law—is inflicted upon us, but such an unwanted situation is never corrected or otherwise successfully dealt with through hysterical action."

"There be nothing just about a vigilante group working outside the law, we see only danger and defeat in the adoption of such primitive methods," Editor DeCell said. "The dark ages wherein the mob rule of vigilante groups spawn such a curse upon humanity are buried in the antiquity of history — and they should stay buried rather than be born again in the unreasoning actions of men who would revert to animal."

Editor DeCell supported his editorial with a cartoon showing a hooded man with a big stick labeled 'mob rule.' It show another man, labeled 'the thinking public,' giving a big "No" to the suggestion of the hooded figure to 'let's go my way.'

The caption on the cartoon is "No Safety in Sheets."

Segregation Bands Forming In Mississippi

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 9 (AP)— White men who want to keep segregation in force are banding into "citizens councils" throughout Mississippi, several legislators said today.

These men want to persuade first, but are determined to use force if necessary, the legislators said.

Most of the dozen legislators questioned were reluctant to talk at all. Only a few agreed to be quoted by name.

"Yes, sir," said Representative Dave Womack of Humphreys County in the Delta, where the Negro population outnumbers whites as much as 4 to 1, "we have one of them, the strongest in the state. We have about 500 members and they mean business."

One State representative from a predominantly Negro county said, "Practically every county in the state has organized, or is organizing. It's no secret. We want them (Negroes) to know it in our county."

This legislator held the view that if Negroes know about the councils, they will not try to enter white schools. This would prevent bloodshed, the representative said.

MEASURE PASSES IN SECOND VOTE

Proposal Set for Third Reading Today

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 9—The proposed constitutional power for abolishing public schools and creating a private school plan advanced another step Thursday through the Mississippi Legislature.

The House, for the second straight day, endorsed the constitutional amendment by a landslide margin. The vote was 108 to 22, far more than the two-thirds majority needed.

House sponsors of the measure scheduled it for the third of three required adoptions at Friday's session in order to put it into the hands of the Senate for action there next week.

Meanwhile Thursday, a new side issue of the current special session developed as Gov. Hugh White at the request of a large contingent of lawmakers agreed to submit a request to the session to put $1,500,000 in the old age welfare program.

The amount had lapsed in the welfare funds at the end of the fiscal biennium on July 1. Immediately afterwards, the welfare department cut average old age grants by approximately $1.75 per month.

Restoration of the funds to the old age program, White said, would probably offset the reduction in the average old age grants.

White also had a request from an asserted 75 members of the House to submit legislation to the special session to raise the maximum old age grants from $30 to $35 per month.

The lapse of the $1,500,000 last biennium had resulted from the fact that the welfare department could not increase benefits above $30 to match available federal aid.

The governor said Thursday afternoon, however, that he was not clear on what effect the raising of the maximum grant would have.

"I've been told that we would receive federal funds only on a dollar for dollar matching basis because we are already paying more than a $25 average old age grant," White said.

The federal government matches state funds for old age welfare on a four-to-one basis up to $25 and then matches on a dollar-for-dollar basis above that amount.

The welfare program became injected in floor debate in the Senate at is Thursday session, when Sen. Quitman Lott of Purvis attempted to amend a bill transferring $1,850,000 to the state treasury to earmark the funds for old age assistance.

No final action was taken on the Lott proposal as the Senate adjourned after laying the bill on the table subject to call.

Lott's amendment was to a bill to transfer the unused funds from the livestock, poultry and egg loan program established in 1952 to the treasury. Gov. White had asked that the funds be transferred.

The governor said Thursday he wanted the additional funds for the old age program to be made through a direct appropriation and not by earmarking the funds which would be transferred to the treasury from the livestock and poultry loan program.

In approving the constitutional amendment for abolition of the public schools for a second time, the House against beat down an attempt to amend the proposal to make it tougher for the Legislature later to carry out the amendment.

Rep. John Farese, Benton county, proposed a change which would have required a two-thirds majority instead of a simple majority of the Legislature to pass legislation authorizing individual school districts to abolish their schools.

He said that originally the amendment was to have required a two-thirds vote of the Legislature to authorize the "local option" abolition of schools. The measure requires a two-thirds vote if the Legislature should attempt to abolish schools on a statewide basis.

The House turned down Farese's amendment by a vote of 75 to 54. The school abolition proposal charged that the state "should exhaust all other steps first" before seeking the broad new power.

He said that it was the opinion of Attorney General J. P. Coleman that the law passed by the 1954 session of the Legislature giving school trustees power to assign students on health and general welfare factors under the state's police power "would keep the supreme court busy for many years."

Rep. Delos Burks, Pearl River county, who also opposed the measure, said that "the whole program on how this amendment would be carried out should be worked out in advance."

Should the state go to a private school system under the amendment, he asserted, "no one has said how he will be able to tax the big corporations that are now supporting our public schools to support private schools."

The vote on the constitutional amendment was almost identical with the vote Wednesday in its first floor appearance. Opponents of the proposal lost two from their ranks Thursday as two members who favor the amendment.

In the Senate, unanimous approval was given to another measure involving the segregation question.

The measure corrects a mistake made in the state medical education loan program so that loans can be made to Negro students to attend medical schools outside of Mississippi.

As passed by the 1954 regular session, the law had required that loans could be made in the future only for students to attend the University of Mississippi medical school.

The House, by a voice vote, cleared the resolution it had adopted Wednesday to pay themselves $7 a day in expenses while they are actually in session in Jackson.

The resolution had been adopted Wednesday by a vote of 61 to 54, but was held over on a motion to reconsider.

At Thursday's session, backers of the resolution refused to allow a roll call and proceeded to table the reconsideration motion by a voice vote.

The expenses will be paid in addition to the $15 per day pay which lawmakers receive during special sessions plus mileage to return to their homes every week end.

While the House is working Friday to clear the school amendment, the Senate will be in recess until Monday at 2 p. m.

Legislature Meets In Mississippi on School Racial Issue

By the Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7.—A historic special session of the Mississippi Legislature was called for today to lay the foundation for dodging the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

The key proposal was a constitutional amendment empowering the Legislature to abolish public schools.

Gov. Hugh White was scheduled to go before a joint session of the Senate and House of Representtives this afternoon. His formal call for the special session listed only one item: the proposed constitutional amendment to aid in the fight to keep segregation.

Two Methods Proposed.

The measure provides two methods of abolishing public schools:

1. State-wide, by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature.

2. Local option, with individual counties and school districts being allowed to abolish their public schools and set up private systems. Details of the method have not been worked out. The constitutional amendment would allow the Legislature to set up a workable local option method by a simple majority vote.

Leaders of the Legal Educational Advisory Committee said the amendment would be introduced and sent to the constitution committees of each House as any other amendment would be handled.

The committee is composed of most important State officials.

The LEAC rejected the idea of asking each House to go into committee of the whole "to consider the amendment as soon as it was introduced." Fear of charges of "steam-roller" convinced the LEAC the amendment should go through the usual process.

For Local Option.

Representative Joel Blass of Stone County voiced the position of several leigslators last week when he said he would fight the State-wide part of the constitutional amendment but would vote for the local option part of the amendment. Several other legislators have agreed with him.

But most legislators have said they believe the amendment will pass in substantially its present form.

Gov. White has said he will ask consideration for 17 other items, including pay raises for circuit and chancery judges, a study of the State's water resources and site for an authorized lethal gas chamber. A special session may consider only items submitted by the Governor.

The session loomed as a six-week affair, depending mainly on the amount of opposition to the constitutional amendment.

Most bills to be considered by the session already are written and should enter the legislative process quickly.

Mississippi Roundup—

Senate Ready For Final OK On School Abolition

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 (U.P.)—The Mississippi Senate was prepared today to give final legislative approval tomorrow to a constitutional amendment permitting the state to abolish public school system.

The House-approved measure, described by proponents as a tool of last resort to keep segregation, passed its second reading without debate today. A third required reading for constitutional amendments is scheduled tomorrow.

The proposal will go to the public for ratification in a special election Dec. 21 exactly as it was drafted by a 25-man legal Education Advisory Committee headed by Gov. Hugh White. Most of the state's white school leaders have pledged their support to the amendment.

Gov. Hugh White predicted that the public vote would be as one-sided as that in the Legislature.

The only opposition in the Senate came from members from predominantly white districts. Sen. George Owens of Pontotoc argued yesterday that the "danger" of the proposal is that no plan has been established for substituting a private school system once the state sold its school properties.

Members of the Segregation Advisory Committee said if all other efforts to maintain segregation failed and public schools were abolished the Legislature would be responsible for creating a system whereby money would be appropriated to individual students to attend private schools.

Miss. Seeks Negro Cooperation in Voluntary Segregation Plan

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief the Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., July 17—Possibly the most important bi-racial meeting ever held in Mississippi has been called for July 30 by Gov. Hugh White.

The subject: public school segregation.

The purpose: an effort by state officials to secure cooperation of Negro leaders in a voluntary segregation plan to prevent the immediate impact of integration as decreed by the United States Supreme Court.

Outcome of that conference may in a large measure gage the state's public schools for the next 10 years at least.

Gov. White, with the aid of a small group of Negro leaders, has made up a list of 88 representative members of that race for the meeting to be held in the Woolfolk State Office building.

Recipients of letters of invitation from the governor include members of the state chapters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is on record as opposing all forms of segregation. Fact is, the state NAACP group is ready to file petitions seeking integration before the fall school openings.

White Cites 'Feelings'

Included in the invitation list is Dr. E. J. Stringer, Columbus Negro dentist and head of the NAACP in Mississippi. The Sunday before the governor's meeting the state NAACP will meet in Jackson to adopt a plan of procedure to be followed in connection with the Supreme Court's ruling.

Contrary to the expressed position of the NAACP, Gov. White and some Negro leaders have said that 95 per cent of the Negroes in Mississippi will accept voluntary segregation provided opportunities for Negroes are immediately placed on a par with those of the whites.

And to keep the "white side" of the bargain, Gov. White is on record favoring legislative authorization of funds to start, without further delay, a building program for Negro schools. That is the area in which the widest discrimination in the dual system exists, and mostly in rural sections rather than urban.

MISSISSIPPI

Sitting in on the July 30 conference will be the 25 members of a Legal Educational Advisory Committee created at the 1954 session of the legislature to devise a "bypass" to the Supreme Court's non-segregation ruling.

The advisory group, meeting last Monday with Gov. White, its chairman, went on record favoring a trial of the voluntary segregation plan and recommended that the legislature make building funds immediately available for Negro schools on that basis.

Little Hope for 'Bypass'

However, as a "savings clause" in event the voluntary plan does not work, the advisory committee recommended a constitutional amendment which would authorize the counties and separate school districts to abolish public schools in event integration is attempted.

Members of the advisory committee admit there is nothing Mississippi can do to "bypass" the Supreme Court ruling on the strict point of non-segregation. They feel that whatever diversionary tactics are taken will merely be "delaying action."

Since Mississippi has more than 2,000 school districts, the "thinking" of officials is that separate suits would have to be filed against each to break down segregation. Gov. White has said, however, that even that approach may prove unsuccessful as the Supreme Court may shorten the route in some way or the other.

Another new angle has been injected following approval of the proposed amendment to the constitution for submission to a scheduled September special session of the legislature.

It is by T. J. Tubb, attorney of West Point and chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee, a member of a subcommittee of the advisory group which recommended the constitutional amendment.

Sees Varying Views

Mr. Tubb said "under the law, Mississippi cannot maintain segregated public schools." On that premise, he said the state "faces a choice of either abolishing its public school system or see an integration of the races."

The most revealing statement by Mr. Tubb, however, was that "many people don't want to give up public education" and that "the young people, particularly war veterans who lived, ate and slept next to Negroes, aren't as enthusiastic in the fight to retain segregation as are older Mississippians."

Mr. Tubb's statement foresees a hard fight for voter ratification of the proposed constitutional amendment which would give local level authorization for abolition if integration is attempted. It may also be the orerunner to a bitter fight in the legislature to gain its adoption for submission to the voters in a planned special election in December.

Those possibilities exist despite that the plan is not to bring the amendment, if ratified, into play as long as voluntary segregation works.

Gov. White is to discuss the proposed amendment at his biracial meeting. The reaction to it, even as an "in case" statute, may determine whether he will call a special session in September for its consideration by the legislature.

Miss. Gov. Airs Newest Proposal To Keep Bias

JACKSON, Miss. — Mississippi has come up with a new one for dodging the U. S. Suureme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools, an amendmen to abolish schools on both a statewide and local level to be used as a threat to Negro educators when they seek to press obeying the decision.

The announcement was made by Mississippi Governor Hugh White, who said he planned to call the legislature ino special session in early September to consider the proposal which would amend the state's 64-year-old constitution.

This propo-ed amendment would allow the legislature to abolish by a two-thirds vote public school on a local option and statewide basis, if necessary to maintain segregation. However, it would be used only as a last resort to legally break the integration law, members of the state's Legal Education Advisory Committee held.

Generally, the action is reviewed as a threat to Negroes who seek to implement the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision. The state apparently plans to used is as a means to force Negroes to either cooperate in maintaining segregation or lose their schools altogether.

Actually the amendment only whipes out a requirement that public schools be provided throughout the state. Recommendation for a new school building program for Negroes is planned, but only after the amendment is installed.

Negro Editor To Offer 7-Point School Plan To Both Races

JACKSON, Miss., July 15 (U.P.)—A Jackson Negro newspaper editor today outlined a seven-point "desegration program" which he said will be submitted to a group of Negro and white leaders meeting with Gov. Hugh White July 30.

Percy Greene of The Jackson Advocate said the plan, which proposes continued segregation in some fields and integration in others, would "meet the conditions brought about by the U. S. Supreme Court decision" ruling public school segregation unconstitutional.

Greene's plan, which he said will be presented to the Mississippi Legislature if sufficient Negro support is shown for it:

1—Equal but separate public school facilities, with Negro teachers guaranteed positions in schools for their race through the 12th grade.

2—Alcorn College, Jackson College and Mississippi Vocational College at Itta Bena to be maintained at the highest educational standards for Negro students, but not barring other students.

3—Athletic contests between Negro and white high school and college teams "in order to bring about increasing understanding and goodwill between the races."

4—Appointment of Negroes on all policy-making boards and committees on all levels in the matter of racial relations.

5—The admission of Negroes to the University of Mississippi and State College for professional and graduate study.

6—Elimination of segregation in public transportation and transportation terminals.

7—Removal of restrictions against Negro voting.

Gov. White Says He'll Use Force

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 2 (AP)—Gov. Hugh White declared today that Mississippi's "police power" will be used if necessary to keep Negroes out of white schools.

"I am going to see this thing through to make certain that Negroes never enter the white schools," he said.

He said the "police power" of a state, allowing it to preserve law and order, has never been touched by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"The people of this state now see what is before them. They are solidified as never before and we will maintain segregation."

The governor's statement followed the suggestion yesterday by Governor and the that he invoke "police powers" to prevent racial mixing in public schools. The suggestion was made by former Gov. Fielding Wright.

His stiffened attitude followed a meeting Friday with a group of 90 Negro leaders, who declared they would fight an attempt to dodge the Supreme Court decision by segregation in public schools. The Legal Educational Advisory Committee had hoped to get their co-operation in a plan of voluntary segregation in return for additional school buildings.

Miss. Segregation 'Bypass' Plan Faces Snag Posed by NAACP

Negroes Gird to 'Demand' Action; Law School Dean Advises Legality

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., July 10—Plans to bypass the United States Supreme Court's ruling banning public school segregation are running into local complications. One of the obstacles may be overcome Monday.

Probably the hardest blow to those studying ways of retaining segregation was from one of their group. It came from Dean Robert J. Farley of the University of Mississippi Law School, who, as new president of the State Bar Assn., succeeded to membership on a 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee created at the 1954 legislative session to work out a plan to at least stall integration as long as possible.

Dean Farley replaced Jerome Hafter of Greenville when the latter's term as head of the lawyer's group ended.

The advisory group meets Monday to agree on constitutional amendments to permit the legislature to retain segregation in some way — or else authorize the counties and cities to abandon the public education field.

MISSISSIPPI

Dean Issues Warning

In an address before the Mississippi Municipal Officers Assn., Dean Farley said he favored segregation, but added that "Mississippi can't afford to pass laws to outsmart the Supreme Court of the United States." He has received all sorts of reactions to those remarks.

Incidentally, Dean Farley is a member of a subcommittee of the advisory group assigned the task of recommending laws or constitutional amendments to "get around" the court's ruling. Chief Justice Harvey McGeHee of the state supreme court, is chairman of that group.

The other warning came from Dr. E. J. Stringer, Columbus dentist and president of the Mississippi branch of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. His group is against segregation at all levels and plans to contest efforts to prevent its enforcement.

Dr. Stringer announced that his chapters are "ready" to file the necessary actions to seek admission of Negro children in the white schools this fall.

The NAACP official said definite plans to seek integration will be formulated here July 25 at a statewide meeting of his association. He has already been assured by Thurgood Marshall of New York, general counsel of NAACP, that he will "personally" handle litigation in Mississippi.

Plans of the NAACP run headon into two of the "bypass" maneuvers. One is a new state law permitting school authorities to "assign" students to schools on a basis of health, community interest and the general welfare. The other is statements of state leaders that 95 per cent of the Negroes in Mississippi will "go along" with the segregated system provided opportunities for Negroes are equalized without delay with those long provided for the whites.

May Move Up Parley

If the NAACP follows through, its action will probably lay the test for ultimate ruling by the United States Supreme Court on the new "assignment" law enacted at a special legislative session in December, 1953.

Anticipating the NAACP efforts, Gov. Hugh White met recently with several Negro leaders preparatory to a larger meeting of members of that race for an agreement on a "voluntary" segregation plan. The larger meeting is scheduled in August, but in view of the July 25 meeting of the state NAACP branches, the date may be advanced by the governor.

Percy Greene, Negro publisher of Jackson who is opposed to "legal" segregation, attended the governor's meeting. An outspoken exponent of the end of all segregation, Editor Greene has indicated he will support a plan of "American schools" without reference to racial aspects with "white teachers teaching only white children and Negro teachers teaching only Negro children."

Editor Greene feels that location of schools in the residential areas of citizens living within their sectors will more or less take care of the "segregated" situation, at least until residence intermingling results.

That is somewhat the position of Dean Farley, who told the municipal officials that "segregation in law and segregation in fact are two different things."

"Mississippi has made more progress during the past 20 years than in any other period in its history," Dean Farley said. "Let's not sacrifice our own children to prevent an occasional Negro from getting into a school."

Dean Farley is definitely against any plan that would lead to abolition of public education. It is counter to that of Walter Sillers of Rosedale, speaker of the State House of Representatives, who favors abolition "as a last resort" in keeping segregation.

Dean Farley and Speaker Sillers are both on the subcommittee which is to recommend the "bypass" proposals to Gov. White's committee Monday.

Mississippi Roundup—

Schools Urged To End Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., July 26 (AP)—The Mississippi branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People today released the text of petitions requesting local school districts to abolish segregation voluntarily.

The NAACP now is getting signatures on identical petitions to be presented to local boards. Officials said they plan to file a petition in every school district.

The text was released after a meeting of some 200 Negro leaders here yesterday to consider the school situation.

The meeting called for a biracial committee of 50 members to work together to put into effect the U. S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

The petitions presumably would be the first step toward court cases to enforce the court decision, since no school district is expected to admit Negro children to white schools.

dum.

The governor had earlier believed that most of the state's Negroes would "go along" with a voluntary plan of continued separate schools. He said he was "completely shaken" with their rejection.

Take Firm Stand

Key Negro leaders refused to join in any attempt by the state to circumvent the U. S. Supreme Court ruling against public school segregation. They asked instead for immediate equalization of schools for both races and a voice in the planning of the state's educational future.

The Negroes endorsed a suggestion offered last Sunday that the governor appoint a 25-member Negro committee to work with a white committee in drafting an education plan for the races.

White this afternoon turned down the request, saying he had "no authority" to make the appointments.

Mississippi Roundup—

White Calls Special Session On Plan To Abolish Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., July 30 (U.P.)—Gov. Hugh White, "completely shaken" by the refusal of Negro leaders to endorse continued school segregation, today called a special session of the Mississippi Legislature for Sept. 7 to consider a constitutional amendment to abolish the state's public school system.

The governor's decision was announced during a meeting of the 25-member legal advisory committee on segregation which had conferred this morning with some 85 Negro leaders.

At the same time, the group instructed State Superintendent of Education Jack Tubb to call in school officials to explain the proposed amendment.

Plan Steps

White and other members of the advisory committee, which had proposed the amendment two weeks ago, decided to submit the matter to the legislature as a "protection" feature in retaining the state's segregated schools.

The amendment would authorize the legislature to abolish, by two-thirds majority, the statewide school system or to present the issue for local option by simple majority. Before the legislature can act to abolish, however, the amendment must be approved in a [illegible]

The committee, when it offered the amendment, also announced it would support a school building program "conditioned" on the acceptance of the proposal by the legislature.

Members were reluctant today to discuss any plans for school construction until, as one put, "we get protection from integration."

The amendment was considered by White and the advisory committee to be a "protective" clause against attempts by Negroes to integrate the school system. White said he could not call a session to provide funds for schools "under present conditions. The schools would have to close, that's all."

The motion to put the amendment before a special session, made by Rep. Hilton Waits of Washington, was accepted unanimously. During the meeting, the first policy conference open to the press, Education Superintendent Tubb expressed doubts that the amendment would be accepted by the people "who believe public schools are fundamental to the constitution."

Mississippi Negroes Oppose Segregation

Tardy discovery that Negroes in his state are opposed to segregation has caused Governor Hugh White of Mississippi to announce the legislature will convene September 7 to consider the abolition of the public school system. The Mississippi executive is frankly angered because he cannot get the blacks of his state to agree to segregation by consent. He wants the Negroes in his state to voluntarily agree they will waive their constitutional rights to satisfy the whim and caprice of white people.

It should, however, come as a shock to Governor White to discover the Uncle Tom blacks to whom he has been listening, have not given him an authentic picture of black judgment. Whenever you hear a white Southerner issuing statements to the effect that the "better element" of Negroes agree with the whites about second class citizenship, you can bet your bottom dollar this individual has been promoted and misled by some Uncle Tom. This is what has happened to Governor White.

We have said before, and we say now, Negroes in the United States want the same thing from government and organized society desired by white people. They want nothing more and nothing less, and when any black man makes representations shy of equality he is misrepresenting black folk.

So the die is cast. Governor White is going to violate his oath of office, in which he swore to uphold the constitution of the United States. He is going to ignore the recent decision of the Supreme Court, and in order to evade the order of that high judicial body, he will abandon the school system and throw white as well as black people into uttter intellectual darkness.

Now we approve the adoption of the program down in "Bilbo Land," for nothing will bring the natives of that section more quickly to their senses than the abandonment of the school system. Aside from throwing oncoming generations of white and black people into utter darkness, the governor is going to get rid of teacher tenure, pensions and general stability that has developed around the lives of some fifteen thousand white and black teachers. Already there has been a rumbling among the white teachers because of this fact and we suspect this one unit of the white population is going to break up the novel idea Governor White has of holding black people in intellectual darkness. Before the legislature concludes its activities we suspect the majority of white people down in Governor White's bailiwick are going to discover Haman is about to be hanged on his own gallows. This sort of a deal is going to hurt white people as badly as it does Negroes.

We predict now a revolt is going to break out among the magnolia trees of Dixie while the Mississippi legislature is in session in September that will be astonishing to Governor White. Historically speaking, it should be kept in mind that poor whites in Mississippi did not secure the benefit of tax-supported schools until after the civil war. The truth is it was the Negroes who dominated the reconstruction legislatures of Dixie who made possible the public schools now existing, and Governor White is cutting off his nose to spite his face when he adopts the outlandish program announced last week.

Present day whites do not realize before the adoption of the public school system as a tax-supported facility, poor whites were rated socially lower than black slaves down in Dixie. All of the building trades in ante-bellum times were in the hands of black chattels, because the plantation owner considered it cheaper to skill his bondmen than to be bothered with what he called at the time "poor white trash." It was only following Lincoln's freedom of the slaves that poor whites came out of the sand hills and the mountains to enter into competition with slave labor.

Nothing could awaken the South to the danger of a throw-back to reconstruction illiteracy of poor whites than the proposal of Governor White, and just as the governor has at long last discovered he can put no faith in the Negroes who have been telling him Mississippi Negroes would consent to continued segregation he will also discover before the September legislature closes he can put no faith in white people consenting to the abandonment of the public school system.

The Black Dispatch predicts that the good people of Mississippi are not going to consent to the abandonment of their public school system. Our notion is they will get rid of Governor White long before they get rid of their present educational patterns. Back in boyhood days one of the prenomena we did not quite understand was the disposition of a snake to continue to wiggle and contort long after its head had been solidly bashed. Governor White's wild lashing and cavorting down in Mississippi these days can be better understood if studied in the light of reptile demise. Segregation is dead, but we get a false impression when we see the body of hate still quivering in the voices of such zealots and votaries as are now echoing down in the far reaches of Mississippi.

MISSOURI

Named Head Of All Lower Divisions

Dr. Ruth M. Harris former president of Stowe Teachers College will assume duties this fall as director of education, elementary division, in the Office of the Superintendent of Instruction, according to action taken at the July meeting of the Board of Education. The new position will pay $9600 a year.

Twenty-five former staff members at Stowe were transferred to Harris Teachers College, and 6 others were given assignments elsewhere.

The Board voted in June to integrate Stowe, located at 2615 Pendleton avenue, and Harris, 5351 Enright avenue, as the first step in compliance with the United States Supreme Court's May 17 decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

At the July meeting the board reassigned all staff members at Stowe.

When school opens September 7, Dr. Harris will be in charge of 28 elementary schools and branch schools located in the Turner Branch District. There are five such districts in the city.

Stowe staff personnel who will go to Harris are as follows:

Harry S. Blackiston, Frederick W. Bond, Florence R. B. Brown, L. S. Curtis, Lincoln I. Diuguid Herman Dreer, Sylvester H. DuValle, George J. Elliott Jr., John B. Ervin, Carl F. Flipper Jr., Helen L. Flowers, Pelagie A Greene, Leonard D. Nelson, Vishnu V. Oak, Morton F. Offett Jr., Leah A. Guthrie Reef, Alice M. Smart, Wirt D. Walton, Nathaniel Watlington, Cyalda J. Williams, John H. Windom, Vincent E. Freeman and Helen H. Diamond

Freeman is a registrar and Miss Diamond a librarian.

Receiving other assignments were:

Dorothea M. Anderson, Sumner High School; Edward H. Williams, division of special service; Lloyd H. Hughes, Vashon High School; Josiah C. Cox, Sumner; Blanche J. Lee, Sumner, and Alberta E. Douglas, division of special services.

Dr. Harris, returning to St. Loius from a vacation Tuesday, urged all Stowites to enroll at Harris this fall. She pointed out however, that some students probaby will be apprehensive about readjustments.

"I'm confident that there will be enough of our own staff members there to make them feel at home," Dr. Harris said.

Dr. Harris, a graduate of Stowe, was appointed president of the college in 1940. Prior to that time she held several positions at the school. Earlier she served as first vice president dean of women and an instructor there.

Integration In Kennett A Success

KENNETT, Mo. (ANP) -- School officials here are hailing an integration attempt as a success story.

Negro students have been attending Kennett high school with white students for two months and Principal O. J. Armstrong said last week:

"We have not had one bit of trouble whatsoever."

Reaction to the integration includes:

1. The election of Charley Ivy, the only Negro in the senior class, as class treasurer.

2. Two Negro students were accepted into the high school's crack girls' chorus which will appear in a public concert next month.

3. Two Negro girls play on girls' basketball team.

4. Negro students participate in appearances of the school's pep squad, at football games.

Kennett school district, which has never had a Negro high school, has transported Negro high school students in the past to Hayti high schoo in adjoining Pemiscot county.

The school board voted before the 1954-55 term began last September to continue to run a school bus to Hayti and let the Negroes students choose their own place of education.

NAACP Head:

Charges Board Wants Segregation

Harvey Parham, state president of Branches, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the Argus this week he is of the opinion that members of the Robertson school board, the majority of whom are Negroes, are opposed to integration.

He said he has, however, asked the board members to reconsider their decision not to integrate.

Parham said he came to this conclusion following a meeting Tuesday night during which he, the members of the board, parents and the county superintendent George W. Vassbrink, discussed the question of integration.

The meeting was called at the request of Parham who had received complaints from Negro parents after their children were registered at a white school and then re-assigned to the more distant all-Negro school.

5 CHILDREN ENROLLED

A total of five Negro children were enrolled at the white Scudder elementary school on Sept. 7. The next day they were escorted from Scudder school to the Negro Fairmount school.

Parham said he learned that James McKinney, one of two Negro members of the three man school board, had instructed the white teacher at Scudder to take the colored children to Fairmount.

The NAACP representative said he asked why McKinney, who is the secretary of the school board, did all the talking for the board members.

Parham said he was told by A. Hansel James, the other Negro board member, that "Whatever McKinney does or says between board meetings, the board will back him up."

According to Parham, the President of the board, William Burns, said nothing at the meeting but agreed McKinney's word would be followed.

Parham said he told the board members that the integrating of Scudder school by admitting about ten Negro children would have nothing to do with the proposed redistricting which board members blamed for holding up their plans on integrating.

DEMANDS ADMITTANCE

McKinney was opposed to admitting the parents to the Tuesday night meeting, said Parham, "but I demanded that they be admitted since I had requested in my letter that the parents be included."

Vassbrink does not oppose integrating the Robertson schools, according to Parham. He said Vassbrink expressed the opinion that McKinney had made a bad move when he instructed the teacher to take the Negro children out of Scudder to Fairmount.

The Fairmount school is overcrowded. It is a five room building with five acres of land has an enrollment of 43 children.

Board members said they plan to expand Scudder school with an addition of eight rooms sometime next year if the district is not reorganized. They would consider integrating.

Parham declared he has asked the board to reconsider. He said he requested an answer in writing.

The NAACP executive also expressed concern over the fact that no minutes were taken during the one and a half hour discussion.

Successful Integration

Dear Editor: The integration of Negro schools in West Plains, Mo., and surrounding communities in the heart of the Ozarks has succeeded without any disturbance whatever.

Here in West Plains the nine Negro students attending the high school, with an enrollment of 700, have been cordially received and participate in all school activities. we feel our integration is one of the best in the country and Negroes and whites are cooperating to make it better.

Several of the Negro students were not able to get necessary books and other equipment. The schoolboard furnished all, even bought clothes and furnished money for medical care.

Larry Forbes is the quarterback on the football squad.

This is a very religious town and when you find white folks with Christ in them, integration will succeed. Houston Ellis, West Plains, Mo.

'Outstanding Leadership'

St. Louis Catholic, Public Schools Lauded For Integration Efforts

St. Louis, Mo. (ANP).—St. Louis public and Catholic schools last week were honored for their role in ending segregation.

Citations were presented to the head of the Catholic schools and the seven St. Louis public schools that pioneered in abolishing racial barriers.

The citations praised the groups for their "outstanding leadership" in intergroup prejudice.

At the ceremonies in Kiel auditorium, Dr. Herbert K Walther, chairman of the department of teacher education at the University of Denver, told the 200 civic and educational leaders that St. Louis is "taking the leadership in the United States in providing an answer to Communism."

He added, "You are helping America tell the world that conflict is not inevitable, that problems can be solved peaceably."

Not Nearly Far Enough

The Kansas City school board has made two moves toward integration for the approaching school year but has postponed until September, 1955, the full de-segregation of the school system.

The board did not go as far as many citizens, white and Negro, would like to have seen it go. It had been hoped, especially since the successful integration of the summer schools, that the Kansas City board would go "all the way" and wipe out segregation once and for all at the beginning of the 1954-55 term.

The merger of the Lincoln junior college with the Kansas City Junior college and the integration of the Coles and Manual Vocational schools are fine steps. But that is as far as our school board plans to go this year. Many inequalities which so long have plagued Negro parents will continue to exist for another year. High school students still will have to travel long distances from home to reach the one high school open to them. Many of them who will walk 15 blocks to Lincoln live only three or four blocks from Central. Others will pass Westport high school on their way to Lincoln. Parents should not have to put up with this situation for another whole year.

The president of the school board asked the question, "Since they have waited so many years for integration, what difference does one more year make?" We would like to ask the school head whether he has ever had a toothache. After suffering during one night, isn't he anxious to get the tooth yanked out the very next day so that he won't have to go through the same thing again? Segregation is our aching tooth. We want to get rid of it NOW.

It is not too late for the school board to take further steps toward de-segregation for this September. It could decide to integrate the high schools this year, the grade schools next year. It could decide to integrate the kindergarten children this year to give the children entering school for the first time an opportunity to start out in an integrated system.

We would like to see the board go further than it has gone.

In setting September, 1955, as the date for the end of segregation in the public schools, the Kansas City board has met the target date for de-segregation set by the NAACP at its recent Dallas meeting. But we feel that the NAACP date was aimed at communities further South. Places as "up-to-date" as Kansas City are expected to beat the target date by many months.

Reverse Order To Integrate Mo. Schools

CLARKSTON, Mo. — The local board of education did an about-face last week and reversed its decision to begin integrating Negro and white grade school children immediately.

The action came after some 250 parents of white children attended the board meeting and protested against the admission of 12 Negro children to the city's schools.

Following the meeting, the board announced the school district "is not ready for integration of Negroes and whites."

Kennett, Mo., Negro Students Reverse Vote

KENNETT, Mo.—(SNS)—Fourteen Negro high school students who Thursday by a vote of 11 to 3 voted to attend the all-Negro Hayti High School in Hayti, Mo., rather than being integrated into the Kennett High School here because the Hayti School is turned out for a one to two-month cotton vacation" while the Kennett school is not, reversed their vote Friday and said they will attend the "white" school here. This was approved by the Kennett school board. However, three of the Negro students still prefer the Hayti set up and will be permitted to attend.

Back To School

Within the next five days public schools in the St. Louis area will open for the 1954-55 school year. Once again thousands of children move back to the classroom after having spent a three-month vacation.

The return to school this fall, however, occasions something more than the usual consideration of buckling down to academic study.

All divisions of the St. Louis Public School system, will within the next six months, encounter a new experience. It will be a democratic experience, but one with which too many of our citizens are not familiar.

Next week, for the first time in the history of the city, white and Negro students will attend school together in the upper divisions of public schools. Harris and Stowe Teachers Colleges have been merged, and beginning Thurs., students of both schools will attend classes in the Harris building in the fifty-three hundred block of Enright Avenue.

Not only will the student body be integrated, but the staff will be composed of White and Negro instructors.

A like transition, from segregated to integrated, will take place in the high schools of this city beginning in February. The change is not likely to be so complete as in the Harris-Stowe situation, but in whatever degree it takes place it will be largely a new experience for St. Louisans.

We are proud of our city one of the first in the nation for having taken this step forthrightly, following the opinion of the Supreme Court. We have every right to believe that our faith in democracy will be the more justified with similar steps in other areas of American life.

De-Segregation Saves Missouri Town $1,360

TRENTON, Mo. — (ANP) — A pupil's 50-mile-a-day cab ride ended abruptly last week, with the Trenton school board announcement that it is abolishing segregation in the public schools.

The order accomplished two things: (1) it will save Buddy Trosper the daily jaunt to neighboring Chillicothe where he has been attending school for the past four years, and (2) it will save the board at least $1,225 in taxi-fares and another $135 in tuition.

Prior to the order, young Trosper, only Negro pupil in Grundy county, has been making the daily round trip to and from Chillicothe at the board's expense. Now, however, he can attend school in his home town, and the school board will be richer by $1,360.

ST. LOUIS ASKS TEACHERS' AID IN INTEGRATION

ST. LOUIS — (INS) — Superintendent Philip J. Hickey told the faculties of St. Louis public high schools Tuesday that the success of racial integration in the public schools—starting on a limited basis this week—will depend on the attitude of classroom teachers.

Under a year-long program to end segregation, integration is starting this fall in the city's teacher colleges and special schools for handicapped youngsters. Segregation will end in high schools at the start of the spring semester and in the grade schools next fall.

Hickey told the teachers:

"The people of this city, for most part, have accepted the fact that segregation is at an end with wise calmness and a sincere intent to accept it gracefully...

"If you assume an apprehensive, defeatist attiutde in your home, or among your closest friends, that attitude will reflect itself, perhaps unconsciously, in your teaching."

Riverview Gardens Opens High School

The Board of Education of Riverview Garden in St. Louis County announced plans Monday to admit Negro students to the high school this fall. The elementary schools will continue on a separate basis.

The plan was made known at a meeting of the Board, Negro parents and members of the Wellston branch NAACP.

Earlier, the Board sent letters to Negro parents stating there would be no integration this fall. However, when the Wellston branch NAACP, representing the parents, asked for a meeting Board members decided to reconsider their action.

Board Says New Plan Stops Move

Five Negro children who were enrolled at a white elementary school in Robertson, Mo., on the first day of the semester were denied admission to classes this week by order of a three-man interracial school board.

Members of the board, two of them who are Negroes, told Argus reporters they favor integration, but because a reorganization of school districts has been proposed which would take the responsibility of Robertson schools out of their hands they have not made any move to integrate.

Mrs. Fayette Jackson, of 599 Missouri Bottom Road, told how she took her two foster children to the white Scudder School on September 7 where they were enrolled without any questions by the teachers.

THREE MORE

She was accompanied by Mrs. Tanksley who also had her three children enrolled.

Both mothers said that on the following day when their children went to Scudder School they were escorted by one of the white teachers to the all-Negro Fairmount School.

Mrs. Jackson said she inquired why they had been taken to Fairmount she was informed by a teacher that James McKinney, a Negro member of the board, had given the instructions.

Mrs. Pearline Horton, another mother, said she got to Scudder School after Mrs. Jackosn had arrived but said she was sent to Fairmount.

Members of the board said this week they do not know if or when the next proposal for a reorganization of the school district will take place and any plans for integration of Robertson schools will be delayed because of this.

TO FLOAT BONDS

However, they did say if no proposal is made by the first of 1955 they will undertake the floating of a bond issue for the expansion of Scudder School in order that they might close Fairmount and integrate Scudder.

Fairmount School has five rooms and its enrollment up to last Moday was 170. Scudder, a two-room school, has en enrollment as of last Friday of 43 pupils.

It was pointed out by board members that Scudder, which has five acres of ground, is more oppropriate for expansion than Fairmount with only one acre. They said they would propose an addition of eight rooms to Scudder which would accommodate all children in the Scudder school district.

William Burns, recently elected white president of the board, said it would be the duty of the County Board of Education to propose consolidation of the school districts. This would affect the Hazelwood, Ferguson, Florrisant and Scudder districts.

CONSOLIDATION PROPOSED

He said the county superintendent, George W. Vassbrink, would send out notices of a proposal to consolidate and if approved in Jefferson City the residents of the districts would vote on the proposal. The reorganization would depend on the outcome of the election.

If the citizens voted for reorganization or consolidation a new board would be elected and the three-man board in Robertson would be abolished with the matter of integration then falling into the hands of the new board.

A. Hansel James, third board member, and McKinney told reporters that within the past eight years during their term as board members, they have modernized all the schools and spent about $68,000 for improvements.

Robertson is the only Common School District in the State with Negro and white members, they said.

NAMED PRINCIPAL

It was revealed that Elzy R. Smith, principal of Fairmount School, has been named principal of Scudder School also effective this semester.

Smith said he had opposed a suggestion by one board member that the teaching staff at Fairmount be integrated because he said he thought for best results integration should be carried out completely, teachers and pupils.

The pupils who were enrolled at Scudder School and then shifted to Fairmount were Eugenia Abernathy, 6; Clarence Burnett, 13, and foster children of Mrs. Jackson. The Tanksley children who accompanied them were Kathy, 8; Carolyn, 8, and June Marie, 7.

Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Tanskley said they took their children to Scudder because they knew of the Supreme Court's May 17 ruling and the steps being taken in school districts around them. They also said Scudder School is closer to their homes and the route does not have the heavy traffic which must be met in getting to Fairmount.

NAACP IN CASE

Harvey Parham, president of the Missouri State Conference of Branches, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has called upon the county snperintendent of schools to end segregation in public schools of that jurisdiction.

In a letter to George W. Vassbrink, at Clayton, Parham wrote "Pursuant to state law racially segregated public schools are now being maintained by you for chil- States Supreme Court on May 17, undoubtedly know, the United States Suprem eCourt on May 17, 1954, ruled that the maintenance of racially segregated public schools is a violation of the Constitution...

"We, theretore, call upon you to take immediate steps to reorganize the public schools under your jurisdiction in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court on May 7."

Parham said the schools to which he referred were Scudder and Fairmount in Robertson.

He requested a hearing before the board to discuss the problem and wrote "We further wish to point out our availability as parents and citizens of this community to be of whatever assistance we can to you in devising and implementing a program of desegregation..."

Two Negroes Elected Class Officers in New Integrated School

CARTHAGE, Mo. — (ANP) — Students in Carthage high school here dispelled any doubts their parents might have had about their willingness to attend school with Negroes.

The students elected Charles Scott, vice-president of the senior class, and Dub Cheney, reporter for the junior class.

The two are among 10 Negro students in the school.

Both Scott and Cheney are halfbacks on the Carthage high school football team.

Until this year Carthage Negroes have attended Lincoln high school at nearby Joplin.

Plan complete integration for schools in St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — (ANP) — With the elimination of segregation in St. Louis public high schools, new districts have been set up under the plan to integrate high school pupils Feb. 1, without regard to race superintendent of instruction Phillip J. Hickey announced last week.

With some exceptions, Mr. Hickey said, pupils will attend high schools within their new districts when the second semester of the school year opens in February. There are nine districts.

Both colored high schools, Vashon and Summer, will be much smaller in area, comparable in size with other school districts.

THE FINAL STEP of the board of education's integration plan, announced in June following the U.S. Supreme Court decision, will be integrating elementary schools next September. Boundaries for these schools are to be announced Feb. 1.

Mr. Hickey estimated that 3,417 eighth grade pupils will graduate in mid-semester. Normally about 20 to 25 percent of the graduates elect to attend a technical high school and those will not be integrated until September.

Under the redistricting plan, adult education services of the school system also will be put on a non-segregated basis next February. After that Mr. Hickey said, adult students may attend evening classes at any school of their choice.

Ford study reveals rapid integration is best policy

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Ford Foundation spot surveys from New Jersey to Arizona reveal rapid desegregation makes for the fewest complications to the community.

Its findings add that "in general, a clear cut policy, administered with understanding but also resolution, seems to have been the most effective in accomplishing desegregation with a minimum of difficulty."

It concludes: "A generation from now the people of the U.S. may be able with some pride to look back on this period as a time of successful transition; accomplished in —Characteristically American way."

ST. LOUIS HEARS REPORTS ON INTEGRATED SCHOOLS

BY R. C. FISHER

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — (ANP) — Interracial classes in four non segregated school systems were reported last week as being carried on successfully, without friction.

Administrative officials of the four St. Louis area educational programs, which ended segregation within recent years addressed the annual meeting of the Interracial Nursery Foundation of St. Louis at Temple Israel House.

The speakers represented Washington and St. Louis universities, East St. Louis public schools, and Catholic high schools in the St. Louis archdiocese.

The Rev. James T. Curtin, dioceson superintendent of high schools, told the foundation members, "we are on the threshold of a solution" to the problem of fully integrating Negro and white students. He cautioned that the process will be lengthy.

Arno J. Haack, dean of students at Washington university, said, "There has been no problem whatsoever in the classrooms.

"There has not been "full integration," he said, but "an absence of tension" has been achieved.

L. G. Osborn, superintendent of schools in East St. Louis, said there still is "voluntary segregation" in some Illinois schools, despite the 1951 anti-segregation law "which had teeth in it."

In East St. Louis, he said, there have been racial problems in the schools, but "nothing overwhelming." The recent East St. Louis bond issue was approved because Negroes and whites acted together, he said.

Mrs. Theo H. Shea, associate director of the St. Louis university Human Relations Center, said that although Negro and white students apparently accept each other well in classrooms, almost no Negroes are officers of campus organizations.

Miss Anita G. Lyons, a St. Louis public school teacher who entered St. Louis university as one of the first Negro students, said she submitted quesionnaires recently to several other Negroes who had similar experiences.

Missouri Acts To End School Bias

JEFFERSON CITY — The State Board of Education took steps here last week to expedite Missouri compliance with the U. S. Supreme Court decision banning segregation of Negro and white pupils in public schools.

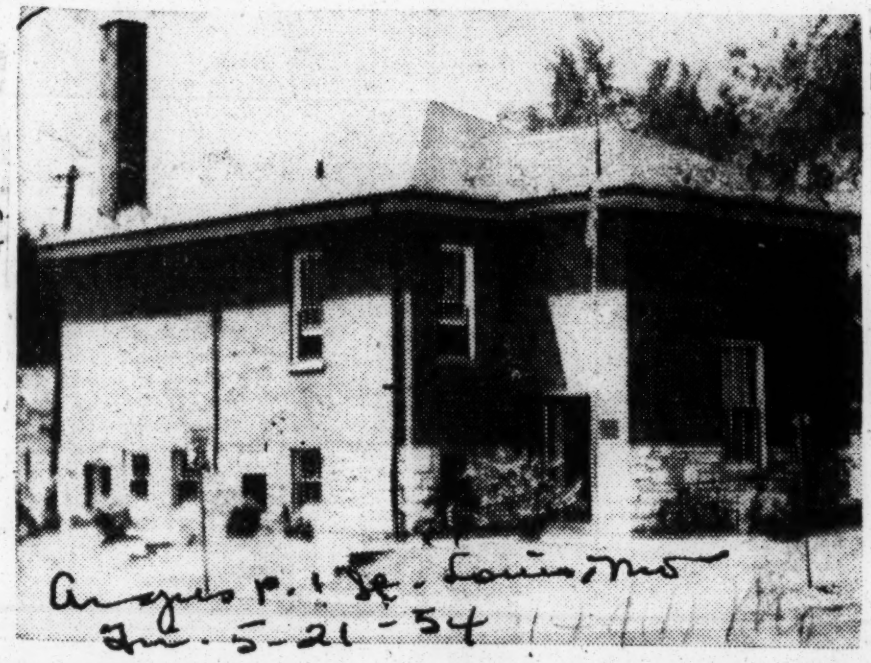
As soon as the court's final decree is entered, the board announced it will "implement this decision to the full extent of its authority and jurisdiction."

Attorney General John M. Dalton was requested to give the board an opinion advising it and the public school districts of the state what they "may lawfully do at this time to abolish segregation in Msssouri public schools."

Missouri has a total enrollment of about 710,000 public school pupils, of whom 63,174 are Negroes.

The Negroes attended 267 public schools in 216 of the 4,083 public school districts in the state.

The 216 public school districts with Negro pupils are in 69 of the 114 counties and the City of St. Louis.



THIS IS THE two-room Atttucks school which accomodates 39 Negro students in Clayton, Mo., John L. Bracken, superintendent of Public Schools in Clayton has announced it will be closed at the end of this school year. This is in keeping with the opinion expressed from Washington Wednesday that stipulates that "there is nothing in the court's opinion that prevents such steps to end segregation immediately."

KANSAS CITY — (INS) — For the first time in Kansas City, Negro and white students will attend mixed classes in public schools. Beginning Monday and enrollment summer school sessions was without regard to race.

The Board of Education voted at a special meeting to remove the summer school restrictions.

Ray O. Joslyn, president of the school board, said that the majority of the board felt the action must be taken in view of the recent Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools.

Joslyn added that the board's decision should not be interpreted as setting a precedent for the regular term next September. "That matter will be discussed at a later board meeting," he said.

But an apparent liberal trend was showing in many parts of the nation the past week. In Gainesville, Georgia two Negroes were nominated to school board posts. Both Dr. E. E. Butler and D. [illegible] Lowe were the first to feel the results of a move to open public utilities to "qualified individuals without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

Over in Nashville, Tenn., two white Fisk University professors, brought a test case by demanding that their children be sent to a nearby elementary school, which was used for Negroes. But this demand has been turned down thus far.

Meanwhile, in Cleveland, Tenn., Senator Estes KeFauver (D) Tenn., urged a discreet approach to school segregation problems Saturday, as he launched a re-election bid in a campaign that promises to see the racial issue raised.

KeFauver, opening his campaign with a speech at Cleveland, said he refuses to appeal to prejudice in connection with the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling against separate schools. He added:

"We have been making considerable progress on race relations in the South. The decision which reverses previous holdings undoubtedly creates many problems which will have to be worked out on the local level."

The Senator said the Supreme Court has recognized southern states' difficulty by postponing issuing decrees of enforcement. He continued:

"In its opinion, it indicated that it realized you cannot change a deep-rooted custom overnight; that time and sympathetic understanding will be required. I am hopeful, therefore, that under whatever decrees are issued, it will be possible to use discretion in enforcement, recognizing the varying problems and traditions of local communities."

KeFauver's leading opponent in the August primary, Rep. Pat Sutton, has been critical of the court ruling.

Speaking in the heart of Tennessee Valley Authority domain, KeFauver said:

"Today, TVA is in grave danger. We can do nothing other than reach the reluctant conclusion that strong forces in the present administration are listening to and following the advice of Purcell Smith of the private power lobby and its monopoly interest with the intent of destroying TVA by whatever means may be available."

He warned that "destruction within" might be threatened should President Eisenhower fill the now-vacant TVA chairmansnip with an appointee who does not "believe wholeheartedly without equivocation in the TVA program." done in Arizona, Southern Illinois, Indiana, New Jersey and Delaware. It can be done in North Carolina, in South Carolina, in Georgia, in Mississippi and indeed, wherever the American flag flies

There is pathetic futility in the

MIXED SCHOOLS

Board Holds Special Meet To Remove Legal Barriers

recently reported agreement of certain southern governors and attorneys general not to conform 'voluntarily' with the Court's decision. We are saddened, but by no means alarmed, by this display of immaturity and backwardness on the part of elected officials. Their intransigence does not mean that the schools will not be desegregated. At worst it is a delaying tactic designed to deceive the most benighted constituents whom the politicians have misled into believing that segregation was a permanent way of life. The Dixie politicians cannot turn the clock back to 1896.

Fortunately, they cannot succeed in their attempts to circumvent the Court's ruling. To yield to them would be to do irreparable harm to our national prestige abroad. We have received many communications from all over the world hailing the decision as a great re-affirmation of democratic principles. Peoples in Asia and Africa as well as in Europe and South America who, because of race prejudice in America, have questioned the sincerity of our democratic pronouncements have been encouraged to support our leadership of the forces of the free world because of this ruling.

We cannot afford to hesitate now. We cannot turn back. We can only move ahead. And we of the NAACP are convinced that the overwhelming majority of Americans, North and South, of all races, colors, faiths, classes and national origins are prepared to move ahead towards the development of a society in which no one is either penalized or favored because of his race or color.

Integration--Vacation, That's Their Problem

KENNETT, Mo. —(AP)— Some Negro children in southeastern Missouri public schools are facing a difficult choice between integration and cotton vacations.

It came as a strange outgrowth of the Supreme court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

Many schools of this cotton-growing section have for years declared a cotton vacation of about six weeks in the fall to permit the pupils to earn money by helping with the cotton picking.

The Kennett school board will meet with 18 Negro high school pupils and their parents to offer them admission in September to the previously all-White Kennett High School, which has no cotton vacation.

Lawrence L. Bradley, president of the board, said the Negroes will be given their choice of attending the Kennett school or continuing in the all-Negro high school at nearby Hayti, which does have cotton vacation.

Bradley said the Negroes must make their decision as a group.

Pupils Take Integration, No Vacation

KENNETT, Mo.—(AP)—Making a difficult choice, a dozen Negro children Friday chose integration and decided to pass up the cotton vacation that always means spending-money in the fall.

They applied Friday for admission to the previously all-White Kennett high school. Three others want to continue in the all-Negro high school at nearby Hayti, which each fall has a six-week vacation to permit pupils to earn money by helping harvest the cotton crop.

Public school officials met with the Negro children and their parents and gave them their choice, as a result of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

The 14 children attending voted 11 to 3 in favor of the Hayti school and cotton vacation. But most of them reconsidered Friday.

Announce Plans For Integration

Nine Coles Units To Manual Hi

To Close Lincoln JuCo, 7th Grades At Three Schools

Detailed plans with respect to the integration this fall of vocational units at the Manual High and Vocational school, the disposition of 7th, 8th and 9th grade pupils and the closing of the Lincoln Junior college were disclosed this week by Roscoe V. Shores, deputy superintendent of schools.

The plans implement a decision by the board of education July 29 to end segregation in vocational and junior colleges this fall and to effect complete integration in all public schools in September, 1955.

Seventh grade classes at the Banneker, Carver and Yates schools will be eliminated this fall and the pupils in those classes will be transferred to the J. C. Coles Junior high school.

All other seventh grade pupils will be give the option to attend the junior high school at Coles or to remain in the seventh grade classes of their respective schools.

All eighth grade students will attend the Coles Junior High school, as in the past, and ninth grade students will be assigned to both Lincoln and Coles schools. Eighth grade pupils who last spring elected to go to Coles school for their ninth grade work will be expected to attend the Coles school this year. All other ninth grade students will attend Lincoln high school.

A total of 10 vocational teachers and nine departments will be transferred from Coles to the Manuel High and Vocational school building at 1215 E. Truman road.

Shores said the shift in the vocational faculty members will result in 10 Negro and 10 white teachers on the faculty at Manual.

Expected enrollment at the Coles school this fall, Shores said, will include 412 ninth grade students, 755 eighth grade students and 400 seventh grade students, making a total of 1,567 students.

Teachers and vocational classes to be transferred from Coles to Manual are: J. K. Russell, auto mechanics; Mrs. Susie Cotton and Mrs. Ella Merritt, dressmaking; Mrs. Rosetta P Gardner, cosmetology; Howard D. Massey, painting and decorating; James E. Roberts, Jr., shoe repairing; Basil L. Cox, tailoring; John E. Smith, masonry; Leo H. Davis, band, and John P. Martinez, COE coordinator.

Classes in masonry and band will continue to meet at the Coles school building although they will be a part of the Manual program.

With respect to the masonry classes, Shores said, no adequate room could be found at the Manual building, whereas the room at Coles is highly desirable. Provisions will be made for those pupils taking masonry at Coles.

A similar situation prevails with respect to the vocational band classes to be conducted by Mr. Davis. There are no adequate facilities at Manuel for such classes, whereas the band room at Coles is especially designed with excellent acoustics and six individual practice rooms, Shores said. Vocational band students will do their academic half day at Manual and vocational work at Coles.

The classes at Coles in cabinet making, electricity and printing will remain at Coles and the shops will be used in the Industrial Arts program at the Coles Junior high school. Classes will also be held in these courses at Manual, Shores said.

The course in institutional cookery, formerly offered at Coles, will be discontinued. Shores said that only 18 pupils have enrolled for the fall semester and that the instructor, Miss Renetta Mae Martin, has expressed a desire to be relieved of this assignment which is in addition to her duties as lunchroom manager at the Coles school. Manual does not offer a course in institutional cookery.

The ROTC unit at Coles school will not be transferred to Manual. Shores said that Lt. Col. George L. Brittingham, P.M.S. and T., in Communication with Seventh Army headquarters, had learned that the army would not grant permission to transfer the unit. Col. Brittingham has recommended that the unit be retained at Coles for regular ninth grade pupils and for 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th grade pupils from Manual who may be able to work ROTC training into their programs. There is no ROTC unit at Manual.

Shores emphasized that both white and Negro students would be integrated into all the classes, even those that will meet at the Coles building for vocational work.

Preliminary enrollment figures at the Manual High and Vocational school include 511 students from Coles and 932 students at Manual, or a total of 1,443 students.

All vocational shops at the Coles school, left by the transfer of units to Manual will be utilized as additional classroom space, Shores said.

In addition to the vocational classes being transferred to Coles, Negro students may also enroll in classes at Manual which have not been offered at Coles. These include courses in welding, machine shops, commercial art and drafting.

Shores said that the Lincoln Junior college will be abolished and eight students who are enrolled in nursing at the Lincoln Junior college will be transferred to the Kansas City Junior college.

Estimated enrollment figures at the University of Kansas City, a Lincoln high school this fall are: nursing course will not be offered ninth grade, 350; 10th grade, 360; at the Kansas City Junior college. 11th grade, 240, and 12th grade, Shores said that students who 260, for a total of 1,210 students.

Shores said that Independence desire junior college training may and Liberty have indicated that still enroll at the Kansas City Junior college.

they will make provisions for their Mr. Shores made the announcement of the plans in the absence of Dr. Mark W. Bills, superintendent of schools, who is out of the city.

Negro high school students this year and that this will reduce the number of tuition students at Lincoln.

End St. Louis School Segregation In 1955

ST. LOUIS — This borderline city of the South which sprawls along the rippling Mississippi River and presently boasts the second largest segregated public school system in the country, will end school bias in 1955.

In unanimous action at a special meeting of the St. Louis Board of Education, the board said that racial segregation will end next Feb. 1 in high schools and in September, 1955, in elementary schools.

Striving to comply with the May 17 Supreme Court decision which outlawed public school bias the board adopted a three step plan without dissent.

The first step in the program will be put into effect in September when Harris and Stowe Teachers' colleges and special schools for handicapped will be merged.

In February 1955, the public high schools will be integrated, with the exception of technical schools which would be integrated by September, 1955, along with elementary schools.

The board said that it would be "possible" to end segregation here entirely by September, but declared that such a move would be "educationally undesirable for many children."

It defended its plan to space the three-step program through a full year, claiming that there would be fewer mistakes and misunderstandings.

NEW BOUNDARIES

A main problem facing the board is the revision of school district boundary lines. They will be drawn up and made public by next Nov. 15 and Feb. 1.

Under the board's plan students must attend school in the district in which they live, with two exceptions:

One will allow authorities to transfer students from one district to another to relieve overcrowding. The other will allow a student already enrolled at school to continue there through graduation, even if the new boundaries place him in another district.

According to the board, teachers and non-teaching employes will remain in their present assignments "whenever possible." They will be transferred only to meet the needs of the service. Future appointments of teachers, said the board, will be made from a single list compiled from examination scores without regard to race or color.

St. Louis has the second largest segregated school system in the country. It has 26,507 Negro grade school pupils, 5,313 High school and 355 college students. Thirty-six of the city's 121 grade schools are maintained for negroes.

Baltimore has the largest segregated school system and has announced plans to integrate its facilities this year. Washington, D. C., like St. Louis, will end segregation in a year's time.

Segregation in Catholic Schools in the St. Louis archdiocese was ended in 1947 on order of Archbishop Joseph E. Ritter.

Mixed Schools By '55

(By Courier Press Service)

Segregation will end in St. Louis high schools on Feb. 1, 1955.

The St. Louis Board of Education announced that the program for integration will be completed in September, 1955. St. Louis is the second large "border" city to wipe out segregated schools. Baltimore was the first.

The St. Louis program begins with the merger of the city's two teachers' colleges, Harris and Stowe, and its special schools for handicapped children.

The integration of the high schools, step two, will be completed early next year, and the grade schools program will be completed in the fall of 1955.

ST. LOUIS had been the second largest city in the nation with a segregated school system.

Meanwhile, the Deep South, still in a state of panic over the high court's ruling on segregated schools, indicated that it was ready to take a definite stand on the issue in Virginia and Florida.

In Virginia, Gov. Thomas B. Stanley pledged, "I shall use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools in Virginia."

In Florida, county school superintendents were warned by Attorney General Richard Ervin not to admit any Negro pupils to white schools and to resist "pressure" by the NAACP "or any other group."

However, Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel revealed in New Orleans that twenty-three members of his legal staff will hold planning sessions to oppose any diversionary attempts to sidestep the High Court's edict.

THE NAACP also turned down an invitation in Atlanta to appear at the Georgia Education Commission hearing of last Friday on the grounds that the meeting was to be segregated.

The Soviet Union also had something to say about the school situation. The newspaper Izvestia declared last Wednesday that the High Court ruling was an effort to "lull" American public opinion while segregation continues.

Izvestia said that even if the decision were implemented "powerful American racists will find thousands of loopholes and thousands of ways, starting with legislative acts and finishing with direct terror, to preserve the inviolability of segregation . . . The Supreme Court decision was purely of a camouflaging character and has been undertaken with propagandist aims alone."

The Mississippi Legislature is slated to go into special session before Christmas to consider ways to preserve segregation.

St. Louis to mix schools by Feb. 1

ST. LOUIS (ANP)—St. Louis will end segregation in high schools next Feb. 1, the board of education announced last week.

The process of integrating colored and white students will start this fall with integration of Harris and Stowe Teachers' College and special schools for handicapped children, the board said.

The overall integration program is expected to be completed by the fall of 1955. The decision to mix the schools is in line with the U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

Court Rules Against Own Decision

ST. LOIUS —(ANP)— Another lower court reversed itself last week in the wake of the U. S. Supreme court ruling outlawing segregation in the nation's public schools.

The U. S. District court reversed a ruling rendered in 1952 which said that Negro students in Kirkwood R7 district were not deprived of educational opportunities equal to those of white students by virtue of segregation.

In a brief reversing itself, the District court cited the recent high court ruling which said that segregation was a denial of rights guaranteed by the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution.

"That question is now most as to whether separate schools constitue equal facilities," the appellate court ruled of the Supreme court's opinion.

New School Districts For Integration Listed

The St Louis Board of Education has announced nine new high school districts beginning February 1, and high school students must attend the school in their district.

Greatest changes were made in the Vashon and Sumner districts which were considerably reduced in size. Boundaries of the new districts are as follows:

ST. LOUIS BOARD RETURNS NEGRO STUDENTS TO NEGRO SCHOOL

ST. LOUIS —Parents of 17 Negro pupils who have been attending Maryland Heights School are keeping them at home for approximately 14 days in protest against the School Board's decision to return them to Carver School for Negroes because of overcrowding.

Superintendent G. E. Dille said the two teachers at Carver have classes of 13 and 17 pupils involved in the protest were among 50 at Carver last year who were transferred to the previously all white school with the board's permission as a consequence of the Supreme Court decision ending segregation.

Dille noted that Negroes are attending Maryland Heights High School and said "they are being accepted and will treated by the white students." A new building is being erected to relieve overcrowding at the grade school and the board plans to integrate the Negro pupils as soon as posible Dille said.

School Bias In St. Louis Ends in '55

ST. LOUIS, June 23 (AP).—The St. Louis Board of Education has adopted a plan to complete the integration of white and Negro public schools by September, 1955.

The program was approved without dissent at a special meeting of the board last night. The board said the plan was drafted "in agreement with the spirit" of the recent Supreme Court decision and without "direction from our state authorities."

Merger of Harris and Stowe Teachers and Junior colleges would be the first step in the program, along with integration of schools for the handicapped. The merged teachers college would be housed on the Harris campus in September.

In February, 1955, the public high schools would be integrated with the exception of technical schools. New boundary lines for the high schools would be announced Nov. 15, 1954.

All regular elementary schools would be integrated by September, 1955, with new boundary lines announced by Feb. 1, 1955. Technical schools would be integrated by this time also.

The board said wherever possible teaching and non-teaching employees would retain their present assignments and would be transferred only to meet the needs of the school system. Future appointment of teachers would be made from a single list compiled from examination scores without regard to race or color.

Plan Florida Suits

TAMPA, Fla., June 23 (AP).—Florida members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People plan to bring lawsuits if necessary to gain admission to every tax-supported junior college and university in the state.

The Florida conference of the N. A. A. C. P. also said Florida school officials, both on the county and state levels, should proceed at once to carry out the "orderly implementation" of the Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregation in the public schools.

William A. Fordham, Tampa attorney, is president of the conference which adopted a policy containing these stands yesterday.

St. Louis Court Falls In Line With High Court

ST. LOUIS -- (ANP)Another lower court reversed itself last week in the wake of the U. S. Supreme court ruling outlawing segregation in the nations public schools.

The U. S. District court reversed a ruling rendered in 1952 which said that Negro students in Kirkwood R-7 district were not deprived of educational opportunities equal to those of white students by virtue of segregation.

In a brief reversing itself, the District court cited the recent high court ruling which said that segregation was a denial of rights guaranteed by the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution.

St. Louis Educator Wants Civic Groups To 'Sell' Integration

ST. LOUIS (ANP) — A Negro principal of a local high school last week said integration must be sold to St. Louis.

He is Clifford Basfield, head of Attucks school who says to do this it would be necessary to enlist support of civic [illegible] behind a well planned progr[illegible]

Basfield made his statement in an address before a meeting of the St. Louis Association of Elementary Educators here.

Negroes To Lose Cotton Vacations In White Schools

KENNETT, Mo., July 22 (AP) — Some Negro children in southeastern Missouri public schools are facing a difficult choice between integration and cotton vacations.

It came as a strange outgrowth of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

Many schools of this cotton-growing section have for years declared a cotton vacation of about six weeks in the fall to permit the pupils to earn money.

The Kennett school board meets tonight with 18 Negro high school pupils and their parents to offer them admission in September to the previously all-white Kennett high school, which has no cotton vacation.

Lawrence E. Brazier, president of the board, said the Negroes will be given their choice of attending the Kennett school or continuing in the all-Negro high school at nearby Hayti, which does have cotton vacation.

Segergation Outvoted

In Kennett, Mo. 12 Negro children voted to by-pass cotton picking time where they could earn extra vacation money and instead applied for admission to the all-white Kennett High school. Three other children decided to continue on at the Negro school at Hayti, Mo. which gives a six weeks fall vacation to permit pupils to earn extra money picking cotton.

The Presbyterian church with 740,000 members in the South last week voted against segregation.

A federal district court ordered Southwestern university at Lafayette, La. to admit Negroes and in Memphis, Tenn. the newly chartered American university invited both white and Negro students to enroll. The school will open a law division in downtown Memphis.

Pupils Vote To Attend White School In Southland

KENNETT, Mo. — (ANP) — Some 12 pupils applied last week for admittance to once all-white Kennett high school here.

In doing so, they passed up an opportunity to earn money in the fall from picking cotton.

School officials met with the Negro children and their parents and gave them their choice of schools. The 14 children first voted 11-3 in favor of continuing at Hayti high school for Negroes. But most of them reconsidered and decided to cast their lot with integration.

The three who continued at Hayti will be given six weeks vacation this fall to permit them to pick cotton. The 11 who go to Kenneth high school, however, will attend school continuously throughout the year.

Small Missouri Towns Take Integration Lead

By JOSEPH OPPENHEIMER

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. —(INS) —Smaller cities are leading the way as Missouri starts integrating more than 60,000 Negro students into its public schools

Although integration is not mandatory, at least ten communities have acted to end segregation in all or some of their classrooms for the fall semester starting shortly.

St. Louis and Kansas City—where about two-thirds of the Negro students are located—have established time-tables providing complete integration by next year.

This fall St. Louis will merge its teacher colleges and integrate special classes for handicapped youngsters. Kansas City will admit Negroes to its junior college and to the Manual Vocational high school.

Hubert Wheeler, state commissioner of education, told International News Service that his department has no idea of the action planned by the different school districts and cities in the state. However, he said a survey of the situation is going into the mails late this month.

State officials have made it clear they will strictly enforce the Supreme Court segregation ruling which affects 267 schools in 69 of Missouri's 114 counties.

Gov. Phil M. Donnelly flatly states "the citizens of Missouri are law abiding and I am confident they will always endeavor to uphold the Constitution."

Attorney General John Dalton has ruled that Missouri Constitution provisions requiring separate schools for white and Negro students "are superseded...and unenforceable." He said integration is legal, but not mandatory until a final decree is entered by the U. S. Supreme Court.

There has been no expressed concern over the experience at rural Clarkton in Southeast Missouri where integration was tried last month but lasted only a week.

The board of education reversed itself and reverted to segregation following a parent protest meeting and petition when 12 Negro children were admitted to classes. The parents, described as mostly cotton farmers who had migrated from the South, were told by school officials they must accept the Supreme Court ruling "sooner or later."

A variety of integration plans will be in effect this fall. Some cities are ending segregation only in junior and senior high schools, others are giving students a choice of attending either integrated or separate schools.

Areas which have completely eliminated segregation include New Haven, Fredericktown, District R-III in Lincoln and Piue counties, Kirksville and Springfield.

High school level integration is planned in Fulton, Macon, Jefferson City, Mexico and Carthage.

High school students will have a choice in Kennett and Brentwood.

Segregation also has been abandoned completely at Missouri university, Joplin Junior college, Southwest Missouri State college, Kansas City Junior college and Central Missouri State college.

The St. Louis timetable provides for integration of high schools at the start of the spring term early next year and for grade schools next September. The St. Louis area had 32,870 Negro students last year.

Kansas City will also effect complete integration next year following the junior college start this fall. There were 10,481 Negro students in the city and Jackson County in the last school year.

Clarkton School Experiment In Non-Segregation Dropped

By DONALD RIDINGS
Special to The Commercial Appeal

CLARKTON, Mo., Aug. 4.—Integration of white and Negro students has failed in the Clarkton High School after one week of having the two races attending together. The Clarkton School Board announced Wednesday their efforts at racial non-segregation ended Monday.

Last week 12 Negro students entered school at Clarkton. Eleven of these enrolled in grade school while a single girl entered High School. The board has decided to send the 11 elementary students to Malden, as they have done in the past, but is undecided as to what should be done in the case of the girl.

Considerable sentiment which has been built up against intergration resulted in a mass meeting at the Clarkton Gym Monday night which was attended by 250 people. Charles B. James, president of the Clarkton School Board, presided.

New Chief Speaks

Some attending expressed the desire for separate but equal education for the Negroes.

Clarkton's new school superintendent, R. H. Henson, said "We in the South have been more reluctant (about non-segregation) because we have more of a problem (than in other areas of our nation).

Following the two-hour meeting, Clarkton School Board officials were presented with a petition, signed by a number of patrons, asking that the district return to segregated schools.

Mr. Henson branded recent rumors false about incidents which were supposed to have taken place between white and Negro children.

This statement was issued by Clarkton school officials before the action was taken Monday.

"The members of the Clarkton School Board and the superintendent would like to make their position clear in regard to the matter of non-segregation in our school.

'Nothing We Can Do'

"First, we wish to state that we do not like this arrangement any more than many of you do. The Supreme Court of the United States made the decision to abolish segregation in our schools, and it appears there is nothing we can do about it.

"We are supposed to be law-abiding citizens, and should honor the decisions of the highest court in our land whether we like it or not. We wrote to our state attorney, John M. Dalton, for his advice on the matter, and were told that we could not legally deny the Negro pupils admission to our schools, should they choose

"After discussing the matter at length, the members of the board reluctantly decided to accept the Negro pupils until some better arrangement could be made, or to see what action the rest of the school districts of the county would take. We note that many of the other districts have agreed to accept the Negro students.

Can't Defy Order

"For many years we have been transporting our Negro students to a Negro school near Malden. It cost the district something near $2,000 each year to care for these students. We are not quitting this arrangement of our own choice, but because the Supreme Court has ordered an end to all segregation in our public schools.

"We do not feel that we can afford to defy an order of our highest tribunal. We might jeopardize the matter of our state aid, without which our school could not operate.

"We, the members of the school board, are urging you to go along with us in this matter until some satisfactory solution can be found. We realize that we are probably a little too far south to readily agree to the present arrangement yet awhile.

"We gladly invite your cooperation and suggestions in regard to this problem. We, the members of this board, are your selected representatives, and we want to do what is best for the majority of our school patrons.

"Remember, the Supreme Court made this decision, not us."

Brentwood Ends Segregation In Public Schools

Racial segregation in grades nine through twelve at Brentwood High School was ended last Tuesday night by a plan adopted by the Board of Education after study by a committee of school adminnstrators. Under the plan which will go into effect this fall, all Negro students in the Brentwood district who have completed the eighth grade will have the option of attending either Brentwood High School or Douglass High School in Webster Groves.

Decision to make the attendance at BHS optional rather than mandatory was made after a conference in Jefferson City during which it was revealed that the State Department of Education and the Office of the Attorney-General would "go along" with any decisions made by local boards of education. Legal experts at the Jefferson City conference stated that the effect of the recent Supreme Court decision is to allow local districts to take any steps toward racial integration which they feel are reasonable and wise.

Under the state law prohibiting integration of white and Negro, the Brentwood district has in the past paid tuition and transportation for its Negro high school students to colored high schools in St. Louis and Webster Groves. However, in recent years St. Louis schools have refused to take any Negro students from outside their district because of crowded conditions.

STATE RULED

State authorities have ruled that the Supreme Court decision does not yet make integration mandatory where it is prohibited by state law, but that it is forthcoming within a few years. Accordingly, the Brentwood Board of Education made its decision on the theory that entering ninth grade Negro students might wish to make the change now rather than to risk loss of credits and a harder adjustment next year if other districts now maintaining Negro high schools should abolish segregation.

Since some Brentwood Negro students are now in their senior year at Douglass High School the optional nature of the policy would allow them to complete their courses of study there with their classmates of the past three years if they wish. Those in grades nine, ten and eleven during the coming year may choose Brentwood High School this fall rather than postpone the necessary adjustment if the Webster Groves district should abandon segregation next year.

FOR ONE YEAR

The Board adopted the plan for only the 1954-55 school year, with further decisions to await the outcome of proposed hearings before the Supreme Court and the reaction of other nearby districts which now maintain Negro high schools to which local students might be sent. L'Ouverture Elementary School, the lone Negro school in Brentwood, will continue for at the least the next school year to maintain its present eight grades for Negro pupils only.

L'Ouverture Principal, James P. Smith, Jr., has revealed that most local Negro pupils below the senior level will elect to attend Brentwood High this fall. Seniors will likely decide to continue at Douglass High for their final year.

Present figures indicate that about 12 Negro pupils will be involved in the integration move at Brentwood High this fall. Of these, six will be entering freshmen.

Final state of the board of education's integration plan, announced in June following the U. S. Supreme court decision, will be integrating elementary schools next September. Boundaries for these schools are to be announced Feb. 1.

Hickey said that beginning then, students entering high school for the first time will attend the school in the district where they live. Students now in high school, he said, have an option.

Tey may choose to remain in their present high schools, regardless of district until graduation, or they may transfer to the school of their new district. This policy will hold unless serious overcrowding exists, it was explained.

St. Louis Plans Full School Integration

BY R. C. FISHER

ST. LOUIS —(ANP)— With the elimination of segregation in St. Louis public high schools, new districts have been set up under the plan to integrate high school students Feb. 1, witout regard to race, Supt. of Instruction Phillip J. Hickey announced last week.

With some exceptions, Hickey said, students will attend high schools within their new districts when the second semester of the school year opens in February There are nine districts.

Both Negro high schools, Vashon and Sumner, will be much smaller in area, comparable in size with other school districts.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL

Georgia's Attorney General Fires Blast At Supreme Court On Segregation Issue

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va., Dec. 8 (AP)—A national conference of state legal officers opened today with a blast from Georgia's attorney general at the Supreme Court's ban on race segregation in public schools.

Atty.-Gen. Eugene Cook, who also heads the National Association of Attorneys General, described the high court decision as "judicial usurpation of legislative power and abridgement of state sovereignty in utter disregard of precedent and stable constitutional government."

Cook didn't read aloud, however, a portion of his prepared address in which he declared "the fires of racial tension" have been rekindled by the decision and called on Congress to curb the Supreme Court's powers.

Similarly he skipped—though he put the whole speech into the conference record — a forecast that "totalitariansim" will result if the court continues on its present course.

"If the Supreme Court has the authority to invade the fields of conservation, taxation and education," Cox's prepared speech said, "then it has the authority to set up a police state which will regulate every phase of our lives and every facet of our existence."

The Georgia official told newsmen lack of time kept him from delivering the whole address to attorneys general from most of the states and territories.

He and others at the conference showed a disposition, however, to gloss over the segregation issue at the beginning, at least, of the three-day meeting. But there are other opportunities for it to arise. One will come Friday when the conference gets around to passing resolutions. Atty.-Gen. Harold R Fatzer of Kansas has been appointed chairman of the resolutions committee.

The current meeting originally was set for Biloxi, Miss. The site was shifted to Arizona when Cook and other Southerners vetoed a conference speech by U.S. Atty.-Gen. Brownell, whose stand against segregation they don't like. It was changed again to the Greenbrier Hotel here when it became known Brownell wouldn't attend a meeting at the Arizona resort, which has a "restricted clientele" policy.

Cook told a reporter today he expects to attend the closing dinner Friday night, when Brownell is to be the main speaker. He said he never objected to Brownell's being invited to the conference but only to his addressing it.

A committee of the association called today for cautious consideration of the 50 million dollar highway program proposed by President Eisenhower.

The group, headed by Florida Atty.-Gen. Richard W. Ervin, said in its report:

"Such an expenditure of federal funds for highway purposes, amounting to more than has been spent by all levels of government in the past decade, will undoubtedly result in various problems of federal-state relations and must be carefully considered by all concerned."

Recently a presidential advisory group recommended that the federal program be cut to about 25 billion dollars over 10 years.

Attys.-Gen'l Change Site Of Meeting

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Anti-Semitism has caused a second switch in site for the Dec. 8-10 convention of the National Association of Attorneys General.

The meeting, scheduled originally for Biloxi, Miss., was switched to Phoenix, Ariz. when Mississippi Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman, and Eugene Cook of Georgia, association president, made it clear that U. S. Atty-Gen. Herbert Brownell would not be welcome because he "intervened in segregation."

The site now has been changed to White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., to avoid what a spokesman for the association termed, "restrictions."

"Restrictions" is a long standing policy of the Camelback Inn in Phoenix, where the meetings of the convention were to be held, of accepting only "carefully selected" members of the Jewish religion during conventions and the regular guest season.

Cook, in Atlanta, said the second move was taken after a phone conference among the 10 members of the executive committee brought an 8-to-2 vote for the move.

Attys. Gen. Nathaniel Goldstein of New York, George Feingold of Massachusetts and Edmund G. Brown of California said they would not stay at the Camelback Inn in view of its policy.

Jack Stewart, manager of the Inn said:

"We are happy to abide by the decision of the attorneys general to cancel their meeting at Camelback Inn. The attorneys general as late as Monday night would have been willing to come to Camelback Inn had I submitted to extreme pressure from the Anti-Defamation League (a largely Jewish civil rights organization) to change our policy of guest selection."

The policy of "selection," he said has been followed since 1936.

Meeting in White Sulphur Springs, however, will not remove the convention away from discrimination sorespots. White Sulphur Springs received notoriety early in September when the school board there reversed its decision to integrate local schools in line with the Supreme court decision, when angry white parents and students demonstrated against the entrance of Negroes into a formerly all-white high school.

Attorneys General Hear Georgian Blast Integration Ruling

By the Associated Press

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Dec. 9.—Georgia's attorney general, Eugene Cook, charged yesterday the Supreme Court has invaded the rights of States and rekindled "the fires of racial tension" by its ban on school segregation.

Mr. Cook, president of the National Association of Attorneys General, made the statement in his prepared address opening the association's 48th annual convention.

Calling for legislation by Congress to curb the powers of the Supreme Court, which has ruled public school segregation unconstitutional, Mr. Cook said the court's present course will lead the Nation into totalitarianism.

Sees Possible Perils.

"If the Supreme Court has the authority to invade the fields of conservation, taxation and education . . . then it has the authority to set up a police state which will regulate every phase of our lives and every facet of our existence," Mr. Cook said.

Mr. Cook gave newsmen copies of his address and put it all into conference's public record. He did not actually read, however, the bulk of his blast at the Supreme Court. He said time prevented his reading the 3,500-word address in full.

In the portion he delivered, Mr. Cook said the court is moving in a direction which threatens to imperil "the delicate balance of Federal-State relations," and he called the segregation decision an "example of judicial usurpation of legislative power and abridgement of State sovereignty in utter disregard of precedent and stable constitutional government."

The segregation question was a big one at this three-day conference, although it didn't play any substantial part in the association's agenda.

Brownell to Speak.

Originally the group was to meet at Biloxi, Miss., but Mr. Cook's objection to Attorney General Brownell as speaker blocked that plan. Then the meeting was shifted to an Arizona resort, but the plan was changed again when word got around Mr. Brownell would not attend on the ground of the resort's "restricted clientele" policy.

Finally the State attorneys general came together at this resort and Mr. Brownell—whose stand in favor of school integration has antagonized many Southern officials—agreed to address the windup dinner tomorrow night.

Mr. Cook told a reporter yesterday he will attend the dinner He said he never had objected to Mr. Brownell's being invited to attend the conference, but said he personally would not have been a party to asking the Attorney General to speak. The choice of speakers is left to the conference host, in this case Attorney General John G. Fox of West Virginia.

RIGHTS OF STATES UPHELD AT PARLEY

Attorneys General Score U.S. Encroachment in Fields of Writs and Subversion

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Dec. 9—States' rights in the fields of subversive activities control and habeas corpus proceedings were asserted here today at the conference of the National Association of Attorneys General.

In the area of subversive activities the Attorneys General asked partnership with the Federal Government. They heard strong protests against expanded use of habeas corpus by the Federal judiciary to review final judgments of the state courts.

The association is comprised of the Attorneys General of all the states and territories. It convened here yesterday for its forty-eighth annual meeting.

Louis C. Wyman, Attorney General of New Hampshire, told the gathering that the states had a place in the fight against communism and subversion alongside the Federal Government. He said that the idea that a state cannot investigate and prosecute Communists and subversives because that was exclusively the function of the Federal Government was not supported by the Constitution.

A test of this concept is pending in the Federal Supreme Court. The conviction of Steve Nelson, a Pennsylvania labor leader, under that state's anti-subversion laws was set aside by its own Supreme Court on the grounds that the Smith Act, a Federal statute, superseded the state law. Pennsylvania has asked the Federal Supreme Court to reverse that decision.

The Smith Act is the statute under which the Federal Government has convicted a large number of leaders of the Communist party. It makes it a Federal offense to teach or advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

Mr. Wyman asserted the right of state governments to operate in the field of subversive control.

He said that a state investigation, properly conducted, would supplement the work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other Federal agencies engaged in the enforcement of security statutes.

New Hampshire has such a law. Mr. Wyman said, and its witnesses and persons served and they were not publicly branded for past errors or indiscretions.

At a time when a conflict with world communism might be "around the corner," Mr. Wyman said, the information that could be obtained from such witnesses was of inestimable value in keeping watch on potential saboteurs.

Mr. Wyman described the procedures used in New Hampshire's experience have held in five cases courts have not conflict with that it does not vestigation from be tized. He said that even persons being would cooperate if th constitutional right a major source of trouble in anti-subversive investigations. New Hampshire avoided this, he said, by closed hearings and no public announcement of proceedings until cases were taken to court.

A committee headed by George Fingold, Attorney General of Massachusetts, presented a report recommending that the association, in its fight against subversion, set up a standing committee to interchange information and ideas with the legislative and Executive branches of the Federal Government.

Mr. Fingold said that Federal and state cooperation were more essential than ever because of state laws that had outlawed the Communist party and had driven its leaders and membership "underground."

Harold L. Sebring, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Florida, told the conference that Federal encroachment on state powers by use of habeas corpus had gravely undermined public confidence in the courts.

Justice Sebring spoke in support of legislation that was expected to be presented to the next session of Congress. The Conference of Chief Justices of the States and the Judicial Conference of the United States, embracing the Federal judiciary, has approved the proposal.

Under the suggested change in the law, Federal judges would not be permitted to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus in state cases except where a substantial Federal question was presented. This would only apply if that question had not been raised and decided in state court proceedings or could not be raised in post-conviction proceedings in the state courts.

The effect of this would be to deprive the lower Federal courts, in most circumstances, of power to review final judgments of the state courts by use of habeas corpus.

H. Albert Young, Attorney General of Delaware, asserted that the Federal courts had expanded the scope of habeas corpus to the extent that serious infringement of state powers had resulted. He cautioned, however, that states should put their judicial procedure in order so that Federal courts could not raise the question of whether constitutional rights had been denied defendants in state trials.

Brownell ducks school issue in West Virginia

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. — Public school segregation drew but little attention from U. S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell here Friday night.

It was fear of Mr. Brownell's remarks on this subject which caused the meeting place of the State Attorneys General Association to be shifted twice.

In only one instance did Mr. Brownell come close to touching on the subject. That was when he said:

"In the fields which involve fundamental rights and human obligations in a civilized society, it is the Federal government's cardinal duty to assure the equal protection of laws to all its citizens."

The comment drew a deep frown from Eugene Cook of Georgia, the association's president, who had originally refused to invite Mr. Brownell to address the group.

The refusal resulted in cancellation of the convention from its original site at Biloxi, Miss. Moved to Phoenix, Ariz., it had to be shifted again when the host hotel disclosed it had a restrictive policy against Jews.

Georgia's Atty. Gen. Lashes Out At Segregation Ban At Conference

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. — (ANP) — Georgia's Attorney General Eugene Cook, who heads the National Association of Attorneys General, opened the group's annual conference by lashing out at the Supreme court for what he termed "judicial usurpation of legislative power."

The meeting of the attorneys-general from the 48 states was postponed twice. It was originally to be held in Mississippi, but Gov. Hugh White made it plain U. S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell would not be welcomed there.

It was moved again from a hotel in Arizona which discriminated against Jews.

Cook said the high court decision was an abridgement of state sovereignty in utter disregard of precedent and stable constitutional government."

He failed to read aloud, however, a portion of his prepared address in which he declared "the fires of racial tension" have been rekindled by the decision and called on congress to curb the Supreme court's powers.

Similarly he skipped, despite the fact he put the whole speech into the conference record, a forecast that "totalitarianism" will result if the court continues its present course.

"If the Supreme court has the authority to invade the fields of conservation, taxation and education," the prepared speech said, "then it has the authority to set up a police state which will regulate every phase of our lives and ever fact of our existence."

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

NATIONAL EDUCATION BODY TO WAGE FIGHT FOR FEDERAL AID TO SCHOOLS

Will Request One Billion Dollars To Boost Program

BY RAYMOND WILCOVE

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The National Education Association said Saturday it will make an all-out effort next year for a multi-million dollar Federal Aid Program to construct badly-needed schools.

Congressional supporters are expected to ask the House and Senate to authorize from 500 million to one billion dollars annually for such a program over a period of years.

The U. S. Office of Education estimates that at the beginning of the present school year in September there was a shortage of 370,000 elementary and secondary classrooms. The estimated cost of construction would be 11 billion dollars.

Dr. William G. Carr, executive secretary of the NEA, said his organization believes Congress "should act and act promptly on legislation to provide substantial federal assistance to states for the construction of public elementary and secondary schools."

A big question mark is the attitude of Rep. Graham Barden (D) N. C., who will become chairman of the House group. Rep. Barden has not yet indicated whether he will support a general construction aid bill.

Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D) Pa., another key member of the House committee, believes the chances are good for committee approval of a construction bill.

In the past, Congress has appropriated funds for the construction of schools in what are known as "impacted areas.' These are districts where the school population has become swollen because of atomic, military and other nearby federal installations.

In 1953, Congress authorized a 174 million dollar program in these areas.

The purpose of the new legislation is to provide funds for the construction of school buildings in other areas with regard only to their needs.

Carl J. Megel, president of the American Federation of Teachers, predicted Thursday that the matter will be fought out in the next Congress. He said the dire needs of public schools have become "a national scandal."

TIME, TACT BUILT JERSEY'S BIAS BAN

Segregation Ended in State With Little Trouble Despite Southern Area's Customs

By GEORGE CABLE WRIGHT

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, May 22—New Jersey residents this week took a keen interest in the Supreme Court decision that outlawed racial segregation in public schools.

It is just two years since segregation was eliminated in this state, the southernmost part of which lies below Mason and Dixon's line. Many familiar southern customs, including segregation, had long been widely practiced in this area.

New Jersey successfully integrated thousands of school children and their teachers with a minimum of resistance. It took five years, despite some hostility and threats of resistance.

So successful was the experiment that it led to voluntary integration of white and Negro parent-teacher groups.

First Law in 1881

In 1881 the State Legislature enacted a law forbidding the exclusion of a child from any public school because of nationality, religion or color. But this law was respected only in north Jersey.

There were two major test cases under this law. They involved Trenton and Asbury Park and led Trenton to end segregation in 1944 and Asbury Park in 1945.

Little trouble was encountered in the State Capital. There segregation had been confined to the assigning of all Negro children to one junior high school, which had an elementary school attached to it.

In most New Jersey communities segregation was not practiced above the junior high level. Trenton merely reassigned all children in the city, white and Negro, to the schools nearest their homes.

Teachers provided the primary problem here, in Asbury Park and later in other communities forced to integrate. This was due to the State Teacher Tenure Law, which had been supplemented with a seniority clause. The act prevented the removal of any colored teachers or principals and in many instances resulted in their superseding white teachers and principals.

In Asbury Park a similar program was carried out but with considerable opposition. Many disgruntled white parents immediately transferred their children to parochial and other private schools.

State Unit Set Up

The next step in eliminating segregation came in 1945 when the Legislature adopted an act setting up the Division Against Discrimination within the State Department of Education. This division sent representatives into areas where segregation was still practiced to try to convince local officials that this was not in keeping with the American way of life.

As a result of their visits, Long Branch and Salem began a program of integration. Then in 1947 a state constitutional convention, with but one dissenting vote, adopted a new State Constitution outlawing segregation in public schools.

A survey that year disclosed

The New York Times May 23, 1954

IN THE SOUTH: The southern portion of New Jersey falls below a projection of Mason and Dixon's Line (broken line) from the west.

that fifty-two of the state's 550 school districts still practiced segregation. Nine of these were found to be districts wholly populated by Negroes.

State officials feared to move too rapidly because Jersey boards of education enjoy much more autonomy than boards in most states. And they are jealous of outside interference.

State financial aid might have been withheld from districts failing to comply with the constitutional provisions, but it was realized that this might provoke litigation that would delay the program, perhaps for years.

Therefore, the policy adopted by state officials was the spirit of the Fair Employment Practices Law, which was adopted in 1945, and gradual education on the local level. It worked.

By September, 1948, thirty districts had complied with the law and a year later eight others did so. By 1952 the remaining five districts took similar steps.

New Buildings Needed

In at least two or three of these districts the program could not have been effected until new buildings had been erected. In some instances this was necessary because of the deplorable conditions of school structures to which Negro pupils were assigned.

One device used quite frequently was as follows: In a building which housed two first grades, two second and two third grades, a white and colored teacher were teamed up. Thus, the children would be taught one year by a white teacher and the next by a colored teacher.

Another device was to place all Negro teachers in a given grade throughout the entire school system.

Shore Parley Hails Bias Rule

Special to The Inquirer

ATLANTIC CITY, May 23.—Supporting the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision against segregation, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers today urged its more than 9,000,000 members to "study and pursue effective means in working toward integrated education for all children."

The appeal was made in a policy statement preceding the organization's 58th annual convention.

More than 1000 delegates appeared for sessions which will be held in Convention Hall and the Ambassador, beginning tomorrow and ending Friday. Today many of the delegates attended an afternoon vesper service in St. Paul's Methodist Church.

Highlights of the convention will include addresses by Nelson A. Rockefeller and Benjamin A. Cohen, assistant secretary general of the United Nations.

ENGLEWOOD FACES SCHOOL BIAS CASE

Trenton Hearing to Examine Negroes' Charges Against Board of Education

FIRST INSTANCE IN JERSEY

Southern Institutions Refuse to Take Non-White Students Despite High Court Ruling

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, Sept. 3—Charges that the Englewood Board of Education discriminated against Negroes in revising school district boundaries will be aired at a public hearing in Trenton on Sept. 28.

The State Education Department's Division Against Discrimination, which made the announcement today, said its agents had spent the summer investigating the allegations.

John Mulligan, director of the division, said the Englewood case was the first in New Jersey in which a public school board would appear as defendant on charges of discrimination.

The complaints were filed by Mrs. Susan Anderson of 34 Armory Street and Mrs. Mary Walker of 300 Franklin Road, both Negroes. They are being represented by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Rev. Walter Taylor of Englewood, president of its Bergen County branch, said that the association "is in this fight to the finish."

The complaints followed the United States Supreme Court decision on segregation and the Englewood board's changes in school district lines to relieve overcrowding in two schools. The board maintains that there is nothing discriminatory in its action, that white as well as Negro children, all of kindergarten age, are affected, and that the action was essential.

Englewood schools open next Wednesday. One junior high school and one elementary school are in the Fourth Ward, which is predominantly Negro. The boundary lines have been pushed out to enclose most of this ward and the board has ruled that all new kindergarten children must go to the school in this ward.

Texas Negro to Appeal Ban

HOUSTON, Tex., Sept. 3 (UP)—A 17-year-old Houston Negro, whose enrollment application was accepted and then rejected by the University of Texas, planned an appeal today to the school's Board of Regents.

Marion G. Ford Jr., who was accepted as a freshman for the fall semester at the Austin school on July 23, was notified yesterday, "Your acceptance notice is hereby canceled.'

H. W. McCown, dean of missions, wrote Mr. Ford, who plans to study chemical engineering, that he should take his freshman work at Prairie View, a state-supported Negro college in Houston.

Mr. Ford disagreed with Mr. McCown's contention that freshman courses leading to a chemical engineering degree were available at Prairie View.

A university spokesman said the rejection of Mr. Ford's application was a strict interpretation of an old policy, rather than a new rule.

Louisiana School Bars Negroes

ATLANTA, Sept. 3 (UP)—Baton Rouge, La., officials refused today to admit thirty Negro children to an all-white school a block from Negro homes as an apparent South-wide drive got under way to break down public school segregation.

It was the second march in two days by Negroes on a segregated school. Formal petitions have also been filed in Texas, North Carolina and Mississippi for admission of Negro children to all-white schools.

The Supreme Court banned segregation last May 17 but announced it would hear arguments this fall on just how the ruling should be put into effect. With the opening of Southern schools this week, however, Negro leaders apparently are seeking immediate obedience to the ruling.

A group of Negro children sought yesterday to enroll in a white school at Montgomery, Ala., but were also turned down.

Supreme Courrt Awaits Ideas

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3—The Supreme Court has not yet set a deadline on when public schools across the country must open their doors to allcomers, regardless of race.

Last May, in outlawing racial segregation in the public schools, the court recognized the "considerable complexity" of putting its decision in effect. For that reason, it called for rearguments, after it returns this October, on precisely how and when segregation should end.

In short, while the court has said segregation in the schools was illegal, it has not said at what precise time the practice becomes illegal.

When it reconvenes Oct. 4 the court will set a date for oral arguments on the points it wants reviewed. By Oct. 1, however, it wants briefs filed by various attorneys general on how the decision should be put into effect.

For example, the court wants opinions on whether it should formulate detailed decrees in the matter, whether it should appoint a special master to hear evidence and make recommendations, or whether it should direct lower courts to draft the decrees.

Moreover, the court wants reargued the question whether it should permit a gradual adjustment or whether it should order immediate integration.

Parents bare school bias in Englewood

Segregation damages pupils' personalities, expert warns

BULLETIN

TRENTON, N.J. — The first public hearing on school discrimination in the state against the Englewood School Board closed here Monday.

William Fitzpatrick, president of the board of education, testified that he had made no effort to determine whether the enrollment of all colored pupils in Lincoln School violated the anti-segregation law under the new consitution.

Superintendent of Schools Harry L. Stearns testified that in the new rezoning of school districts population and traffic safety were the only factors considered.

TRENTON — A public hearing on charges of discrimination and segregation against the Board of Education in Englewood, first of its kind in the state, was resumed here Monday in the State House Annex for the third day.

The hearing began on Oct. 2(and continued to Tuesday, Oct. 26.

It was ordered by the Division Against Discrimination following its on-the-spot investigation and unsuccessful conferences with the Englewood School Board after complaints were filed by two parents of pupils:

Mrs. Susan Anderson, 34 Arnory St., and Mrs. Mary Walker, 300 Franklin Rd., Englewood.

— o O o —

TESTIMONY IS being taken before Dr. Frederick M. Raubinger, state commissioner of education.

Deputy Attorney General Thomas Cook is presenting the complaints on behalf of the DAD.

At the hearing on Oct. 20, Mr. Cook pointed out that the state's anti-discrimination laws require school boards to set up district zones so as to achieve the maximum in integration.

He argued that since new school lines adopted in Englewood at the beginning o the 1954-55 school in Septembe would make segregation perma nent in the Lincoln School, the school board was in violation o the laws.

— o O o —

AT THE HEARING on Oct. 26, Mrs. Anderson, one of the complainants, testified that her son, James, is compelled to go to the segregated Lincoln School, while white children on the same side of the street attend the all white Liberty School.

Mrs. Walker, the other complainant, testified that she registered her son, Theodore, in the Liberty School kindergarten in May, 1954.

But when she took him there on the opening day of school in September, she was told that he would have to go to Lincoln School, because the boundary lines had been changed.

The mother said she had received no notice of the change from school officials.

— o O o —

DR. JOHN MILLIGAN, assistant state commissioner of education, and director of the DAD, testified when the hearing opened that, in his opinion, the new school zone lines did not comply with the state laws prohibiting segregation in public schools.

And Mr. Cook cited excerpts from the historic Supreme Court's decision last May that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

— o O o —

TESTIFYING AGAIN last week, Dr. Milligan reiterated, as he did on Oct. 20, that the Englewood School Board refused to postpone the effective date of the new school lines, Sept. 1, last, until the DAD could study their effect.

Mrs. Anderson testified further that the segregation of colored children in Englewood is not new.

She pointed out that she tried to send her son, then five, to the all - white Liberty School in 1949.

But he was permitted to remain at the Liberty School for only a month. Thereafter he was transferred to the Lincoln School without notice.

— o O o —

FOUR OTHER COLORED mothers all testified last week that they were forced to enroll their children in the segregated Lincoln School after they were denied enrollment in the Liberty School.

Testifying as an expert witness for the colored parents was Mrs. Helen G. Trager, a faculty member of Brooklyn College, Education Department.

She said that the personalities of colored children who attend segregated schools are irreparably damaged.

— o O o —

"THEY HAVE the feeling," she added, "of not being wanted not good enough to mix.

"The hurt to personality is very definite. They (colored children in segregated schools) do not feel they are accepted—they feel they are second - class citizens."

Mrs. Trager was one of the expert witnesses who testified in the historic South Carolina school segregation case — one of the five cases which formed the basis for the Supreme Court's momentous decision last May.

— o O o —

FORMER CHIEF JUSTICE Thomas J. Brogan is counsel for the Englewood School Board at the hearing.

He insisted that the board drew up the new school lines without thought of racial discrimination, but to ease overcrowding at the Cleveland School and to eliminate certain traffic hazards to pupils.

The parents are represented by:

Leonard Williams of Trenton, a member of the legal redress committee of the State Conference of NAACP Branches; Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Jack Greenberg of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund staff, NYC.

— o O o —

FIVE NEW COMPLAINTS were filed with the DAD on Sept. 23 on behalf of these parents:

Mrs. Hattie Harper, Mrs. Florie Scott, Mrs. Julia Hannibal, Mrs. Edith Ward and Mrs. Lorrine Clark.

Their complaints have not yet been processed, but they are appearing as witnesses for Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Walker.

— o O o —

BESIDES SUPPORTING the parents' complaints, the state also seeks to prove that the Englewood School Board has carried out a consistent plan of discrimination against colored children since 1950 to the present time.

When the hearing closes, Dr. Raubinger will decide, on the basis of the testimony, whether the charges against the board have been proven.

If he finds for the parents, he has the authority to order the School Board to draw new lines to insure maximum integration as is required by the laws.

Desegregation May Close Negro School In N. Jersey

TRENTON — (ANP) — Desegregation has hit a Negro school here in New Jersey.

Bordentown, a state supported institution with an enrollment of 250 boys and girls from all parts of the state, will be closed on June 30, if Gov. Mayner's recommendation is accepted by the state legislature.

Fifty of the present student body at Bordentown are seniors who graduate in June.

The rest of the students will be integrated into high schools or vocational schools in their home district. Enrollment is far below the school's capacity of 400.

Situated on a 400-acre tract on the Delaware River, seven miles south of Trenton, the school was founded in 1888 as a private institution by a Negro minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The state took it over in 1894.

The aim of the school, which has 28 teachers and a maintenance staff of 30, is to give vocational training and the equivalent of a four year high school education to youths from 13 up.

There is no tuition fee, but board, laundry and medical attention are charged at a rate of $145 a year. This year, the school's budget was $420,000. There are eight main buildings and the entire plant has an estimated value of $2 million.

The board of education resolution to close the institution provided that a caretaker staff be left at the school after it is closed. It is believed the state may put it up for sale.

Reassigning the 28 teachers will contstitute another problem.

Segregated School In N. J. Closes

TRENTON, N. J.—(SNS)— The state of New Jersey Friday ordered the closing of the all-Negro State Manual Training and Industrial School for Youths at Bordentown because it was unable to induce white students to enroll at the institution.

Gov. Robert B. Mayner made the announcement on behalf of the State Board of Education. The board declared that the failure of white students to enroll there makes the school a violation of the spirit of the constitutional provision against segregation.

As a direct result of the closing, 500 pupils will be transferred to other New Jersey schools in nearby counties, and the faculty of 60 will be dismissed. Many of the pupils will have to travel 20 or 30 miles daily to continue their studies.

Defending the board's action Gov. Meyner said "despite efforts to integrate pupils at the school there has in fact remained a separation of Negro children." Therefore, "the institution is a segregated school in its practical operation," he added.

The Governor pointed out that the Supreme Court had emphasized such separation tends to

...ard the development of the ...ldren. Moreover, it deprives ...hem of some of the benefits that could be received in an integrated system.

Gov. Meyner said the Bordentown school is the only segregated public institution in the state. The State Board of Education's contemplated action would be sought from the legislature.

Decision on segregation in schools affects education units for handicapped

NEWARK, N.J. — State-supported institutions for the education and training of handicapped persons must also subscribe to the desegregation order as laid down in the historic Supreme Court ruling of May 17, on segregation in public schools.

This was the assurance given recently to Miss Bessie Blount, an authority on the rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons and a resident of Newark.

The statement regarding institutions for the handicapped came from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, in a letter written to Sen. Robert C. Hendrickson (Rep., N.J.).

— o O o —

MISS BLOUNT also received statements from Sen. H. Alexander Smith (Rep., N.J.), and Congressman Peter W. Rodino Jr., also of New Jersey. She had queried the three legislators about the fate of institutions for the handicapped after the Supreme Court decrees (subsequent to the decision), are handed down.

Senator Smith wrote: " . . . when sufficient time has elapsed in which to have this ruling put into effect, I assume that if the individual states have not done so, the matter (of private institutions) is one which will be handled by the Department of Justice of the United States Government."

Congressman Rodino wrote: "...it will not be possible for me at this time to hazard a guess as to what the (Supreme Court) order will contain.

— o O o —

"BUT ASSUMING that it would be in the affirmative, I feel sure that it will include the state-supported institutions mentioned in the news article."

Mr. Rodino referred to an article published in the AFRO in which Miss Blount posed the question of state supported institutions. She sent a copy of the article to the legislators.

The letter from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare was addressed to Senator Hendrickson. It was signed by Russell R. Larmon, then acting secretary of the department.

IT SAID, in part: "Miss Blount's letter inquires specifically about 'state - supported schools . . . in the South.'

"A reply would point out that all public schools are subject to the recent decision of the Supreme Court. In the normal course of events these will conform to the pattern of desegregation which develops."

Miss Blount, who was in the South demonstrating and lecturing on the education of handicapped persons at the time the all public schools are subject handed down, said, at that time, that handicapped people are wondering how the decision affects them.

— o O o —

HER TOPICS of discussion dealt with the ending of segregation in these institutions for the handicapped as well as in public schools.

The classes conducted by her in her home at 19 Hawthorne Ave., Newark, are managed on an integrated basis for all handicapped persons regardless of Supreme Court decision was race, creed or color.

She is a pioneer in her field and feels that the public is interested in knowing the extent of the high court decision relative to every branch of general public education.

— o O o —

IN A LETTER to the AFRO, Mrs. Blount stated:

"It is the consensus of several senators and congressmen that desegregation is to be a thorough job including all state-supported hospital schools, training centers and specialized education for handicapped children as classed under the term of public school education."

N. J. Board Votes End of School Bias Would Shut Last Segregated Unit

Special to the Herald Tribune

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 17.— Gov. Robert B. Meyner said today that the State Board of Education has recommended the closing by June 30, 1955, of New Jersey's last state-supported segregated school, the Manual Training and Industrial School for Youths, at Bordentown. The school has 250 Negro boys and girls from all parts of the state.

The Governor said he approved of the recommendation. The State Legislature also must approve.

In announcing the Board of Education's action, which was embodied in a resolution adopted this morning, the Governor said that efforts had been made to desegregate the school after the adoption of the state's new constitution in 1947, but that no white children ever entered, though two made application. The 1947 Constitution forbade segregation in the state's public schools.

Cites Resolution

At a press conference in the State House, Gov. Meyner called attention to the Board of Education's resolution which said that the United States Supreme Court had declared that school segregation "has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially-integrated school system."

Fifty of the present student body at the school are seniors who will graduate in June, Dr. Frederick M. Raubinger, State Education Commissioner, said. The rest will be integrated into high schools or vocational schools in their home districts, he said. The capacity of the school is 400.

Situated on a 400-acre tract on the Delaware River seven miles south of Trenton, the school was founded in 1888 as a private institution by a Negro minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. New Jersey took it over in 1894 as a school for Negro youth.

Vocational School

The aim of the school, which has twenty-eight teachers and a maintenance staff of thirty-eight, is to give vocational training and the equivalent of a four-year high-school education to youths from thirteen up. There is no tuition fee but there is a board, laundry and medical attention fee of $145 a year. The school's budget this year was $420,000. There are eight main buildings. The value of the plant is estimated at $2,000,000.

The Board of Education resolution provided that a caretaker staff be left at the school after it is closed. It is believed the state may put it up for sale.

Local officials' attitude help or block integration

New American p. 8

ALBUQUERQUE, N. Mex. — Local authorities can make or break the efforts of their community to conform with the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the schools, a NAACP official asserted here last week.

Gloster B. Current, director of branches, said experiences in the court's decision has shown that "where the authorities take a positive approach to integration and affirmatively state their policy, integration can be successfully accomplished without too much friction."

Mr. Current praised New Mexico school officials for their successful integration this fall and noted that "reports from Missouri, West Virginia, Arkansas, Delaware and other states where desegregation is taking place clearly indicate that most people are accepting the change gracefully."

—o O o—

ADDRESSING A meeting on NAACP program and action sponsored by the local branch of the association, he referred to efforts of Bryant Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, to stop school integration by promoting school strikes and other agitation, a "crack-pot" idea.

"Bowles' activities and those of others like him," Mr. Current declared, "are but a dying gasp of those who would circumvent the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court by violent means."

He called for an "all-out effort by NAACP branches in the South to give greater support to raising the necessary funds to end segregation and discrimination in every phase of American life."

Uneasy New Mexico Town Prepares for Mixed Schools

By the Associated Press

HOBBS, N. Mex., Aug. 27.—There was unrest in this Southeast New Mexico oil town last night as parents prepared to register their children in newly desegregated schools.

For the first time, Negro and white children register today to attend class side by side.

As preparations went on, a Baptist preacher, William Carter, who heads a group fighting the end of segregation, stood by a warning of violence if desegregated schooling begins.

School Supt. Charles L. Mills said he expected no trouble. "We are going to open our schools Monday—desegregated," he said.

Meanwhile, one Texas high school canceled a football game with Hobbs because of the possibility of Negro players on the Hobbs team. Officials in Andrews, Tex., notified this town they would not play a scheduled October 1 game.

Honahans, Tex., High School also has indicated it may cancel a football game, scheduled at Monahans, for the same reason, Hobbs School officials said.

Kermit, Tex., High School notified Hobbs yesterday it would play a scheduled September 10 game under limited segregation rules applying to spectators but not players.

Duncan, Okla., the only other out-of-State team on the Hobbs schedule, wrote: "Any boy good enough to make your team is good enough to play against us."

Several Negro athletes are working out with the Hobbs team and some are expected to make the varsity.

Other New Mexico schools, formerly segregated, at Artesia, Clovis, Las Cruces and Carlsbad have not had the furor over desegregation which has existed in this Texas border town.

Desegregation action halts work on center

SANTA FE, N.M. (ANP) — Classes opened calmly in newly-integrated schools in the cities of Las Cruces, Clovis, Artesia, Carlsbad and Hobbs, where the school boards had voted to end segregation in line with the United States Supreme Court's recent ruling.

Only the Roswell, N.M., system, which, while it has desegregated the higher grades, still has segregated classes in the lower grades. However, segregation in the lower grades is expected to end shortly.

At Hobbs, the Rev. William Carter, a Baptist minister, had publicly predicted that this New Mexico community would "explode into violence" if segregation ended.

"There was no trouble whatsoever," said Charles L. Miller, superintendent of the seven-school system.

"I thought the people would abide by the law."

Hobbs Peacefully Ends Segregation in Schools

New York Times News Service, Special to The Atlanta Constitution

HOBBS, N.M., Aug. 30—White and Negro children went to school together in harmony today in the first community in the nation where racial desegregation had aroused talk of possible violence.

The peaceful opening of the school year was a triumph of civic stability over the inflammatory activities of a single individual—a shouting, pulpit-pounding preacher who contends that desegregation runs counter to the Bible.

Hobbs is a sprawling, dusty frontier oil town in the southeast corner of New Mexico, only four miles from the Texas line. Its 15,000 inhabitants, about 1,500 of them Negroes, are mostly transplanted Texans and Oklahomans accustomed to segregation.

HAD OPTIONAL LAW

Hobbs was one of a half-dozen New Mexico towns which maintain school segregation under an optional state law. Up to today, the 400 Negro children of Hobbs and environs had been concentrated in the Booker T. Washington School which covered all grades.

However, within a few days of the United States Supreme Court's desegregation decision last May, the five-member Hobbs school board voted to comply fully this fall.

The decision evoked no immediate criticism. But in the intervening months, a campaign of mounting stridency against the move has been staged by the Rev. William Thomas (Bill) Carter, pastor of the Rock Chapel Baptist Church.

FILED ABORTIVE SUIT

Carter organized a "segregation committee," circulated petitions espousing segregation—on which he claims to have 8,000 signatures—and filed an abortive suit for a district court injunction against desegregation of the schools.

In recent weeks he has made repeated public predictions that violence would occur if the school board order were carried out.

The town's citizenry were somewhat apprehensive, but in the last few days Carter's alarms had become a subject of some joking.

This morning, the schools reopened for the fall term desegregated. The Washington school, in a Negro residential district, reopened as a grade school with an all-Negro student body. Three of its 14 Negro teachers were installed in new mixed schools. About 160 Negro students were deployed among two elementary schools, two junior high schools and a high school.

Most of both groups are transplanted Texans and Oklahomans accustomed to segregation.

Carter commented later, "I can't do anything now to stop my people. They'd think I was scared. My hide is stretched on a fence."

The committee statement quoted Hanagan that "if any Negro child was kept from going to the school of his choice Bill T. Carter would be liable for prosecution."

Hanagan brought two deputy sheriffs, a state policeman and a Hobbs police officer to a stormy session with Carter and his committee. Hanagan said he wanted law enforcement officers to know what was going on.

Meantime Negro and white children in this Southeast New Mexico oil town went to school today together to register and no incidents were reported.

The Hobbs school board last May ordered desegregation of public schools in line with a U.S. Supreme Court decision. Carter's group has sought court action to keep the schools segregated.

Peaceful Desegregation Refutes 'Riot' Forecast

HOBBS, N. M. — (SNS) — White and Negro children Monday disproved forecasts of violence by attending school here in peace and harmony.

Their conduct was a quiet rebuke to a shouting, bible-beating Baptist church, leader of a crusade to maintain segregation on the grounds that the practice was upheld by the Bible.

Rev. William Thomas (Bill) Carter, pastor of the Rock Chapel Baptist Church, organized a "segregation committee," circulated petitions on which he said contained 8,000 signatures, and filed an abortive suit in a district court asking for an injunction against integrating public schools.

PREDICTED VIOLENCE

In recent weeks he made repeated public predictions that violence would occur if the school board carried out plans for desegregation.

Hobbs was one of some six New Mexico towns maintaining Jim-Crow schools under an optional state law. Until Monday, the 400 Negro children of the city had been concentrated in the Booker T Washington School serving all grades.

After the United States Supreme Court declared school segregation as unconstitutional, Hobbs moved immediately to comply with the decision. The five-mmember school board voted to integrate pupils this fall.

FANNED EMOTIONS

The action caused no immediate criticism. But during the intervening months, Rev. Carles mounted pulpit and soap-box to shout for the continuance of segregation.

For the fall term the school opened on an integrated basis. The Washington school in the Negro community reopened as a grade school with an all-Negro student body. Approximately 160 Negro students were enrolled in two elementary schools, two junior high schools and a high school.

Hobbs is a dusty frontier oil town in the southeast of the state with a population of about 15,000, of whom some 1,500 are Negroes.

DESEGREGATION FOES ACCUSE DA

Official Warns on Interfering with Schools

HOBBS, N. M., Aug. 27 (AP)—A citizens committee fighting a last-ditch stand against desegregation of Hobbs schools accused authorities today of holding one of the group's leaders as "hostage."

The statement was issued today by the Hobbs Segregation Committee after Dist. Atty. Pat Hanagan warned the Rev. Bill T. Carter that interference with school attendance was unlawful.

The Baptist minister has led the attempt to keep Hobbs schools from being opened to Negroes. He declared he feared "rioting" when the schools open Monday.

Hanagan recited to the clergymen and eight other members of the segregation committee the New Mexico laws dealing with unlawful assembly, conspiracy and other violence.

New Mexico Town Quietly Ends Pupil Segregation Despite a Cleric

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times.

HOBBS, N. M., Aug. 30—White and Negro children went to school together in harmony today in one of the first communities in the nation where racial desegregation had aroused talk of possible violence.

The peaceful opening of the school year was a triumph of civic stability over the activities of a Baptist preacher who contended that desegregation ran counter to the Bible.

The decision evoked no immediate criticism. But in the intervening months, a campaign against the move had been staged by the Rev. William Thomas (Bill) Carter, pastor of the Rock Chapel Baptist Church.

Mr. Carter is a chunky, gray-haired man of 49, born in Texas. For twenty years he was an old field laborer. He served a term on a Texas chain gang.

He was "saved," he says, by the death of a young son in 1937, and became a part time lay preacher and missionary in the Southeastern Baptist Association, attaining ordination, without further formal education, in 1941. He had not gone beyond the sixth grade in school. Five years later he organized the Rock Chapel congregation, which has several hundred members.

In defense of segregation, Mr. Carter said:

"God segregated the three children of Noah. He did it, not me. There is no place in the Bible where Jesus Christ nullified the law."

This interpretation has been contradicted by the new Mexico Baptist Convention, an affiliate of the Southern Baptist branch of the faith, which voted for desegregation at a convention in St. Louis last June. The convention has no administrative authority over individual congregations.

Court Orders Negro Teacher Reinstated

Sante Fe, New Mexico, Nov. 29—Mrs. Mary Alice Swisher, a Negro teacher, nearly lost her job as her town of Las Cruces went ahead with desegregation. At the beginning of the school year, white children moved into the formerly all-Negro high school but the contract of Mrs. Swisher was not renewed for her to teach.

She took her complaint to court. The New Mexico District Court has now ordered her reinstated, ruling that under tenure laws, a teacher could be dropped only for incompetence. Apparently Mrs. Swisher had been dismissed because the school board thought it was undesirable for her to teach in a desegregated school.

Hearing Held On Desegregation Of Yonkers, N. Y., Public Schools

ALBANY, N. Y. — Decision has been reserved by Dr. L. A. Wilson, New York State Commissioner of Education, following arguments pro and con on the closing of an all-Negro school in the City of Yonkers. The school was ordered closed as of June 29 by the Yonkers Board of Education and the pupils assigned to two other schools.

The Yonkers branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People endorsed the Board's action and was represented at the hearings here on July 28 by Miss Olive J. Hamilton, vice-president. Opposing the desegregation order was a group of Negro parents for whom W. Scott Davis, attorney, was spokesman. Mr. Davis and his group contended for retaining the 82-year-old school and extending the district lines to include white residential areas. They filed a petition with the State Commissioner of Education to that end. Arguing for desegregation was the corporation counsel of Yonkers, J. Raymond Hannon.

In a resolution passed on July 23, the Yonkers NAACP endorsed the action of the Board "in its decision to close School No. 1 in the City of Yonkers which has become a segregated Negro school as result of residential segregation in the community."

Further, the branch offered "its cooperation in helping the board to implement its decision" and called "upon all citizens and residents of Yonkers" to support and cooperate with the Board in "the elimination of racial segregation in the public schools."

Albany For 'Bias' School Closing

ALBANY, Aug. 18 (AP).—Lewis A. Wilson, State Education Commissioner, has upheld the action of the Yonkers Board of Education in closing a school alleged to have been, in effect, a segregated school for Negro children.

The department disclosed today that Dr. Wilson had rejected an appeal by six parents who wanted School 1 to remain open with an expanded attendance zone that would take in areas not inhabited wholly by Negroes.

In their appeal, the parents said the School 1 attendance zone had been designed for the specific purpose of demarking and dividing the Negro community and its children from the rest of the city."

Dr. Wilson, in his ruling Monday, said he could not overrule a local board of education unless its action were arbitrary or capricious. He said the Yonkers branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had passed a resolution terming the school closing the "most realistic solution."

Dr. Wilson said the parents had conceded that Schools 5 and 24, to which the children from School 1 would be sent, would not be segregated schools.

STATE'S DICTATION TO SCHOOLS DENIED

Dr. Wilson Replies to Critics of Proposal for Greater Use of Regents' Tests

By LEONARD BUDER

Special to The New York Times.

SARANAC INN, N. Y., Sept. 28—Dr. Lewis A. Wilson, State Education Commissioner, defended his department today against charges of attempting to dictate local school policies.

The assertions were an outgrowth of criticism originally directed by some superintendents against a recent department recommendation that local school systems make greater use of state Regents' examinations.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the State Council of City and Village School Superintendents, Dr. Wilson declared that the criticisms concerning excessive state mandates in education was "not valid." On the contrary, he asserted, the department has resisted many attempts by persons in various school fields to get the state to issue mandates covering additional school subjects.

However, he said, the state has a constitutional interest in education and is determined that every pupil shall receive the education to which he is entitled. He added that the state contributed nearly 40 per cent of the cost of local education.

Sources of Some Criticism

The original criticism that the state-wide Regents' examinations were not suited to measure pupil achievement in some communities, and the broader charges against the department, were made by a few Nassau County and up-state school superintendents.

At another meeting of the council, Dr. Charles A. Brind Jr., counsel for the State Education Department, told the superintendents that it was illegal for schools to sell general accident insurance to pupils, even though it could be argued that the insurance would offer protection for the children.

It is also illegal, he said, for schools to permit photographers to come in to take and try to sell pictures to pupils, except when the photographs were taken for official purposes, such as school year books and graduation albums.

A proposed resolution that the council petition the Selective Service System to exempt "young men who are qualified and desire to teach in our public schools" during the present teacher shortage, was overwhelmingly voted down by the council members. Such a measure, speakers said, would set teachers apart from other citizens and would handicap attempts to teach effective citizenship in the schools.

At the final session of the conference Dr. Neal Gross of Harvard University, declared that educators must translate school needs into meaningful and personal terms instead of just pointing up general statistics and repeating catchy slogans.

For 'Human Relations Know-how'

Dr. Gross, who is director of Harvard's School Executive Studies, said that along with educational know-how school administrators school administrators should have "human relations know-how." This means, he asserted, that superintendents must "know how to work with and through people to secure the best educational programs for children."

Some vitally needed new school building programs have been rejected in various communities, he continued, because supporters of the programs failed to show why 'Mr. Jones, with his two children, and Mr. Smith, with his factory, could not afford to support new schools.

"Mr. Jones would not get very excited when he is told that the community has not built a new school in years. But he will get excited if he is told that his daughter, Mary, and his son, John, are going to schools that are fire traps.

"And Mr. Smith, the factory owner, may become a supporter for new schools when he is shown that young engineers ask 'what are the schools like in this community?' before they take a job."

Despite the tremendous problems and pressures most superintendents face, and the challenges that lie ahead, Dr. Gross declared that many of them were doing outstanding jobs of educational leadership. Few of them, he added, receive the appreciation that their efforts deserve.

John T. Kaemmerlen, Superintendent of Schools at Hudson, was elected president of the council for 1954-55. He succeeds T. James Ahern of Mamaroneck.

See Real Integration, D. C. Students Pleased

NEW ROCHELLE, N .Y. — Six students of Washington, D. C. schools were very pleased after making a three day observation of the integrated New Rochelle High School according to International News Service.

The students were happy over the chance to see how well the Negro and white students worked together at the long integrated school. They said the visit had given them a chance to see the real situation, unmuddled by propaganda.

The report quoted Richard Caulk, a 17-year-old student of McKinley High School as saying that the confusion at the rioting schools was so general "that after the first week I began to wonder whether I was right or not".

It was also reported that a Washington student asked one of the New Rochelle football players if he tackled Negroes harder than whites and that the latter answered, "I look at the color of the uniform, not the skin."

It reported another student, Betty Harris, 18, of Anacostia High School as commenting, "I've enjoyed it very much. I have a better outlook. I wouldn't say different because no one can change his entire attitude. I gained a lot by coming here."

Another McKinley High student, Alan Gross, 16-year-old son of Rep. H. R. Gross (R-Ia.), said, from his classroom observations: "I'm impressed that the students could speak their minds openly, Negro and white, without fear of discrimination."

Ann Hooton, 17, of Eastern High School said she had made many friends at Rochelle High among members of both races, according to the report.

The Washington students will make reports to their various schools.

Four other students from Southern High School in Baltimore, Md. No comments from them were reported.

Integration 'seed' sown in North grow in Dixie

New Rochelle visit 'converts' Baltimore, Washington pupils

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y.—The Baltimore and Washington high school pupils who studied integrated education in New Rochelle High School are reported back in their schools with reaction "about 100 to 1 in favor of the experiment."

According to Robert Forbes, 31-year-old high school human relations instructor who conceived the idea, says he is convinced that the seeds of democracy planted in the experiment will bear fruit in southern soil.

MR. FORBES, born in the Bronx, now residing in New Rochell and a graduate of New York and Harvard Universities, based his project on the "seed" theory after white pupils demonstrated against integration in Milford, Del., Baltimore and Washington.

He said:

"I could have suggested outright that we invite southern students up here to see how racial groups get along, but I preferred to plant the seed of the idea. I encouraged my own students to discuss it until finally one of them came up with the idea of the invitation."

Mr. Forbes, who has had little experience with southern customs, although he spent much of World War II in Camp Lee, Va. (now Fort Lee), made his 100-to-1 estimate on the basis of letters and calls he has received from all over the nation.

He added:

— o O o —

"BUT I WAS always interested in equal education and was very upset when I first read of the anti-colored demonstrations. I wanted to do something constructive about it and I wanted the kids to do it themselves."

While the Washington pupils spent four days at New Rochelle High, the Baltimore children spent a whole week and upon leaving invited four New Rochelle pupils to Baltimore for a week in their newly integrated school.

"The thing that impressed me about our visitors," Mr. Forbes said, "was the feeling that the youngsters wanted to do what was right.

"They could feel the ground shifting under their feet but, once up here, they were positive in trying to learn how to live with this new thing in their lives."

— o O o —

EFFECTS OF the experiment were felt far beyond New Rochelle and the southern high schools, it is reported. Morris High School in the Bronx, through its English class, invited the visitors to observe integration in action there.

School officials received scores of letters from all over the nation praising the experiment, while only a few southerners wrote letters of criticism and denunciation to Willis Thomson, Rochelle principal.

PANAMANIAN ARTIST

PANAMA, RP (ANF)—Panamanian sculptor - painter Lloyd Bartley will stage the first one-man show of his work to be given by any colored artist in the Colon City Hall next week. The show is to last four days.

Robert Caulk, 17, pupil in McKinley High in Washington, confirmed last week that the seed is already bearing fruit, as Mr. Forbes predicted.

"All of us were favorably impressed, young Caulk said, "and we've been reporting on our experiences ever since we got back —to the school board, to our teachers and to our fellow students.

— o O o —

"THE THING that impressed us most was the frankness of our discussions with the New Rochelle students. They asked us about our prejudices openly and we answered just as openly.

"We only went to one social function, a meeting of their Convention Club. We didn't discuss the segregation thing at all that night, but they had a pretty good subject.

"It was 'Friendship' and I guess that covered everything that we were thinking about."

RACIAL UNITY SET FOR CITY SCHOOLS

Board to Create Commission for a Study to Develop an 'Integrated' System

PRAISED BY NEGRO CRITIC

3 Supervisory Executives Are Elected, but Choice of Vice President Is Put Off

The Board of Education authorized yesterday the creation of a special commission to examine the racial composition of the city's schools. The purpose is to provide "effective democratic education for all of the children."

Among the commission's specific responsibilities will be the problem of "segregated schools" in some sections of the city and the development of "racially integrated" schools. The commission will be composed of representatives of the school board, the school staff and the community.

The action was taken at the school board's last meeting of the year, a meeting noteworthy not only for what happened but also for what did not happen.

The board unanimously elected two associate superintendents and an assistant superintendent—items o nwhich action had been postponed since June.

But it delayed the election of a new vice president and withdrew—until the next meeting—an item giving the position of the Corporation Counsel on whether the board could legally compel employes who are former Communists to identify former party associates.

On Wednesday the item dealing with the election of a new president was dropped from the meeting calendar after Arthur Levitt said he would continue as president for a little while longer. He must resign his membership on the board before the end of the year to become State Controller.

Objections of the Inquiry

In a statement on the special commission, the board took note of last spring's Supreme Court decision declaring segregation in the schools to be unconstitutional, and asserted:

"In seeking to provide effective democratic education for all of the children of this city, the members of the board * * * are faced with many real obstacles in the form of complex social and community problems.

"Among these problems are the existence of residential segregation, which leads to schools predominantly of one race on the elementary and junior high school levels. In addition, prevailing racial attitudes and misinformation of some white and Negro parents reflect outworn patterns of segregation as well as limited educational and vocational horizons which make it difficult for them to accept school procedures contrary to their attitudes."

The commission, the board said, will be asked to recommend "whatever further action is necessary to come closer to the ideal, viz., the racially integrated school." Facts will be obtained from community groups, such as parent-teacher organizations.

"It is imperative that the members of this commission approach their responsibility with the understanding that racially homogeneous public schools are educationally undesirable," the board said. "It is now the clearly reiterated policy and program of the Board of Education of the City of New York to devise and put into operation a plan which will prevent the further development of such schools and would integrate the existing ones as quickly as practicable."

Hailed by Negro Complainant

The board's action drew praise from Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, a Negro psychologist, who last summer accused the school system of permitting "Jim Crow" practices in some schools. His charges prompted the board at that time to ask the Public Education Association to make an independent study of the situation. That study is still under way. Mr. Levitt said that the commission would cover a broader field.

The two new associate superintendents are John F. Conroy and Edward J. Bernath, who will fill the respective vacancies created by the death of George F. Piggott Jr., and the retirement of Dr. Elias Lieberman. Mr. Conroy has served for six years as administrative assistant to the Superintendent of Schools and Mr. Bernath has been an assistant superintendent in charge of school districts in Manhattan.

Philip Becker was chosen assistant superintendent. A high school principal, he will take the post made vacant by the retirement of Morris Siegel.

Tributes to Mr. Levitt were expressed by Charles H. Silver and Charles J. Bensley, who are regarded as the leading candidates for the presidency of the board, and by Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools.

The board's next meeting will be Jan. 13.

NEW YORK

Mr. Levitt had acceded to the wishes of civic and educational groups who had opposed his original intention of resigning the presidency yesterday so that he could vote for his successor. He was known to support the candidacy of Charles Silver, Manhattan member, while the civic and educational groups are known to support the candidacy of Charles Bensley, Bronx member and chairman of the board's committee on buildings and sites.

Controversy among the board members was forgotten at yesterday's meeting, however, a

Mr. Silver and Mr. Bensley both praised Mr. Levitt. Mr. Silver eulogized his work as president and deplored his "loss" to the board, while Mr. Bensley said his departure to become Controller was no "loss" since the board would now have "a friend in court" when it appealed to the state for funds.

Conroy on Board

Difference between a majority of the board and Dr. Jansen were also forgotten with the board unanimously approving Dr. Jansen's two nominations for associate superintendents, a matter on which the board majority had refused to act since June. Dr. Jansen had stood upon his legal right to name his own professional staff, subject to board approval, rather than have the board members promote candidates for personal or political reasons.

John F. Conroy, sixty, of 316 E. Mosholu Parkway, Bronx, administrative assistant to Dr. Jansen for the last six years, was appointed to the nine - man Board of Superintendents to succeed the late george F. Pigott jr., in charge of special services.

Edward J. Bernath, forty-nine, of 425 Riverside Drive, assistant superintendent of Districts 5, 7 and 9 in Manhattan, was appointed to succeed Elias J. Lieberman, in charge of junior high schools, who retired on Aug 31.

Both men will undertake their new assignment on June 4.

The board withdrew from its agenda the recording of an opinion by the Corporation Counsel on whether ex - Communist teachers may be required to party associates or be dismissed. Although the ruling will not be made public until some time before the Jan. 13 meeting, it was learned that the Corporation Counsel ruled that the board can exercise such a requirement

Fact-Finders To Be Named

School Board Orders Inquiry on Segregation

By Judith Crist

The Board of Education authorized yesterday the creation of a commission to investigate racial segregation in the public schools and recommended "whatever further action is necessary to come closer to the ideal—the racially integrated school."

The commission, to be appointed by the board president and Superintendent of Schools William Jansen, is to include representatives of the board, the professional staff and community organizations.

Its primary task, under the resolution adopted by the board by its last regular meeting of the year at 110 Livingston St., Brooklyn, is fact-finding—to develop a plan to prevent the "further" development of "racially homogeneous" schools and "integrate the existing ones as quickly as practicable," and "address itself to the closely related and crucial problem of raising the educational and vocational aspirations of talented students from economically and socially deprived groups."

Arthur Levitt, State Controller-elect and outgoing president of the board, said the resolution stemmed from a discussion of segregation in the city schools in which he and Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College, participated at the New York Herald Tribune Forum on Oct. 18. In July Mr. Levitt had asked the Public Education Association to investigate allegations by Dr. Clark that public schools in Negro neighborhoods rendered inferior services.

The P. E. A. investigation, he said yesterday, "relates to the narrow charges that there have been irregularities in our local schools in regard to the treatment of colored pupils. This commission covers a broader field and is designed to counteract the segregation which follows from residential segregation which is the result of a pattern of community thinking."

No date was set for the appointment of the commission. Mr. Levitt is slated to resign the presidency and his board membership on Tuesday and the election of a president will not take place until the board's next regular meeting on Jan. 13. By then Mayor Wagner is expected to have appointed two new board members to replace Mr. Levitt and George A. Timone, who resigned from the board Oct. 6 to become a justice of the Court of Domestic Relations.

Vandals Wreck Public School

NEW YORK —(AP)— Vandals practically put an East Side high school out of business in a two-hour orgy of smashing, slashing, overturning and ink-tossing through 16 rooms.

Wall and corridors were sprayed with fire extinguisher fluid, typewriters smashed, furniture broken up, couches slashed with knives, covers ripped from books.

An anonymous phone call at 9 p.m. sent 10 policemen on the run, but the culprits had disappeared. The school, Corlears Junior High, also known as Public School 12, closed at 7 p.m.

The vandals apparently were inside the six-story building when it closed. They jimmied open the principal's office. After wrecking it, they took keys to 15 classrooms and went from one to another, destroying thousands of records beyond repair.

Union Asks Ban On School Bias

NEW YORK—Immediate abolition of segregated public schools was called for here by delegates to a national civil rights conference sponsored by the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO.

A resolution on racial discrimination, passed unanimously by the more than 250 delegates, specified that school segregation should be forthwith abolished.

School Aid Rise Signed By Dewey

By Edward W. Bates

ALBANY, March 23.—Gov. Dewey signed today a bill providing a $25,000,000 increase in state aid for education and a bill creating a temporary fifteen-member commission to study the financing of public education in New York State, including a possible revision of the present state aid formula.

He also signed a bill exempting from competitive examinations the appointment of administrative assistants in high schools and assistant administrative directors in the New York City school system.

These three bills were among the first of eighteen to be acted on by the Governor since the close of the 1954 legislative session on Saturday. In addition to the three education bills, he signed thirteen others and vetoed two. He has until April 19, end of a constitutional thirty-day period, to act on the rest of the 914 bills passed within the last ten days of the session.

$13 for Each Pupil

The Governor noted that with the new $25,000,000 increase for the next school year, state aid for education will have risen from $109,000,000 in 1945, the second year of his administration, to $327,000,000 for the coming year.

Under the provisions of the bill for the $25,000,000 increase, the money will be apportioned to each school district on the basis of $13 for each pupil in average daily attendance, including kindergarten children who attend for a full day. Where the kindergarten children attend for half a day, the apportionment will be $6.50 for each child.

On the basis of present school population, New York City will receive an estimated $10,164,000. The bill makes the 1954-'55 school year the yardstick for determining average daily attendance, with some exceptions.

Will Appoint Commission

The Governor will appoint the members of the commission to study educational finances, and name its chairman and vice-chairman. One of the main duties of the commission will be to "re-examine" the "formulae by which state aid for education is apportioned." The commission also will study the immediate and long range financial requirements of the public schools, and the need for raising teachers' salaries.

Among the bills signed today was one giving New York City until July 1, 1957, to decide whether its community colleges of applied arts and sciences in Brooklyn, shall be run by the City Board of Higher Education or the City Board of Education, or by trustees alternatively appointed by the Mayor and Governor.

New Survey Returns Again Show Few Negro Teachers

Early returns of the questionnaire on employment of Negroes in the city's schools seem to bear out the general prediction that there has been no improvement in the deplorable condition exposed in the Union's 1951 survey. The survey is being conducted by the PU Committee Against Discrimination.

In the 62 schools reporting thus far, covering 3,745 teachers, there are only 102 Negro teachers, or 2.7%. Of these, only 50 are regulars.

Some of the reports show high school staffs of 93, 100 and 139, with no Negro members. A junior high in Queens with a faculty of 63 likewise has no Negroes.

Commenting on these first returns TU president Abraham Lederman declared:

"These early returns unfortunately seem to indicate that conditions with respect to the employment of Negro teachers in New York City schools have not improved since the Union's survey of three years ago covering 16,000 teachers, which showed that the number of Negro teachers is inexcusably small, an undue proportion of those employed are substitutes, and a large percentage are concentrated in areas predominantly Negro in population.

"These figures reflect the general lack of educational and employment opportunities for Negroes, a situation which represents one of the most serious challenges to our democracy. They also point up an unhealthy condition which permits scores of thousands of our white children in one of the great cosmopolitan centers of the world to go through twelve years of elementary and high school education without having had contact with a Negro teacher."

The TU Committee Against Discrimination urges that questionnaires sent out last week be returned to the Union office.

SOME CITY SCHOOLS HELD SEGREGATED

Civic Groups Ask Education Board to Act on Plight of Negroes, Puerto Ricans

The Board of Education was called upon yesterday to investigated "segregated" schools in New York City.

It was alleged that educational standards were lowered automatically when large numbers of Negro and Puerto Rican pupils entered a school. The problem arises, it was charged, largely because of segregated housing, but the situation persists and lends itself to delinquency and discriminatory educational practices.

These allegations were made at a conference of the Intergroup Committee on New York's Public Schools held at the New Lincoln School, 31 West 110th Street. The committee includes representatives of the United Parents Associations of New York City, the United Neighborhood Houses of New York, the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, the Urban League of Greater New York and forty other organizations.

The committee asked the Board of Education to cooperate with it in a thorough study of the effect of "segregated" schools on the minority groups.

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, Associate Professor on Psychology at City College and one of the leaders of the movement, declared that because of segregation, especially in the Harlem area, children "not only feel inferior but are inferior in academic achievement."

He held that in these schools there were not enough of teachers, inadequate counseling and guidance programs, "illegal" intelligence quotient tests—such as group instead of individual examinations—and too many of classes for retarded pupils and too few for gifted pupils.

"It is no longer necessary to have specific techniques for gerrymandering schools and excluding Negro children from academic and other specialized high schools," he said. "These children are not prepared to pass the tests for these academic and specialized schools."

"This is a most effective form of racial exclusion. It is exclusion by damming up the source of future intellectual functioning. These children by virtue of inadequate elementary education cannot compete with other children in high school."

Results of School Neglect

Justice Hubert T. Delany of the Domestic Relations Court told the group that "we are living in a ghetto" with broken-down schools and second-class academic standards.

He declared there was great lack of remedial teachers in the Harlem schools and noted that most of the delinquents coming before him in court were those who had no remedial teachers to assist them in basic reading.

A large percentage of children in the so-called segregated schools, he said, are shunted to classes for the mentally retarded because they have not been trained properly. And he cited cases of children who had been sent to institutions for the mentally defective when this procedure was unnecessary.

Dr. William H. Kilpatrick, honorary president of the Urban League and Professor Emeritus of Education at Teachers College, Columbia University, held that while the problem was largely one of housing, "it does not appear that the authorities [the City Government and the Board of Education] have so cooperated as to attack this evil to the best advantage."

Asserting that "there is no such thing as equal but separate school arrangements," he added: "The physical arrangements might be equal, but morally they cannot be equal so long as separation implies superiority on the one hand and inferiority on the other. This denies the spirit of the democratic way of life as it does the spirit of our best religion."

The committee headed by Dr. Clark requested the Board of Education to meet with its members to discuss the problem. It also took steps to obtain the cooperation of other municipal bodies concerned.

New York City launches school segregation probe

NEW YORK (ANP) — Stung to the quick by charges of Dr. Kenneth Clark that colored pupils are receiving an inferior education in New York City's public schools, Arthur Levitt, president, board of education, has asked the Public Education Association to make a thorough study of the situation.

Dr. Clark, first colored person to receive permanent appointment to the faculty of a New York municipal college, charged that colored children generally attended predominantly colored schools that were in effect, "segregated."

These schools, he declared, had many substitute and inexperienced teachers, and pupils received inadequate instruction and guidance.

Mr. Levitt replied to the "segregation" charges by placing the blame for large numbers of colored pupils in some schools on the failure of other organizations to provide adequate, mixed housing.

Here in Harlem where the population is 99 percent colored, the schools reflect that small percentage of non-colored residents.

Already new schools built in Harlem are overcrowded to the extent that pupils attend in two shifts. One educator said that where this prevails, a child loses an entire year's benefits because of the abbreviated classes.

For Nation-Wide Drive To End All Segregation

By Paul Tobenkin

HOPEWELL JUNCTION, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People who presented the case which resulted in the Supreme Court's recent outlawing of segregation in education, described today a comprehensive national-wide program now getting under way to end all traces of segregation in American life.

Mr. Marshall spoke at a ceremony at the Workmen's Circle Camp at which he and Charles S. Zimmerman, chairman of the anti-discrimination department of the Jewish Labor Committee, received human rights awards for their fight against discrimination from the Workmen's Circle, largest Jewish labor fraternal group in the United States The awards consisted of illuminated scrolls to each man, outlining his part in the fight for human rights.

The most significant suggestion in the program enunciated by Mr. Marshall was one for creation of a "loosely drawn federation" of church, labor and minority and other groups interested in civil rights for cooperation at every level from grass roots to the White House to implement favorable court decisions and to press the fight against segregation.

In response to a reporter's question, Mr. Marshall said: "There is communication now going on with the various groups for the formal establishment of this federation which would permit each of the participating organizations to retain its complete autonomy." He declined to say specifically which groups have thus far been contacted, but he did name a number of organizations which either have been or will be approached. They included the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. and their various affiliated unions, the Jewish Labor Committee, Workmen's Circle, American Jewish Congress, B'nai B'rith, American Jewish Committee and various fraternal and educational groups, church groups, many of which already have adopted resolutions against discrimination, and the organizations representing national minorities in the United Sattes.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "we plan to bar only two groups —the Communist party, the Ku-Klux Klan and their collaborationists."

The other specific points in the program, some of which are now being carried on, are: putting pressure on local school boards, municipal administrations and even state governments to comply with the Supreme Court decisions by admitting Negroes to all levels of educational institutions.

Another objective is to push through the Supreme Court cases now before the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning Jim Crow in transportation. In this connection, Mr. Marshall said, the fight will be carried on also against Jim Crow regulations in intra-city transportation such as local trolley and bus lines.

Another is to press local and national tests all the way to the Supreme Court in the field of recreation. Many parks and playgrounds, he said, are closed to Negroes.

Segregation in housing was Mr. Marshall's final point. Public housing under a Supreme Court decision must be made available to individuals regardless of creed or color, but this is not being properly enforced, he said. Further, he said, in private housing there is a tremendous field for breaking down the segregation principle. In private housing, he said, the fight will be carried on by asking government loan agencies to withhold money from projects whose sponsors do not assure admission of minority groups and by showing landlords that it is good business as well as Americanism to rent to all individuals.

Mr. Zimmerman, a vice-president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, A. F. L., indicated his view that all branches of the labor movement will be glad to cooperate in ending segregation. He emphasized that segregation hurts America not only internally but in the conduct of its foreign affairs.

Noting that the Communist radio waited six weeks before mentioning the decision ending segregation in education, Mr. Zimmerman said that when an instance of discrimination was noted the Communists transmitted it to the world as quickly as possible.

Harlem's 'Segregated' Schools

FOLLOWING closely upon the charges of New York's City College professor, Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, that Negro children are in fact segregated in schools in the Harlem section and in consequence are receiving an inferior education, the president of the Board of Education of New York has ordered an investigation.

Several civic organizations have approved the charges of Dr. Clark that most Negro pupils attend Negro schools, that pupils therein receive inadequate instruction and guidance, and that many substitute and inexperienced teachers are sent to these schools.

The entire country should be as interested in this investigation as is the great metropolis because similar conditions exist elsewhere in scores of urban centers where there are no laws or regulations to enforce educational segregation.

Negro children generally attend public schools where there are few if any white pupils because Negroes are confined, by one means or the other, to certain areas of every city from whence whites have moved, and usually these are oldest areas where housing is obsolescent.

In order to bring about this segregation of Negro pupils it is not necessary that there be prescribed residential segregation forcing Negroes to live in certain districts nor that a state have separate-but-equal laws.

The key to the situation is the housing pattern which city, state and Federal agencies, as well as private real estate interests determine, coupled with the fact that Negroes generally "enjoy" a lower income than whites, and are thus less capable of moving out of their residential islands, even if there were no other handicaps.

All this indicates that the problem of integrating pupils in the public schools of our cities is not solved automatically by favorable court decisions and the abolition of racial segregation laws.

There is very much more to do after all these preliminary goals are won.

If New York State with its thirty-odd laws (with teeth) against racial segregation and discrimination has not been able to fully integrate its public schools, the problem will be obviously more difficult in less progressive areas, especially in the South.

Clearly this calls for a revamping of our strategy in the direction of more subtle and indirect methods on a much wider front than in the past.

ALL-DAY NEIGHBORHOOD SCHOOLS

'Learning by Doing': A Concept That Works

All-Day Neighborhood Schools—Havens for 'Door-Key Kids'

By Judith Crist

Once again New York City's Superintendent of Schools will make a plea before the Board of Estimate for funds to expand what has been nationally—and internationally—recognized as one of the most successful school projects to combat juvenile delinquency.

For four years school officials have vainly sought funds to extend the Board of Education's All-Day Neighborhood Schools (A. D. N. S.) program to two more schools. During the April 7-14 Board of Estimate budget hearings they will renew their plea. This time, it is hoped, the current wave of concern over juvenile delinquency will provide support.

A. D. N. S. is unique in the nation. Pioneered by Miss Adele Franklin, the program's director, with the sponsorship of the Public Education Association, the program was introduced to the city schools in 1936 and is now in effect in four Manhattan schools, Public Schools 33, 194, 108 and 63, all in overcrowded and depressed areas. The hope is to extend it to two similarly situated schools in Brooklyn. But the program itself provides for what Edward C. Lindeman once described as "the great metropolitan school of the future."

Door-Key Kids

Theme of the program, in school, home and community, is basically "learning by doing," a phrase, Miss Franklin observed ruefully, that "became a target for lampooning by cartoonists as well as by conservative educators" when John Dewey introduced it in 1896—and still is one today by those who accept the educational concepts of 1896. The program's purpose is enrichment of the school curriculum: co-ordination of classroom work with after-school activities, the community and the child's personal interests; study of the individual emotional needs of children and the provision of all-day care, with creative as well as physical activities, for children who need it.

The entire school benefits from the school-day program, and the after-school program, from 3 to 5 p. m., is geared particularly for the "Door-Key Kids," children of working parents, who leave home in the morning with the door keys hung around their necks on a string, and come home to empty apartments after school.

In each school the program is conducted by a nine-member A. D. N. S. staff, six "group" teachers, an administrator, a psychiatric social worker and a clerk.

It Worked

Originally, Miss Franklin recalled, the project started on an after-school play-group basis, carrying out school-day interests in creative activities. Teachers who came to watch, "though skeptical," were prone to admit "that certain children who could not concentrate at all during the day and who were completely unco-operative, were working well in after-school groups and were acquiring skills." The boy who failed in arithmetic measured carefully and accurately the lumber he needed to build a shoe-shine box. The children who dramatized stories of pioneer days seemed to know more about American history than those who simply read the textbook in class. Success was so marked that Miss Franklin was invited to work in the day school.

"You feel the difference as soon as you step inside an All-Day Neighborhood School," one observer said. "The children move about—hurrying to get on with a project or lingering over charts and pamphlets that supplement textbooks. Mathematics, geography, literature, spelling and reading all merge as a class constructs a colonial village.

"Another part of school work emphasizes training in service groups. For example, one class has complete charge of keeping the film library and running the projectors. Younger children distribute milk and crackers and collect that money. With teacher guidance, the children work, clean up after themselves and are proud of their dependability.

"Classes go out into the neighborhood on trips to stores, banks, manufacturing plants. This is research for the young child. He uses this material to tell about, write about, illustrate and dramatize.

A Good Investment

About 180 children in each school are in the afternoon program, with a snack provided for them at 3 p. m. and a variety of "club" activities thereafter.

The All-Day Neighborhood schools have a community status, with the doors open to the public at all times, parents and teachers working together and citizens' committees helping them.

What have been the results?

Beyond the meeting of the individual child's needs, the broader development of the child's interest and personality, the preventive care given the disturbed child, the sheer friendliness that contribute so vastly to a child's growth and adjustment, all of which cannot be measured, A. D. N. S. holds up a practical record of achievement. In its schools, truancy—the first step toward delinquency—has been virtually eliminated, and delinquency has been sharply cut. Even more concretely, there is very little destruction of school property at these schools.

The cost of the A. D. N. S. program in each school is about $50,000 for the ten-month school year, including staff salaries and the "snack" and extra materials for after-school activities. The Board of Education needs $100,000 to extend it to two more schools.

"Compare the cost of this program with the cost of institutional care for youths who have become delinquent," Mrs. Broadus Mitchell, chairman of the City-Wide Citizens Committee for A. D. N. S., said. "Annual institutional care for just one boy is estimated at $2,500—without psychiatric care which might double the cost or more. Considered only from the financial point of view, A. D. N. S. represents an economy to the taxpayer. Benefits in human values are boundless."

From baking to shopping, from painting to selling milk—here are some ways in which All-Day Neighborhood Schools work with youngsters.

SEGREGATION AND PUBLIC SCHOOL DECENTRALIZATION.

The Durham Morning Herald.

Whatever merits the decentralization of the North Carolina public school system may have its effect upon any plan of desegregation which the Supreme Court puts into effect is not among them. State Senator Arthur Kirkman suggested the change from a State school system to county systems as a means of delaying the effectiveness of desegregation in the State. He told the North Carolina Associated Press News Council which met during the past week-end that decentralization of schools would require separate suits against each of the counties which maintain racial segregation in the schools and that such a situation would delay integration.

Whatever delay might be gained by such a change in school policy would make little difference. Once the United States Supreme Court issues the decrees by which its decision holding segregation unconstitutional will be implemented widespread legal action may be expected if the proper school authorities undertake to maintain a system of segregation contrary to the decrees of the court. If the county school boards are made responsible and thus become the defendants in any such suits simultaneous suits in many counties may be expected. It will then make little difference whether the State or the counties become defendants insofar as the desegregation timetable is concerned.

If there is to be a gradual desegregation in the schools it will come along the lines determined by the Supreme Court decrees. The statement of President Eisenhower and the brief of Attorney General Brownell suggest that desegregation in the schools may be a gradual process covering a period of time but there is no assurance that such will be the case. The Supreme Court is not obligated to take the advice of the President or the Attorney General.

The most advisable course to take when all the factors are considered cannot be determined until the Supreme Court decress are handed down. These do not of course apply to North Carolina; they apply only to the school districts which are defendants in the suits which have been heard by the court. [illegible] the precedent for the desegregation which takes place where segregation now is the practice. Once the decrees are made known legal action may be expected regardless of the number of suits which may have to be brought to compel compliance with those decrees throughout the section where there is segregation in the schools ject to the control of the Federal government under the 14th Amendment. This is too revolutionary for me to accept. I prefer to think that the dean was misquoted. Were this a true statement of the duty of the state and the power of the Federal government, I would have no hesitancy in saying that we have gone the Communists one better and that we might as well abandon any contention that there is any democracy left in these parts. I think the parent still has the right to select the school to which he may send his child so long as he is willing and able to defray the expense and that public schools may be endowed or operate by private subscription, as they were when I came along. There is a little democracy (rule by the people, not nine men in Washington) left in this country.

But the most unhappy and unfortunate aspect of this desegregation of the schools issue is the confusion of our clerics, especially the Protestants. They can't be so naive as to think that the education of the Negro is the objective of the NAACP. From the day it was organized its purpose has been to remove from the picture of American life everything distinctively Negro in its character. It has not wanted the Negro institutions, many of which are tops, to be mentioned as such; communities that were distinctly Negro could not be so designated; and the activities, sports and otherwise, that are strictly Negro could not be indicated as Negro. This all adds up to the fact that the NAACP has no race pride and that its purpose is amalgamation of the white and Negro races, which should be prevented if humanly possible.

SEGREGATED SCHOOLS.

To the Editor: In a feature article by Ben Price on the subject of desegregation of the public schools there appears this quotation from John T. Fey, Dean of the School of Law of George Washington University: "Even if there is no discernable state aid to privately organized public schools, they may be attacked on the theory of the performance of a state function."

If I interpret the foregoing statement correctly, it means that the Federal government has the power to tell the parent where he may send his child to school, for that, it is a nondelegable duty or function of the State to educate the child, which function is sub-

Catholic Bishop Announces Plans For Greensboro Facility

GREENSBORO, Nov. 14 (AP) —An inter-racial parochial high school for both white and Negro children of the Catholic faith will be established in Greensboro next year, the Rt. Rev. Vincent Waters, bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Raleigh, announced last night.

Earlier in the day, Msgr. Arthur Freeman, pastor of Greensboro's Our Lady of Grace Catholic Church had announced the site of the new school: St. Leo's Hospital, which closed here nine months ago for lack of business.

The news of the parochial school for Greensboro was announced from the pulpits of the city's Catholic churches at mass. Bishop Waters, who is attending a meeting in New Bern, confirmed the fact that the new school will be operated on an integrated basis.

"We are going to integrate Catholics," the bishop added in explanation. "We are not going to integrate non-Catholics." He pointed out that in the past year he has already ordered integration of other Catholic high schools in ths state.

Catholic parochial high schools in the State are presently located in Raleigh, Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Asheville and Southern Pines.

It is the parochial high school at Southern Pines, the Notre Dame Academy for girls, which will be moved to Greensboro. Here it will operate as Notre Dame High School. Girls now attending the academy may transfer to the school's new operation in Greensboro, Msgr. Freeman explained.

The school is operated by the Sisters of Notre Dame. The school will move to Greensboro in the summer and will open for classes in September.

COUNTY BOARDS OK SEGREGATION

The governor of North Carolina was petitioned to recommend legislation as may be necessary to maintain the present system of segregated but equal schools in the state at a joint session of the Board of Commissioners and Board of Education.

The action was taken following the regular weekly meeting of the Board of Commissioners.

The resolution that was passed unanimously stated that the action was taken for the sole purpose of preventing a lowering of present standards of education for either race and of preserving the present harmonious relations existing between the two peoples.

The action was taken in view of the recent Supreme Court ruling against segregation in public schools in the nation.

Additionally, the resolution listed as a further reason for the the action the desire among the great majority of Negro and white citizens to retain the present system of equal but separate school facilities where students of each race may receive more attention and learn more readily and profoundly from teachers of their own race.

All members of the Board of Commissioners were present. Board of Education members not present were J. S. Craig, Jr. and J. C. Roe.

Greensboro, N.C. Acts To Comply With Decision

Greensboro, N. C. (Special) — There was no "come hell or high water" attitudes here last week when the Greensboro school board voted 6 to 1 to take official action to end public school segregation, becoming the first southern city to make the move following the Supreme Court ruling.

In casting the only dissenting vote, an insurance executive told the press that he felt the action was premature, but that he agreed it is necessary to abide by the law.

D. E. Hudgins, chairman of the board, drafted the adopted resolution, which directed the superintendent of schools to study ways and means of complying with the Supreme Court decision.

Chairman Hudgins stated that "the general feeling in the meeting was the highest court in the land has declared a fundamental principle of law.

"We intend to abide by it, besides what we might individually and personally feel. By our action, we hope to provide leadership to the community, the state, the South and the nation," he declared.

N. C. Board Acts to Obey Court Ruling

GREENSBORO, N. C.—(INS)—The superintendent of schools in Greensboro has been instructed by the city school board to begin studying "ways and means for complying" with the U. S. Supreme Court's outlawing of segregation in public schools.

By vote of 6 to 1, the board adopted a resolution upholding the decision. It is believed the first official affirmative reaction of an official school body in the state, perhaps in the South.

Chairman D. E. Hudgins said the resolution "would let the community, the state, the South, and, if necessary, the nation know that we here propose to live under the rule of law."

"We must not fight or attempt to circumvent this decision . . ." Superintendent Ben L. Smith was instructed to begin the studies.

Segregation Advisors Appointed; Governor Selects Three Negroes

Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount is to head a 19-member advisory committee chosen by Governor Umstead to help map North Carolina's program of action under the Supreme Court's ruling that segregation in public schools is in violation of the U. S. Constitution.

The Governor's committee, announced yesterday, is composed of men and women from all sections of the State. It includes three Negroes, two of whom are presidents of State-supported colleges and one of whom is a county home demonstration agent.

Pearsall, chosen by Governor Umstead to be chairman of the group, climaxed a long legislative career by serving as Speaker of the House during the 1947 session of the General Assembly. He is a businessman and a farmer and in 1948 he managed Charles M. Johnson's unsuccessful campaign for Governor.

The committee is to study the problems resulting from the segregation order and help the Governor form his recommendations to the 1955 General Assembly.

Its first meeting, Governor Umstead said, will be in his office at noon on Wednesday, August 11.

The Governor said he was "greatly pleased" that Pearsall had accepted the chairmanship and that he considered the personnel of the committee to be outstanding. "I am grateful," he added, "for the willingness of these patriotic citizens to further serve the State of North Carolina."

The committee is composed of educators, lawyers, businessmen, farmer leaders and local officials.

Negro Members.

Representatives of the Negro race are Dr. F. D. Bluford of Greensboro, president of A&T College; Dr. J. W. Seabrook of Fayetteville, president of Fayetteville State Teachers College; and Mrs. Hazel Parker of Tarboro, Negro home demonstration agent in Edgecombe County.

Other members are:

J. H. Clark of Elizabethtown, former State Senator and now chairman of the North Carolina Medical Care Commission; Ruth Current of Raleigh, State home demonstration agent; Gordon Gray of Chapel Hill, president of the Greater University of North Carolina; Fred B. Helms of Charlotte, prominent lawyer and former president of the N. C. State Bar Association and now a member of the State Judicial Council; Dallas Herring of Rose Hill, chairman of the Duplin County Board of Education.

R. O. Huffman of Morganton, prominent businessman; W. T. Joyner of Raleigh, prominent lawyer and former chairman of the State Board of Elections; Mrs. Helen S. Kafer of New Bern, administrator of the Kafer Memorial Hospital and former president of the New Bern Parent-Teacher Council; Holt McPherson of High Point, editor of the High Point Enterprise; James C. Manning of Williamston, superintendent of schools for Martin County.

Dr. Clarence Poe of Raleigh, chairman of the board of editors of the Progressive Farmer and a leader in education and agriculture; I. E. Ready of Roanoke Rapids, superintendent of Roanoke Rapids City Schools; Paul Reid of Cullowhee, president of Western Carolina College and former controller of the State Board of Education; Judge L. R. Varser of Lumberton, lawyer and former associate justice of the State Supreme Court, now chairman of the State Board of Law Examiners; and Arthur D. Williams of Wilson, farmer, businessman and chairman of the Wilson Board of County Commissioners.

North Carolina Teachers Support Integration Move

DURHAM, N. C. — (ANP) — One hundred and twenty of the state's Negro principals and supervisors have unanimously approved a resolution favoring "wholehearted support of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated schools.

The resolution was approved without a dissenting vote at the closing session of the fifth annual Principals-Supervisors conference held here at North Carolina College last week.

Dr. W. L. Greene, executive secretary of the North Carolina Teachers Association, parent organization of the principals-supervisors group, said he thought the resolution was "good index of the feeling of the membership of the North Carolina Teachers Association."

In the resolution, the principals and supervisors said, " . . . We pledge ourselves to wholehearted support of the decision and stand ready to work cooperatively and faithfully for its implementation."

The group voted to send copies o fthe resolution to the Governor's Advisory Commission an segregation and the schools and to the State Board of Education's committee that is studying the segregation problem.

In other action taken by the group at its final session, C. B. Stewart of Kinston was named chairman of the 1955 planning committee, replacing W. B. Wicker of Sanford.

Negro Teacher in Mixed School On Army Base in Dixie Holds Press Confab, Stumps Reporters

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

DURHAM, N. C.—"If I had the power to push a button that would end segregation in schools immediately, I'd push it today," declared Mrs. Inez McCoy, home economics teacher for 850 interracial junior high school students at Fort Bragg, N. C.

Mrs. McCoy was the subject of a press conference held on the campus of North Carolina College for newsmen interested in hearing her experiences as a Southern Negro teaching a mixed class of youngsters between the ages of 12 and 14.

Dressed as comfortable as possible for the 100 degree heat, the little mother of a two-and-a-half-year-old son gave an air of a woman who did not consider her position unique nor especially newsworthy. In fact as soon as the pleasantries and the introductions were out of the way she made it clear that neither did she consider herself unusual nor did the other twenty-five members of the faculty make her racial difference manifest.

FEELING THAT Mrs. McCoy was attempting to be evasive or that she was trying to over simplify the fact that she is one of two Negro teachers in a mixed public school in the state, reporters asked her what type preparation did she receive in her native Harnett County that would make her adjustment as a teacher in a mixed school so easy and effortless.

At this line of questioning her interest quickened and with this interest her little frame of less than 100 pounds became pert. Her small brown eyes became more intent as she searched through the events of her past to pin-point the special training that had meant so much toward intergroup work.

"I was graduated from Shawtown Training School in Lillington, N. C., and then went to Bennett College. It was during my college days at Bennett that I became used to interracial gatherings."

She said, "When I went to Fort Bragg last year I didn't have any feeling at all about teaching in a mixed school." Obviously puzzled at the ease of the transition, the press service representatives pressed Mrs. McCoy for more details and asked her to think about her first days at the school.

ALMOST AS if to oblige the apparently disappointed interviewers, she recalled one time that she remembers having some misgivings. She said the principal invited her to the all-faculty luncheon and after some mild introspection she decided to attend. "Everyone was perfectly lovely to me and I was glad that I went," she said.

Mrs. McCoy teaches two classes in home economics. One class has twenty students of whom four are Negroes, and the other has five Negroes out of twenty-five. Aside from her teaching duties, Mrs. McCoy is dietitian for the entire school of 850.

She said that in her capacity as dietitian she is in charge of many girls of many nationalities, all children of military personnel. She was asked about the attitude of the girls who worked with her in the preparation of the lunches. "We get along fine together," she said. Once a German girl complained to her that she thought that her assignment of chores was unfair. "This had no racial implications and was remedied to the satisfaction of all after I had a little talk with her," said Mrs. McCoy.

AFTER CONVINCING her questioners that the junior high school at Fort Bragg is running smoothly with a Negro teacher on the faculty, Mrs. McCoy was pressed to state her opinion for the lack of conflict.

In essence she stated that there was no conflict, bickering, confusion or hostility because it was clearly understood by all, from the faculty to the students, that no expression of racial difference would be tolerated by the principal, Mrs. Mary Poole.

The next obvious question was asked in unison, "Where is Mrs. Poole from?" The answer was one of the most shocking revelations of the interview. "Oh, she's from right around Fayetteville," Mrs. McCoy said.

Obviously inferring that this was impossible, the reporters sought to find out where she had gone to have her Southern sensibilities tampered with. "Where did she go to college?" they asked. "She was graduated from Women's College in Greensboro," was the reply. "Are there any other Southerners on the faculty?" someone asked. Mrs. McCoy thought for a while and said, "Yes, two. One from Alabama and another from Mississippi."

"Do you feel that Negro children will be unhappy in schools with white children?"

"No," she said, "unless they are taught the difference." Mrs. McCoy said that another Negro teacher was employed to teach one of the early primary grades a year or so before she was employed in the junior high school. She said that she had been teaching for some time and without an incident until some parents were summoned to counsel about their children.

Mrs. McCoy rose and asked to be excused in order to attend a class. She is working on a master's degree in home economics with a minor in education.

Before leaving she was asked, "If you could push one of three buttons: (1) to end segregation in public school education immediately; (2) to end segregation by some gradual plan, or (3) to establish a voluntary system of integration, which one would you push?"

Time Is Now—By any yardstick the time to end segregation in public schools is now, according to Mrs. Inez McCoy, home economics teacher in the junior high school at Fort Bragg. "The job ahead is to educate the parents that all children are the same," said Mrs. McCoy.—Rivera Photo.

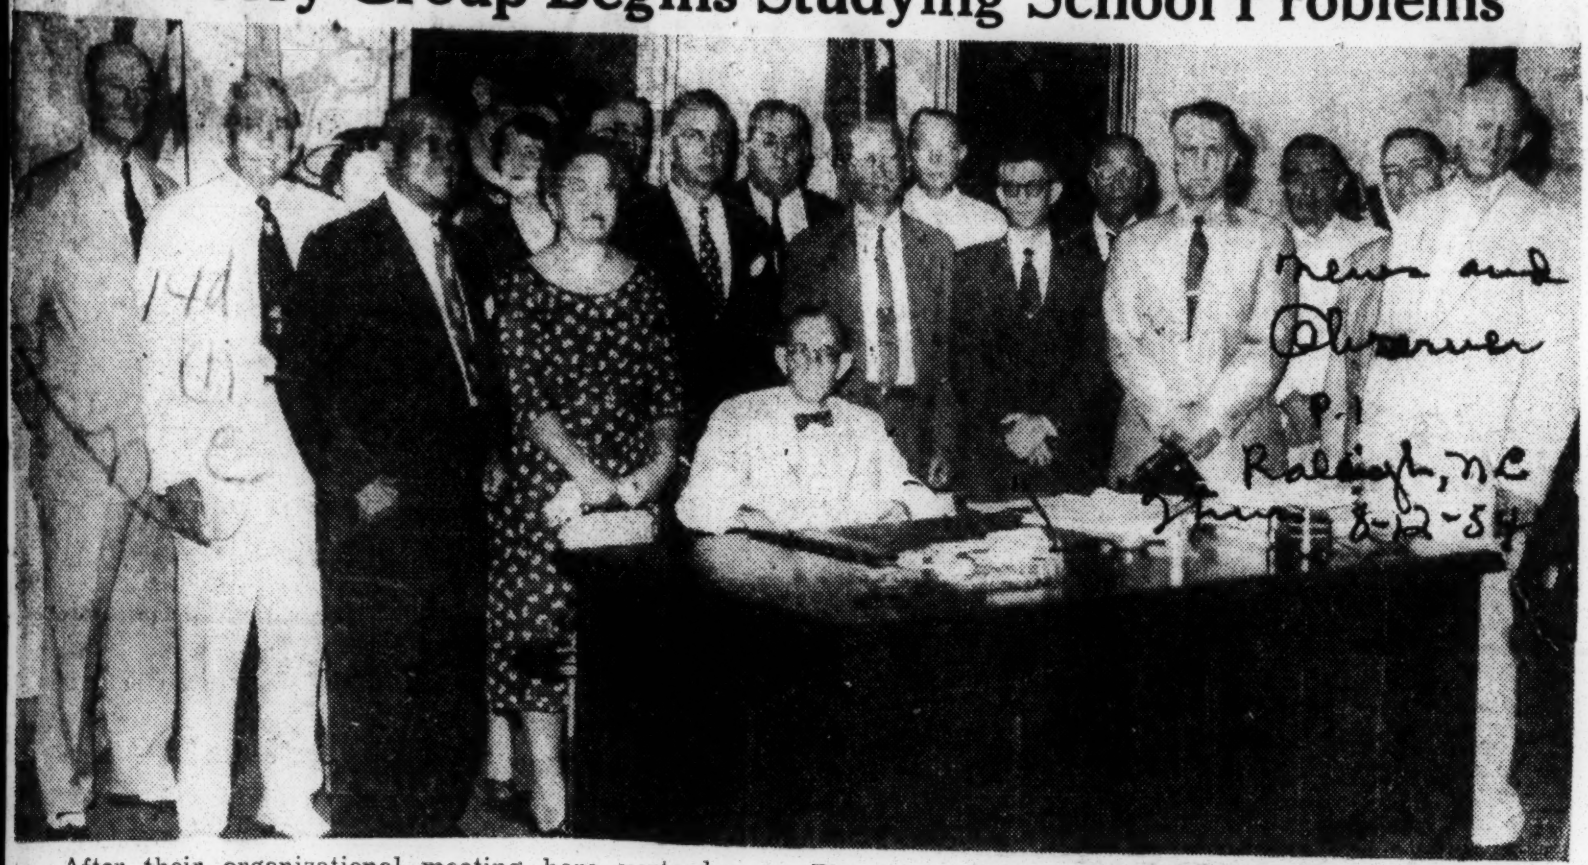
NORTH CAROLINA

Advisory Group Begins Studying School Problems



After their organizational meeting here yesterday, members of an advisory committee working on North Carolina's school program under the Supreme Court decision banning segregation gathered around Governor Umstead (seated) for the above picture. Left to right, they are: J. H. Clark of Elizabethtown, Dr. Clarence Poe of Raleigh, Mrs. Helen S. Kafer of New Bern, Dr. F. D. Bluford of Greensboro, Ruth Current of Raleigh, Mrs. Hazel Parker of Tarboro, I. E. Ready of Roanoke Rapids, Chairman Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, Holt McPherson of High Point, R. O. Huffman of Morganton, James C. Manning of Williamston, Dallas Herring of Rose Hill, Dr. J. W. Seabrook of Fayetteville, Fred B. Helms of Charlotte, W. T. Joyner of Raleigh, Paul Reid of Cullowhee and Judge L. R. Varser of Lumberton. The only member not present was Gordon Gray, president of the Greater University of North Carolina, who is in Honolulu on vacation. Arthur D. Williams of Wilson is in the above group but standing so he cannot be seen. (Staff Photo by Thomas Inman.)

Preservation of Public Schools Keynote of Segregation Session

By WOODROW PRICE.

An advisory committee chosen by Governor Umstead to help develop an approach to the questions raised by the Supreme Court decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional yesterday tackled what its chairman described as "the biggest problem in North Carolina since inauguration of the public school system."

Former House Speaker Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, who was designated by the Governor to lead the 19-member advisory group, emphasized that "the problem has to be met so the public school system can be preserved."

Similar emphasis came from the Governor.

The committee met for an hour with the Governor in his office and then held a two-hour session in Room 312 of the Education Building—customary meeting place of the State Board of Education. As the committee recessed, Pearsall announced it would meet here again on Sept. 10.

"The committee," he said, "approached its problem with an open mind in the hope and belief the public school system of North Carolina can be preserved and strengthened."

The "high point" of that statement, he added to reporters, "is that the problem has to be met so the public school system can be preserved . . . we're attempting to reach such a solution."

Both of the meetings were closed but Governor Umstead disclosed afterward that he had made available to the committee members copies of a study made at his request by the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill. This study emphasized the "gradual approach" toward compliance with the Supreme Court opinion and suggested that the Attorney General of this State should file a brief with the court in the fall. At that time, the court begins hearings to determine how the segregation decision is to be placed in effect.

At the Governor's suggestion, Pearsall yesterday designated W. T. Joyner of Raleigh, L. R. Varser of Lumberton and Fred B. Helms of Charlotte—the three lawyers serving on the advisory committee—as a special committee to consult with Atty.-Gen. Harry McMullan on whether to file a brief in the segregation cases. McMullan said, as the meeting adjourned, that no decision yet has been made.

Governor's View.

Governor Umstead told reporters that he informed the committee, during its session with him, that "the problem as I see it is to establish a policy and a program which will preserve the State public school system by having the support of the people."

"That," he added to the reporters, "covers the broad objective."

Pearsall, talking with newsmen after the afternoon meeting, said the task appears so big that his committee probably will hold meetings right on up to January, when the 1955 session of the General Assembly begins.

"We're hoping to have some recommendation to submit to him (the Governor) by January," he said.

In addition to the Institute of Government report, Pearsall said, the committee would study a report prepared by an interim committee in South Carolina, and also try to get the benefit of similar studies i nother states.

Governor Umstead said the Institute report would be made available to any newspapers requesting it. He gave reporters studies in other states.

Three Sections.

The report is divided into three sections—a discussion of the background on the court's decision, prepared by Institute Director Albert Coates; the text of the decision; and a discussion of the legal aspects of the decision and the alternatives open to the State, prepared by James C. N. Paul, assistant director of the Institute.

In a letter accompanying the report, Coates told the Governor it was "submitted with the humility of those who know great issues are at stake on which they would throw light without heat." No one except the Supreme Court, he pointed out, could speak with authority on the proposals raised.

Coates saw at least three courses open to the State, which he described as:

"It can take the course that the Supreme Court has made its decision—let it enforce it; and meet the court's efforts to enforce it with attitudes ranging from passive resistance to open defiance. to open defiance.

"It can take the course that the Supreme Court has laid down the law, swallow it without question, and proceed in the direction of mixed schools without delay and in unthinking acquiescence.

"It can take the course of playing for time in which to study plans of action making haste slowly enough to avoid the provocative litigation and strife which might be a consequence of precipitate and unthinking acquiescence, and yet make haste fast enough to come within the law and keep the schools and keep the peace."

In connection with the letter, Paul, in pursuance of the suggestion that the Attorney General of North Carolina participate in the October proceedings before the court, said:

Attitude on Brief.

". . . assuming North Carolina does have a vital interest in securing an indefinite, or a long fixed period for slow, orderly adjustment to the court's decision, there is a strong possibility that the court will listen and that the State can win the day on this issue if it resolves to make the effort by making the appropriate arguments."

Pointing to the possibilities of harrassing litigation and damage suits if the State fails to take some steps to meet the Supreme Court ruling, Paul said that "flouting the law, especially when that law is the Constitution of the United States, is hardly a desirable course, especially in these troubled times."

His study, he noted, had cast doubt on some proposals—such as going to a system of "private" schools—which would "contemplate total, permanent segregation."

"That," he added, "does not, of course, prevent their adoption as calculated risks or as devices for delay and postponement of desegregation. But perhaps even their value in that respect must be weighed against the possibility of subjecting the operation of schools in North Carolina to litigious harrassment, damage suits and possibly considerable court supervision. And surely these alternatives must be weighed against a system of orderly, slow adjustment which might entail a minimum of court interference, and a minimum of sudden change—especially in those areas where change is particularly difficult."

North Carolina is not obliged to appear before the Supreme Court in the fall and there are "a variety of reasons (which) might impel the State to shun the court," Paul said. But, he added, the second court decision "may prove almost as important as the first . . . and it is at least questionable that North Carolina's interests would be adequately represented by other parties to the litigation. There is no guarantee that other will conceive or satisfactorily demonstrate the case for a pattern of adjustment which will best fit the needs of this State."

No 'Rule of Law.'

Paul, discussing the proposal that the public school system be abandoned and private schools established, said there is "no square precedent or 'rule of law' to settle the private school issue." However, he said, a combination of factors might result in a court decision forbidding the free private school from denying admission to qualified Negroes.

He also discussed the "tuition grant" proposal, whereby the State would advance a sum of money to the families of school-age children to be used to pay for the children's education in private schools. This plan probably would minimize a finding of "state action" in the operation of schools, he said, but at the same time it posed other questions. For instance, could public revenue be spent to finance an individual's education in a private institution operating free of state control?

Concerning gradual adjustment, Paul said, "It is quite possible that the court, because of the extraordinary nature of its decision, may be persuaded to formulate law which will (a) give the state a long — perhaps indefinite — time to adjust its school system to this principle, (b) and leave the state free to devise its own ways and means to work the adjustment without court interference, (c) and permit geographical variations within the state in ways and means and timing, (d) and permit the state to take limited but appropriate measures to prevent mixed attendance from resulting in such conditions as: (1) racial antipathies seriously impairing the proper functioning of the schools; (2) a serious impairment of the academic standards of the schools; (3) a threat to the health of psychological security of individual students who might be affected by a change in schools."

Methods Outlined.

The study also discussed ways these principles could be used to "devise methods of designating a school to be attended by each child" in the State. These included: assigning children to schools, arranging attendance by creation of new attendance districts and allowing children to elect which school to attend—in other words, a system of voluntary segregation. It said that these methods might be open to court attack if adopted statewide with the sole aim of preserving segregation.

The study included exhaustive and detailed tables showing that the State's population was 25 per cent Negro in 1950 and that, of the Negroes, 361,000 or 34 per cent lived in urban areas with "a high degree of segregation" and 685,000 or 66 per cent in rural areas "with a low degree of segregation."

By counties, the Negro population varies from 10 in Graham to 49,000 in Mecklenburg, and from less than one-fifth of one per cent in Graham to 63.9 per cent in Northampton. In nine counties—Martin, Edgecombe, Gates, Hoke, Halifax, Bertie, Hertford, Warren and Northampton—Negroes make up more than half the population.

Negroes will have 29.6 per cent (282,000) of the school enrollment this year, the study showed, while in 1953 Negro schools had 19.6 per cent ($77,408,825) of the total investment in school property and in 1952 Negro schools received 26.7 per cent ($36,984,592) of operational expenditures for public school purposes.

Every member of the Governor's advisory committee attended yesterday's meeting with the exception of President Gordon Gray of the Greater University of North Carolina. Gray, who has been out of the country on vacation for some time, was represented by the University provost, Dr. J. Harris Purks.

Committee members besides Pearsall, Gray and the three lawyers named on the committee to confer with the Attorney General are: Dr. F. D. Bluford of Greensboro, J. H. Clark of Elizabethtown, Ruth Current of Raleigh, Dallas Herring of Rose Hill, R. O. Huffman of Morganton, Mrs. Helen S. Kafer of New Bern, Holt McPherson of High Point, James C. Manning of Williamston, Mrs. Hazel Parker of Tarboro, Dr. Clarence Poe of Raleigh, I. E. Ready of Roanoke Rapids, Paul Reid of Cullowhee, Dr. J. W. Seabrook of Fayetteville and Arthur D. Williams of Wilson.

Also present for the meeting were Atty.-Gen. McMullan; Lt.-Gov. Luther Hodges, who is chairman of the State Board of Education; J. A. Pritchett of Windsor, chairman of a sub-committee of the State Board working on the segregation problem; Victor Bryant of Durham, chairman of a commission on higher education; Fred Folger of Mt. Airy, chairman of a commission studying public school laws; and W. Frank Taylor of Goldsboro, the Governor's legislative assistant last year and probably next year.

N.C. College sets discussion series on school desegregation

DURHAM, N.C. — Six adult discussion programs centering around the problems of segregation and the schools will be presented by the James E. Shepard Memorial Library at North Carolina College during November, December and January as part of the library's adult education project.

The project is being financed by the Fund for Adult Education, an independent organization established by the Ford Foundation. Some $5,000 was made able to the Shepard Library in 1953 in the form of a sub-grant from an original grant made to the American Library Association.

Dr. Benjamin F. Smith, NCC librarian, who is in overall charge of the project. In the current discussions, Dr. J. C. Finney of the dept., of education, has charge of the education discussion and Prof. Stanley Hebert is the leader in the discussions on labor and related economic problems.

— o O o —

AMONG THE topics scheduled in the education series for the remainder of the current cycle are: "Is Emigration the Solution to the Problem of Negro Education in the South?" Nov. 8; "Did the Arguments Against Segregation in the May 17 Suprele Court Decision Reflect the Thinking of America?" Nov. 22; "Was the 14th Amendment Authored with the Negro's Right to an Education in Mind?" Dec. 6; "Is Desegragiton Consistent with the American Way of Life?" Dec. 20; "Programs of the States in Public School Integration," Jan. 10; "What are the Next Steps for Negro Education in the South?" Jan. 24.

Equality Essential

Obviously the new junior-senior high school set-up in Raleigh can only serve the community or hope to succeed in it if the two junior high schools which feed the one senior high school are equal in the opportunities and facilities they offer their students.

This, of course, does not mean that parents and students in Hugh Morson can immediately expect the modern building which the Josephus Daniels Junior High will be when it is completed. It does mean that so far as is possible, within the limitations of space and architecture, Hugh Morson parents and students have a right to expect full equality in everything else.

Raleigh school officials do not come to the junior-senior high school system suddenly. The plan was recommended several years ago and during that time there has been ample opportunity to make plans for a good start and a fair start. Yet even considering the personnel matter involved in the choice of principal, which brought the protests of some Morson parents out into the open, there seems some basis for their feeling that at the outset of the new system Morson is not being given anything like an equal start. The very small sum allocated to repairs, etc., this summer at Hugh Morson obviously cannot begin to make Morson the best school it could be within its physical limitations. Somewhere the school board should find money to make less apparent the dramatic physical differences between the new school and the old one. And whatever else is done, there should be absolute equality between the schools in the quality and number of the teaching staffs and the equipment within the schools.

Such equality would not serve Hugh Morson alone. Clearly unless students come up from the two junior high schools from equal opportunity and with equal training the new senior high school at Needham Broughton cannot be a success. Indeed, if students from one school come up less prepared than from the other, the less well prepared students will pull down the standards set for all. Under this circumstance, it is as much the interest of parents whose children will go to the new Daniels school as of those whose children will go to the old Morson school to insist upon equal opportunity for children in both schools.

Undoubtedly it may be true that the Morson mothers who protested that that school was being discriminated against are mistaken. The school superintendent and the school board may be planning just such equality as has been demanded. The protest, however, will have served a useful purpose as it emphasizes that no such system as that upon which Raleigh is embarking can succeed or should succeed unless it is based upon fairness to all schools, all sections, and all children.

Children's Favorite at Camp Lejeune

Teacher Proves Integration Can Work in Tarheel School

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

NEW BERN, N. C.—Skeptics who doubt that Negro teachers will become integrated into the Southern educational picture need to take a close look at the classroom and work of Mrs. W. E. Daves in the Camp Lejeune Children's School near here.

Since last March 8 Mrs. Daves has been teaching at this Marine base.

Her classes have proved to be among the most popular in the school and she has rapidly become one of the most respected teachers in the system.

MRS. DAVES is the only Negro among forty-eight teachers. Some twenty-five students are Negroes in grades one through twelve. One Negro girl, Mary Helen Gray, was among the twenty-eight graduates in the 1954 graduating class.

Acceptance of Mrs. Daves was complete after the first two weeks. Her pleasing personality, as well as her competent class room performance have won the respect of parents and children alike.

Proof of Mrs. Daves' complete acceptance came last Mother's Day. On that occasion, children showered her with gifts and tokens of appreciation.

* * *

MRS. DAVES herself has taken the transition from the all-Negro classroom of her former school post in Greenville, N. C., to the integrated Marine bass situation in stride.

"It was merely a change of jobs," Mrs. Daves said.

Not only is Mrs. Daves now the only teacher in the system with a master's degree, she is the only one of the teachers thus far to conduct her class on a tour of the complete installations at the base.

N.C. Governor and Committee Want to Keep School System

Recommendations To Be Readied For Action of Next Legislature

By RAY JENKINS
Staff Writer, Raleigh News and Observer
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C., Aug. 21—As Gov. William B. Umstead and his advisory committee came to grips with the segregation issue, they enunciated a principle: North Carolina is going to try to strengthen and preserve its public school system.

"The problem as I see it is to establish a policy and a program which will preserve the state public school system by having the support of the people," Gov. Umstead told the committee he named to help him formulate policies for submission to the 1955 General Assembly.

Committee Chairman Thomas J. Pearsall echoed the sentiment and added, "We're trying to reach such a solution." To that end, he said, the group will meet frequently in an effort to be ready for the Assembly when it convenes in January.

Institute's Report

One document which will exert considerable influence on the committee's report is a bulky compilation on the subject of segregation produced at the Governor's request by the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill. The report, after going into the background of the segregation decision, listed at least three courses open to the state:

1. "It (the state) can take the course that the Supreme Court has laid down the law, swallow it without question, and proceed in the direction of mixed schools without delay and in unthinking acquiescence.

2. "It can take the course that the Supreme Court has made its decision—let it enforce it, and meet the court's efforts to enforce it with attitudes ranging from passive resistance to open defiance.

NORTH CAROLINA

3. "It can take the course of playing for time in which to study plans of action making haste slowly enough to avoid the provocative litigation and strife which might be a consequence of precipitate and unthinking acquiescence, and yet make haste fast enough to come within the law and keep the schools and keep the peace."

In favoring the "gradual approach," the report also said indirectly that North Carolina should file a brief before the Supreme Court in October, when recommendations on implementation of the decision will be received. Attorney General Harry McMullan has indicated he is wary of appearing in October, because the state is not directly involved in the cases, yet might be bound by the second decree.

The second court decision, said the report, "may prove almost as important as the first . . . and it is at least questionable that North Carolina's interests would be adequately represented by other parties to the litigation. There is no guarantee that others will conceive or satisfactorily demonstrate the case for a pattern of adjustment which will best fit the needs of this state." It added:

". . . Assuming North Carolina does have a vital interest in securing an indefinite, or a long fixed period for slow, orderly adjustment to the court's decision, there is a strong possibility that the court will listen and that the state can win the day on this issue if it resolves to make the effort by making the appropriate arguments."

Other Proposals

Other proposals touched on by the report:

Private in lieu of public schools—"There is no square precedent or 'rule of law' to settle the private school law." But a combination of factors might lead to a court decision forbidding the free private school to deny admission to qualified Negroes.

"Tuition grants" by the state to families for private schooling for their children—This posed a question: Could public revenue be spent to finance an individual's education in a private institution operating free of state control?

Umstead Names Committee To Study Segregation Program

Three Negroes Among 19 Members Slated To 'Sift' Various Proposals

By RAY JENKINS
Staff Writer, Raleigh News and Observer

RALEIGH, N.C., Aug. 14—Official silence in North Carolina on the school segregation decision has been broken by Gov. William B. Umstead's appointment of a 19-member advisory committee which will help him draft recommendations for the 1955 General Assembly.

The committee includes three Negroes. Two of them are presidents of state-supported colleges: Dr. F. D. Bluford, Agricultural and Technical College, Greensboro, and Dr. J. W. Seabrook, State Teachers College, Fayetteville. The third one is Mrs. Hazel Parker of Tarboro, Negro home demonstration agent.

As chairman, the governor named Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, farmer and businessman and 1951 speaker of the House in the General Assembly. Remaining committee members live in all sections of the state and represent a cross-section of the professions.

The committee, Gov. Umstead stressed, is a policy program developing group and not a fact-finding agency. But he added that he will not limit the scope of the committee's work. He said he hoped the group would sift and "think through" the various segregation proposals.

Await Decision on Brief

Appointment of the advisory committee is expected to bring an earlier decision on whether North Carolina will join some of the other Southern states and file a brief this fall before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Earlier, Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan indicated he was wary of filing a brief in a case involving another state for fear the findings in the case would be binding upon North Carolina. But he said he would not decide until he conferred with the three lawyers on the advisory committee.

While the Supreme Court's May 17 ruling pertained only to cases involving schools in South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia, it called for additional arguments this fall on implementation of the decree. States not directly involved, but maintaining segregated schools, were invited to submit briefs as "friends of the court."

Meanwhile, another committee set up to study the thorny subject of segregation held its first meeting, a closed session. This one was appointed from membership on the State Board of Education by the board chairman, Lt. Gov. Luther H. Hodges. The five - member group includes Dr. Harold L. Trigg of Raleigh, president of Saint Augustine's College and sole Negro board member.

Dual Purpose Committee

This committee, said Hodges, will "study objective school laws and regulations with particular reference to the legal duties and responsibilities of the State Board of Education." Besides its fact-finding activities, the committee also will serve in a liaison capacity with other official and unofficial agencies.

At its first meeting behind closed doors, the committee heard members of the attorney general's staff discuss the legal authority possessed by the state board and local school boards. The remainder of the two-hour session was given over to a general discussion of segregation.

On another front, a more practical problem connected with segregation was posed. The State Advisory Budget Commission, touring North Carolina to hear budget requests from state institutions and agencies preparatory to drafting recommendations for the 1955 General Assembly, met in Durham, home of North Carolina College for Negroes.

Dr. Alfonso Elder, president of the college, asked the commission to approve $2,000,000 for permanent improvements. A commission member, aware of the segregation decision and of dwindling state revenues, then asked Dr. Elder if there was any need for continuing the NCC law school.

Two Law Schools Costly

That question, Dr. Elder said, awaits the answer of the "University of North Carolina, the State Legislature and the people of North Carolina." Two law schools (the other one at UNC began admitting Negroes three years ago) are more expensive to operate than one, he said.

EDUCATOR LAUDS N. C. LEADERSHIP

Dr. C. F. Carroll Says State Probably Leads Others On Racial Problems

HIGH POINT, Dec. 10 (AP) — Dr. Charles F. Carroll, state superintendent of public instruction, said here today North Carolina is probably farther advanced in its approach to the segregation problem than any of the other states concerned.

Dr. Carroll was the principal speaker at the annual winter conference of the school superintendents division of the North Carolina Education Assn., which closed today.

"By abstaining from anticipatory and precipitate administrative action," Dr. Carroll said, "our leaders have not confused nor have they inflamed the minds and emotions of the people."

He also said no "responsible" person in the state has made a statement or committed an act that he had to retract or regret later.

"Instead, our governors, legislators, attorneys general, advisory commission members, school boards, educators, newspapermen and others have consciously striven to create and sustain an atmosphere in which people can think clearly and act intelligently.

"This procedure is characteristic of the manner in which North Carolinians have always approached grave problems and decisions. It is this approach that causes many people elsehwere to look to us for guidance."

Dr. Carroll also said it was in "this calm setting" that the state's brief was prepared for the Supreme Court, which must still set up the machinery to carry out its desegregation order of last May 17. Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan and his staff of assistants prepared North Carolina's brief and Dr. Carroll said "it is viewed as a model" for other states. He said the Institute of Government's legal analysis of the problem and the Governor's Advisory Committee's work had been helpful to the state in its approach.

"All of these events are integral parts of North Carolina's plan to preserve the public school system, respect community attitudes, and solve properly the manifold social, legal and economic aspects of the perplexing problem," he said.

He added that "under the calm and stable leadership of Gov. Hodges and the general assemblies of the years ahead, I am confident that this state will resolve the issue of segregation to the satisfaction of all who genuinely want it resolved."

School Bars Two Students

GREENSBORO, Sept. 10 (AP)—Two teen-age girls who attended a Negro high school here last year may still have the opportunity of studying in a rural Guilford County white school if they prove they are Indians.

Supt. E. D. Idol said tonight that the girls would probably be allowed to attend classes at Colfax School if they could produce evidence that they were of Indian origin.

Appeared At Colfax.

The teenagers, one 18 and the other 19, had appeared at Colfax Thursday to register for the new school year.

Principal W. H. Dewar told them that he was not allowed to accept transfer students from Dudley High School, a Negro school.

The girls, accompanied by their mother, protested that they were not of Negro descent, but of mixed Scotch-Irish-English-Indian extraction and consequently belonged in a white school rather than in a Negro unit.

"If the question is a question of their race," said Idol, "that puts a different face on the matter. If they are Indians, and I see no reason why they can not prove such if it is so, then they probably belong in a white school.

"But if they should be Negroes and desire to enter Colfax only on the basis of the recent Supreme Court ruling that segregation is not lawful, then we would have to say, 'No'."

Idol explained that the North Carolina law prohibiting mixing of Negro and white students in one school was still in effect and that the rule would have to be upheld locally.

Graduates, Professional Levels Citited In Report

DURHAM, N. C. —According to Dr. Guy B. Johnson, a University of North Carolina authority on race relations, Negro students on graduate and professional levels are being integrated into various institutions in the South with little friction or tension. Dr. Johnson was speaking on a recent forum at Duke University.

He reported that some 500 to 1000 Negro students were enrolled in graduate and professional schools during the academic year of 1953-54 and estimated some 1000 to 1500 enrolled during the 1954 summer sessions.

Dr. Johnson's address was apparently tended toward opposing the stand several southern states have taken against the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling for integration in the public schools for he said. "In contrast to all of the talk about preserving segregation in public schools in spite of the Supreme Court's decision, the colleges and universities of the South have quietly undergone a revolution in the last five or six years."

He stated that at least thirty publicly - supported schools and approximately forty private and church colleges have admitted Negro students. He said some of the schools had changed on a voluntary basis while others accepted Negroes as a result of court decisions.

The race relations authority named the states of Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi as being the only ones whose state universities have not admitted Negroes.

From his observations on a recent tour of southern institutions which are integrated, Dr. Johnson said the majority of Negro students are on the graduate and professional levels. "When the state institutions start admitting Negro undergraduates as they are bound to do in the next year or so, the undergraduates will profit by the pioneering which the older Negro students have done," Dr Johnson concluded.

October Hearings Awaited

City Wants Final Ruling Before Dropping Race Bar

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—More evidence that the final Supreme Court decree in the school segregation cases will set the pattern for integration in all types of public facilities throughout the South was given last week by the City Council of this western North Carolina mountain city.

City Manager Weir announced the City's policy, which was decided at a Council meeting on July 19, in answer to the petition of Negro leaders to admit all citizens to Recreational Park, now reserved exclusively for whites

THE REQUEST was made by Harold T. Epps, attorney, and the Rev. L. A. Brown, who said that they and seven others had been selected by a "Citizens Committee" of 50 to 75 colored citizens.

Council also was "sitting on" an earlier request from the same group to open up Malvern Hill Park, another public recreation facility restricted exclusively to whites, or to provide equal park facilities for Negroes in the West Asheville section.

THE CITY Manager said that Council had considered the question and decided to delay making any changes in the city's racial segregation policies until after the Supreme Court renders its decree in the school cases. The high court asked counsel for both sides to present arguments in October. The rendering of the decisions may not come until months after that.

Mr. Epps, objecting to the delay, pointed out to Council at its meeting on Friday that, when rendered, the decree would apply only to public schools. He cited the Supreme Court's decision, rendered a week after the school segregation decision last May, in which it held that a city (Louisville, Ky.) could not deny equal use of its public parks to Negroes, even by leasing the facilities to private operators.

* * *

MAYOR EARL W. Eller asked that the delegation exercise "patience and level-headedness." He said that many citizens do not fully understand the decision of the Supreme Court as applied to other forms of segregation than that practiced in public schools.

A unique argument was made in support of the segregation policies of the city by Councilman Theodore D. Summer. He said that Negroes are given use of recreational facilities by the City commensurate with the percentage of taxes paid by Negroes.

MR. EPPS and Mr. Brown told Council that it hoped that they would respond favorably to their request. If it does not, they said, means of "legal redress are now open to us."

Another unique pattern of "separate but equal" public facilities exists here in Asheville The municipal golf course is open to all citizens on a non-segregated basis each Monday and Tuesday. On these two days Negroes have equal access to all club facilities available at the course.

* * *

BUT ON Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday the golf facility is restricted to white players.

City Manager Weir said that the administration has the whole question "under advisement."

Negro Educators Favor Integration

N.C. Governor, Race Heads Battle Over School Issue

By A. M. RIVERA Jr.

DURHAM, N. C.—The segregation issue in public schools remained big news in the Tar Heel State here last week as sorties were made on three important fronts.

Governor William B. Umstead commissioned his newly appointed nineteen-member committee on segregation "to find, if possible, a policy and a program which will preserve the state public school system by having the support of the people: (2) Kelly Alexander, state president of the NAACP, disclosed that his office is flooding the state with petitions demanding the immediate end to segregation, and (3) some 120 North Carolina principals and supervisors adopted a resolution here Friday at the close of the fifth annual principals-supervisors conference pledging support to the U. S. Supreme Court decision and vowing to work cooperatively and faithfully for its implementation."

DURING THE closing session of the meeting of state educators, thirty-nine participated in an independently conducted Courier poll and voted 100 per cent in favor of integration. The poll last week increased the number of teachers and school administrators questioned by this paper on their feeling toward integration to 282, representing most of the Southern and border states.

In adopting the resolution, the conference also voted to send official copies to Governor Umstead's nineteen-member committee on the segregation question and to the subcommittee on segregation of the State Board of Education.

At the Governor's mid-week press conference, copies of "A Report to the Governor of North Carolina on the Decision of the Supreme Court of the United States . . . ," consisting of 200 pages, with maps and charts were issued to members of the press. The report, prepared by the Institute of Government at the University of North Carolina under the direction of Albert Coates, suggested alternatives that North Carolina might employ to offset the immediate effect of the decision. The volume contained nothing new and conceded little hope for escaping for long the Court's mandate.

200 principals, supervisors support high court decision

DURHAM, N.C. — (ANP)— One hundred and twenty of the state's colored principals and supervisors have unanimously approved a resolution favoring "wholehearted support of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated schools.

The resolution was approved without a dissenting vote at the closing session of the fifth annual Principals-Supervisors conference held here at North Carolina College last week.

Dr. W. L. Greene, executive secretary of the North Carolina organization of the principals - supervisors group, said he thought the resolution was "good index of the feelings of the membership of the association."

— o O o —

IN THE RESOLUTION, the principals and supervisors said "...We pledge ourselves to wholehearted support of the decision and stand ready to work cooperatively and faithfully for its implementation."

The group voted to send copies of the resolution to the Governor's Advisory Commission on segregation and the schools and to the State Board of Education committee that is studying the segregation problem.

In other action taken by the group at its final session, C. B. Stewart of Kinston was named chairman of the 1955 planning committee, replacing W. B. Wicker of Sanford.

N. C. HOLDS 1ST SCHOOL BIAS MEET

RALEIGH — (INS) — Gov. William B. Umstead held his first meeting here Wednesday with the newly-appointed advisory committee to study segregation in public schools.

Umstead told newsmen that it was an organizational session and that the committee's purpose was to "find and establish a policy and a program which will preserve the state public school system by having the support of the people."

He defended three Negro members of the group as representing wide cross-sections of the Negro population. They were Dr. J. W. Seabrook, president of the Fayetteville State Teachers College, Dr. F. D. Bluford, president of A. and T College at Greensboro, and Mrs. Hazel Parker of Harboro, Negro Home Demonstration Agent for Edgecomb County.

Umstead said that the group will make a survey on problems arising from the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

He indicated that the recommendations of the committee may be passed on the state legislature.

Gov. selects segregation advisors

RALEIGH, N.C. — Three colored persons were among the 19 members of an advisory committee appointed last week by Gov. William B. Umstead to help map the state's program of action under the Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation in public schools.

They are Dr. F. D. Bluford of Greensboro, president of A. and T. College; Dr. J. W. Seabrook, president of Fayetteville State Teachers College, and Mrs. Hazel Parker of Tarboro, Edgecombe County home demonstration agent.

— o O o —

THOMAS J. Pearsall, veteran politician and former speaker of the state House of Representatives, chairman, and all other members of the commission are white. He is a businessman - farmer.

The commission's task will be to study the problems arising from the Supreme Court's desegregation order and aid the governor in formulating his recommendations to the 1955 General Assembly.

Its first meeting is slated to be held in the governor's offices here Wednesday.

Governor Expresses Ideas About Segregation Target

The 19-member advisory committee named to explore school segregation problems raised by the recent Supreme Court decision that segregation is unconstitutional is a policy-program developing body, not a fact-finding committee, Governor Umstead said yesterday.

The Governor emphasized that he would not attempt to limit the scope of the committee. However, as he sees it, he said, it will be "not to make a fact finding and hearing holding committee as a committee to think through the various proposals and make a study of policy and program."

The committee, headed by former House Speaker Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, is to hold its first meeting in the Governor's office at noon on Wednesday. That meeting, the Governor said, will be a closed session.

Umstead said he is not attempting to say whether future meetings will be open. However, the initial meeting will be the organizational session of the committee "and I feel it best that it not be open," the Governor said.

Meanwhile, a similar committee of the State Board of Education held its first meeting.

Umstead said that all 19 members named to the body accepted as soon as he called them about it. He contacted only one man who declined to serve, he said, "and I thoroughly understood his situation." This man was so busy, the Governor said, that he hesitated about asking him in the beginning.

Asked if the advisory committee would help determine whether the State will join some of the other southern states in filing briefs before the Supreme Court in the segregation cases, the Governor said Attorney General Harry McMullan has indicated he would like to confer with lawyers on the committee about that. Practicing attorneys who were named to the advisory group are W. T. Joyner of Raleigh, Judge I. R. Varser of Lumberton and Fred B. Helms of Charlotte.

Members of the committee will not receive per diem. But the Governor said that if clerical assistance is needed he will ask the Council of State to make an allocation from the contingency and emergency fund.

Meanwhole, the State Board of Education's segregation committee held a meeting, its first, that lasted almost two hours.

That meeting also was closed, but Schools Superintendent Charles F. Carroll said it dealt primarily with the legal authority of the State Board and local school boards.

Three members of the staff of Attorney General Harry McMullan were on hand for the discussions. The three, Assistants Attorneys General Claude Love, Ralph Moody and Beverly Lake, outlined the legal limits of the authority held by the school boards. Outside of that question, said Carroll, the segregation issue was discussed in a general way. The session lasted for an hour and 45 minutes.

The committee was set up recently by Lt. Gov. Luther Hodges, the board's chairman, to study school segregation laws and regulations. Hodges said it will deal particularly with "the legal duties and responsibilities" of the State Board. The committee will serve as a liaison body with other official and unofficial agencies and groups, but is not intended to conflict with Governor Umstead's commission on segregation.

Members of the committee include J. A. Pritchett of Windsor, chairman; Dr. Carroll; and board

N. C. may ask for mercy in desegregation

RALEIGH, N.C. — Instead of trying to defy the U. S. Supreme Court, North Carolina may ask for mercy in enforcement of the court's desegregation orders.

That indication was given here last week when the 19-member desegregation study commission appointed by Gov. William B. Umstead held its first meeting in the governor's office.

The commission, an advisory group, was chosen by the governor to help develop an approach to problems posed by the Supreme Court's decision that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

— O o —

AFTER A one-hour meeting in the governor's office, the commission — with 18 of the 19 members on hand — moved over to the Education Building and held a two-hour session there.

According to the body's chairman, Former State House Speaker Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, it will meet here again on Sept. 10 and expects to hold subsequent meetings frequently up until January.

He described the problem facing the committee as "the biggest that has faced North Carolina since the inauguration of the public school system."

— o O o —

Both of the sessions were closed to press and public, but the governor revealed after the meetings that he had given the group copies of a study made at his request by the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill.

This study emphasized the "gradual approach" toward compliance with the Supreme Court decision and urged that the state attorney general file a brief with the court this fall, as the court has requested.

At that time, the court will begin hearings to determine how and when its segregation decision is to be put into effect.

— o O o —

FOLLOWING THE meetings, the chairman of the group appointed the three lawyers on the commission—W. T. Joyner, L. R. Varser and Fred B. Helms—as a committee to discuss with the attorney general the advisability of filing a brief with the Supreme Court this fall.

In addition to the Institute of Government report, according to Mr. Pearsall, the group will study a report prepared by an interim committee in South Carolina and try to get the benefit of similar studies in other states.

The institute report is divided into three sections, including a discussion of the background of the court's decision prepared by Institute Director Albert Coates, text of the decision and alternatives open to the states.

— o O o —

IN A COVERING letter, Mr. Coates told the governor that the report was submitted "with the humiliation of those who know great issues at stake on which they would throw light without heat."

No one except the Supreme Court, Coates pointed out, could speak with authority on the proposals made, but he cited three courses open to the state, as follows:

"It can take the course that the Supreme Court has made its decision—let it enforce it; and meet the court's efforts to enforce it with attitudes ranging from passive resistance to open defiance.

"IT CAN take the course that the Supreme Court has laid down the law, follow it without question and proceed in the direction of mixed schools without delay and in unthinking acquiescence.

"It can take the course of playing for time in which to study plans of action, making haste slowly enough to avoid strife which might be a consequence of precipitate and unthinking acquiescence and yet make haste fast enough to come within the law and keep the schools and keep the peace."

Pursuing the suggestion that the state's attorney general take part in the October conference with the Supreme Court, James C. N. Paul, assistant director of the institute, said:

— o O o —

". . . ASSUMING that North Carolina does have a vital interest in securing an indefinite or a long, fixed period for slow, orderly adjustment to the court's decision, there is a strong possibility that the court will listen and that the state can win the day on this issue if it resolves to make the effort by making the appropriate arguments."

Mr. Paul, who assisted in preparing the institute report, pointed to the possibilities of harrassing litigation and damage suits if the state fails to take some steps to meet the Supreme Court ruling.

Flouting the law, especially when that law is the Constihardly a desirable course, especially in these troubled tution of the United States, is times," the assistant director on the institute declared.

His study, he said, had cast doubt on some proposals such as going to a system of "private" schools which would "contemplate total, permanent segregation."

— o O o —

"THAT DOES not, of course, prevent their adoption as calculated risks or as devices for delay and postponement of desegregation," Mr. Paul said, but added:

"Perhaps their value even in that respect must be weighed against the possibility of subjecting the operation of schools in North Carolina to litigious harrassment, damage suits and possibly considerable court supervision.

"And surely these alternatives must be weighed against a system of orderly, slow adjustment which might entail a minimum of court interference and sudden change—especially in those areas where change is particularly difficult."

Noting that North Carolina is not obliged to appear before the Supreme Court this fall, Mr. Paul said there are "a variety of reasons" which might impel the state to shun the proceedings.

But, he pointed out, the court's second decision may be as important as the first . . . "and it is at least questionable whether North Carolina's interests would be adequately represented by other parties to the litigation."

Discussing the proposal to abandon the public school system for private schools, Paul said there is "no square precedent or rule of law to settle the private school issue."

HE ADDED that a combination of factors might result in a court decision forbidding the free private school from denying admission to qualified colored students.

School Mixing Is Inspiring Anti-Integration Propaganda

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

DURHAM, N. C.—A clever and vicious stockpile of propaganda warning of "wholesale job losses" by Negro teachers is slowly building up in several influential places in the nation.

One of the latest indications of this trend is an article appearing in the Aug. 27 issue of U. S. News and World Report called "Negro Teachers for the North?"

The illustrated article is based upon three assumptions which the publication claims are supported by original facts and figures.

THEY ARE these:

(1) "Negro teachers in the South, thousands of them, are to lose their jobs when segregation ends in public schools.

(2) "If they are to go on teaching, the North will have to give them jobs. But openings there will be scarce, if present use of Negro teachers is any criterion, and

(3) "It is a problem that causes real concern among school officials. Even in the North, objections are raised when Negroes are assigned to teach white children."

* * *

IN BIG bold headlines, the magazine piece avers, "in seventeen Southern states and the District of Columbia, one out of each five teachers is a Negro.

"In thirty-one Northern and Western states, one out of every seventy-three teachers is a Negro."

Numerically, the article points out on a chart, there are 310,319 white teachers in the "segregated states," while in the non-segregated states the number of white teachers is 722,487.

On the other hand, the number of Negro teachers listed for the segregated states is 76,390 against 10,252 for the non-segregated states.

* * *

THE ARTICLE blandly seems to assume that the disparity in teacher employment in the South is due to segregation alone, apparently ignoring the fact that the South is the home of some ten or eleven of the nation's fifteen million Negro citizens.

Moreover, the article fails to take into account the whole pattern of Southern life, which is likewise the pattern on a smaller scale of life in many of the larger cities in the North and West.

Segregation in the South is conducive to the kind of residential segregation that offers employment to the Negro teacher.

* * *

A CAPTION under the lead picture which showed Negro and white teachers taking an examination, asked the question, "competitive exam for teachers—For Negroes: More Opportunity or Less?"

The inference is an obvious and vicious suggestion that the superior certification that Negro teachers hold generally in public schools in the South, may not mean superior information.

It is common knowledge in educational circles in the South that by and large the Negro teachers' qualifications and certifications are higher than those of white teachers in similar work.

* * *

A PROMINENT educator explained this situation to the Courier recently in this manner:

(1) The position the Negro teacher holds in Negro society is one of virtually unexcelled social prestige which is not the case of the white teacher.

(2) The economic status of the Negro teacher places him in the conspicuously consuming group among his people that entitles him to considerable credit opportunities not available to white teachers.

(3) Because of the job pattern of the South, and the North too, for that matter, qualified Negroes have not been acceptable in many areas of employment open to whites, causing them to devote themselves seriously and meticulously to perfecting their professional skills and acquiring the highest symbols of achievement in the teaching profession.

(4) Southern states have inadvertently encouraged, in some states forced, the Negro teacher to migrate to northern and western universities where better educational opportunities were available to Negroes that were afforded in the South by the region's own universities for whites.

* * *

THE US NEWS and World Report also failed to consider the nation-wide shortage of teachers which is causing unprejudiced educators throughout the country grave concern.

It likeswise omitted any discussion of ways and means of eliminating the shortage that would result by firing large numbers of Negro teachers.

The writer of the US News and World Report article would perhaps gain measurably in insight if he consulted a recent publication of the Southern Regional Council's pamphlet, "Answers for Action: Schools in the South."

Its conclusions on the subject of wholesale firing of Negro teachers were that it is unlikely because:

(1) There is the inevitable fact that many presently Negro schools will continue to serve Negro pupils, even in a framework of legal integration and presumably the facilities of the schools will continue to be staffed primarily by Negro teachers.

IT CONSIDERED the fact that the number of school children is growing by leaps and bounds and in view of the teacher shortage declared, (2) "70,000 Negro teachers in the seventeen southern states and the District of Columbia would be irreplaceable. (3) Some 43 per cent of the Negro teachers are protected by tenure laws, any violation of which would no doubt result in court action."

Schools Survey Begun Here

Without attempting to chart a policy in the wake of the Supreme Court ruling against segregation, the city of Raleigh nevertheless is taking a close look at its dual school system, it was learned yesterday.

Detailed studies are being made by the City Planning Department to provide documentation of the educational and sociological problems which may be expected to follow implementation of the court's non-segregation decision.

Jesse O. Sanderson, superintendent of city schools, said the studies were being undertaken for his office for the guidance of the Raleigh School Board. He indicated the studies would have been made even if the city were not faced with the possible integration of its schools.

"We had some money ahead," he explained, "and felt the studies would be valuable to us in long range planning."

Of the three studies contemplated, only one—a survey and forecast of school membership—has been completed. The other studies will be concerned with the distribution of school population and the location of new schools and districts.

No such studies are being undertaken on the county level, according to Randolph Benton, superintendent of Wake schools. He said, however, that "We're all concerned about the court's decision," and indicated the board of education would make no comprehensive studies of the school system until after the court's autumn hearing.

Raleigh and Wake County will run their schools this year exactly as they were run last year, and the school officials expect no segregation problems. So far as it is known, none of the Negroes in Wake will seek admission to white schools.

Supt. Benton pointed out that Wake County had completed its consolidation program of Negro schools, and added that no inadequate buildings exist. Wake has 12 Negro schools—five elementary schools, five high schools, and two junior high schools.

Studies of the Raleigh school system are being supervised by Herbert W. Stevens, director of the City Planning Department.

Estimates Given.

The membership study lists Raleigh's white and Negro population in 1950 at 73,398, as contrasted with an estimated population in 1960 of 98,900.

Of the 1950 population of 73,398, a total of 54,807 are whites, and 19,301 are Negroes. Negroes in 1950 comprised approximately 26 per cent of the city's population.

Of the estimated population of 98,900 in 1960, a total of 54,807 are whites, and 21,800 are Negroes. Negroes are expected to comprise about 22 per cent of the population.

(All population figures include institutions and colleges as well as permanent residents.)

Negroes have been moving away from Raleigh at a fairly rapid rate since the turn of the century, most of them migrating to northern industrial centers. Back in 1900, the city's non-white population was 41.9 per cent of the total population—or 13,643 whites, as compared with 5,721 Negroes.

During the 1953-54 term, Raleigh's public school population totaled 9,790. White pupils numbered 7,776, and the number of Negro pupils was 2,014.

In the elementary schools there were 4,770 white pupils and 1,928 Negro pupils. In the junior high school grades the total number of white pupils was 1,748, and the Negro pupils numbered 685. In the high schools there were 1,248 whites and 401 Negroes.

By 1960, it is estimated, there will be 15,925 white and Negro pupils in Raleigh's schools. A total of about 12,000 will be white, 3,925 Negro.

Raleigh's elementary schools will have 6,528 whites, 3,137 in junior high schools, and 2,132 in the high schools. Negro pupils will number 2,542 in the elementary schools, 914 in the junior high schools, and 469 in the high schools.

Stevens used medium birth rates for Negroes, low birth rates for whites. Other tables have been made using low and high birth rates.

Show Trends.

All forecasts were made on the basis of social and economic trends. "The chief value of the charts," explained Stevens, "is that they can be followed as the years go by, and as trends begin to show different results, different conclusions can be anticipated soon enough to take care of needs."

According to the study, no new Negro high school or junior high school buildings would have to be built, but an elementary school would be needed. Nine new elementary schools would be needed.

These building estimates, however, were made on the basis of needs under the dual school system here. They would have to be revised, of course, if the city's schools are fully or partially integrated.

Stevens said additional studies would show the residential areas occupied primarily by Negroes. He said they would also show the way white school districts overlap the Negro districts, and vice versa.

"We can," he added, "show what the school districts could be . . . and what the official policy could be in regard to schools in borderline areas."

Stevens suggested that "one problem here will be the Thompson School, which is close to a Negro area. Another problem may be the Oberlin Negro School, which is located in a mixed residential area."

It was also pointed out that Negro junior and senior high school students in the Oberlin area will find it more convenient to attend the Needham Broughton High School and the Josephus Daniels Junior High School.

The Institute of Government at Chapel Hill, in the statewide report made at the request of Governor Umstead, has advised that such local studies may be useful to State authorities attempting to chart policy following the court's decision.

"Realistic local appraisal of these problems and ways of meeting them," says the report, ". . . might inform and illuminate the deliberations of our leaders, and strengthen the arm of the attorney general in giving the court the sources of light it needs and wants and ought to have before formulating decrees affecting North Carolina."

State Supt. Charles Carroll said that no such studies have been called for. But the Institute of Government reported many local school boards and officials scattered throughout the State have started on the task.

Stevens said the school studies were requiring considerable time, and that he intended to find out this week if Supt. Sanderson and the City Planning Commission wished him to continue with the work.

Girls Claim Indian Ancestry, Seek Entrance To White School

GREENSBORO, N. C. — (ANP) — A curious incident in race relations occurred here last week when two teen-age girls who attended a Negro high school in Greensboro last year sought admittance in a Guilford county white school. As Negroes, the girls can't attend the school, but if they can prove they are Indians, they will be admitted.

The upshot of the whole affair is that anybody but a Negro may attend a school used for white children. Superintendent E. D. Idol said last week that the girls would probably be allowed to attend classes at Colfax school if they could produce evidence that they were of Indian origin.

The two girls, one 18 and the other 19, appeared at Colfax Thursday to register for the new school year. The principal told them he was not allowed to accept transfer students from Dudley high school, the Negro school in Greensboro.

The girls, accompanied by their mother, protested that they were not of Negro descent, but of mixed Scotch-Irish-English-Indian extraction and consequently belonged in a white school rather than in a Negro school.

The white principal said if the question involved "is a question of their race, that puts a different face on the matter. If they are Indians, and I see no reason why they cannot prove such if it is so, then they probably belong in a white school.

"But if they should be Negroes and desire to enter Colfax only on the basis of the recent Supreme court ruling that segregation is not lawful, then we would have to say, 'No,'" the superintendent ruled. He then explained that the state ruling on segregated schools for the two races was still in effect and would have to be enforced.

Compulsory schools seen best in world

DURHAM, N.C. — "The free compulsory schools of the United States are the best schools in the world in terms of their effectiveness in developing freedom-loving people and citizens devoted to the cause of democracy."

That was a view expressed here at North Carolina College last week in an American Education Week address by Dean Arnold Perry of the school of education at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Catholic School Enrolls Negro

LENOIR, N. C.—When Robert Shade Jr. enrolled in the Catholic school here on Sept. 20, he became the first Negro pupil to ever enroll in an all-white school in this town.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shade Sr., are members of the Saint Francis Catholic Church here.

Robert Jr. is six years old and had enrolled in the public school, but a week later they received a letter over the signature of Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh giving his permission for little Robert to attend the Catholic school.

The boy's father works for the church and school.
